TO THE

Right Reverend Father in God,

HENRY

Lord Bishop of

LONDON.

MY LORD,

THIS second Volume of Dr. Lightfoots Works, the effect of great Learning and as great Industry, being brought to a conclusion, it seemed to want nothing to make it compleat, and to recommend it to the World, but some Great Name to stand before it. And since the Choise of this laid in me, the poor Instrument employed in preparing these Labours for the Press, I could fix upon none so proper, so suitable, as your Lordship, upon two accounts. The one is mine own private Obligations unto your Lordship, being my very Reverend Diocesan, under whose Paternal care I live and discharge my ministerial function in peace, and from whom I have received Favour and Countenance; and lastly, to whom I ought to account for the spending of my time, as I find, in some antient injunctions of our Church, the inferior Clergy were bound to do. The other is the Book it self, which contains some of the last and best Labours of a Man, of as great worth and abilities, as fame: in all the Pages of whose Writings appear lively stroaks of Learning, Religion, and a Love of the Churches Peace and Prosperity. Of which most sacred things your Lordship is so known and eminent a Patron.

Pardon me then, My most Honoured Lord, that I have presumed to grace this Piece with your Venerable Name: and vouchsafe to take these Pious and Learned Labours under your Honours favour. And if there shall be any thing found herein, that will not bear the censure of your Lordships severer Eye, whether it be the Publishers, or the Authors error, I do earnestly recommend both to your Lordships great Candor and Charity.

I cannot take my leave without my Prayers for your Lordship, That God would prosper your pensive thoughts, and weighty cares for retrieving the distressed condition of our poor Church, occasioned in a great measure by contentious and unpeaceable Spirits: Spirits that even from the very first times of the Reformation have been undermining its welfare, and exercising the skill and patience of its earliest Bishops. In so much, that it was long since the judgment of one of your Lordships ★ Predecessors in the See of London, and one that had been charged with too much favour and gentleness towards them, that severity was necessarily to be used. For thus he writes in a Letter (which I have seen) to a great Minister of State, Anno 1569. Mine

Mine opinion is, that all the Heads of this unhappy faction ſhould be with all expedition ſeverely puniſhed to the example of others, as people fanatical and incurable. And the ſame New Reformers (as they were then termed) created ſo much affliction to the Church, that it made ⋆ another very Reverend Prelate of this See quite weary of his Biſhoprick, and drew this complaint from him in a Letter dated 1573. I may not, in conſcience I cannot, flee from the afflicted Church: otherwiſe I would labour out of hand to deliver my ſelf of this intolerable, and moſt grievous burthen. I make no doubt, but your Lordſhip, being in the ſame place, and having to do with Men of the ſame temper, feel the ſame burthen. God Almighty ſtrengthen and encourage, ſucceed and bleſs You in all the wiſe methods You uſe in the Government of Your Church and Clergy.

THE

THE PREFACE.

I AM not unſenſible this Second Volume may lye under ſome prejudice, as Tranſlations, and Poſthumous pieces uſually do; which have not the laſt poliſhing of the Authors own Hand, nor his conſent to make them Publick. Therefore to prevent any too haſty cenſures, and to give this Book the advantage of a fair light, and thereby to juſtifie what hath been done in ſending it abroad to bear its fellow company, is the chief deſign of this Preface. And here I am to account for two things, according to the two Parts that this Volume conſiſts of. The former is the Tranſlation of the Horæ Hebraicæ: and the ſecond, the Publiſhing of the Sermons.

I. For the former, it cannot be denied, that a Tranſlation labours under the ſame diſadvantage, that the Copy of a good Picture doth, which ſeldom reacheth to the Truth and Perfection of the Original. And it needs not be ſaid, that among thoſe fatal things, ſuch as, Epitomies, wilful Interpolations, ignorant and careleſs Tranſcriptions, and the like; whereby the Books of the Antients, eſpecially Eccleſiaſtical Writers, have ſuffered no ſmall damages; unskilful Tranſlations have contributed their ſhare: damages rather to be deplored, than ever to be redreſſed. But as to the preſent Tranſlation I have this to apologize for, if not to juſtifie, it: That ſeeing theſe Latine pieces were the very ἀκμὴ, the laſt reſult and perfection of our Authors long and elaborate Oriental Studies, the very marrow and compendium of all his Rabbinical Learning; and ſince that great knowledge he had attained in that way is in theſe Latine Exercitations maturely, and after many years penſive thoughts, digeſted, and reduced to be admirably ſubſervient to the Evangelical Doctrine, and by a peculiarly divine skill he hath made the Rabbies, more bitter enemies than whom the Goſpel never had, to be the beſt Interpreters of it; it was thought pity, that his Countrymen ſhould be deprived of theſe his laſt and beſt labours; and ſeemed ſomewhat unjuſt, that Strangers, and the Learned only, ſhould reap the benefit of them. Beſides, it is to be conſidered, how much a right underſtanding of the four Evangeliſts, and the Acts of the Apoſtles, which contain the Hiſtory of the great Founder of our Religion, and his holy Inſtitution, would contribute to the burying of unhappy differences, which have ariſen in a great meaſure from miſtaken Interpretations of matters in thoſe Books, and to the furthering peace and unity among us; and how highly all, that call themſelves Chriſtians, are concerned to attain to the true ſenſe and meaning of the Holy Scriptures, on which our Faith and Hope is built; and laſtly, that theſe our Authors labours adminiſter ſuch conſiderable help to us herein; it was reſolved ſo ſmall an impediment, as the Latine Tongue, ſhould not obſtruct ſo great a Good.

I hope there will be no occaſion to accuſe the Tranſlation for any defect of care or faithfulneſs, or skill; but rather that it may merit ſome approbation upon all thoſe accounts. The work of a Tranſlator chiefly conſiſts in carrying along with him the ſenſe of the Author, and, as much as another Language will allow, the very air of his expreſſion; that he may be known, and diſcovered, though he wear the dreſs and habit of another Nation. I truſt, thoſe who undertook this employment, will be found to have duly attended to both. I will not be ſo confident, as to vouch it ſo abſolutely free of all miſtake, as if the Tranſlators had been inſpired by the Author himſelf: it being morally impoſſible in a Work of that critical nature, and conſiderable length, not to make a ſtumble or a ſlip. It will ſatisfie reaſonable Men, I hope, if the errors are but few, and the Work be generally accompanied with a commendable diligence. The judicious Reader will not like our pains the leſs, that we have not much regarded curious and ſmooth Language. For none will look for a fine and florid ſtyle in a Tranſlator, who is bound up to follow cloſe his Author; and conſidering that he that preſumes to vary too freely from his words, tis a great venture, but he varies often from his ſenſe too. And indeed affectation of ſoft words and handſom periods would have been a Vice here; for it would have made the Author look unlike himſelf, whoſe ſtyle was generally rough and neglected, his mind being more taken up about ſenſe, and inquiry after truth, than thoſe things. And therefore, I hope, none will place this among the blemiſhes of the Tranſlation. If the words be eaſie and intelligible and naturally expreſſive of the ſenſe, the more plain and unaffected the better.

I will advance a ſtep further in behalf of this Engliſh Tranſlation: there are ſome things in it that may give it the advantage even of the Latine Exercitations themſelves. Namely, that they are all with a diligent and careful Eye reviſed and corrected in abundance of places, beſides what the Errata directed to. The Addenda Printed at the end of the Horæ upon S. Luke, and S. John, are here reduced to their proper places in the body of the Book, excepting one paſſage only, which was neglected I know not how, but now Printed at the end of this Preface. The Annotations upon the eleventh Chapter of the Epiſtle to the Romans, ignorantly and careleſly thruſt in among the Exercitations upon the Acts of the Apoſtles, are placed where they ought to ſtand. The Quotations out of the Rabbins and other Authors are every where caſt out of the Text into the Margin; (yet with references to direct to each allegation;) that ſo the Reading might be the more ſmooth, and continued without break or interruption. And whereas much Hebrew and Greek was frequently cited, and not ſeldom left in thoſe more hidden Languages without any Interpretation, (the Author ſuppoſing his Readers learned Men, and able to underſtand thoſe Languages) in this Edition, intended for the uſe of the more unlearned, thoſe citations every where are Tranſlated, as well as the Latine Text. Which was very neceſſary to be done, when the illuſtration of the matter, and oftentimes the ſtrength and ſenſe of the whole ſentence or ſubject treated of, depended upon thoſe very phraſes and ſentences ſo Tranſlated. And for the better illuſtration of the Authors elaborate ſearches after the true ſituation of Jeruſalem, and many other Towns and Places of the Holy Land, almoſt wholly loſt long ſince in their rubbiſh, and for the benefit of the Studious, we have procured two Maps to be delineated delineated exactly according to the Authors judgment and conjectures, the one of the City of Jeruſalem, and the other of the Land of Canaan. To the later of which is adjoyned a Table of the Names of the Towns and Places (which are not a few) wherein the Doctor differed from the Ordinary Chorographers. Alſo, whereas in the Chorographical Decad before S. Mark, there were two ſmall Schemes, the one of the Aſphaltites, and the other of the Sea of Geneſaret, together with the Countries adjacent, very courſly deſcribed; inſomuch that our Author is fain to apologize for one, that he was extra limites, Out of his own bounds, when he did it; and for the other, that it was rudis Delineatio, A rough and homely draught: both theſe are in this Edition Printed off from Copper Plates, carefully and exactly cut, that they might be rendred the more graceful and acceptable to the beholders. And this ſhall be ſufficient to have ſpoken of that, which makes up the Firſt part of this Volume.

II. We proceed to his Pulpit Diſcourſes; never before now made Publick any more than in the Auditories, where they were Preached. Of which that the Reader may have a full and true account, I ſhall, Firſt, Give him the reaſon of Publiſhing them. Secondly, What things in them may probably be obnoxious to exception or cenſure, I ſhall endeavour either to Juſtifie, or at leaſt to make ſome fair Apology for. Thirdly, For the ſatisfaction of the Reader, and for the juſtification of my ſelf, I will ſhew, what courſe and method I have obſerved, and what care and diligence I have taken in them.

Firſt, Theſe Sermons were thought fit to be ſent abroad, partly, that as the World had been made acquainted with his abilities, as a learned Man, ſo it might not be ignorant of his Parts, as he was a Man in Holy Orders, and a Preacher of the Goſpel; and partly, that the Lovers of Dr. Lightfoot might not be deprived of ſo conſiderable a part of his Labours. But chiefly, becauſe generally his Sermons had ſomewhat peculiar, and extraordinary in them. For there appears a more than ordinary piercing and inward ſearch into the ſubjects which are handled; notions and obſervations more curious, and unuſal, and out of the common road; and abundance of difficult places of Scripture both of the Old and New Teſtament ſatisfactorily explained: and all theſe proceeding from the Authors long and unwearied Study of the Holy Scriptures, and his admirable dexterity and happineſs in reſolving knotty Texts. It would be endleſs to give Inſtances; and better it is to leave this to the Readers own Obſervation, as he goes along.

Secondly, Of the objections, that will be made againſt theſe Diſcourſes, the moſt obvious is, that things that were ſaid before in ſome other parts of theſe Works are repeated here. But to this I anſwer, that ſcarcely one inſtance can be given, wherein the ſame matters are barely repeated again (unleſs it be en paſſant) without ſome conſiderable addition, or improvement, or correction, or variety. Tis true, many Texts are here explained and treated of, that had been touched in the Exercitations, or ſome other of the Writings: but with the great advantage of much light and illuſtration. For ſuch things as had been more briefly or obſcurely handled before, the Author takes liberty to purſue more freely and at large in his Diſcourſes. It was an iniquity of the Preſs, that our Author often complained of, that nothing would vend in thoſe times, wherein he Publiſhed his Writings, but what was Pamphlet, or ſmall pieces. Hereupon he was forced, in what ever he Publiſhed, to uſe great conciſeneſs and brevity. Whereby,no queſtion, he ſuppreſſed many notions, that otherwiſe might have been well worthy the Publick. And thoſe things he did Publiſh, contracted obſcurity oftentimes by an affected, or rather forced, ſhortneſs. Againſt this evil theſe Sermons afford ſome remedy. For here he allows himſelf the liberty of expatiating and enlarging, as he ſeeth good. And if any man will take but the pains to compare any particular notions of his formerly Publiſhed with the ſame, as they are managed in theſe Sermons, he will find them not only illuſtrated, but improved alſo. To give an inſtance or two inſtead of more.

In an Aſſiſe Sermon, Preached Anno 1664. his Diſcourſe was upon ſome part of the Hiſtory of the Woman taken in adultery, Joh. VIII. Upon which he hath ſome Learned and ingenious Gloſſes in his Talmudick Exercitations upon the place. But in that Sermon they receive much advantage by ſeveral things there added; which probably, through his Study of brevity in compliance with the Printer, he then omitted. As, 1. In that Sermon he furniſheth us with an Argument, to perſwade that this Story is Canonical, from that very thing, for which ſome were apt to reject it, viz. from that ſeemingly odd act of our Saviour, in ſtooping down, and writing upon the pavement of the Temple: it being ſo agreeable to the practiſe preſcribed, Numb. V. for trial of the Wife ſuſpected of adultery. Nor had the thing, ſaith he there, ever been diſputed, if the ſtory it ſelf had been ſearched to the bottom, for then it would of its ſelf have vindicated its own authority to be Evangelical and Divine. 2. Here alſo you have his conjecture (which you meet not with in the Exercitations) that this Woman probably was taken in the adulterous act in the very Temple it ſelf; and his reaſon for that conjecture. And, 3. In his Exercitations at verſ. 3. he ſaith, there are ſome reaſons that do perſwade, that theſe Scribes and Phariſees, that brought this Woman to Chriſt, were Elders of the Sanhedrim: but what theſe particular reaſons were, he is ſilent in. But if we have recourſe to that Sermon, he will tell you there what they are. Namely, 1. Becauſe Matth. XXIII. 2. the Evangeliſt uſeth the expreſſion of the Scribes and Phariſees for the Sanhedrim. And, 2. From thoſe words of Chriſt to the Woman, Hath no man condemned thee? Which ſeem to imply, that thoſe that brought her had power to judge and condemn her.

To give one inſtance more. In the Handful of Gleanings upon Exod. Sect. XLIX. he treats of the manner of giving forth the Oracle of Urim and Thummim; and ſo he does alſo in his Sermon upon Judg. XX. 27, 28. but with this variety: there he relates it to be by an Audible Voice from the Lord, from off the Propitiatory: and this being heard by the Prieſt was told to the people. But here he corrects his former thoughts, telling us, it was by no heavenly Voice, but that God preſently inſpired the High Prieſt with the Spirit of Propheſie: and by that he reſolved the doubt and queſtion put to God by the people. Which we may conclude to be his laſt and ripeſt thoughts in that matter. I need not particularize any other paſſages in theſe Sermons, where notions, mentioned elſewhere in the Authors Books, are repeated with no ſmall advantage. And where they are not ſo, they are either wholly left out, where it might be done, without making a chaſm, and break in the thread of the diſcourſe; or where it could not without that inconvenience, they are only mentioned briefly, &

Perhaps

Perhaps ſome few paſſages may be cenſured as ſeeming to reflect upon the Doctrine or practice of our Church. But to this I anſwer, That they only ſeem to do ſo. And if the Reader will but calmly and deliberately view thoſe paſſages again, he will find, that they may admit of a very fair conſtruction; and the moſt that they ſpeak is againſt placing the ſum of Religion in Ceremonies and outward Formalities, or the needleſs multiplying of them; not againſt a ſober and intelligent uſe of the Rites of the Church, as they are appointed to be uſed for the preſerving decency and order, and promoting edification. And he is very ſevere, that will not overlook ſome things,and paſs a favourable conſtruction upon others, conſidering the times wherein our Author lived, and what Doctrines then prevailed, and carried away many good, though unwary, Men, as with a ſtrong, and ſcarcely to be reſiſted torrent. And allowance may the more reaſonably be given to ſome few things, ſeemingly obnoxious to cenſure, for the ſake of many others: which do greatly inculcate peace, and conformity, and the Authority of the Church, and decry ſeparation from the National, eſtabliſhed Church. I inſtance only in that excellent Sermon Preached in the late unhappy times in a publick Audience, upon John X. 22. Where the argument of our Saviours holding communion with the Jewiſh Church in the publick exerciſe of Religion is ſo fully and incomparably managed; that it was within theſe few years almoſt reſolved to be made publick by it ſelf for the uſe and information of our Diſſenters: which if read and conſidered by them with a candid and unprejudiced mind, would certainly ſet them clear of their ſcruples, and bring them with abundance of ſatisfaction into the boſom and Communion of our Church. And beſide that, in his Sermon upon Jude, verſ. 12. he diſcourſeth againſt Praying by the Spirit, and Enthuſiaſtical pretences to revelation. In that upon Luke. XI. 2. He argues moſt excellently for ſet Forms of Prayer, and particularly for the uſe of the Lords Prayer, that was at that time ready to be quite juſtled out of Gods Worſhip. And it was obſervable at that time, that the Doctor ended both his Prayers, both before and after that Sermon, with the Lords Prayer. In that Sermon ſpeaking about caſting away Religious uſages, becauſe abuſed, he hath theſe remarkable words, Now I cannot but think how wild it is, to reject a good thing in its ſelf, becauſe another hath uſed it evilly. This is juſt as if a Man ſhould cut down Vines to avoid drunkenneſs. How ſubject is he, that makes it all his Religion to run from ſuperſtition, to run he knows not whither? And again, in the ſame Sermon, I know not what reformers ſhould more ſtudy,than to obſerve how near Chriſt complied with things uſed in the Jewiſh religious practice, and civil converſe, that were lawful. Once more, in his Diſcourſe upon 1 Cor. XIV. 26. towards the concluſion, he propounds two things to be conſidered by them, who ſcrupled at the Religious exerciſe of ſinging Pſalms, becauſe it is no where commanded to ſing after that manner, and with thoſe circumſtances, that we do. 1. That there is no plain grounds, why to refrain, but moſt plain, why to ſing. 2. Where a duty is commanded, and a ſcruple ariſeth from ſome circumſtance, it is ſafer to go with the command, than from it. The reaſon I have ſelected theſe paſſages is, to ſhew how our Author ſtood affected to the Church. And indeed by theſe, and many other expreſſions, that are ſcattered in his Sermons, we may plainly ſee, that peaceableneſs, and keeping Communion with the Church was his great principle: and that his great aim in the late times was to keep up the honour of the publick Ordinances, and the publick Miniſtry in reputation; and to maintain the neceſſity of good Works againſt Antinomianiſm, and the divine Authority and ſufficiency of the Scriptures, and the neceſſity of humane Learning in the Clergy againſt Enthuſiaſm, then the great prevailing Errors. And I make no doubt, that by ſuch means and Doctrines as theſe, the bleſſing of God accompanying, our Author did very good ſervice to Religion and Truth then, and did educate and train up young Students in the Univerſity, and other Chriſtians, his Auditors, into a readier and more chearful conformity to our preſent Church.

In a word, All his Sermons breath a true Spirit of piety and inward goodneſs, and an intire deſire to be inſtrumental to the right underſtanding of the Holy Scriptures for the propagation of Gods glory, and the building up of Chriſtians in real ſubſtantial piety, and true ſaving knowledge. And they carry a plain, eaſie, unaffected ſtrain of humble Oratory, condeſcending to the meaneſt capacity; and which hath ſomething peculiar in it to raiſe attention, and to make a wonderful impreſſion upon the affections; I mean, by offering frequently ſomething new and ſurprizing, and intermixing ſudden Apoſtrophes, and affectionate and cloſe Interrogations.

And now in the laſt place, I muſt account for my ſelf and for what I have done in the publiſhing theſe diſcourſes. Mr. John Duckfield, Rector of Aſpeden in Hertfordſhire, the Authors Son in Law, and one of his Executors, (to whom the World is in the firſt place beholden for permitting them to be made publick) kindly imparted to me the deceaſed learned Mans ſcattered Papers and MSS. and among the reſt, his Sermon-notes. From the love and honour I had to his memory and his Learning, I diligently ſet my ſelf to the peruſal of them: and being not a little pleaſed with many of the Notes, I reſolved to ſelect a few out of a great many: with a deſign to let them ſee the light with the other Works of the Doctor, that were then reprinting: thinking it pity that the World ſhould loſe many excellent Notions (as they ſeemed to me) and Expoſitions of hard places of Scripture, that were diſperſed up and down in thoſe Notes: and that at leaſt ſome of his pains in the Pulpit, as well as in his Study, might be preſerved to poſterity. I have tranſcribed them as I found them; neither contracting, but where the ſame matters that were in other Sermons, were repeated, or in the cloſes of them, where the practical Improvements were ſomewhat large and long: nor adding, unleſs in theſe caſes; either where references were made to Texts of Scripture, which I have writ out at large, a thing neceſſary for the clearer underſtanding of the tenour and contexture of the diſcourſe: or where any Hebrew, Greek or Latine occurred, which I have tranſlated for the benefit of Vulgar Readers. Indeed in ſome few places I have left the Hebrew words without any interpretation, as I found them, not well knowing what to make of them, either through mine own ignorance, or the Authors miſtake in his haſty writing. I was ſometime in a heſitation, whether to leave them wholly out, or to inſert them, as I found them writ in the MSS. The later of which I reſolved to do, that they might lie open to the conjecture of the more Learned; and that nothing might be preſented maimed, but as intire as might be. To give one inſtance, in the Sermon upon Luke XI. 2. not far from the end we meet with קרבת מינים whether or no it be a miſtake of the Authors pen, for ברכת The curſes againſt Hereticks, which the Jews uſed uſed to add to their Prayers. Laſtly, in ſome diſcourſes written in very ſhort notes, and with ſome &c's, I have been forced to inſert words now and then, to ſupply and make the ſenſe compleat. This I was ſenſible was a very nice and tender point: and therefore I uſed not only all faithfulneſs and the beſt skill I had, but diligently conſulted other Notes, where the ſame notions were more fully ſet down, and have ſometimes ſupplied my ſelf from thence. But otherwiſe I have choſen rather to leave ſome places imperfect, than to fill up by mine own bare conjecture. The Sermons of this ſort are thoſe generally that bear the antienter date: but towards the later end of his life, the Notes were more fully and fairly written; The Doctor probably not daring then to truſt to his memory ſo much as he had done in his younger days. The Diſcourſe upon Luke XI. 2. and that upon Matth. XXVIII. 19. are of this kind. Which however I have uſed my beſt care and caution to copy ſo at leaſt, as to render the main lines of the diſcourſes clear, yet I am afraid the Reader will want many things to make them ſpeak out the full ſenſe and meaning of the Author. Which indeed is great pity; becauſe they are of thoſe Sermons, that have ſome great ſtrokes in them: and the fame of them is ſtill freſh in the memory of many now alive, that heard them Preached at S. Maries in Cambridge. The later of which, viz. that which treats of Baptiſm, confirmed a late Reverend and very Learned Divine of the Church of England in the Doctrine of Infant-baptiſm, who, as himſelf confeſſed, was not well reconciled to it. But upon the hearing thoſe Sermons (for they were two, though they ſtand now digeſted into one continued Diſcourſe) ſent a letter expreſſive of great thanks to our Author for them, and acknowledged, that he had ſettled him more in the Orthodox Doctrine, than all his reading upon that ſubject ever before had, and earneſtly deſired the favour of a Copy of them, which was accordingly ſent him from the Doctor.

And here is a proper place to beg the Readers excuſe, if he meet ſometimes with gaps and breaks, and paſſages that are not ſo perfect and full as it were to be wiſhed: and to beſeech him to pardon many things in theſe Diſcourſes; as that ſome break off abruptly; and that the ſtyle of others are ſo plain and homely, being tranſcribed out of his own rough papers, not poliſhed and ſmoothed, reviewed and embelliſhed for the ſight of the publick; but intended only as his own private remembrancers, when he Preached them.

As to the ranking and diſpoſing them, I have not been very curious; only placing the Occaſional Sermons firſt; and to each I have added the place where they were delivered, and the time when. But to the other I have neither mentioned place nor date; neither of which ſeeming much material. But if any be deſirous to know, they were preached either at Ely, where his dignity was, or at Munden, where his Parſonage: moſt of them between the year 1660, many between 1670, and the time of his death. And ſo his matureſt and ripeſt thoughts and judgment.

At the end of the Sermon upon Matth. XXVIII. 19. I have adjoyned ſome few notes of another Preached at Aſpeden, ſeemingly out of its due place. The reaſon I did ſo was, becauſe it treated of the ſame ſubject, and might as an ὑστερον, ſerve to make the former diſcourſe compleat; and that what was omitted in the one might be ſupplied from the other.

The MS. Sermon upon 2 Sam. XIX. 29. hath neither mention of place where, nor date when preached. The reaſon, I ſuppoſe, was, becauſe he either either diſtruſted his own thoughts, or was loath to diſcloſe them, when they ran counter to the general current of Expoſitors. And ſo it is expoſed to the Readers view.

In the Sermon upon the Prophet ſlain by a Lion, at the beginning the Author propounds ſeveral difficulties in and about this ſtory, which he might be expected to have reſolved: but he doth not in any of thoſe notes, that have come to my hands, though probably they were aſſoyled by him in others; but they cannot be retrieved. And ſo we muſt be thankful for what we have, and be contented in the want of the reſt.

And that nothing might be wanting to render both Parts of this Book the more compleat and uſeful, there are four diſtinct Tables ſubjoyned, compiled with commendable pains and accuracy. And if the preparing theſe, and the Maps, and ſome other things, hath ſomewhat retarded the Publication hereof, the Reader will, I truſt, the more readily pardon it, ſeeing it hath been only to render the whole Work the more compleat and ſerviceable.

And thus I have given ſome account of this Volume. It needs none to commend it: both the Author and the Deſign do ſufficiently commend themſelves: the Author being a Perſon of known Worth and Learning; and whoſe name is celebrated not only within the narrow limits of our own Country, but alſo among Forainers; who have his Works in ſo great value, that they are now Printing them all, as I hear, in the Latine and in the French Tongues: and the Deſign great and noble, viz. To explain the Holy Scriptures, the great Pandect of our Faith and Religion, and to promote Truth and Goodneſs.

And now nothing remains, but to beſeech God to grant a good ſucceſs to the Labours of this Reverend and Learned Man: that Mens minds being more freed from ignorance and prejudice, and inſtructed in a right underſtanding of the Word of God, the bleſſed effects thereof may be Piety and Peace. That Men may better know and practice their duty to God and their Neighbour, to the Church, in whoſe boſom they were born, and to their Prince, under whoſe happy and peaceable influence they dwell.

Low Leighton, Jan. 3. 1683. JOHN STRYPE.

The Reader is deſired to add this at the end of the Hebrew Exercitations upon the Evangeliſt S. John, which by an overſight was omitted in its place.

* *Fol.*18.1 PAge 545. line 37. After, He burnt it and ſaid, &c. add, And let that be well conſidered in Siphra *, where a Diſpute is had upon thoſe words, *Levit.*VI.27. If the blood of the ſacrifice for ſin be ſprinkled upon a garment, &c. בגד אין ליאלא בגר When the diſcourſe is of a garment, I would underſtand it of nothing but a garment: Whence is to be added עור משהופשט *The ſkin, when it is pulled off. The Text ſaith, Upon whatſoever the blood ſhall be ſprinkled, ye ſhall waſh. Perhaps therefore one may add the ſkin, before it is pulled off. THE PREFACE.

AMONG all those, who have either published their own Chorographical Tables of the Land of Canaan, or have corrected others, you can hardly find any, that have consulted with the Writers of the Talmud in this matter. Whereas certainly their Consent is by no means in this case to be despised, if indeed it be not rather especially to be regarded.

For, besides that they, above all other men, do most curiously enquire of the affairs and of the places of that Land, all the Doctors of the Mishnah, and the Gemarists also of Hierusalem were inhabitants and dwellers there: and not a few also of those of Babylon well viewed it; Eye witnesses; and who, (any Reader being Judge) could not but have beyond all others a most familiar knowledg of that Land, dwelling in it: and not only so, but being such as thought themselves bound by a religious necessity to inquire after the Situation and Nature of the places in that Land, and to trace them out with an exact search and curiosity.

Let Reason therefore determine, whether they above all others are either justly or prudently cast aside in the business of Chorography? Whether among all the means used for the correcting and polishing this, the means that the Talmud affords should with any merit or equity be only refused? Why the Jewish Chorography of the Jewish Country should not be admitted? Certainly it is unjust, out of prejudice to reject, or out of ignorance not to entertain those things, which either might yield us the Profit of the Chorography of that Land, or stir up no unprofitable search into it. If a man would engrave Maps of Palestine, surely it is very fit, that he should together with others consult those Authors, as being the nearest witnesses, inhabiters of the Country; and such who most studiously and most religiously describe it. And though you esteem them not worthy of credit, because they are Jews, yet certainly they are worthy of examination, and may have leave to relate, as they are Chorographers.

When in the reading of these Writers, I collected all those things, which I met with relating hitherto, and compared them with the Maps and Tracts already publiſhed, I plainly ſaw, if my eyes deceived me not, that very many things might be fetched and drawn out of theſe Authors, which might correct the Maps; very many things, which might diſcover places unknown; very many, which might fix thoſe that were uncertain; very many, which might illuſtrate thoſe that were certain; and infinite things, which might ſome way or other hold out a light to Chorography. And if any dextrous and happy Artiſt, verſed in the Talmudic writings, and skilled in Chorography, would undertake a task and work of this nature, I ſhould expect from ſuch a hand a more polite and correct Map, and a more full, plain, and certain deſcription of the Lands of Iſrael, than any the Chriſtian World hath yet ſeen.

We are far from daring to enter upon ſuch a thing. Nor is our Hand ſufficiently taught for ſo great a Work, or indeed teachable. That only, which we have attempted in the following Century, was this, that by ſome inſtance we might a little demonſtrate thoſe things, which we ſpeak concerning the Writers of the Talmud: and that ſome ſpecimen might be ſet before our eyes, whereby the Reader may judge of their ſtudy, ſtyle, uſe, benefit in the thing propounded. Nor did we think it the part of Modeſty, to burthen the Reader with too much of thoſe things, which perhaps are of dubious acceptation with him; nor the part of prudence, to expoſe and commit together at once all that we have to one wind and fortune.

SEARCHING

Out ſome more memorable places of the Land of Iſrael cheifly by the light of the Talmud.

CHAP. I.

The Diviſion of the land.

THE Jewiſh Writers divide the whole World into ארץ ישראל The land of Iſrael, and חוצה לארץ Without the land: that is, the Countries of the Heathen. Both which phraſes the Book of the Goſpel owns: The land of Iſrael, Matth. II. 20. And it calls the Heathen τὰ ἔξω, thoſe that are without, 1 Cor. V. 13. 1 Tim. III. 7. &c. And ſometimes the unbelieving Jewes themſelves, as Mark IV. 11.

They diſtinguiſh all the People of the World into ישראל Iſraelites, and אומות העולם the Nations of the World. The Book of the Goſpel ownes that Phraſe alſo. Mat. VI. 32. πάντα ταῦτα τὰ ἔθνη ἐπιζητεῖ. After all theſe things do the Gentiles or Nations ſeek. Which in Luke XII. 30. is τὰ ἔθνη τοῦ κόσμου, The Nations of the World. Hence the word World is moſt commonly uſed for the Gentiles, Joh. III. 16, 17. 1 Joh. II. 2, &c.

Somewhere a diſtinction is made into ארץ The land (of Iſrael) and מרינחהים The region of the Sea, וכל וחליקרי מרינת הים לכד מבבל a And every forreign Region is called the Region of the Sea, except Babylon. They are the words of Rabbi Solomon. Which nevertheleſs fall under the cenſure of R. Niſſin. b It is ſomething hard, ſaith he, to reckon every country, which is out of the land, to be the Region of the Sea: for then under that name would be included all the neighbouring places, and which are as it were ſwallowed up by the land. They ſay therefore, that the more remote places are called מרינת הים The Region of the Sea. But neither does this pleaſe me. For there is no need of ſo great a diſtance, to make any place to be called, The Region of the Sea, &c. But it is ſpoken in relation to the Weſtern coaſt of the land of Iſrael. On which ſide there are no (Heathen) Cities near, and ſwallowed up by the Land. But the Sea ſets the bounds; but it doth not ſet the bounds on other ſides, &c. The ſenſe therefore of R. Solomon, when he ſaith, that every Region, without the Land is the Region of the Sea, comes to this, that Every Region which is like to that Region, is ſo called.

a R. Sol. in Gittin. Cap. 1.

b R. Niſſin Ibid.

Heathen Cities were on that Weſtern Coaſt; but ſeeing they lay within the ancient bounds of the Land, namely, the Lip of the Mediterranean Sea, they could not ſo properly be ſaid to be Without the Land, as thoſe which were altogether Without the limits. Thoſe Cities and that Country therfore are called by a peculiar title מרינת הים that is, the Coaſt or Country by the Mediterranean Sea. Which title all other Cities of the like condition underwent alſo, whereſoever ſeated within the bounds of the land. Examples will not be wanting as we go along.

They commonly define the Land of Iſrael under a double notion: to wit, that שהחזיקו בה עולי מצרים — which they poſſeſſed who went up out of Egypt; and that שהחזיקו בה עולי כבר which they poſſeſſed, who went up out of Babylon. This was in very many places circumſcribed within narrower limits than that, not only by reaſon Samaria was rejected and ſhut out, but alſo, becauſe certain portions were cut off, (and they neither a few, nor ſmall) which became the Poſſeſſions of thoſe that went up out of Egypt: but under the ſecond Temple had paſſed into the poſſeſſions of the Heathen.

Now they were upon this account the more exact in obſerving their bounds, diſtinguiſhing this Land by known bounds both from all others, and in ſome places, as it were from it ſelf; becauſe they decreed that very many myſteries of their religion were to be handled no where but within theſe limits. c For beſides the rites of that Diſpenſation, which the holy Scripture doth openly and evidently fix to that land, ſuch as Sacrifices, Paſſovers, the Prieſthood, and other appoyntments of that nature (which are commonly, and not improperly called מצות תלויות בארץ Statutes appendant to that Land) very many others alſo are circumſcribed within the ſame borders by the Fathers of the Traditions.

d The Land of Iſrael, ſay they, above all others lands, is ſanctified by ten holineſſes. And what is the holineſs of it? Out of it they bring the Sheaf, and the firſt fruits, and the two Loaves. And they do not ſo out of any other Land.

d Kelim, Cap. 1. hal. 6. Hieroſ. Shekalim, fol. 47. 4.

e The Law of beheading the Cow doth not take place any where, but in the Land of Iſrael, and beyond Jordan.

e Maimon. in רוצח Cap. 10.

f They do not appoint or determin concerning the New Moons, nor do they intercalate the year any where but in the Land of Iſrael: as it is ſaid, The Law ſhall go forth out of Sion.

f Idem in קרש חרש Cap. 1. Vid. Hieroſ. Nedarim, fol. 40. 1.

g They do not prefer to Elderſhip out of the Land of Iſrael: no, not although they that do prefer have themſelves been perferred within the Land.

g Idem in Sanhedrin, Cap. 4.

And that I heap not together more, they do in a manner circumſcribe the Holy Spirit himſelf within the limits of that Land. For h Shechina, ſay they, dwells not upon any out of the Land. Compare Act. X 45.

h Vid. R. Sol. in Jonab. 1.

The Land, which the Jews that came up out of Babylon poſſeſs, They divide after this manner.

i There are three Lands (or Countries שלשה אר צורי) Judæa, the Land beyond Jordan, and Gallilee. And each of thoſe have three Countreys. Thoſe we ſhall take notice of in their places. To this received diviſion our Saviour hath reſpect, when ſending his Diſciples to preach to the loſt Sheep of Iſrael, he excludes Samaria, Mat. X. 5. Which according to the Condition of the Nation, was not merely Heathen, nor was it truly Iſrael. It was not Heathen; For k ארץ כותים טהורה ומקוותיה ומרדותיה ושכיליה טהורין The Land of Samaria is reckoned clean, and the gathering together of its Waters clean, and its dwellings clean, and its paths clean. Which the Jewiſh curioſity would by no means pronounce of a Heathen Land. But as to many other things, they made no difference between them and the Gentiles.

k Hieroſ. Avod. Zara. fol. 44. 4.

The Jewiſh Doctors do indeed particularly apply that Diviſion of the three Countreys in the place alledged, to the tradition and Canon concerning ביעור but yet they do every where retain the ſame, whereſoever they treat of the Diviſion of the Land of Iſrael. What ביעור means you may learn from the Authors of the Gloſs upon the place. Breifly it was this. In the ſeventh year they might eat of the fruits layd up in their ſtorehouſes, ſo long as ſome fruit of that kind hung upon the tree in that Country. But when they could no more find them upon the trees, they were to caſt out thoſe which they had gathered, and laid up at home, and not to eat of them as they did before.

The Talmudic girdle of the Land under the ſecond Temple taken out of the Hieruſalem Sheviith. fol. 36. 3. גיסים שבים Ibid. Col. 4.

תחומי אי כל &c. unto ראשקלון What all theſe things mean, I cannot ſo much as conjecture, yea, nor can I ſcarce conjecture what the meaning is of ſome of them. Neither is there any Oedipus at hand, nor Shinx her ſelf to explain and unriddle them. The Talmudiſts are ſilent from making any Comments here, nor have we the advantage of any other Commentator. We muſt therefore act here according to the uncertain inſtruction of nods and winks; and that either by ſaying nothing, or by meer conjecture, ſince that the mind of the Authors is either altogether unknown, or it is wholly doubtful, whether it be known or no. Expect not, that I go from ſtreet to ſtreet to knock at all the gates of theſe places: it will be enough, if we can ſcrape out in what regions theſe places ly, and are able to gueſs at what poynts of the Heaven they are diſpoſed. We will at preſent take in hand only the firſt and laſt clauſe of this place quoted; which may have ſome tendency towards our entrance into our preſent buſineſs. The reſt (if there be any we can attain unto) we ſhall handle in their proper places.

Theſe, ſay they are the bounds of the Land of Iſrael, which they poſſeſſed that came up out of Babylon.

פרשת חומת מנדל שיר The Diviſion, or Part, of the Walls of the Tower Sid. Nor dare I confidently to aſſert that this is ſpoken of the Tower of Strato, or Ceſarea: nor yet do I know to what it may more fitly be applied. We obſerve in its place that that Tower is called by the Talmudiſts מנדל סיר The Tower Sir: which by how very little a point it differs from this word, and how very apt it is by want of care in writing to be confounded with it, the eye of any reader is witneſs. It may happily confirm this conjecture that עכו the name Aco, ſo ſoon follows, סיניורור only coming between. Concerning which we have nothing to ſay, if that which we meet with in the Writers of the Babylonian Talmud, may not have any place here. They ſay[a] חא אשינא רשורא: which by the Gloſſer is rendred, בוא דרך &c. Go in the loweſt way, below the mountains, and they will protect you from ſhowers and rain. Hence therefore it may be ſuppoſed, that the word שינ" doth denote ſome way at the foot of ſome mountanous place, which was as it were the dividing line between the Land of Iſrael, and Without the Land. Perhaps at the foot of Mount Carmel. But we do not aſſert it. We had rather profeſs ſilence or ignorance, then by a light conjecture either to deceive others or be deceived our ſelves.

Theſe places, concerning which the Talmudiſts here treat, are of a different Condition from thoſe which were called מרינרת הים The region of the Sea. For thoſe places were certain towns here and there on this ſea coaſt and elſewhere; which were indeed inhabited by Heathens, and ſo could not properly be reckoned the land of Iſrael, yet they were ſuch, as between which and the utmoſt bounds of the Land was again the Land of Iſrael. But theſe places, which we are now handling, are thoſe which were the utmoſt bounds, and beyond which were no places at all, but what was reckoned the Land of the Heathen: the Phenicians, Syrians, or other Gentiles poſſeſſing all that Coaſt thence forward unto the ſhore of the Mediterranean Sea.

We cannot alſo paſs by thoſe things that are ſaid by the Gemariſts in the very ſame page, from whence the Scheme before mentioned is taken. הגיסים שבים &c. You ſee Iſles in the Sea, and if a line were drawn from the Mountains of Amana to the River of Egypt, whatſoever is within the line belongs to the Land of Iſrael, whatſoever is without the line is without the Land. After the ſame manner ſpeaks the Targum of Hieruſalem upon Numb. XXXIV. 4. And their Weſtern bounds ſhall be the great Sea, and the Iſles of it. Iſles? What Iſles? Let the Authors of the Maps well weigh theſe paſſages.

THE Talmudic Girdle ends, as you ſee, in רקם הגועה וגנגניא ראשקלון Cadeſh, Barnea, & Askalon. Hence it cannot but be obſerved, that theſe two places are placed as it were in parallel, and whatſoever ſpace lies between Aſcalon and the River of Egypt is excluded, to wit LIV miles. And one might indeed almoſt ſee ſome foot-ſteps of that excluſion under the firſt Temple, in that very common expreſſion, From Dan even to Bearſheba.

This Country that was excluded was ſomething barren. The Talmudiſts ſpeak thus of it; a That Tract, which lies in Gerariku [Gerar] is ill to dwell in. How far? To the River of Egypt. And b Strabo thus, The Country, which follows Gaza, is barren, and ſandy, &c.

c Hieroſ. in the place above. b lib. 16.

It was antiently inhabited by the Avites, namely, from Gaza to the River of Egypt. The Avims dwelt in Hazerim, Deut. II. 23. Hazar is a word of moſt frequent mention in that Southern Land, Hazar-Addar, Hazar-Gaddah, Hazar-Shna, Hazar-Suſah, &c. And it ſeems to denote ſome champion plain, and level lying between the Mountains. Hence the habitation of the Avites is called Hazerim; who are numbred with the Philiſtines, but yet by themſelves, Joſ. XIII. 3. For ſee there, how the holy text promiſing to number five Nations only, numbers ſix.

This excluded portion is paſſed into the name of Idumea. Hence Pliny: c Preſently from the riſing up of the Lake Sirbon begins Idumea and Paleſtine. Nor that alone, but another very great part of Judea. Hence the Sea of Sodome, is ſaid by Diodorus Siculus to be d κατὰ μέσην Ἰδουμαίαν: about the middle of Idumea. And in Joſephus, and the Book of the Macabees we find very many places mentioned under the name of Idumea, which were almoſt in the very middle of Judea. For example ſake, e Ἦλθεν μέχρι Γαδάρων, καὶ τῶν πεδίων τῆς Ἰδουμαίας, καὶ Ἀζώτου, καὶ Ἰαμνείας. He came even to the Gadari, and the plains of Idumea, and Azotus, and Jamnia. And again, f Ὁ δὲ Ἰούδας καὶ ἀδελφοὶ αὐτοῦ πολεμοῦντες τοῖς Ἰδουμαίοις οὐκ ἀνίεσαν. ἀλλ' ἐνέκειντο παντοχόθεν αὐτοῖς. πόλιν Χεβρῶνα πόλιν καταλαμβανόμενοι, &c. καὶ Μάρισαν πόλιν, &c. εἶτα Ἄζωτον ἐλθόντες, &c. And Judas and his brethren left not off fighting with the Idumeans: but fell upon them every where: and taking the City Chebron, &c. and the City Mariſſa, &c. And having come unto Azotus, &c. And more to this purpoſe may be read here and there. So that diſtinction may be made, between Idumea the greater and the leſs. Simon of Geraſa, g τὰς ἀνὰ τὸν Ὀρεινὸν κώμας κατέτρεχεν, &c. κατέτρεχε δὲ τὸν Ἀκραβατηνὸν καὶ τὰ μέχρι τῆς μεγάλης Ἰδουμαίας: overran the Towns along the Mountanous Country, &c. And he overran Acrabatene, and the parts as far as Idumea the great. And there is mention of h τῆς ἄνω καλουμένης Ἰδουμαίας. Idumea called the Upper. With theſe paſſages compare Mark, Chap. III. ver. 8.

Whilſt the Jews were abſent from their own Country, enduring the Seventy years bondage in Babylon, it is eaſy to be believed, that their antient enemies, the Edomites, and that were ſo from the very firſt original of them, had invaded their poſſeſſions, as much as they could, and had fixed their roots in that countrey eſpecially, which was neareſt their own: but at length by the powerfull armes of the Maccabees, and the Aſmoneans they were either rooted out, or conſtrained to embrace Judaiſm. So Joſephus ſpeaks of Hyrcanus: i Ὑρκανὸς δὲ τῆς Ἰδουμαίας αἱρεῖ πόλεις Ἄδωρα καὶ Μάρισαν, &c. Hyrcanus takes Ador and Mariſſa cities of Idumea: and having ſubdued all the Idumeans ſuffered them to remain in the Country, on condition they were willing to be circumciſed, and to uſe the Jewiſh Laws. And they out of a deſire of their own Country underwent circumciſion, and conformed to the ſame courſe of life with the Jews. Hence there became a mingled generation in that Country between Jew and Edomite; and the name of the place was mingled alſo, and called both Iudmea and Judea. l And Paleſtine was divided into five Countreys, Idumea, Judea, Samaria, Galilee, and the Country beyond Jordan.

The Seven Seas according to the Talmudiſts, and the four Rivers compaſſing the Land.

SEven a Seas, ſay they, and four Rivers compaſs the Land of Iſrael. I. ימא רבא The great Sea, or the Mediterranean. II. ימא דטבריא The Sea of Tiberias. III. ימא דמלחא The Sea of Sodom. IV. ימא דסמכו The Lake of Samocho. V. ימא דחולתא VI. ימא דשליחא VII. ימא דאפמיא Theſe four laſt are otherwiſe writ in the Jeruſalem Talmud: to wit, thus, IV. ימא דכובנו V. דחולתא VI. ימא דשלחא VII. ימא דאפמיא In the Babylonian Talmud, thus: IV. ימה של סיכני V. ימה של חולא VI. ימה של חולתא VII. ימה דאפמיא a Hieroſ. Kilaim, fol. 32. 1. Et Bab. Bav. Bathra, fol. 72. 2.

The three firſt named among the ſeven are ſufficiently known, and there is no doubt of the fourth. Only the three Names of it are not to be paſſed by.

IV. 1. סבכי The Sibbethæan. The word ſeems to be derived from סבך A Buſh. 2. כובנו which ſeems to ſound the ſame thing; for קוצים Thornes among the Targumiſts are כובי Becauſe that Lake having no great depth, but very much dried in the Summer time, was grown over with thorns and buſhes. 3. סמכו from whence the common name Samochonitis, the letters מ & ב being changed in סבכי and סמכו

V. ימא דחולתא Perhaps the Sandy Sea. Which fits very well to the Lake of Sirbon, joyning the Commentary of Didorus Siculus. For he relates, that that Lake for the moſt part is ſo covered with ſand, that it hath often deceived and ſupplanted travailers, yea whole armies, thinking it to be firm Land.

VI. ימא רשלחת We have nothing to ſay of this, beſides this obſervation, that ſince it is alſo called by the ſame Gemariſts רשליית the Gutteral ח ſeems to be melted into י; which is not unuſual to the Dialect of the Nation, ſo to ſmooth and ſoften Gutteral letters. It is alſo called by the Babylonians חילתא, which among the Talmudiſts does ſometimes ſignifie Ruſhy, or Sedgy. But what this Sea is, we know not. However we do not forget the Cendevian Lake: but whether that be to be numbred among our Catalogue, we doubt upon this reaſon, becauſe on the ſame Coaſt lies the great Sea.

VII. ימא דאפמיא The Sea of Apamia. The Hieruſalem Writers in both places, when they ſpeak of that Sea, add theſe words, ימא &c. The Sea of Apamia is the ſame with the Sea of Chamatz. ריקליטינס &c. Dicletinus cauſed it to be made by Rivers gathered together. It was therefore of a latter date. Concerning it ſee the ſixty eighth Chapter.

After theſe Seas mentioned by the Talmudiſts, hear alſo no lean ſtory of theirs concerning the fiſh. b R. Chaninah bar R. Abhu ſaid, ſeven hundred kinds of clean fiſh, and eight hundred kind of clean locuſts, and of birds an infinite number, travailed with Iſrael into Babylon, and returned when Iſrael returned, except the fiſh שיבוטא But how did the fiſh travail? R. Honna bar Joſeph ſaith, גלו דרך תחומים They travailed by the way of the deep, and by the deep they came back. Surely it requires a Jewiſh invention, (which is able to frame any thing out of any thing) to trace a way either by any Sea, or by any River, through which fiſh might ſwim out of the Paleſtine into Babylon. By the ſame art they bring Jonah in the belly of the Whale out of the Phœnician Sea into the c Red Sea.

c R. Sol. in Jon. 2.

That indeed is ſomewhat hard, yet not to be doubted of what is ſaid, 2 Chron. VIII. 18. concerning Hiram ſending ſhips to Solomon into the Red Sea. What? Ships to come from Tyre into the Red Sea? Which way ſailed they? It is anſwered, He ſent ſuch Tyrian Ships, which had much and long traded before in the Red Sea, to accompany Solomons Fleet. To this belongs that, that is ſaid there likewiſe, (and in 1 Kings IX. 27.) that he ſent Seamen, that had knowledge of the Sea; that is, knowledge of that Sea: and they probably not ſuch who had never yet adventured themſelves into the Red-Sea, but had experience of it before, and were not ignorant of the Ophir Voyage.

The four Rivers for the compaſſing of the Land, they ſay, are I. ירדן Jordan, that is ſufficiently known. II. ירמוך Jarmoch. In Pliny, Hieramax. Gaddara, ſaith he, d Hieramax flowing before it. III. קרמיון Kirmion. IV. פיגא Pigah. Concerning which thus the Aruch. e Kirmion is a River in the way to Damaſcus, and is the ſame with Amnah. Pigah is Pharpar. And Jarmoch is alſo a River in the way to Damaſcus. And the Talmudiſts: f The Waters of Kirmon and Pigah are not fit (to ſprinkle the unclean) becauſe they are muddy waters. The waters alſo of Jordan, and the waters of Jarmoch are not fit, becauſe they next waters, (that is, as the Gloſs ſpeaks) mixt with the waters of other Rivers, which they receive with in themſelves.

CHAP. V.

The Sea of Sodom, ים המלח.

THE bounds of Judea on both ſides are the Sea; the Weſtern bounds is the Mediterranean, the Eaſtern the dead Sea, or the Sea of Sodom. This the Jewiſh Writers every where call ים המלח which you may not ſo properly interpret here. The Salt Sea, as the bituminous Sea. In which ſenſe מלח סרומית word for word, Sodoms Salt, but properly, Sodoms bitumen, doth very frequently occur among them. The uſe of it was in the holy incenſe. They mingled מלח סרומית a Bitumen, כפת הירדן the Amber of Jordan, and מעלת עשר an herb known to few, with the ſpices that made that Incenſe.

c Id. de Bell. lib. 4. cap. 27.

Pliny ſpeaks thus of it: d In length it is more than an hundred miles: in its greateſt bredth it makes five and twenty, in its leaſt ſix. What agreement is there between theſe two? I ſuppoſe Joſephus does not comprehend within his meſure the tongue of the Sea, of which mention is made, Joſ. XV.2. and defines the bredth as it was generally every where diffuſed. Concerning its diſtance from Hieruſalem Selinus alſo ſpeaks: e In a long retreat from Hieruſalem (ſaith he) a ſad bay oppreſſeth it ſelf, which that it was ſtruck from Heaven, the ground black and diſſolved into aſhes, teſtifies. There were two Towns there, one named Sodom, the other Gomorrha. But that diſtance was not directly Southward, but by a very long declination Eaſtward.

e Selin. Polyhiſt. cap. 38.

The Talmudiſts devote to the Sea of Sodom, לים המלח any thing that is deſtined to rejection and curſing, and that by no means is to be uſed.

h עקולם הגר The Proſelyte Aquila divided the Inheritance with his brother a Gentile, and devoted the uſe and benefit of it to the Salt Sea. Of three Doctors one ſaith, that he devoted the monies of Idolatry into the Salt Sea. Hence is that alluſion, Revel. XX. 14. And death and hell were caſt into the Lake of fire.

It doth not pleaſe me, that Sodom in the Maps is placed in the Northern bounds of the Aſphaltites, when it ſeems rather to be placed in the Southern extremity of it, For,

I. The bounds of the Land are thus defined by Moſes, Gen. X. 19. The borders of the Canaanites were from Sidon (on the North) unto Gaza, (on the South) as thou goeſt forward, or until thou comeſt to Sodom. Are not the bounds here bent from Gaza to the furtheſt term oppoſite to it on the Eaſt?

II. Joſephus in the deſcription of the Aſphaltites, which we quoted a little above hath theſe words, The length of it is five hundred and eighty furlongs, i καθ' ὅλου μὲν μῆκος Ζοάρων τῆς Ἀραβίας ἐκτείνεται: And it is ſtretched out as far as Zoar of Arabia. Note that the furtheſt coaſt of the extenſion of it ſouthward, is to Zoar. But now Zrar was not far diſtant from Sodom, when Lot with his Company got thither before the riſing of the Sun, Gen. XIX. 23. It is written, ſay the Gemariſts, the Sun was riſen upon the earth, when Lot entred into Sodome. Now Sodom was four miles from Zoar.

i Joſ. De Bell. lib. 4. cap. 27

The Maps ſhew you Zoar and Lots Cave in Judea at the Nothern Coaſt almoſt of the Aſphaltites. By what authority I do not apprehend. The Talmudiſts indeed do mention a certain Zoar, which they alſo call, The City of Palms. There is a ſtory, ſay they, of ſome Levites, who travailed to Zoar, the City of Palms: and one of them fell ſick, whom they brought to an Inn, and there he dyed. But I ſhould ſooner believe that there were two Zoars, then I ſhould believe, that the Father of the Moabites were not conceived and born near Zoar of the Land of Moab. The Coast of the Asphaltites. The Essenes. Engedi.

"ON the Western shore (of the Asphaltites) dwell the Essenes; whom persons guilty of any crimes fly from on every side. A Nation it is that lives alone, and of all other Nations in the whole World most to be admired, they are without any woman, all lust banished, &c. Below these was the Town Engadda, the next to Hierusalem for fruitfulness, and Groves of Palm-trees, now another burying place. From thence stands Massada, a Castel in a rock, and this Castel not far from the Asphaltites. a Plin. lib. 5. cap. 17.

Solinus, Plinies shaddow, speaks the like things. b The Essenes possess the inner parts of Judea, which look to the West. The Town Engadda lay beneath the Essenes, but it is now destroyed. But its glory for the famous groves that are there doth still endure: and in regard of its most lofty woods of Palms it hath received no disparagement either by age or war. The Castle Massada is the bounds of Judea. b Solin. cap. 38.

We are looking for the places, not the Men. We might otherwise begin the history of the Essenes from those words, Judg. I. 16. And the sons of the Kenite, Moses father in Law, went out of the City of Palms with the sons of Judah into the deserts of Judah. From these we suppose came the Rechabites, and from their stock, or Example the Essenes. Which if it be true, we make this an argument of the ill placing of Engedi in the Maps, being set too much towards the North, when it ought to have been placed towards the utmost Southern coasts.

If the Essenes were the same with the Kenites in seat and place, and the Kenites dwelt beyond Arad Southward, or indeed even with Arad, which is asserted in the Text alledged; and if below these were Engedi, which is also asserted by the Authors cited; certainly then the Maps have laid it a long way distant from its own proper place, too much Northward. View them, and think of these things. To which we also add this.

The Southern borders of the land, Ezek. XLVII. 19. (the very same which are mentioned Numb. XXXIV. and Jos. XV.) are thus declared, The Southern coast Southward from Tamar to the waters of Meriba in Cadesh, &c. But now Tamar and Engedi are the same, 2 Chron. XX. 2. Nor have we any reason, why we should seek another Tamar elsewhere. Certainly the Chaldee Paraphrast, and R. S. Jarchi, and Kimchi following him, have rendred Tamar in Ezekiel Jericho. But upon what reason? For how, I beseech you, was it possible, that Jericho should be the bounds of the South-land, when it was the utmost bounds of Judea Northward. It was this without all doubt drove them to that version of the word, because Jericho is called the City of Palmes, and Tamar signifies a Palm; since Engedi would not give place to Jericho one inch in regard of the glory of Palm-Groves.

Whether Tadmor, 1 King. IX. 18. be the same with this our Tamar, and whether Tadmor in the Talmudists be the same with that Tadmor, we leave to the Reader to consider. We produce these few things concerning it, which are related by them, for the sake of such consideration.

c They receive Proselytes from those of Cardya, and Tadmor. Rab. Abhu in the name of R. Jochanan saith, The Tradition asserts that the Proselytes of Tadmor are fit to enter into the Congregation. It was said a little before; Haggai the Prophet taught these three lessons. צורת הבית, The Rival of a daughter (of a Priest) may be married by a Priest. The Moabites and Ammonites ought to tithe the poors tithe the seventh year. And the Proselytes of Tadmor are fit to enter into the Congregation. c Hieros. Jevam. fol. 3. 2.

This story is recited in the Hierusalem Mishna. מרים תדמוריית, d Mary of Tadmor having part of the blood sprinkled upon her (whereby she was to be purified) heard in that very juncture of time, that her daughter was dead, &c. But the Babylonian calls her חרמונית of Tarmod. From the place Tarmud, saith the Gloss. e (The Tarmudeans חרמודאי, are said by those of the Babylonian Talmud to be certain poor people, who got themselves a livelihood by gathering up wood, and selling it.) d Nazir. cap. 6 hal. 13. e Bab. Schab. fol. 21. 2. And Aruch in תדבר.

f R. Jochanan said, Blessed is he, who shall see the destruction of Tadmor. For she communicated in the destruction of the first and second Temple. In the destruction of the first she brought eighty thousand archers: and so she did in the destruction of the second. f Hieros. Taanith fol. 69. 2.

CHAP. VII.

Cadeſh. רקם. And that double. Enquiry is made, whether the doubling it in the Maps is well done.

THE Readers of the Eaſtern Interpreters will obſerve, that קדש Cadeſh is rendred by all רקם Rekam, or in a ſound very near it. In the Chaldee it is Rekam: in the Syriak, Rekem: in the Arabic, Rakim. And Cadeſh Barnea in Onkelos is רקם גיאה, in Jonathan רקם גיעה (from which words compared we may obſerve how the guttural ע is melted.) In the Targum of Hieruſalem רקם רגיעא: in the Gemariſts רקם גועה

There are two places noted by the name קרם Rekam in the very bounds of the land, to wit, the Southern, and Eaſtern: that is a double Cadeſh.

I. Of Cadeſh, or Rekam in the South part there is no doubt.

II. Of it in the Eaſtern part there is this mention. מרקם למזרח ורקם כמזרח. a From Rekam to the Eaſt, and Rekam is as the Eaſt: that is, R. Niſſim interpreting. Rekam it ſelf is reckoned for the Eaſt of the World, (that is for the land of the Heathen) not for the land of Iſrael. Behold! a Rekam, or a Cadeſh, alſo on the Eaſt. But the Maps have feigned to themſelves another Cadeſh, beſides Barnea, and this Eaſtern Rekam; whither they think the people of Iſrael came in the fortieth year of their travail, Numb. XX. Theſe, we ſuppoſe, were ſome of the reaſons, whereby the Authors of them were drawn to it.

I. Becauſe Cadeſh Barnea was in the deſert of Paran, Numb. XII. 16. & XIV. 1. But the Cadeſh, whither they came the fortieth year was in the deſert of Zin, Numb. XX. 1. I anſwer, The ſearchers of the land departing from Cadeſh Barnea, are ſaid alſo to go out of the deſerts of Zin, Numb. XIII. 21. Paran was the general name of that dreadful deſert: Zin only one part of it.

II. In Cadeſh Barnea they encamped many days, Deut. I. 46. But in that Cadeſh, concerning which mention is made, Numb. XX. there was not proviſion ſufficient, whereby they might be ſuſtained one day. For they complain, that it was a place altogether deſtitute of ſeed, Figs, Vines, and Pomegranates, Numb. XX. 5. which they did not at all complain of, while they remained in Cadeſh Barnea. I anſwer, Omitting, that whereſoever they encamped, they were fed by Manna; the Complaint aroſe among them, not ſo much of the place it ſelf, as of the ill boding and prejudice, as I may ſo ſay, of the place: becauſe from the barrenneſs of this place they prejudged of the like barrenneſs of that land. into which they were to enter, and the Porch as it were of which was Cadeſh Barnea. When they came hither firſt, now thirty eight years before, Ye came to the Mountain of the Amorites, ſaith Moſes, which the Lord giveth you, Deut. I. 20, 21. Is it ſo? (think they with themſelves) Does the firſt entrance of the land of promiſe promiſe no better? There is little hope of the land it ſelf, if the beginnings of it are ſuch. It is convenient therefore, that we ſend before us ſpies, who may bring us word, whether it is of ſo great account, that we ſhould tyre and hazzard our ſelves by going to that ſoil, whoſe firſt appearance is ſo horrid and deſperate. And hence was that unhappy argument before their eyes, by the inducement of which the whole multitude by ſo unanimous a Vote concluded and reſolved againſt the land. And ſince now after ſo much time paſſed, they are come back to the ſame place, they think, diſtruſt, and complain of the ſame things.

III. In Cadeſh Barnea they had a ſupply of water; in Cadeſh, whether they came the fortieth year, there was no water, Numb. XX. &c. I anſwer, They drunk, when they firſt came to Cadeſh Barnea, of the Rock, which followed them, (1 Cor. X. 2.) which dried up when they were now ready to enter into the land. If you aſk, why had thoſe rivers that followed them dried up as ſoon as they came at Cadeſh Barnea, which before had not dried up when they came thither: then I aſk alſo, why had they dried up when they came to another Cadeſh?

IV. Concerning the Cadeſh, whither they came the laſt year of their travail, it is ſaid, that the City was in the utmoſt bounds of the land of Edom: and therefore they deſire leave of the King to paſs through the land of Edom, Numb. XX. 16, 17. I anſwer, Nothing at all hinders, but theſe things may be ſpoke of Cadeſh Barnea, which laying contiguous to the Mountain of the Amorites, that is, to Mountanous Judea, ſhewed ſo great an Army an acceſs, and promiſed it; only that acceſs was winding and very difficult to be paſſed. They deſire therefore a more level way of the King of Edom, but obtain it not.

V. Per-

V. Perhaps that which chiefly moved them was this, that supposing one Cadesh only, to wit Barnea, it will be scarce possible not to confound the Encampings of Israel in the wilderness, and their movings from place to place. I answer, There will be the same easiness of ordering them, if you do but reduce the sixth and seventh verses of Deut. X. into a true sence, and into agreement with Numb. XXXIII. from vers. 31. to vers. 41. which is not hard to do. But let these things suffice for the present to have spoke besides our scope. That that Cadesh, to which they came in the fortieth year (which is called Meribah, Numb. XX. 13.) is the same with Cadesh Barnea is clear enough from hence, that Meribah in Cadesh is assigned for the Southern border of the land, Ezek. XLVII. 19. Which border of old was Cadesh Barnea, Numb. XXXIV. 4. Jos. XV. 3.

The River of Egypt, Rhinocorura. The lake of Sirbon.

PLINY writes, a From Pelusium are the Intrenchments of Chabrias: Mount Casius: The Temple of Jupiter Casius. The Tomb of Pompey the great. Ostracine. Arabia is bounded sixty five miles from Pelusium. Soon after begins Idumea and Palestine from the rising up of the Sirbon lake. Either my eyes deceive me, while I read these things, or Mount Casius lies nearer Pelusium, than the lake of Sirbon. The Maps have ill placed the Sirbon between Mount Casius and Pelusium. a Nat. Hist. lib. 5. cap 12.

Sirbon שרבון implies Burning; the name of the lake being derived from its nature, which is firy and bituminous. It is described by Diodorus Siculus, Strabo, and others, whom you may look upon. A lake like to that of Sodome, and perhaps was of the like fate and original; to wit, an Example of divine indignation. What if it be the monument of that dreadful Earthquake in the days of Uzziah, Amos I. 1. Zech. XIV. 5? When God contended also in fire, Amos VII. 4. So that some Cities perished after the manner of Sodome and Gomorrha, Amos IV. 11. Esa. I. 9.

נחל מצרים, The furthest border of the land of Israel Southward is not Nile in Egypt, but Shihor in the way to Egypt, Jos. XIII. 3. Jer II. 18. In the seventy Interpreters it is Rhinocorura; for they render that in Esa. XXVII. 12. עד נחל מצרים, unto the stream of Egypt, Ἕως Ῥινοκορέων, unto Rhinocorura. Of which place and name, derived from the cutting of nosthrils, see Diodorus Siculus, lib. I.

CHAP. IX.

A sight of Judea.

IN a Judea is the Mountanous Country, the Plain, and the Vale. What is the mountanous Country of Judea? זה הר המלך, It is the Kings mountain. The Plain of it is the Plain of the South. The Vale is from Engedi to Jericho. The Plain of Lydda is as the Plain of the South: and its mountanous Country is as the Kings mountanous Country מביה הורון &c. From Beth-horon to the Sea is one circumjacent region. Rabbi Jochanan saith, Yet it hath a mountanous part, a plain, and a vale. From Beth-horon to Emmaus is mountanous, from Emmaus to Lydda is plain, from Lydda to the Sea is vally. a Hieros. Sheviith, fol. 38. 4.

Judea is not divided amiss into four parts. Namely, Into the Country, which formerly was the Philistins, which takes up the Western part. To this joyns on the East the mountanous Country of Judea, which is also called, The Kings mount. To the mountanous Country on the East joyns a plain, a Country more low and level than the mountains, which nevertheless here and there hath its hills. Hence is that שפלה שבהר כרר &c. b A vally lying between mountains is reckoned with the mountains, and mountains in a vally are numbred with the vally. To the plain Eastwardly joyns a vally, lower than the plain, namely the coast of the Sea of Sodom, and at length of Jordan. b Idem ibid. ὀρεσίβιοι ? ὀρέων. Joseph. Antiq. lib. 13. cap. 13.

The land of Benjamin in like manner, which is numbred with Judea, in reſpect of its ſuperficies was of the ſame nature; which although στενότατον ὁ κλῆρον ἔτον ἦν διὰ τὴν τῆς γῆς ἀρετήν, c it was a portion of the narroweſt limits by reaſon of the goodneſs of the ſoil, yet had its mountanous part, its plain, and vale: and that not only towards Lydda, and the great Sea, but towards Jericho and Jordan.

Judea did excel all the other parts of the land of Iſrael in very many privileges. For beſides that in it was ſeated Jeruſalem, the Metropolis of the whole Nation, and in Jeruſalem ſtood the Temple, and in the Temple ſat the Sanhedrin; this was alſo peculiar to it out of the Canons, That d it was not lawful to intercalate the year out of Judea, while they might do it in Judea. Maimonides gives the reaſon of the thing, e Becauſe there dwelt the divine glory. f Nor was the ſheaf of the firſt fruits of the barley to be fetched elſewhere, than from Judea, and as near as might be to Hieruſalem. g Once it was fetched a great way off, &c.

a Pliny lib. 5. cap. 13.

I*Dumea* a and Paleſtine begin from the riſing up of the Sirbon lake. The Towns of Rhinocorura, and within Raphea. Gaza, and within Anthedon. Mount Angaris. The Country along the Coaſt, Samaria. The free Town Aſcalon, Azotus. The two Jamnes, the one a village (otherwiſe Jamne within) Joppe of the Phenicians. Thence Apollonia. The Tower of Strato, the ſame is Ceſarea. The bounds of Paleſtine are CLXXXIX miles from the Confines of Arabia. Then begins Phenice.

And Chap. XIX. We muſt go back to the Coaſt, and Phenice. There was the Town Crocodilon: it is now a river. Ruins of ſome Cities. Dorum. Sycaminum. The Promontory Carmel: and in the mountain a Town of the ſame name, heretofore called Ecbatana. Near that Getta, Lebba, the River Pagida or Belus, mingling glaſſie ſand with its ſmall ſhore: it flows from the lake Cendevia at the root of Carmel. Next that is Ptolemais, a Colony of Claudius Ceſar, which heretofore was called Ace. The Town Ecdippa. The White Promontory. Tyrus, heretofore an Iſland, &c. It is in compaſs nineteen miles, Pale-Tyre lying within being included. The Town it ſelf contains two and twenty furlongs. Then the Towns, Enhydra, Sarepta, and Ornithon; and Sydon, the Artiſt of glaſs, and the mother of Thebes in Beotia.

b Strabo, lib. 16

Strabo goes backward. b Διέχει ὁ τῆς Σιδῶνος ἡ Τύρος ἑκατὸν μάλιστα καὶ διακοσίους σταδίους. Tyrus is not diſtant from Sidon above two hundred furlongs: five and twenty miles.

The Maſters of the Jews have obſerved this neighbourhood in that Canon, whereby proviſion is made, that no body betake himſelf to ſail in the Mediterranean Sea within three days before the Sabbath. c But if any (ſay they) will ſail from Tyre to Sidon, he may even on the Eve of the Sabbath: becauſe it is well known, that that ſpace may be ſailed while it is yet day.

Ἐν τῷ μεταξὺ πολίχνιον, ὀρείθων πόλις λεγομένη. Between Tyre and Sidon there is the little City Orinthon, (The City of Birds.) At Tyre a river goes out.

Thirty furlongs beyond Tyre is Pale-Tyrus: Three miles ¾ when therefore Pliny ſaith, the compaſs of Tyre is nineteen miles, Pale-Tyre that lies within being included, he ſhews manifeſtly, that it is not to be underſtood of the compaſs of the City it ſelf, ſince he ſaith, the Town it ſelf held two and twenty furlongs; nor can it well be taken of the whole circumference of the Tyrian juriſdiction, but rather of the extent of the bounds of it that way, which he went.

Εἶτ' ἡ Πτολεμαὶς ὅτι μεγάλη πόλις, ἣν Ἄκην ὠνόμαζον, &c. Moreover from Tyre (Southward) is Ptolemais, formerly called Ace. And between Ace and Tyre is a ſhore heaped with ſands fit to make glaſs.

Μετὰ δὲ τὴν Ἄκην Στράτωνος πύργος, &c. Beyond Ace is the Tower of Strato. The mountain Carmel lies between: and the names of ſome ſmall Cities, and nothing more. The Cities of Sycamines, of Herdſmen, of Crocodiles, and others. And going thence is a certain great Wood.

Εἶτα Ἰόππη, &c. After that Joppa, next which the ſhore of Egypt, which before had ſtretched out towards ſun riſing, does remarkably bend towards the North. There ſome talk that Andromeda was expoſed to the Whale. A place ſufficiently high, ſo high indeed, that from thence they report Jeruſalem may be ſeen, the Metropolis of the Jews. The Jews alſo that go down to the Sea uſe this port. But theſe ports are receptacles for Robbers. And ſo was the Wood and Carmel.

Καὶ

Καὶ ἡ κώμη Ἰάμνεια ἔστω ὁ τόπος, &c. And this place was ſo well peopled, that out of Jamnia a near Village, and the dwellings neighbouring about might be armed forty thouſand men.

Ἐντεῦθεν εἰς τὸ Κάσιον, &c. Thence to mount Caſius towards Peluſium the diſtance is a thouſand furlongs, and a little more. And three hundred more to Peluſium.

Here we muſt ſtop, and ſee how theſe two Authors do agree. For according to Straboes account, MCCC furlongs, and a little more, run out from Peluſium to Joppa: that is CLXIII miles, or thereabouts: but according to Plinies, at firſt ſight more by far. For Arabia (ſaith he) is bounded LXV miles from Peluſium: and the end of Paleſtine is CLXXXIX miles from the confines of Arabia. And then begins Phenice. The ſum is CCLIV miles. He had named Joppa before, Joppa of the Phenicians. But now ſuppoſing he makes Joppa the border of Paleſtine, and the beginning of Phenice, there are from Peluſium to Joppa, himſelf reckoning, almoſt an hundred miles more than in Strabo. Nor is there any thing to anſwer from the difference of the meaſure of Straboes furlongs, and Plinies miles. For they go by the ſame meaſure, themſelves being witneſſes: for to Strabo, τὸ μίλιον ὀκτασάδιον, d Eight furlongs make a mile: and to Pliny, e A furlong makes an hundred twenty five of our paces: which comes to the ſame thing.

We muſt therefore ſay, that by the end of Paleſtine in Pliny, is properly ſignified the end of it, touching upon Phenicia properly ſo called; that is upon the borders of Tyre and Sidon. For when he calls Joppa, Joppa of the Phenicians, he does not conclude Joppa within Phenicia, but becauſe the Sea, waſhing upon that ſhore of Paleſtine, was divided in common ſpeech into the Phenician, and the Egyptian Sea (ſo Strabo before, Afterwards Joppe, after that the ſhore of Egypt, &c.) and becauſe the Phenicians were famous for navigation, he aſcribed their name to Joppa, a very eminent haven of that ſhore. But he ſtretched the borders of Paleſtine a great way further: namely, ſo far till they meet with the borders of Tyre and Sidon. So far therefore doth Plinies meaſure extend it ſelf, to wit, that from Idumea, and the riſing of the Sirbon Lake to the borders of Tyre and Sidon there be CLXXXIX miles. The place that divided theſe meeting bounds to the Jews was Acon, or Ptolemais; which we ſhall note when we come thither. But whether it was ſo to Pliny, remains obſcure. But it is a more probable opinion, that he computed according to the vulgar, and moſt known diſtinction.

f Gulielmus Tyrius, meaſuring the borders of the Tyre of his time Southward, extends them to four or five miles: For it is extended Southward towards Ptolemais, as far as to that place, which at this day is called the Diſtrict of Scandarion, which is four or five miles. If therefore it ſhould be granted, that Plinies meaſure extended ſo far, we might compute the length of the land from the Sirbon, where alſo is the River of Egypt, to Sidon, by this account.

f G. Tyrius, De bello ſacro, c.3.

The mountanous Country of Judea.

a Hieroſ. Shevi'ith, fol.38.4

However Judea here and there doth ſwell out much with mountains, yet its chief ſwelling appears in that broad back of mountains, that runs from the utmoſt Southern coaſt as far as Hebron, and almoſt as Jeruſalem it ſelf. Which the Holy Scripture calls הר יהודה, ὀρεινὴ Ἰούδα, The Hill-country of Judah, Joſ. XXI. 11. Luk. I. 39.

Unleſs I am very much miſtaken, the Maps of Adricomius, Tirinus, and others ought to be corrected, which have feigned to themſelves a very long back of mountains beginning almoſt at the Red Sea, and reaching almoſt to the land of Canaan, and that with this Inſcription, The Amorrhean Mountain. Thoſe Authors are miſtaken by an ill interpretation of the Phraſe דרך הר האמרי, rendring it, in the way by (or near) the mountain of

of the Amorrhites, when it ſhould be rendred in the way to the mountain of the Amorrhites. Let the Reader conſult, Deut. I. 19,20. We departed from Horeb, and went through all that great and terrible deſert, which ye ſaw, דרך הר האמרי, in the way leading to the mountain of the Amorrhite, as our Lord commanded us, and came to Cadeſh Barnea. Then I ſaid unto you, You are now come to the mountain of the Amorrhite, &c.

The mountain of the Amorrhites took its beginning from Cadeſh Barnea, the Southern border of the land of Iſrael, and by a hardened gibboſity thruſt forward it ſelf into Judea beyond Hebron, the name only changed into the Hil-country of Judea. Whence is that of Samſon to be underſtood, that he carried not the gates of Gaza near to Hebron, or to the mountain, whence Hebron might be ſeen, but to the top of this mountanous Country, which runs out to Hebron: and ſo are the words to be rendred, Judg. XVI. 3. He carried them to the top of a mountanous place, which is before Hebron.

This mountanous Country is called מדבר הרים, The mountanous deſert, Pſal. LXXV. 6. Becauſe it is not from the Eaſt, nor from the Weſt, nor from the deſert of the mountains. Where the Targum thus, Nor from the South, the mountanous place.

It remains doubtful, why it is called by the Talmudiſts הר המלך, The Kings mountain. Whether becauſe it was King among all the other mountains of Judea? Or becauſe the royal dignity of Davids houſe ſprange hence, to wit, from Hebron? There is much mention of it in the Jewiſh writers.

The Chaldee Paraphraſt upon Judg. IV. 5. Deborah had עפר חור בטור מלכא white duſt in the Kings mountain. That is, as it ſeems, Potters clay: For the Gemariſts ſpeaking ſomewhere concerning Potters, ſay שהן &c. that b they work in black duſt, or in white duſt.

e R. Chajah, R. Iſſi, and R. Immai went up to the Kings mountain. They ſaw a certain Heathen, who was ſuſpicious concerning their wine.

f Hieros. Taanith, fol 69.1.

f A myriad of Cities ſtood in the mountain Royal, of which R. Eliezer ben Harſum poſſeſſed a thouſand. This mountanous Country is not therefore called מדבר דרים The mountanous Deſert, becauſe it was void of Cities and Towns, but becauſe it was a more barren and rough Country.

g Bab. Gittin, fol. 57. 1.

Rabh Aſai ſaith, Janneus the King had ſixty myriads of Cities in the Royal mountain: and in each the number was equal to them that went out of Egypt, excepting three Cities, in which that number was doubted. And theſe were, I. כפר בוש, Caphar Biſh (that is, the ill Town) therefore called ſo דלא &c. becauſe it afforded not an houſe of hoſpitaltity. II. כפר שיחליים, A Town, that had its name from a certain herb, becauſe by that herb they were nouriſhed. III. כפר דכריא, The Town of males, ſo called, ſaith R. Jocanan, becauſe their wives firſt brought forth males, and then females, and ſo left off.

h Hieros. Taanith. fol. 69. 1.

This ſtory is recited by the Hieruſalems Talmudiſt, who ſay כפר דכריא h is ſo called, becauſe unleſs the women departed thence ſomewhere elſe, they could not bring forth male children.

But ſaith Ulla, I ſaw that place, and it is not able to contain even ſixty myriads of neſts. Therefore ſaid a certain Sectary of R. Chaninah, Ye lie, Ye lie. To whom he replied, that land is called ארץ צבי: but now צבי a kid hath a ſkin that does not contain his fleſh: ſo the Land of Iſrael, while it is inhabited, is ſpacious, but when uninhabited, more contracted.

The South Country. דרומא עילאה ותתאה. Judea called דרום the South, in respect of Galilee.

R Abban a Gamaliel, and the Elders sitting together at the Ascent into the Gallery, in the mount of the Temple, had Jochanan, the Priest, and the Amanuensis, sitting with them. They said to him, Go to, Write. To our brethren, the Inhabitants of upper Galilee, and of nether Galilee, Health. We certifie you that the time is come of separating the Tithes. ולאחנא בני דרומא עילאה ובני דרומא אדעיתא, And to our Brethren, that inhabit the upper South Country, and that inhabit the nether South Country, Health. We certifie you, &c. [a]

The upper South Country consisted of that part of the Country which was Hilly, the nether of a plain, and vally sinking on both sides. Which Country although it were [b] barren above all other parts of the Land, yet had its Inhabitants, and those many, as well as other Countries of the Land.

He that turns over the Talmudical books will meet very frequently with the name of the South taken for whole Judea in opposition to Galilee. [c] Those of Zippor enjoyned a fast to obtain rain, but the rain came not down. Therefore said they of Zippor, R. Joshua Ben Levi obtained rain for the Southern people: but R. Chaninah hinders it from coming upon the people of Zippor. They were called therefore together to a second fast. [R. Chaninah] sent to fetch R. Joshua ben Levi. And both went out to the Fast, and yet rain fell not. He stood forth therefore, and said before them, Neither doth Joshua ben Levi obtain rain for the Southern people, nor does R. Chaninah restrain it from the people of Zippor: but the Southern people have a soft heart, to hear the words of the Law and be humbled: but the people of Zippor have an hard heart. But now R. Josua ben Levi, who was called דרומיא d the Southern, was of Lydda: and those Southern people, for whom he obtained rain, were of Lydda, and such as dwelt in that Country.

[f] A devout Disciple חלמר ווחיק, learned the intercalation of the year before his Master, three years and an half: He came, and intercalated for Galilee: but he could not intercalate for the South, that is, for Judea.

Hence you may understand in what sense some Rabbines are called דרומיי Southern: as ר' יעקב דרומיי, [g] R. Jacob of the South, who is called also R. Jacob דרומנה: [h] Also ר' שמלאי דרומיי, R. Samlai of the South, [i] whom you have disputing with certain whom the Gemarists call מינין that is, Hereticks: whom I think rather to have been Christians. And it seems to be the disputation of a Christian purposed to assert a Trinity of Persons in the Deity, but nevertheless a Unity of the Deity. After you have heard the matter, perhaps you will be of my judgment. View the place.

Gaza.

AFTER very many histories of this place in the Holy Bible, which there is no need to repeat here, [a] in this City did Alexander the Great at length besiege Babamesis the Persian by the space of two months. [b] Ἐνθάξε δὲ πόλε ἦν μεγάλη καὶ εὐανδρος ὑπὸ Ἀλεξάνδρε ἠρθη, καὶ μάλιστα ἔρημος. And that City, which before time was most famous, was laid waste by him, and rendred desert. Not that he had destroyed the building of the City, or consumed it with fire (for presently after his death, Antigonus and Ptolomy its Captains fighting, [c] it had walls, gates and fortifications) but that he devested it of its antient glory, so that it was at last melted into a new City of that name built nearer the Sea, where formerly had been Γάζαιον λιμὴν, the Haven of the Gazæans. That is called by Diodorus Γάζα παλαιὰ, old Gaza, and Γάζα ἔρημος, Gaza desert, by Strabo, and the New Testament, Act. VIII. 26. At last it was called New Maijuma, and after that Constantia. Concerning which see Eusebius of the life of Constantine, Book IV. Chap. XXVIII. and Sozomen his Ecclesiastical History, Book V. Chap. III.

e Hieroſ. Avodah Zara, fol. 39. 4. e There is mentioned alſo the Mart of Gaza, one of the three more famed Marts, to wit, that of Gaza, and of Aco, and of Botna, בוטנה.

f Bab. Sanhedr. fol. 71. 1. f There was a place alſo without the City, which was called חורבתא סגירתא The Waſt (or deſert) of the Lepers Cloiſter.

CHAP. XIV.

Aſcalon. Gerar. The ſtory of the eighty witches.

Aſcalon in the Samaritane Interpreter is the ſame with Gerar, Gen. XXI.

The word Gerar among the Talmudiſts ſeems to have paſſed into Gerariku.

a Hieroſ. Shevith, fol. 36. 3. a Wherefore, ſay they, have they not determined על אותה רוח שבגרריקו of that Country, which is in Gerariku? Becauſe it is ill to dwell in. How far? To the River of Egypt. But behold Gaza is pleaſant to dwell in, &c.

b Aruch in גרדיקי. In the Author of Aruch it is גרדקי, Gardiki. b Bereſhith Rabbah (ſaith he) renders מלך פלשתים גרר Gerarah לגרדיקי by Gardiki. מלך גרר The King of Gerar, Gen. XX. 2. with the Hieruſalem Targumiſt is מלכא דערד The King of Arad. Note the affinity of Arad, Gerar, and Aſcalon; and thence, unleſs I am deceived, will grow ſome light, to illuſtrate thoſe places in the Holy Bible, where we meet with theſe names.

c Joſeph. de Bell. lib. 3. cap. 1. c Aſcalon was diſtant from Jeruſalem five hundred and twenty furlongs: that is ſixty five miles. Which is to be underſtood of the older Aſcalon. For Benjamin Tudelenſis makes mention of a double Aſcalon, (this our) old, and the new. For thus he writes.

d Benjam. in Itinerario, pag. mihi 80. d Thence (from Azotus) is new Aſcalon diſtant two parſæ or leagues, (that is eight miles) which Ezra the Prieſt of bleſſed memory built at the Sea ſhore: and they called it firſt בנברה: now that is diſtant from old Aſcalon, now deſtroyed, four leagues.

So that from Azotus to Aſcalon, of which we are ſpeaking, and of which alone the Holy Scripture ſpeaks, were by his computation four and twenty miles; and by the computation of Adrichomius two hundred furlongs, that is, five and twenty miles.

e Georg. Sandes his Travails, pag. 151. e Ten miles from Gaza (ſays our Countryman Sandes, an eye witneſs) and near the Sea is placed Aſcalon, now of no note, antiently a venerable place to the Heathen for the Temple of Dagon, and the feſtivals of Semiramis birth-day.

f Diod. Sicul. lib. 19. f From Gaza to Azotus, Diodorus Siculus being witneſs, are two hundred and ſeventy furlongs: which amount to four and thirty miles. Namely from Gaza to Aſcalon ten miles, and thence to Azotus four and twenty.

g R. Niſſin in Gittin. cap. 1. That is a common ſaying מאשקלון לדרום &c. g From Aſcalon onward to the South is the heathen Country, and Aſcalon it ſelf is reputed for a heathen Country. And yet ſomething of Aſcalon was within the Land of Iſrael. גניא דאשקלון The Applegardens, or Orchards did bound the Land of Aſcalon on that coaſt, which we have obſerved before.

h Hieroſ. Shevith. fol. 36. 3. h And yet, When R. Iſmael ben R. Joſi, and Ben Hakkaphar were ſet over על אויר אשקלון the ſpace of Aſcalon (that is, when it was intruſted to them to judge concerning the ſpaces or parts of Aſcalon, namely what were within the land, and what without, &c.) they pronounced it clean from the authority of R. Phinchaſi ben Jair, who ſaid, We went down to the corn-market of Aſcalon, and thence we received wheat, and going up into our City we waſhed, and eat our Truma (i. e. the portion of firſt fruits belonging to the Prieſts.) The greateſt part of the City, if not the whole was eſteemed under the ſecond Temple, to be without the limits of the land: but ſome part, or at leaſt the Appleyards, and the places next adjacent were within the land.

i Bab. Avodah Zarah, fol. 11. 2 Mention is made of a certain Temple in Aſcalon among the i five more famous Temples, viz. The Temple of Bel in Babylon, the Temple of Nebo in Curſi, of Tiratha in Mapheg, of Zemphe in Aſcalon, and of Niſibra in Arabia.

And there is a ſtory of a faſt enjoyned, becauſe ſome ſign appeared of a blaſt of the k Taanith. cap. 3. Hal 6. corn in Aſcalon. k The Elders went down from Hieruſalem into their Cities, and enjoyned a faſt, becauſe ſo much of a blaſt was ſeen in Aſcalon, as the ſpace of the mouth of an oven may contain.

l Hieroſ. Sanhedr. fol. 23. 3. Bab. Sanhedr. fol. 44. 2. in Gloſſa. But moſt famous of all is the ſtory of the eighty women, that were witches, hanged by Simeon ben Shetach in one and the ſame day. We will not think much to relate the thing in the words of the Gemariſts. l When as two Diſciples of the wiſe men in Aſcalon were were intent upon the ſtudy of the Law, one of them at length dying had no funerals performed for him, when yet a Publican dying at that time had. To the Student, that ſurvived, are revealed the joys of his ſaved companion, and likewiſe the puniſhments of the damned Publican : וחמא כרים בת עלי בצלים תלויא בחוטי ביוויא Let the learned Reader turn this clauſe into Engliſh; unleſs my conjecture fail me, it ſavours of ſpite and poiſon. I ſhould thus render it. 'He ſaw Mary the daughter of Eli in the ſhades hung up by the kernels 'of the breſts; and when he enquired, how long ſhe was to ſuffer thoſe things? It was 'anſwered, Until Simeon ben Shetach came to ſupply her place. But ſaid he, For what 'crime? It is anſwered, Therefore becauſe he ſometime ſwore againſt his Soul, and ſaid, 'If I ſhall ever become a Prince, I will deſtroy all Wizzards. But behold, he is become 'a Prince, and yet he hath not done this: for eighty women, that are witches, lye hid in 'a Cave at Aſcalon, and kill the World. Go, and tell him, &c. He went to him there-'fore, and related theſe things, &c. On a certain rainy day therefore, having eighty 'young men in company with him, he goes to the Cave, knocks, profeſſes himſelf one 'of the bewitching Society, and is let in. He ſees them exerciſing their Art. For mut-'tering certain words together one brings morſels of meat, another wine, another boyl-'ed fleſh, &c. But what can you do, ſay they? Saith he, I will twice utter my voice, and 'I will bring in eighty Youths handſomly habited, them ſelves merry, and ſhall make you 'ſo. אמרין ליה לון נן כעיין They ſay to him, Such we would have. He utters his voice 'the firſt time, and the young men put on their clean cloths; (free from the rains, for they had carried them with them covered and ſafe in certain veſſels for the ſame purpoſe) 'Crying out the ſecond time, in they all come: and a ſign being given, that each man 'ſhould lift up from the Earth one woman (for ſo their Magical power would periſh) 'he ſaid to her which had brought the morſels, Bring hither now the morſels; but ſhe 'brought them not. Therefore ſaid he, Carry her away to the Gallows. Bring wine, 'but ſhe brought it not, Carry her alſo away, ſaith he, to hanging. And ſo it was 'done with them all. Hence is the Tradition, ם" נשים &c. Simeon ben Shetach hung 'eighty women in Aſcalon. But they do not judge two perſons in the ſame day. But 'this he did out of the neceſſity of the time. Where the Gloſs thus, He was compelled to 'do this, becauſe the women of Iſrael had very much broke out into witchcraft. There-'fore he made an hedge to the time, and hanged them to expoſe the thing publickly. 'And this in one and the ſame day, that their kinred might no way conſpire to deliver 'them.

CHAP. XV.

Jabneh. Jamnia.

THE word Jabneh is paſſed into Jamnia by the ſame change of מ Mem and ב Beth, as the lake Samochonitis in the Hieruſalem Writers is סמכו, in the Babylonian is סבכי.

Pliny doth diſpoſe the Towns here in this order; Azotus, the two Jamnes, Joppe. R. Benjamin in the order backward thus, Joppah, Jabneh, Azotus. That is Jabneh with this Author, that is Jamnia with the other.

A remembrance of this place is in 2 Chron. XXVI. 6. But the chief fame of it is for the Sanhedrin that was placed there, both before the deſtruction of Hieruſalem and after.

a Rabban Gamaliel, S. Pauls Maſter firſt preſided there. b Under whom came forth that curſed form of Prayer, which they called ברכת מינים The Prayer againſt Hereticks, compoſed by Samuel the little, who died before the deſtruction of the City. Gamaliel died eighteen years before the Temple was deſtroyed; and his ſon Rabban Simeon ſucceeded him, c who periſhed with the City.

Jeruſalem being deſtroyed, d Rabban Jochanan ben Zaccai obtained of Titus the Conqueror, that he might ſtill receive and retain the Sanhedrin of Jabneh: which being granted by him, Jochanan himſelf was firſt Preſident there, and after him Rabban Gamaliel the ſecond, and after him R. Akibah. And this place was famous above all the other Univerſities, except only the lateſt of all, viz. Tiberius: ſo that כרם ביבנה The Vineyard of Jabneh became a proverb. e שהיו יושבים שורות שורות ככרם For there there they ſat in order as a Vinyard. And it is reported, f that there were there three hundred claſſes of Scholars, or at leaſt eighty. How long time Rabban Jochanan ſat here, is doubted.

Omitting thoſe things, which were done by him, while he remained at Jafneh; let me produce his dying words, as they are recited by his friends.

i Bab. Beracoth, fol. 28. 2.

'i When Rabban Jochanan ben Zaccai now laid languiſhing, his Scholars came to viſit 'him. Whom he ſeeing began to weep. To whom they ſaid, O thou light of Iſrael, 'thou right hand pillar, thou ſtrong hammer, whence are thoſe tears? To whom he re- 'plied, If men were about to carry me before a King of fleſh and blood, who to day 'is here and to morrow is in his Grave; if he were angry with me, his anger is not ever- 'laſting; if he ſhould caſt me into bonds, his bonds are not eternal; if he ſhould kill 'me, his killing would not be eternal: and I might perhaps pacifie him with words, or 'ſoften him with a gift. But they are ready to lead me before the King of Kings, the 'Lord, holy and bleſſed, who lives and laſts for ever, and for ever and ever; who if he 'be angry with me, his anger is eternal; if he bind me, his bond is eternal; if he kill 'me, his killing is eternal; and whom I cannot either appeaſe with words, or ſoften with 'a gift. And moreover there are two ways before me, one to Paradice, another to Hell; 'and I know not which way they will lead me. Should I not therefore weep? CHAP. XVI.

a Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 20. cap. 5.

Λύδδα κώμη, α πόλεως τὸ μέγεθ' ἐκ ἀποδέουσα. Lydda was a village, not yielding to a City in greatneſs.

b Maaſar Sheni, cap. 5. Hal. 2.

Concerning its ſituation, and diſtance from Hieruſalem, the Miſhnah hath theſe words: כרם רבעי b The Vinyard of four years (that is, the fruit of a Vinyard now of four years growth: for for the firſt three years they were trees as it were not circumciſed) was brought to Hieruſalem, in the ſpace of a days journey on every ſide. Now theſe were the bounds of it אילת מן הדרום Elath on the South עקרבתא מן הצפון Acrabatta on the North, לוד מן המערב Lydda on the Weſt: and Jordan on the Eaſt. The Gloſs, The wiſe men appointed that the ſecond Tenth of the fruits, growing within the ſpace of a days journey from Hieruſalem, ſhould be carried thither to be eaten, and ſhould not be redeemed: כדי לעטר &c. That the Streets of Hieruſalem might be crowned with fruits.

c Gemar. Hieroſ. in Maaſar Sheni in the place above.

When you conſider this diſtance, you may well wonder what that means, which is almoſt become a Proverb, c The Women of Lydda knead their dough, go up to the Temple, pray, and come back, before it be leavened. Not that the diſtance of the places are made leſs, but that hence may be ſhewn, that no diſadvantage accrued to theſe women, who paid their vows and performed their Religion.

I very much wonder, that the Authors of the Maps have held Lod, and Lydda for two Towns; Lod not far from Jordan and Jericho; Lydda not far from the Mediterranean Sea. A Jew, or one verſed in Jewiſh affairs will laugh at theſe things; when Lod and Lydda have no difference at all between them, unleſs that that is Hebrew, this Greek.

When the Sanhedrin ſat in Jabneh, there flouriſhed eminent Schools in Lydda. Yea, Lydda had her Schools and her Learned Men, when the Univerſity was gone away into Galilee, and Jabneh lamented her loſs of Scholars.

d Roſh Haſhanah, cap. 1. Hal. 7.

There R. Akibah bore the Headſhip of the School, removed, as I ſaid before, from his government by Rabban Gamaliel; d Becauſe he detained at Lydda more than forty pair of

of men travailing (towards Jafneh) to give their teſtimony to the Sanhedrin concerning the new Moon; and ſuffered them not to go forwards.

Gamaliel being dead, or rather removed, when R. Akibah was Head in Jabneh, R. Tarphon was Rector of the School of Lydda, whom you have ſometimes diſputing with R. Akibah, but at laſt yielding to him with this commendation, He that ſeparates himſelf from you, is as if he ſeparated himſelf from his own life.

e We read of five Elders teaching and erring before Tarphon at Lydda. f We read alſo of a Faſt enjoyned at Lydda for the obtaining of rain, and Tarphon the Moderator of the Solemnity. The ſtories of this place are infinite, we will gather a few.

g Helena the Queen celebrated the feaſt of Tabernacles at Lydda.

h R. Eliezar, and R. Joſhua were ſometime preſent in the ſame place at the feaſt of Dedication. But being not enough ſatisfied concerning the Faſt at the time enjoyned one went to the Bath, the other to the Barbers ſhop.

i Here it was, that Ben Satdah was ſurprized and taken, and brought before the Sanhedrin, and ſtoned.

There is alſo very frequent mention of Papus and Lulienus brethren, ſlain at Lydda by the Roman Kingdom. l The day טירוז is the day, wherein Lulienus and Papus were ſlain. טירון with the Hieruſalem writers is טוריינוס with the Babylonian. Who relate that theſe brethren were ſlain בלודקיא, m in Laodicea, as one would gueſs. But לודקין ſaith the Gloſs, is Lydda: for n הרוגי לוד, the ſlain of Lydda are every where mentioned. And theſe, (ſaith the Gloſs) were put to death for the Kings daughter, who was found ſlain, and there was a rumour, the Jews had killed her. When therefore a ſharp Decree was decreed againſt the Jews, theſe two ſtood forth, and delivered Iſrael. For they ſaid, We ſlew her; therefore the King put them only to death.

o Since it was not lawful to intercalate the year any where but in Judea, p a great many went to Lydda out of the School of the Rabbi (Judah Haccodeſh, viz. out of Galilee) that they might intercalate: but a certain evil eye met them, and they all died together. After that they removed the Intercalation of the year out of Judea into Galilee. And a little after: R. Jeremiah asked before R. Zeira, Is not Lydda a part of Judea? Yes, ſaith he. Wherefore then do they not tranſact the intercalation of the year there? Becauſe they are obſtinate, and unſkilful in the Law.

Lydda is a part of Judea. Let ſome Maps mark this, which have placed a certain Lod, which never was any where, not far from Jericho, as was ſaid before; becauſe Lod in the land of Benjamin is brought in Nehem. XI. 35. But they ſet Lydda far beyond the bounds of Judea in the land of Ephraim.

q Koſhab bar Ulla ſometime got away to Lydda to Rabbi Joſua ben Levi dwelling there, when he fled from the Romans. The Romans purſued him, and beſeiged the City. Unleſs you deliver him to us, ſay they, we will deſtroy the City. R. Joſua ben Levi perſwaded him, and he was delivered to the Romans.

I might produce numberleſs things celebrating the name of Lydda, ſuch as, עליית בית־ארם בלוד r The Chamber of Beth-Arum in Lydda. עליית בית־לבזה בלוד s The Chamber of Beth-lebaza in Lydda. עליית בית־נחוזא בלוד t The Chamber of Beth-Nethaza in Lydda. We ſuppoſe theſe were Schools.

I might mention very many names of Rabbines reſiding at Lydda, beſides thoſe I have remembred before: ſuch are u R. Chama bar Chanina, and R. Hoſhaia with him. x R. Illai, and R. Eliezer; and others, who are vulgarly called the Southern in the ſenſe we produced before. Concerning R. Joſua ben Levi, by name, the Author of Juchaſin hath theſe words, בדרום ישיבתו אי y His habitation, or College, was in the South of the land of Iſrael. He means Lydda.

R. Eliezar, dying at Ceſarea, deſired to be buried at Lydda, when R. Akibah bewailed as well with blood as tears. z For when he met his hearſe betwixt Ceſarea and Lydda, he beat himſelf in that manner, that blood flowed down upon the Earth. Lamenting, thus he ſpake, O my Father, my Father, the chariot and horſe-men of Iſrael. I have much money, but I want a Monyer, to change it. The Gloſs is this, I have very many queſtions, but now there is no man, to whom I may propound them.

There is a place between Jamnia and Lydda, which was called בקיעין Bekiin of which there is this mention: * R. Jochanan ben Brucha, and R. Eliezer the Blind travailing from Jabneh to Lydda met R. Joſua בבקיעין in Bekiin, &c.

Sharon. Caphar Lodim. כפר לודים, The Village of thoſe of Lydda.

BEtween Lydda and the Sea a ſpacious Vally runs out, here and there widely ſpreading it ſelf, and ſprinkled with Villages: The holy Page of the New Teſtament calls it Saron (ἡ Σάρωνα): and that of the Old calls the whole perhaps, or ſome part of it, the Plain of Ono, Nehem. VI. 2. & XI. 35. 1 Chron. VIII. 12.

The word שרון denotes a champion paſture Country, from (שרה to ſend forth) ſending forth cattel; one beyond Jordan, 1 Chron. V. 16. and this our Sharon.

a Bab. Shab. fol. 77. 1. b Sotah, cap. 8. hal. 7.

The wine of Sharon is of great fame, a with which they mixed two parts water: and remarkable is that they ſay concerning the houſes of Sharon. b R. Lazar ſaith, He that builds a brick houſe in Sharon, let him not return back: which was allowed to others, Deut. XX. 5. namely that they ſhould return back from the war, if they had built a new houſe, and it were not yet dedicated. c But the men of Sharon withdrew not themſelves back (they are the words of the Jeruſalem Gemara) becauſe they repaired their houſes within ſeven years: and the chief Prieſt alſo prayed for them on the day of Expiation, that their houſes might not become their graves. The Gloſs upon the Babylonian Talmud thus, Sharon was the name of a place, whoſe ground was not fit for bricks, and therefore they often repaired their houſes within ſeven years.

c Hieroſ. Ibid. fol. 23. 1.

Among the Villages ſcattered up and down in this pleaſant Vale we meet with Caphar Lodim, between Lydda and the Sea. There is mention of it in the book Gittin in the very beginning. d He that brings a bill of Divorſe from a Heathen Country, is bound to witneſs thus, This bill was written I being preſent, and was ſealed I being preſent ---------- R. Eleazar ſaith, Yea he that brings it from Caphar Lodim to Lydda, R. Niſſim, explaining the place ſaith thus, Caphar Lodim was without the land of Iſrael, neighbour to Lydda, which was within (the Land) and partook of its name, becauſe ſome people of Lydda were always preſent there.

Caphar Tebi. כפר טבי.

AND this Village neighboured upon Lydda, ſituate on the Eaſt of it. a R. Eleazar had a Vinyard of four years growth במזרה לוד בצד כפר טבי On the Eaſt of Lydda near Caphar Tebi. Of it there is this mention alſo.

a Bab. Roſh haſh, fol. 13 2.

b They ſometime brought a cheſt full of bones from Caphar Tebi, and they placed it openly in the entrance to Lydda. Tudrus the Phyſitian, and the reſt of the Phyſitians go forth: (namely that they might judge, whether they were the bones of men or no, and thereby whether they were to be eſteemed clean or unclean) Tudrus ſaid, Here is neither the backbone, nor the ſkul of a man. They ſaid therefore, ſince here are ſome, who reckon them clean, others that hold them unclean, let the matter be decided by Votes. R. Akibah began, and he pronounced them clean, &c.

b Hieroſ. Berac. fol. 3 1.

The name טבי Tebi given to this Village ſeems to be derived from the Kids skipping up and down in this fruitful vale. The word alſo gave name to men; and that, as it ſeems, with ſome delight, The woman Tabitha is of eternal memory, Act. IX. and in the pages of the Talmudiſts; c Tebi the ſervant of Rabban Gamaliel; and *d Tabitha his maidſervant. The Northern coast of Judea. Beth-horon.

THIS Coast is marked out Jos. XVIII. 12. where at vers. 12. are very many Versions to be corrected, which render ים The Sea; such are The Syriac, the Seventy, the Vulgar, the Italian, ours, &c. whence ariseth a sense of insuperable difficulty to a Chorographical eye. When it should indeed be rendred Of the West, as the Chaldee, Arabic, R. Solomon, &c. rightly do.

We read of a double Beth-horon in the Old Testament, but one only under the second Temple. a This in Josephus is Βαιθωρὼ, and according to him stood b an hundred furlongs or thereabouts from Jerusalem, viz. Twelve miles and an half.

a Joseph. de bell. lib. 2. cap. 20. b Idem, Antiq. lib. 20. cap. 4.

At that place that great Canaanitish Army perished, Jos. X. not with hail, (the Jews being judges) which presently melted, but with stones, which hardned, and lasted unto all following ages. Hence is that, c Whosoever shall see the place, where the Israelites passed through the Sea, where they passed through Jordan, where they passed by the rivers of Arnon, or those great stones, (אבני אלגביש) in the going down of Beth-horon, is bound to bless.

c Bab. Berac. fol. 54. 1.

They believe, in the same place also the army of Sennacherib fell. For so the Gloss upon the words before spoken, d The going down of Beth-horon was the place, where the army of Sennacherib fell.

d Gloss. ibid. fol. 2.

This was an high way. Josephus in the place above cited, relating a story of one Stephen, a servant of Cesar, who suffered hardly by robbers in this place, saith that it was ἐπὶ τῆς Βαιθωρὼ δημοσίαν ὁδὸν, in the publick way of Beth-horon: namely in the Kings high way, which goes from Jerusalem to Cesarea.

Yet the passage and ascent here was very strait, which the Talmudists do thus describe, e If two Camels go up together in the ascent of Beth-horon, both fall. The Gloss, The ascent of Beth-horon was a strait place, nor was there room to bend to the right hand or to the left.

e Bab. Sanhedr. fol. 32. 2.

The story of Cestius the Roman Captain in Josephus is sad, but not unseasonable in this place. f He entrenched against Jerusalem in a place called, The Scope (ὅπῃ τῆς καλουμένης σκοπῆς) on the North part of the City, (which we shall shew hereafter) and being at length forced by the Jews to retreat, μόγις εἰς Γαβαὼ κατώτερον ὅπῃ τὸ πρότερον στρατόπεδον, he came near to Gabaon to his former Camp. And being pressed further by them he betook himself to Beth-horon. Περαιτέρω τῆς Βαιθώρων. He led his forces to Beth-horon.

f Joseph. de Bello, lib. 2. cap. 40.

But the Jews, whilst he marched along places where there was room, did not much press him, Συνελαυνόντων δ' εἰς κενὰ καταβάσιν, but they getting before the Romans, who were shut up within the straits of the descent (of Beth-horon) stopped them from going out: others thrust them that came in the rere down into the valley. And the whole multitude being spred ὑπὲρ τὰ ἀνοίγοντα τῆς ὁδοῦ, at the opening of the way covered the army with their darts.

Behold! the way leading from Jerusalem to Beth-horon.

I. From the City to Scopo (צומי, of which we shall speak afterwards) is seven furlongs. For so Josephus, Διέχει δ' ἑπτὰ τῆς πόλεως σταδίους.

II. From Scopo to Gabao, or Geba, forty three furlongs. For Gabao was distant from Jerusalem, the same Josephus relating it, fifty furlongs, that is six miles and more.

III. From Geba to Beth-horon fifty furlongs, or thereabouts. And about Beth-horon was a very great roughness of Hills, and a very narrow passage.

CHAP. XX.

JOSEPHUS thus describes the Land of Benjamin, [a] Βενιαμῖται ἤ πρὸς ἀπὸ Ἰορδάνου ποταμοῦ ἔλαχον, ἔχει δ' αὐλῶνας μὲν τὸ μῆκος· τὸ δ' πλάτος, Ἱεροσολύμοις ὁριζόμενον, καὶ Βεθήλοις. The Benjamites portion of land was from the River Jordan to the Sea, in length: in bredth it was bounded by Jerusalem and Bethel. Let these last words be marked, The bredth of the land of Benjamin was bounded by Jerusalem and Bethel. May we not justly conclude from these words, that Jerusalem and Bethel were opposite as it were in a right line? But if you look upon the Maps, there are some that separate these by a very large tract of land, and make them bend and slope from one another.

Beth-el heretofore was Luz: of which the Rabbines upon Judg. I. 23. &c. do not a little trifle. Sometimes it is called Beth-aven: so the Talmudists. [b] That Town which sometimes was called Beth-el, afterwards was called Beth-aven. And the Chaldee upon Hos. IV. 15. לא תסקון לבית־אל Go not up to Beth-el, for the Hebrew אל תעלו בית און Go not up to Beth-aven. So also Chap. X. 5, 8. Not that there was not another Town, named Beth-aven (see Jos. XVIII. 12, 13.) but that Beth-el too deservedly bore the reproach of that name, in the same manner as Hierusalem bore the name of Sodome, Esa. I. 10.

It is said of Deborah that she lived between Ramah and Beth-el in mount Ephraim, Judg. IV. 5. where the Targum thus, She had Gardens in Ramatha, Olive-trees making oyl in the valley, an house of watering in Bethel. Not that Beth-el properly was in the Hill-country of Ephraim, since that Town stood upon the very Boundaries of Judea, but that the dwelling of Deborah was at the beginning of that Hill-country, a valley running between that Hill-country and those boundaries. Beth-el it self was situate in a Hilly-country, Jos. XVI. 1. which yet one would scarcely call the Hill-country of Ephraim, (since there was a time, when Beth-el and her Towns belonged to Judea, 2 Chron. XIII. 19. Hence the Idolatry of those of Judah are sometimes mixed with the Ephraimites, of which they hear often enough from the Prophets) but it was a certain hilly place running out between Judea and the land of Ephraim, see Jos. XVIII. 12.

On the East of Beth-el heretofore was Hai, Gen. XII. 8. Jos. VIII. 9, &c. But upon the very first entrance almost of Israel into the land of promise, it became thenceforth of no name, being reduced into eternal ashes by Joshua. The Town Beth-aven was not far from it, Jos. VII. 2. which gave name to the wilderness adjacent, Jos. XVIII. 12. In which we suppose Ephraim stood, 2 Chron. XIII. 19. Which Ephraim in the New Testament is called χώραν ἐγγὺς τῆς ἐρήμου, the region near the wilderness, Joh. XI. 54. concerning which we shall speak afterwards.

CHAP. XXI.

Jerusalem.

THE first name of this City was Shalem, Gen. XIV. 18. Psal. LXXVI. 2. and it is still retained in the writing ירושלם however it is read Jerushalaim.

[a] Bereshith Rabba, Sect. 9. See Aruch in ירושלם

[a] The name of that place is Jehovah Jireh. Abraham called the place Jireh, Shem called it Shalem. Saith God, If I shall call it Jireh, it will displease Sem the just; if I shall call it Shalem, it will displease Abraham the just. I will therefore put that name upon it, which was put upon it by both יראה שלם ירושלם Jireh, Shalem, Jerusalem. לכך אין אנו &c.

[b] We do not therefore put in Jod between the letters Lamed and Mem in the word Jerusalem, that the word שלם Shalem may be retained.

By the computation of Aben Ezra, it is situate in the three and thirtieth degree of latitude. For so he speaks רוחב מצרים &c. [c] The latitude of Egypt is less than thirty degrees ורוחב ירושלם &c. And the latitude of Jerusalem is three and thirty degrees.

d Hieruſalem was not divided among the Tribes: For the Tradition is, that houſes are not hired out at Jeruſalem, becauſe they were no mans own. R. Eleazar bar Zadok ſaid, nor beds alſo. Therefore the Maſter of the family received the skins of the ſacrifices from the Gueſts. Abai ſaith, You may learn this from hence, That it is a cuſtom, that a man leave his earthen jug, and alſo the skin of his ſacrifices to his Hoſt. The Gloſs, The inhabitants of Jeruſalem did not let out their houſes at a price to thoſe that came to the feaſts, but granted them to them gratis. Compare Matth. XXVI. 17.

d Bab. Joma, fol. 12. 1. & Megillah, fol. 26. 1.

Nevertheleſs the City was divided between the Tribe of Judah and Benjamin, and the diſtinguiſhing line went through the very Court of the Temple. e What was in the lot of Judah? The Mountain of the Temple, the chambers of them that kept it, the Courts. And what in the lot of Benjamin? The Porch of the Temple, and the Temple, and the holy of holies, And a line went out of the lot of Judah, and paſſed on into the lot of Benjamin, and in it was the Altar built. The Gloſs, The whole bredth of the outmoſt Court, on the Eaſt part, the whole Court of the Women, the whole Court of Iſrael, eleven cubits of the Court of the Prieſts: (Theſe were within the lot of Judah.) From thence the Altar, and thenceforward to the Weſt is within the lot of Benjamin.

e Bab. in the place above.

In ſo exact diſtinction were theſe lots obſerved, f that the South Eaſt corner of the Altar had no foundation; becauſe that ſmall part was in the portion of Judah, when the whole Altar ought to have been within the portion of Benjamin.

g Jeruſalem was holy above other Cities, girt with walls, becauſe in it they ate the lighter holy things, and the ſecond Tithe. Theſe alſo are thoſe things which are ſpoken of Jeruſalem. They do not permit a dead body to remain a night in it: They do not carry the bones of a dead body through it: they do not let out houſes in it: in it they do not let out a place גר תושב to a Proſelyte inhabitant: in it they do not allow a Sepulchre, except the Sepulchres of the houſe of David, and the Sepulchre of Huldah the Propheteſs; which were there from the days of the former Prophets; nor in it do they ſuffer a dunghill by reaſon of creeping things; nor do they bring out of it into the ſtreets ſcaffolds, ſet up againſt the walls by reaſon of defilement: nor in it do they make chimnies by reaſon of the ſmoke: nor do they nouriſh cocks in it for the ſake of the holy things: nor do the Prieſts nouriſh cocks throughout the whole land of Iſrael for the ſake of purity: nor is there in it a houſe for ſhutting out ſuſpected of the Leproſie: nor is it polluted with Leproſie: nor is it become any way a City to be curſed for Idolatry, &c. h Never did Serpent or Scorpion harm any one within Jeruſalem. Nor did ever any one ſay to his neighbour, the place wherein I am entertained at Jeruſalem, is too ſtrait for me.

h Avoth, cap. 5 hal. 5.

i There is no Anathema at Jeruſalem, nor hath any man ſtumbled. Nor hath a fire or a ruine happened there: nor hath any one ſaid to his neighbour, I found not a hearth to roaſt my Paſſover, or I found not a bed to lye on. In it they do not plant trees, except gardens of roſes, which were there from the days of the former Prophets: They do not nouriſh in it Peacocks, or Cocks, much leſs Hogs, &c.

i Avoth, R. Nathan, fol. 9. 1.

The Fathers of the Traditions give this reaſon, why they do not allow gardens in the City: k They make no Gardens or Paradices in Jeruſalem, משום סירחא becauſe of the ſtink. The Gloſs, Becauſe of the ſtink from weeds, which are thrown out: and it is a cuſtom to dung Gardens, and from thence comes a ſtink.

k Bava Kama, cap. 7. hal. ult.

The ſame Gloſs in the ſame place gives this reaſon alſo why they might not keep Cocks: It is alſo forbid the Iſraelites to keep Cocks in Jeruſalem (the Prieſts may no where do it) becauſe of the holy things. For there they have eaten the fleſh of the Peace-offerings, and Thank-offerings. And it is cuſtomary for dunghil Cocks to ſcrape dunghils, and thence perhaps they might rake up the bones of creeping things; whence thoſe holy things which are to be eaten might be polluted.

Gardens without the City were very frequent, and they ſtretching out a good way from the very walls of the City. l Hence that in Joſephus concerning the hazzard Titus run, whilſt he rode about the City to ſpy it. Τῷ δ' ἐφόδου μὲν οὐκ ἦν χωρεῖν ἀδυνάτου, ἐκπεπόρευτο γὰρ ἀπὸ τοῦ τείχους πρὸς τοὺς κήπους ἅπαντα, κύκλῳ τοῖς ἀπωτάτοις καὶ πολλοῖς ἔρκεσι διειλημμένα. It was impoſſible for him to go forward, for all things from the walls were fenced up with deep ditches for the gardening, and gardens lay croſs, and many walls, that parted them.

l De bello, lib. 5 cap. 7.

The Talmudiſts relate alſo theſe wonders of the Temple. m Ten miracles were done for our Fathers in the Sanctuary. No woman ever miſcarried by the ſmell of the holy fleſh; nor did the holy fleſh ever ſtink, or breed worms: nor was there ever ſeen fly in the houſe (or place) for ſlaughter; nor did ever the Gonorrhea happen to the High Prieſt on the day of expiation: nor rains put out the fire of the Altar, nor the wind prevail over the pillar of ſmoke: nor was any profane thing found in the ſheaf of firſt fruits, or the two loaves (of the High Prieſt) or in the ſhew bread. עומדים צפופים ומשתחוים רווחים They ſtood (in the Court) crowded; (The Gloſs explains it thus, They did ſo preſs one another by reaſon of the multitude, that their feet ſcarcely touched the ground.) But when they worſhiped, they had room enough, &c.

Bezetha and Ophel were other little hills alſo: of which in their place when we ſhall firſt have taken a view of theſe two, Sion and Acra, and the ſituation of each.

It is an old Diſpute and laſts to this day, whether Sion or Jeruſalem lay on the North part of the City. We place Sion on the North, convinced by theſe reaſons.

When the Prophet Ezekiel takes a proſpect of the new Jeruſalem in a viſion, he ſaith that he ſtood upon a very high mountain, near which was as it were the building of a City on the South, Ezek. XL. 2. On which place Kimchi thus, 'He placed me upon a very 'lofty mountain. That mountain was the Mount of the Temple: for the Temple was 'to be built in a mountain, as before. And the City Jeruſalem is near it on the South. And Lyranus again, after the reciting the explication of ſome upon that verſe, and his re- jecting it; 'And therefore, ſaith he, the Hebrews ſay, and better, as it ſeems, that the 'Prophet ſaw two things, namely the City and the Temple, and that the Temple was 'in the North part, but the City in the South part.

Behold! Reader, Zion on the North part in the Pſalmiſt, and the City on the South part in the Prophet!

The

The things which make for this in Josephus, are various, and plain enough; which nevertheless we cannot frame into arguments, before the buildings of better note in Sion, or in the upper City, be viewed. Of which the Reader must be mindful; namely, that the Name of Sion after the return out of Babylon was grown into disuse, but the more vulgar was τῆς ἄνω πόλεως, The upper Town.

CHAP. XXIII.

The buildings of more eminent note in Sion.

WE shall first take knowledge of the buildings themselves; and then, as much as we may, of their situation.

I. The Kings Court claims the first place in our view. Concerning which are those words, a Ἐπεῖσε πρὸς τὴν ἄνω πόλιν ἐλθὼν ἀνέκαθεν τῆς βασιλικῆς αὐλῆς ἐστρατοπεδεύσατο. Cestius (having wasted the other places of the City) came at length into the upper City (Sion) and encamped against the Kings Court. a Joseph. de Bell. lib. 2. cap. 39.

When the Romans had fired Acra, and levelled it with the ground, b οἱ σπασταὶ δὴ πρὸς τὴν βασιλικὴν ὁρμήσαντες αὐλήν, The Seditious rushing into the Court, into which by reason of the strength of the place they had conveyed their goods, call away the Romans thither. And afterwards, c Καίσαρ δ', ὡς ἀμήχανον, &c. But, when it was in vain to assault the upper City without Ramparts, as being every where of steep access, Cesar applies his army to the work, &c. b Ibid. lib. 6. cap. 37. c Ibid. cap. 40.

II. The House of the Asmoneans, and the Xystus, or open Gallery. d King Agrippa calls the people of Jerusalem together into the Xystus, and sets his sister Berenice in their view, ἐπὶ τῶ Ἀσαμωναίων οἰκίᾳ, &c. Upon the house of the Asmoneans, which was about the Xystus, in the further part of the upper City. d Ibid. lib. 2. cap. 28.

III. There was a Bridge, leading from the Xystus unto the Temple, and joyning the Temple to Sion. e Γέφυρα τῷ Ξυστῷ τὸ Ἱερὸν συνῆπτεν. A Bridge joyned the Temple to the Xystus. e Idem, Ibid.

f When Pompey assaulted the City, the Jews took the Temple, καὶ τὴν τέμνουσιν ἀπ' αὐτῆ γέφυραν εἰς τὴν πόλιν ἔκοπτον· and broke down the bridge that led thence into the City. But others received the army, and delivered the City and the Kings Court to Pompey. f Idem, Antiq. lib. 14. cap. 8.

g And Titus, when he besieged the Seditious in the Court in the upper City, raises the engines of four Legions, κατὰ τὸ πρὸς δύσιν κλῖμα τῆς πόλεως, ἀντικρὺς τῆς Βασιλικῆς αὐλῆς, &c. on the West side of the City, against the Kings Court. But the associated multitude, and the rest of the people were before the Xystus and the Bridge. g Idem, de Bello, lib. 6. cap 40.

You see these places were in the upper City: and you learn from Josephus that the upper City was the same with the Castle of David, or Sion. But now that these places were on the North side of the City learn of the same Author from these passages that follow.

He saith plainly, that the Towers built by Herod, the Psephin Tower, the Hippic Tower, &c. were on the North. h Titus, saith he, entrenched two furlongs from the City on the angular part of the wall near the Psephin Tower, where the circuit of the wall bends from the North towards the West. And in the Chapter next after, The Psephin Tower lift up it self at the corner of the North, and so Westward. And in the same Chapter describing the compass of the outmost wall, i Ἀρχόμενον δ', saith he, κατὰ βορρᾶν ἀπὸ τοῦ Ἱππικοῦ, &c. It began on the North at the Hippic Tower, and went on the Xystus. And when he had described those Towers, he adds these words, Κειμένοις δὲ πρὸς Ἄρκτον, &c. To those Towers situate on the North was joyned on the inside the Court. What can be clearer? The Court was in the upper City, or Sion, but the Court was joyned to the outmost Northern wall: Therefore Sion was on the North. h Ibid. lib. 5. cap. 12. i Ibid. cap. 13.

Add to these those things that follow in the story of Pompey, produced before. When the Court was surrendred into Pompey's hands, Παμπήιος δ' ἔσωθεν στρατοπεδευσάμενος κατὰ τὸ βόρειον τοῦ Ἱεροῦ μέρους. He encamped on the North part of the Temple. And of Cestius, l Πρὸς τὴν ἄνω πόλιν ἐλθὼν ἀνέκαθεν τῆς βασιλικῆς αὐλῆς ἐστρατοπεδεύετο· Being come to the upper City he pitched against the Kings Court. And a little after, Κατὰ τὸ προσάρκτιον ὑπῆρχε κλῖμα τοῦ Ἱεροῦ. He attempted the Temple on the North side. l Ibid. lib. 2. cap. 39.

We shall not urge more at this time. There will occur here and there to us as we proceed such things as may defend this our opinion: against which what things are objected we know well enough, which we leave to the Reader to consider impartially. But these two we cannot pass over in silence, which seem with an open face to make against us.

I. It may be objected, and that not without cause, that Sion was in the Tribe of Judah, but Jerusalem in the Tribe of Benjamin. But now when the land of Judah was on the South part of Jeruſalem, and Mount Sion is to be reckoned within the lot of Judah, how could this be, when Jeruſalem, which was of the lot of Benjamin, laid between Judea and Sion?

I anſwer, 1. No neceſſity compels us to circumſcribe Sion preciſely within the portion of Judah, when David conquered it, not as he was ſprung of Judah, but as he was the King of the whole Nation.

2. But let it be allowed, that Sion is to be aſcribed to Judah, that dividing line between the portion of Judah and Benjamin, concerning which we made mention before, went not from the Eaſt to the Weſt; for ſo indeed it had ſeparated all Jeruſalem from all Sion: but it went from South to North, and ſo it cut Jeruſalem in two, and Sion in two: ſo that both were in both Tribes, and ſo alſo was Mount Moriah.

II. It is objected, that at this day a Hill and Ruins are ſhewn to Travailers under the name of Sion, and the Tower of David on the South part of the City.

I anſwer, But let us have leave not to eſteem all things for Oracles, which they ſay, who now ſhew thoſe places, ſince it is plain enough, that they miſtake in many other things: and let it be without all controverſie, that they ſtudy not ſo much truth in that affair, as their own gain. I wiſh leſs credit had been given to them, and more ſearch had been made out of Scripture, and other Writers concerning the ſituation of the places.

CHAP. XXIV.

Some buildings in Acra. Bezetha. Millo.

MOunt Sion did not thruſt it ſelf ſo far Eaſtward, as Mount Acra, and hence it is, that Mount Moriah is ſaid by Joſephus to be ſituate over againſt Acra, rather than over againſt the upper City: for deſcribing Acra thus, which we produced before, a Ἄλλος ὄρος (λόφος) ὁ καλούμενος Ἀκρα, &c. There is another Hill called Acra, which bears the lower City upon it, ſteep on both ſides: in the next words he ſubjoyns this, τότε ὁ ἀντικρὺ τείτος ἦν λόφος, Over againſt this was a third Hill, ſpeaking of Moriah.

a Joſeph. De bello, lib. 5. c. 13.

The ſame Author thus deſcribes the burning of the lower City: b Τότε ἀρχεῖον μὲν πλὴν Ἀκρας, καὶ τὸ βουλευτήριον, καὶ πλὴν ὅσα ἦν ὑπὲρ Ἀκραν· καὶ πρόκοψε τὸ πῦρ μίχρι τῆς Ἑλένης βασιλείων, ἃ δὴ κατὰ μέσην πλὴν Ἀκραν ἦν. Then they fired the Archivum and Acra, and the Councel-houſe, and Ophla: and the fire deſtroyed unto the Palaces of Hellen, which were in the middle of Acra.

Ibid. lib. 6. cap. 35.

I. Ἀρχεῖον,] the Archivum. Whether he means the Magiſtrates Court, or the Repoſitory of the antient Records, according to the different ſignification of the word, we do not determine. There were certainly ſacred Records in the Temple, and civil Records no doubt in the City, where Writings and Memorials of Sales, Contracts, Donations, and publick Acts, &c. were laid up. I ſhould more readily underſtand this of their Repoſitory, then of the Magiſtrates Court, becauſe preſently after the Councel-houſe is diſtinctly named.

II. Acra.] That is, either the buildings, which were upon the very head and top of the Mount, or ſome Garriſon or Caſtle in the Mount. In which ſenſe that word doth not ſeldom occur in the Hiſtory of the Maccabees, and in Joſephus.

III. The Councel-houſe.] He mentions elſewhere Βουλὴ, the Councel, and that, as it ſeems, in the upper City. For he ſaith, that c the outmoſt wall on the North began at the Hyppic Tower, and went forward to the Xyſtus, ἔπειτα τῇ Βουλῇ συναπτον, and thence touching upon the Councel (or the Court) it went onward oppoſite againſt the Weſt walk of the Temple. The Councel in the upper City you may not improperly interpret the Court of the King: the Councel-houſe in the lower City the Councel of the Sanhedrin, whether it went, when it departed from the Tabernæ.

c Ibid. lib. 5. cap. 13.

IV. Ophla.] Ophel, Nehem. III. 26.

d There was alſo a fourth Hill, ſaith the ſame Joſephus, ὃς καλεῖται Βεζεθὰ, which was called Bezetha, ſituate over againſt Antonia, and divided from it with a deep ditch. Now Bezetha, if you would render it in Greek, καινὴ πόλις ἂν πόλις, one might call it The New City. And yet there is a place, where he ſeems to diſtinguiſh between Bezetha, and the New City: for he ſaith concerning Ceſtius, e Κέστιος δὲ παρελθὼν, &c. But Ceſtius paſſing over ſet fire upon Bezetha, ſo called, and the New City.

e Ibid. lib. 2. cap. 39.

Bezetha

Bezetha was seated on the North part of Antonia, and that and Cænopolis (or the New City) filled up that space, where Sion ended on the East, and was not stretched out so far, as Acra was. f Παλίσσι ὑπερχεομένη (ἡ πόλις) κατ' μικρὸν ἐξεῖπε πρὸς ἄρκτον, &c. (The City) abounding with people crept by little and little out of the walls, and on the North side of the Temple at the hill making a City went onward not a little, καὶ πέπαρτον ἀνοικηθῆναι λόφον, ὃς καλεῖται Βεζεθά, &c. and a fourth Hill is inhabited, which is called Bezetha, &c.

f Idem, In the place before.

Interpreters differ about Millo. g There is one, who supposes it to be a large place, appointed for publick meetings and assemblies. h Another interprets it of heaps of Earth, thrown up against the wall within, whence they might more easily get up upon the wall: and when David is said to build Millo, that he erected Towers upon these heaps, and banks. Some others there are, who understand it of the Valley or Street, that runs between Jerusalem and Sion, and so it is commonly marked out in the Maps. When in truth Millo was a part of Sion, or some hillock cast up against it on the West side.

g Kimchi in 2 Sam. 5. h R Esai. ib. there.

Let that be observed, 2 Chron. XXXII. 5. ויחזק את־כל־המלוא עיר דוד And he restored, or fortified, Millo of the City of David: or as our English reads, in the City of David, The seventy read τὸ ἀνάλημμα τῆς πόλεως Δαυίδ, the fortification of the City of David. When therefore David is said to build Millo, and more inwards, it is all one, as if he had said, he built on the uttermost part of Sion, which was called Millo, more inwardly to his own Castle. And Joab repaired the rest, 1 Chron. XI. 8.

i The Street or Valley, running between Sion and Acra was called Τυροποιῶν φάραγξ, as if one should say, The Valley or Street of Cheesmongers. There was also Δοκῶν ἀγορὰ, The market of Beams, which Josephus joyns with Bezetha, and the New City. l Cestius, saith he, wasted Bezetha and Cænopolis, καὶ τὸ καλούμενον Δοκῶν ἀγορὰν, and that which is called the Bean market, with flames.

CHAP. XXV.

Gihon, the same with the fountain of Siloam.

I. IN 1 Kings I. 33, 38. That which is in the Hebrew, Bring ye Solomon to Gihon: And they brought him to Gihon; is rendred by the Chaldee, Bring ye him to Siloam: And they brought him to Siloam. Where Kimchi thus, Gihon is Siloam, and it is called by a double name. And David commanded, that they should anoint Solomon at Gihon for a good omen, to wit, that as the waters of the fountain are everlasting, so might his Kingdom be. So also the Hierusalem Writers, a They do not anoint the King, but at a fountain, as it is said, Bring Solomon to Gihon.

a Hieros. Sotah, fol. 22. 3.

The bubblings up of Siloam yielded a type of the Kingdom of David, Esa. VIII. 6. Forasmuch as this people refuseth the waters of Shiloah, that go softly, &c. Where the Chaldee Paraphrast thus, Because this people are weary of the house of David, which deals gently with them, as the waters of Siloam slide away gently. And R. Salomon, Siloam is a fountain, whose name is Gihon and Siloam. See also the Aruch in the word שלוח.

II. That fountain was situate on the West part of the City, but not far from the South-West corner.

Josephus speaking of that deep Valley, which runs between Sion and Acra, saith, b κατήκει μέχρι Σιλωᾶς, it is extended to Siloam; for so we call the sweet and large fountain. But now the Mounts Sion and Acra, and likewise the Valley that cut between them, did run out from East to West. And the same Author in the same place speaking of the compass of the outtermost wall, saith these things among other, καὶ ἔπειτα πρὸς νότον ὑπὲρ τὴν Σιλωὰμ ὀπὶ πρόσω πάλιν, &c. And thence it bends to the South behind the fountain Siloam. After the tumult raised at Jerusalem by the Jews under Florus, the Neapolitane Tribune coming thither with King Agrippa is beseeched by the Jews c σὺν ἑνὶ θεράποντι περιελθεῖν μέχρι τῆς Σιλωᾶ τὴν πόλιν, that taking only one servant he would go about through the City as far as Siloam: (that is from the East to the West through the whole City) and that thence from the peaceable and quiet behaviour of the people towards him he might perceive, that the people were not in a heat against all the Romans, but against Florus only.

b Joseph. de Bell. lib. 5. cap. 13. c Idem, Ibid. lib. 2. cap. 28.

III. Siloam was on the back of Hierusalem, not of Sion. Let that of Josephus be noted; d Ῥωμαῖοι τρεψάμενοι τὰς λῃστὰς, &c. The Romans, when they had drove out the Seditious from the lower City, burnt it all to Siloam. This we therefore observe, because we may see some Maps, which placing Siloam behind Sion, do deceive here, and are deceived: when

when in truth it ought to be placed behind Acra. The pool indeed of Siloam was behind some part of Sion, Westward: but the fountain of Siloam was behind Acra.

IV. It emptied it self by a double rivolet into a double pool, to wit, the upper and the lower, 2 Kings XVIII. 17. Esa. VII. 3. The Lower was on the West, and is called The Pool of Siloam, Joh. IX. 7. Nehem. III. 15. The Upper perhaps was that which is called by Josephus, The Pool of Solomon, in the place lately quoted. And thence, saith he, the outermost wall bends to the South behind the fountain of Siloam: ἔνθενδε πάλιν ἐκκλίνον πρὸς ἀνατολὰς ἐπὶ τὴν Σολομῶνος κολυμβήθραν, &c. And thence again bends to the East at the Pool of Solomon. See 2 Chron. XXXII. 30. And Esa. XXII. 9, 11.

V. They drew waters out of the fountain of Siloam in that solemn festivity of the feast of Tabernacles, which they called ניסוך המים The pouring out of water: concerning which the Fathers of the Traditions thus; e The pouring out of water in what manner was it? There was a golden cup, containing three logs, which one filled out of Siloam, &c. The Gemarists inquire, f Whence was this custom? From thence, that it is said, And ye shall draw waters with joy out of the wells of salvation. g R. Levi saith, Why is it called בית שואבה The place of a draught? Because thence they draw out the holy Spirit.

h Thence also they drew the water, that was to be mingled with the ashes of the red Cow, when any unclean person was to be sprinkled.

i The Priests eating more liberally of the holy things drunk the waters of Siloam for digestion sake.

l Let us also add these things; but let the Reader unriddle them. He that is unclean by a dead carkas entreth not into the mountain of the Temple. It is said, that they that should appear, should appear in the Court. Whence do you measure? From the wall, or from the houses? Samuel delivers it, from Siloam, ושלוח חיה &c. And Siloam was in the middle of the City.

CHAP. XXVI.

The Girdle of the City. Nehem. Chap. III.

THE beginning of the circumference was from שער הצאן the sheep gate. That we suppose was seated on the South part, yet but little removed from that corner, which looks South East. Within was the Pool of Bethesda famous for healings.

Going forward on the South part was the Tower Meah: and beyond that the Tower of Hananeel: in the Chaldee Paraphrast it is מגדל פקוס The Tower Piccus, Zech. XIV. 10. פקוס Piccus, Jer. XXXI. 38. I should suspect that to be Ἱππικὸν, The Hippic Tower, were not that placed on the North side, this on the South. The words of Jeremy are well to be weighed, The City shall be built to the Lord from the Tower of Hananeel to the gate of the corner. And a line shall go out thence measuring near it to the Hill of Gareb, and it shall go about to Goah. And all the valley of dead carkasses, and of ashes, and all the fields to the brook Kidron, even to the corner of the Horse gate on the East, shall be holiness to the Lord, &c.

גבעת גרב: The hill of Gareb. Not that Gareb certainly, where the Idol of Micah was, concerning which the Talmudists thus, a R. Nathan saith, from Gareb to Shiloh were three miles, and the smoke of the Altar was mixed with the smoke of Michahs Idol: but, as Lyranus not amiss, The Mount of Calvary.

עמק פגרים והדשן The valley of Carkasses and ashes. The Chaldee Paraphrast, and the Rabbines understand this of the place, where the army of the Assyrians perished: nor very subtilly. For they seem to have perished, if so be they perished near Jerusalem, in the valley of Tophet, or Ben-Hinnom, Esa. XXX. 33. And Jeremiah speaks of that valley, namely the sink and burying place of the City, a place above all others that compassed the City the most foul and abominable: foretelling that that valley, which now was so detestable, should hereafter be clean, and taken into the compass of the City: but this mystically and in a more spiritual sense. Hence we argue, that the Tower of Hananeel was on the South side of the City: on which side also was the valley of Ben-Hinnom; yet bending also towards the East: as the valley of Kidron bent from the East also towards the North. It will be impossible, unless I am very much mistaken, if you take a Bab. Sanhedr. fol. 103 2. See also Midr. Till. in Psal. 132. & Buxt. in Lexic. Talmud. in the word מיר take the beginning of that circumference in Nehemiah from the corner looking North Eaſt, which ſome do, to interpret theſe words of Jeremiah in any plain or probable ſenſe; unleſs you imagine that which is moſt falſe, that the valley of Hinnom was ſituate Northwardly.

Verſ. 3. שער הדגים The Seventy render it by Τὴν πύλην τὴν ἰχθυϱάν, The fiſh gate. That was alſo Southward. Of it mention is made Zeph. I. 10. Where the Seventy have Πύλη δευτεϱευόντων· Something obſcure. Many conjecture this gate was called the fiſh gate, becauſe fiſh were carried into the City through it: I rather, becauſe it was the fiſh market: as the ſheep gate was the market for ſheep. Zephaniah addeth ויללה מן המשנה And he ſhall howl from the ſecond. The Chaldee reads מן עופא R. Salomon משער העופורי from the bird gate: perhaps the gate near unto which fowls were ſold. Kimchi reads מן עפלא From Ophel; more plain indeed, but I aſk whether more true? This Bird-gate perhaps was that, which is called the Old-gate, Nehem. III. 6.

Near the corner looking South Weſt we ſuppoſe the fountain of Siloam was; and that, partly being perſwaded by the words of Joſephus before alledged, partly being induced to it by reaſon it ſelf. For hence flowed that fountain by the South wall Eaſtwardly to the ſheep-gate, as we ſuppoſe; thence the river ſomewhat ſloping bends towards the North into the valley, and ends at length in the Pool of Siloam at the foot of Mount Sion.

On the Weſt was 1. שער הגיא The gate of the valley, verſ. 13. being now gotten to the foot of Mount Acra. And 2. A thouſand Cubits thence שער האשפורי The Eſquiline or dung gate, verſ. 14. And 3. שער העין The fountain gate, verſ. 15. not that of Siloam, nor of Draco; but another.

And now we are come to the Pool of Siloam, and to the foot of Sion, whether they went up by certain ſteps, verſ. 15. The Pool of Siloam was firſt a fountain and a river on the Weſt without the walls: but at laſt Manaſſeh the King incloſed all 2 Chron. XXXIII. 14. that the City might be more ſecured of water in caſe of a ſeige: taught it by the example of his grandfather Ezekiah, but more incommodious, 2 Chron. XXXII. 3.

The wall went forward along burying places of David, another Pool, and the Houſe of the ſtrong, verſ. 16. And not much after it bended Eaſtwardly: and now we are come to the North ſide. See verſ. 19. & 20.

At the turning of this corner Herod built the moſt famous Pſephin Tower, of which Joſephus thus, b Θωμαϛὶϛῳ ἀνέϛιχε κϱ γωνίαν βοϱείϛ τε καὶ πϱὸϛ δύσιν ὁ Ψήφινος, &c. On the North Weſt corner the admired Pſephin Tower lifts up it ſelf, near which Titus encamped, &c. b Joſeph. de Bell. lib. 5. cap. 13.

There was no gate on this North ſide. The buildings which were inward, are mentioned, Nehem. III. verſ. 20, 21, 22, 23, 24. and the Hippic Tower is mentioned by Joſephus.

On the Eaſt were 1. A Tower advancing it ſelf in the very bending of the North Eaſt corner. Within was the Kings houſe, and the Court of the Priſon, verſ. 25. 2. The water gate, of which is mention, Nehem. XII. 37. 3. Ophel, and the horſe gate, Nehem. III. 27, 28. of which mention is alſo made, Jer. XXXI. 40. Whence was the beginning of the valley of Ben-Hinnom: which running out below the City Southward, at laſt bent into the Weſt. Therefore the water-gate led into the valley of Kidron: but the horſe-gate into the valley of Hinnom, at that place touching on the valley of Kidron. 4. The gate Miphkad; The Vulgar calls it The gate of judgment. 5. Not far diſtant thence was the South Eaſt corner. And thence a little on the South ſide was the ſheep-gate, whence we firſt ſet out.

Let us add the words of Joſephus deſcribing how the outmoſt wall went. c Ἀϱχόμενον ἐπὶ τοῦ βοϱείου κϱ ἐπὶ τοῦ ἱππικοῦ, &c. It began on the North at the Hippic (or Horſe) Tower, and extended to the Xyſtus, (or Open Gallery;) then touching upon the Councel-houſe, it ended at the Eaſt walk of the Temple. On the other ſide Weſtwardly beginning from the ſame Tower, it ſtretched along by a place called Bethſo, to the Gate of the Eſſenes; and thence it inclined to the South behind the fountain Siloam: and hence it bowed again Eaſtwardly unto Solomons Pool, and paſſed on to a certain place, which they call Ophla, and joyned to the Eaſt Walk of the Temple. c Joſeph. in the place above.

In which words let us obſerve two things for the aſſerting the Proceſſion that we have gone. 1. That this deſcription proceeds from the North to the Weſt, the South, and the Eaſt. 2. That Ophla or Ophel, lay between the South Eaſt corner, and the porch of the Temple, which cannot at all be conceived, if you begin Nehemiahs delineation at any other place, then where we have. To theſe may be added the ſituation of Siloam, of which thoſe things ſpoken in Joſephus and the Scripture can in no manner be ſaid, if you reckon it to be near Sion.

Let us add alſo the proceſſion of the Choire, Nehem. XII. 31. They went up upon the wall, and went forward on the right hand to the dung-gate, the fountain-gate, the City of David, &c. verſ. 37. Let thoſe words, They went forward on the right hand, verſ. 31. be obſerved; which could not be, unleſs according to the proceſſion, which we have laid down, if ſo be they went up on the wall on the inſide of the wall, which it is rough and ſtrange not to think.

City

The other part of the Choire went on the left hand towards the South Weſt, and to the gate of Ephraim, and the old gate and the fiſh gate, &c. verſ. 29. Of the gate of Ephraim nothing was ſaid in the delineation given Chap. III. Mention alſo is made of it, 2 Kings XIV. 13. where the corner gate is alſo ſpoke of; concerning which alſo here is nothing ſaid.

In Nehemiah ſeems to be underſtood that place where formerly was a gate of that name, but now under the ſecond Temple was vaniſhed.

Mount Moriah was ſo ſeated, that c Ἀντικρὺ ἡ Πόλις ἔκειτο τοῦ Ἱεροῦ θεατροειδὴς ὅσα, the City in the manner of a Theatre lay about the Temple: on this ſide Sion, then Acra, and a little on the back of Bezetha.

d Middoth, cap. 2. hal. 1. & in the place before.

d The Mount of the Temple (that is the place where the buildings of the Temple were) was a ſquare of five hundred cubits (ſee Ezek. XLII. 16, 17.) compaſſed with a moſt noble wall, and that fortified (ſhall I ſay?) with double Galleries or Halls, or adorned with them, or both? It went out beyond this wall towards the North Weſt corner to ſuch a dimenſion, that there the Tower Antonia was built, of moſt renowned workmanſhip and ſtory.

The whole ſpace of the Courts was hollow under ground: וכיפין היו &c. e And the whole Court ſtood upon arches and pillars, that ſo no Sepulchre might be made within this ſacred ſpace, whereby either the holy things or the people might gather pollution.

CHAP. XXVIII.

The Court of the Gentiles. הר הבית The Mountain of the houſe in the Rabbines.

IN the Jewiſh Writers it is ordinarily called הר הבית The Mountain of the houſe; ſometimes חורא or the common Court. Hence is it that a gate deſcending hither from the Court of the women, is called שער יוצא מעזרת נשים לחורא The gate, whence they go out from the Court of the women into the Common Court. Hence the Author of Toſaphtoth, a They go out by the gate leading from the Court of the women לחורא into the Common Court. And ſome veſſels of ſtone were faſtned to the wall of the ſteps going up into the womens Court, and their covers are ſeen לחורא in the common Court.

And that becauſe hither the Heathen might come. b Rabban Gamaliel walking בהר הבית in the Court of the Gentiles, ſaw a Heathen woman, and bleſſed concerning her.

And

And thoſe that were excommunicated and lamented. c All that entred into the Mount of the Temple, enter the right hand way, and go about: but they go out the left hand way; except him, to whom any accident happens, for he goes about to the left hand. To him that askes, what is the matter with you, that you go about to the left hand? He anſwers, Becauſe I lament: and he replies to him, He that dwells in this Temple comfort thee. Or becauſe I am excommunicated; And to him he replies, He that dwells in this houſe, put it into their heart to receive thee. c Middoth, cap. 2. hal. 2.

And not ſeldom thoſe that are unclean. Yea, he that carries away the ſcape goat might enter into the very Court, although he were then unclean. d ניטמא משלחו &c. Is he polluted who is to take away the goat? He entreth unclean even into the Court, and takes him away. d Bab. Joma, fol. 66. 2.

e The greateſt ſpace of the Court of the Gentiles was on the South; the next to it on the Eaſt, the third on the North, but the leaſt ſpace was on the Weſt. Of that place, where the ſpace was greater, the uſe was greater alſo. e Middoth, cap. 2. hal. 2.

f In the wall compaſſing this ſpace were five gates: and within joyning to the wall were סטיו לפנים מן כטיו double Galleries or Halls, which yeilded delightful walks, and defence alſo from rains. f Ibid. c. 1. hal. 3

g There was only one gate Eaſtward, and that was called the Gate of Suſan; becauſe the figure of Suſan, the Metropolis of Perſia was ingraven in it, h in token of ſubjection. i In this Gate ſat a Councel of three and twenty. At the Gate on both ſides were חנויות Shops; and the whole Gallery-walk on this Eaſt ſide was called Solomons Porch. g Ibid. h Gloſſa, Ibid. i Sanhed. cap. 11. hal. 2.

On the South were two Gates, both called the Gate of Huldah: of the reaſon of the name we are not ſolicitous. Theſe looked towards Jeruſalem or Acra. The Hall or Gallery gracing this South ſide was called l Στοὰ Βασιλικὴ The Kings walk, which was trebled, and of ſtately building. l Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 15. cap. 14.

On the Weſt was the Gate קיפונוס Kiponus (haply ſo named from m Coponius, Governor of Judea. By this Gate they went down into Sion, the bridge and way bending thither. m Idem, ibid. lib. 18. cap. 1.

On the North was the Gate טדי or טרי Tedi or Teri, of no uſe: for ſo is the Tradition, n The Gate of Tedi on the North was of no uſe. On this ſide was the Caſtel Antonia, where the Romans kept guard, and from hence perhaps might be the reaſon the Gate was deſerted. n Middoth, in the place above.

Chel. The Court of the Women.

THE Court of the Gentiles compaſſed the Temple and the Courts on every ſide. The ſame alſo did חיל Chel, or the Ante-murale. a That ſpace was ten cubits broad, divided from the Court of the Gentiles, by a Fence ten hands bredth high; in which were thirteen breaches, which the Kings of Greece had made: but the Jews had again repaired them, and had appointed thirteen adorations anſwering to them. a Middoth, cap. 2. hal. 3.

b Maimonides writes: Inwards (from the Court of the Gentiles) was a Fence that incompaſſed on every ſide, ten hands bredth in height: and within the Fence Chel or the Ante-murale: of which it is ſaid in the Lamentations, ויאנח חיל וחומה And he cauſed Chel and the Wall to lament, Lam. II. 8. b Beth-habbechir, cap 5.

Joſephus writes, c Περίβολος δὲ ἄπεκτος ἦν βαθμῶν ὀλίγων· ὃν φραγμὸς εἶχε λίθινος δρυφάκτου, &c. The ſecond Circuit was gone up to by a few ſteps: which the partition of a ſtone wall ſurrounded: where was an inſcription forbidding any of another Nation to enter upon pain of death. Hence happened that danger to Paul becauſe of Trophimus the Epheſian, Act. 29. c Antiq. lib. 15 cap. 14.

d The Chel, or Ante-murale (or ſecond Incloſure about the Temple) was more ſacred than the Court of the Gentiles: for hither no Heathen, nor any unclean by that which died of it ſelf, nor who lay with a menſtrous woman, might come. d Mitmon, in the place before, cap. 7.

e From hence they aſcended into the Court of the Women by twelve ſteps. e Middoth, in the place above.

On

On the East it had only one Gate, called in the Holy Scripture, Ὡραία, Beautiful, Act. III. 2. In Josephus, The Corinthian gate: f Τῶν δὲ πυλῶν, &c. saith he, Of the Gates nine of them were every where overlaied with Gold, and Silver, likewise the Posts, and the Lintels. But one without the Temple made of Corinthian brass, did much exceed in glory those that were overlaid with Silver and Gold. And two Gates of every Court were each thirty cubits high, and fifteen broad.

f De bello, lib. 5 cap. 14.

On the South was only one Gate also, and one on the North; and Galleries, or Court-walks within joyning to the Wall in the same manner, as in the outer Court, but not g double. Before which were the Treasuries placed, or h thirteen chests (called by the Talmudists שופרות Schopharoth) in which was put the mony offered for the various services of the Temple, and according to that variety the chests had various titles written on them: whence the Offerer might know into which to put his Offering, according to his quality.

h Shekalim, cap. 6. hal. 1.

i Upon one was inscribed חיקלין חדתין The new Shekles: into which were cast the Shekels of that year. Upon another חיקלין עתיקין The old Shekles, into which were gathered the shekels owing the last year. Upon another קינים וגוזלי Pigeons and Turtles. Upon another עולה The burnt sacrifice. Upon another עצים The Wood. Upon another לבונה Frankincense. Upon another זהב לכפורת Gold for the propitiation. And six chests had written on them נדבה voluntary sacrifice.

i Ibid. hal. 5.

l The length of the womens Court was an hundred thirty five cubits, and the bredth an hundred thirty five cubits. And there were four chambers in the four corners of it, each forty cubits, but not roofed. See Ezek. XLVI. 21, 22.

At the South East was the Court of the Nazarites: because there the Nazarites boyled their Thank-offerings, and cut their hair, and put it under the pot.

At the North East was the chamber of Wood: where the Priests, defiled with any spot, searched the Wood, whether it was unclean by Worms. And all Wood, in which a Worm was found, was not fit for the Altar.

At the North West was the Chamber of the Leprous.

At the South West was the Chamber of Wine and Oyl.

On the highest sides (we follow the version of the famous Constantine l'Empereur) was the smooth and plain Court of the Women, but they bounded it round about with an inward Gallery, that the women might see from above, and the men from below, that they might not be mingled.

m In this Court of the Women was celebrated the sacred and festival dance in the feast of Tabernacles, called the pouring out of water: the Ritual of which you have in the place cited in the margin.

m Succah, cap. 5 hal. 2. &c.

n The Court of the Women was more sacred, than חיל the Chel, because טיבול יום any who had contracted such an uncleanness, that was to be cleansed the same day, might not enter into it.

CHAP. XXX.

The gate of Nicanor or the East gate of the Court of Israel.

FROM hence they went up from the Court of the Women fifteen steps. Βαθμοὶ δὲ δεκαπέντε, &c. a There were fifteen steps, saith Josephus, ascending from the partition wall of the women to the greater gate. Concerning these steps the Talmudists relating the custom of the Dance just now mentioned, speak thus: b The religious men, and the men of good works, holding torches in their hands danced and sung. The Levites with Harps, Lyres, Cymbals, Trumpets, and infinite other musical Instruments, stood upon the fifteen steps going down out of the Court of Israel into the Womens Court, singing according to the number of the fifteen Psalms of Degrees, &c.

a Joseph de Bello, lib. 5. cap. 14.
b Succah, cap. 5 hal. 4.

The East Gate of the Court of Israel was called the Gate of Nicanor. c All the Gates were changed to be of Gold, except the Gate of Nicanor, because concerning that a miracle was shewn: others say, because the brass of it did exceedingly shine.

c Middoth, cap. 2. hal. 3.

d In the Gate of Nicanor they made the suspected wife drink the bitter waters; they purified the woman after child birth, and the Leper.

d Sotah, cap. 1. hal. 5.

Of the miracle done about the folding doors of this Gate, see Constantine l'Empereur, Middoth, page 57. and Juchasin, fol. 65. 2. &c. Who also produceth another reason of the name in these words: In the book of Josephus ben Gorion it is said, that the Gate of Nicanor

Nicanor was ſo called, becauſe a miracle was there ſhewn, namely that there they ſlew Nicanor a Captain of the Grecians in the days of the Aſmoneans: which may alſo be ſeen in the end of the ſecond Chapter of the Tract Taanith.

The Hiſtory alledged is thus. e Nicanor was one of the Captains of the Greeks, and every day he wagged his hand toward Judea and Jeruſalem, and ſaid, Oh! when will it be in my power, to lay them waſt! But when the Aſmonean family prevailed, they ſubdued them, and ſlew him, and hung up his Thumbs and great Toes upon the Gates of Jeruſalem. Hence Nicanors day is in the Jewiſh Calendar.

e Bab. Taanith, fol. 18. 2. Vid. Joſeph. Antiq. lib 12. cap. 17.

f This Gate was Πεντήκοντα πηχῶν τὸ ἀνάστασιν, &c. fifty cubits in height; the doors contained forty cubits, and very richly adorned with Silver and Gold laid on to a great thickneſs.

f Joſeph. in the place above.

g In that Gate ſat a Councel of three and twenty, as there was another in the Gate of Suſan.

CHAP. XXXI.

Concerning the Gates and Chambers lying on the South ſide of the Court.

HERE concerning the Chambers they differ. The Tract Middoth aſſigns theſe to the South ſide, a The Chamber of Wood, the Chamber of the ſpring of water, the chamber Gazith. The b Babylonian Gemara and c Maimonides aſſign them to the North ſide. In Middoth, the Chamber of Salt, the Chamber of Happarva, the Chamber of them that waſh, were on the North ſide: in thoſe they are ſaid to be on the South. The matter is hardly of ſo great moment, that we ſhould weary our ſelves in deciding this controverſie. We enter not into diſputes, but follow thoſe things that are more probable, the Middoth being our guide.

b Joma, f 19. 1.
c Beth-habbechir, cap. 5.

I. Therefore we ſuppoſe firſt, that the Chamber Gazith was on the South ſide of the Court near the Eaſt corner: and that upon this reaſon, that ſince according to all the Jews (howſoever differing on what ſide it was placed) this Chamber was not in the middle of the three Chambers before named, but on the outſide either on the one hand or on the other, the Councel could not ſit in the lot of Judah, if Gazith were not ſeated about that place, which we aſſign.

לשכת גזית כמין בסוליקי גדולה היתה: d The Chamber Gazith was in the form of a great Court-walk. And half of it was in the holy place, and the other half in that which was common: and it had two doors, whereof one opened towards the holy place, the other towards that which was common. That is, one into the Court, the other to the Chel. The great Sanhedrin ſat in that part, which was in Chel; for none might ſit in the Court, unleſs Kings only of the ſtock of David.

d Joma, fol. 25. 1

e In the Chamber Gazith ſat the Councel of Iſrael, and judged concerning the Prieſts. Whoſoever was found touched with any ſpot, was clothed in black, and was vailed in black, and went away. Whoever was without ſpot, being clothed and vailed in white went into the Court, and miniſtred with his brethren.

e Ibid. fol. 19. 1

f Ib. d. fol. 25. 1.
g Maimon. in Sanhedr. cap. 1.

How the Sanhedrin was driven from this Chamber, and when and why, we obſerve elſewhere.

II. לשכת הגולה h The Chamber of the ſpring was next to this Weſtwardly: Where was a Well, and a Pully: whence water was ſupplied to the whole Court.

h Midd. cap. 5. hal. 3. & Joma, fol. 19. 1.

III. Contiguous to this was the Gate of Waters; ſo called, either becauſe the water to be poured out upon the Altar on the feaſt of Tabernacles was brought in through this Gate, or becauſe the Water-courſe conveyed into the Temple from the fountain Etam, went along through this Gate into the Chamber of the Spring. i Abai ſaith, That fountain was deeper than the pavement of the Court three and twenty cubits. And I think, ſaith the Author of the Gloſs, that the fountain Etam was the ſame with the waters of Nephtoa, of which mention is made in the book of Joſhua (Chap. XV. 9.) for thence it deſcends and ſlopes into the Eaſt and Weſt, and that place was the higheſt in the land of Iſrael.

IV. l After this Gate was the Chamber of Wood, and above that לשכת פרהארין The Chamber, ωκοδομον, of the Magiſtrates; or as it was commonly called לשכת בולוטי The Chamber of the Councellors: where there was a Seſſions of the Prieſts conſulting about the affairs of the Temple and Service. The Wood-chamber ſeems to be called ſo upon this account, becauſe the Wood was conveyed hither after the ſearch about it was made in the Chamber of Wood (which was in the corner of the Womens Court) whether there were any Worms in it. That which was found fit for the Altar was laid up here, that it might be more in readineſs.

V. Beyond that was שער קרבן The Gate of offering: and after that שער הדלקה The Gate of kindling.

CHAP. XXXII.

a Midd. cap. 1. hal. 5.

I. FIRST we meet with a the Gate and Chamber Nitſots; where the Prieſts and Levites watched. This was alſo called, The Gate of a ſong.

II. The Chamber of them that waſh was next to that: and the Chamber of Happarva joyning to that. In that they waſhed the inwards of the ſacrifices; in this they ſalted the ſkins of the ſacrifices. b Some believe one Parva a Magitian built this Chamber; others that that Magitian Parva made a ſecret hole in the wall of this Chamber, that through that he might ſee what was here done by the High Prieſt. c For in a covered place of this Chamber there was a bath for the great Prieſt in the day of Expiation.

c Midd. cap. 5. hal. 2.

III. Thence was the Gate of offering, or of Corban: This was alſo called The Gate of the Women. The reaſon rendred of the former name is, that by this Gate they brought in the moſt holy ſacrifices, which were ſlain on the North. But the reaſon of the latter is more obſcure: perhaps before that Gate the Women delivered their ſacrifices into the hands of the Prieſts.

IV. After that Gate Weſtward was the Chamber of Salt: d where Salt was laid up for the offerings.

V. Following that was the Gate Beth-mokad, or the Gate of Burning: ſo called from a Chamber adjoyning, where a fire continually burnt for the uſe of the Prieſts. This alſo was called the Gate Corban: for between this and the Gate laſt named, was the Chamber, where the publick treaſure of the Temple was laid up. In Beth-mokad were four Chambers. 1. לשכת טלאים The Chamber of Lambs: where they were kept for the uſe of the Altar. 2. The Chamber of the Shewbread. 3. The Chamber where the ſtones of the Altar were laid up by the Aſmoneans, when the Kings of Greece had prophaned the Altar. 4. The Chamber, whence they went down into the Bath.

CHAP. XXXIII.

The Court it ſelf.

a Maim. Beth-habbech. cap. 6.

THE a floor of the whole ſacred Earth was not level, but riſing: When any went on from the Eaſt Gate of the Court of the Gentiles to the furtheſt part of the Chel, he went all in a level. From the Chel he went up into the Court of the Women twelve ſteps, whereof every ſtep was half a cubit in height. Along the whole Court of the Women he went in a level; and thence went up into the Court of Iſrael fifteen ſteps, every ſtep half a cubit in height.

d Midd. cap. 2. hal 6.

b The Court of Iſrael was an hundred thirty five cubits in length, eleven in bredth. Through all this Court one went in a level, and thence went up into the Court of the Prieſts by one ſtep of a cubit high: on which was ſet a pulpit (where the Choire of the Levites that ſung ſtood) and in it were three ſteps, each half a cubit. Therefore the Court of the Prieſts is found to be two cubits and an half higher than the Court of Iſrael.

The

The Court of the Prieſts was an hundred thirty five cubits in length, eleven in bredth. And they divided the heads of the beams between the Court of Iſrael, and the Court of the Prieſts.

They went through the Court of the Prieſts in a level, and the ſame they did along the ſpace by the Altar, and along the ſpace between the Altar and the Pronaon, or the Porch of the Temple. Thither they aſcended by twelve ſteps, each half a cubit high. The floor of the Pronaon, and the Temple was all level: and was higher than the floor of the Eaſt Gate of the Court of the Gentiles two and twenty cubits.

The length of the whole Court was an hundred eighty ſeven cubits, that is, from Eaſt to Weſt. To wit,

The bredth of the Court of Iſrael	XI.
The bredth of the Court of the Prieſts	XI.
The bredth of the Altar	XXXII.

CHAP. XXXIV.

The Altar. The Rings. The Laver.

THE a Altar was on every ſide two and thirty cubits: after the aſcent of one cubit it was ſo ſtraitned, that it was leſs by one cubit in the whole ſquare, that is, on every ſide thirty cubits. It went up five cubits, and again was ſtraitned a cubit; ſo that there it was eight and twenty cubits on every ſide. The place of the horns on every part was the ſpace of one cubit: ſo that now it was ſix and twenty cubits every way. The place of the Prieſts walk hither and thither was one cubit: ſo that the place of burning extended four and twenty cubits round about. a Middoth, cap. 3.

A ſcarlet threed begirt the middle of the Altar, to diſcern between the upper bloods, and the lower.

The Baſis of the Altar toward the South-Eaſt had no corner, becauſe that part was not within the portion of Judah.

At the horn between the Weſt and the South were two holes, like noſtrils through which the ſprinkled blood deſcended, and flowed into the brook Kedron.

The aſcent to the Altar was on the South two and thirty cubits, and the bredth ſixteen cubits. b There was a time, when upon this aſcent one Prieſt ſtabbed another Prieſt with his knife, while they ſtrove, who ſhould firſt get up to the Altar. b Bab. Joma, 23. 1.

On the North was ſix orders of rings, each of which contained four. There are ſome who aſſert there were four orders, and each contained ſix, at which they killed the ſacrifices: there therefore was the place of ſlaughter. Near by were low pillars ſet up, upon which were laid overthwart beams of Cedar: in theſe were faſtned iron hooks, on which the ſacrifices were hung; and they were flayed on marble Tables, which were between thoſe pillars.

There was a Laver or Ciſtern between the Porch and the Altar, and it lay a little to the South. c Ben Kattin made twelve Cocks for it, which before had but two. He alſo made מוכנו כיור The machine of the Ciſtern: that is, as the Gloſs explains it, Ben Kattin, when he was the chief Prieſt made thoſe Cocks for the Ciſtern, that the waters might flow out of them, he made alſo a pulley or a wheel, whereby water might be drawn for the uſe of the Ciſtern. c Ibid. fol. 37. 1

Between the Altar and the προναον (or Porch) was the ſpace of two and twenty cubits. They went up thither by twelve ſteps, each half a cubit in height.

d The Temple was ſtreight on the hinder part, but broad on the fore part; and reſembled the figure of a Lion, becauſe it is ſaid, Wo to Ariel, (the Lion of the Lord) to Ariel, the City where David encamped. As the Lion is narrower behind, and broader before, ſo alſo was the Temple. For the Porch was broader than the Temple fifteen cubits on the North, and fifteen cubits on the South; and that ſpace jetting out on both ſides was called בית החליפות The place of knives, namely, where the holy knives, uſed in killing of the ſacrifices, were laid up. d Midd. cap. 4

The length of the Temple contained an hundred cubits, the bredth ſeventy: including within this meaſure the Porch, the Chambers and the thickneſs of the outward wall; to trace all which would be too much. And theſe things which we have ſaid, we have therefore run through with the more haſt, both becauſe the famous Conſtantine l'Empereur hath very learnedly and largely treated of them, and becauſe we our ſelves largely enough, though much more unlearnedly have heretofore done theſe things in a juſt volume in our Engliſh Tongue.

Some other memorable places of the City.

I. THERE was a Street leading from the Gate of Waters to the Mount of the Temple, which ſeems to be called the Street of the Temple, Ezra X. 9. This way they went from the Temple to Mount Olivet.

II. The aſcent to the Mount of the Temple was not ſo difficult, but Cattle and Oxen might be driven thither; nor ſo eaſie, but that it required ſome pains of thoſe that went up. a A child was free from preſenting himſelf in the Temple at the three feaſts, until (according to the School of Hillel) he was able, his father taking him by the hand, to go up with him into the Mount of the Temple.

But ſtrangers of another Country are as unclean among us, as thoſe that have a flux. Now the ſtrangers dwelt in the upper ſtreet.* Here I remember the ſtory of Iſmael ben Camithi, the High Prieſt; d who when he went out on the day of Expiation to ſpeak with a certain (Heathen) Captain, ſome ſpittle was ſprinkled upon his cloths from the others mouth: whereby being defiled he could not perform the ſervice of that day: his brother therefore officiated for him.

VIII. h Some Courts alſo were built upon a rock, under which there was made a hollow, that by no means any ſepulchre might be there. Hither they brought ſome teeming women, that they might be delivered there, and might there alſo bring up their children. And the reaſon of that curioſity was, that thoſe children, there born and brought up, where they were ſo ſecure from being touched by a ſepulchre, might be clean without doubt, and fit to ſprinkle with purifying water ſuch as were polluted with a dead carkaſe. The children were ſhut up in thoſe Courts, until they became ſeven or eight years old. (So R. Solomon, who alſo cites Toſaptoth, where nevertheleſs it is, until they are eighteen years of age.) And when the ſprinkling of any one is to be performed, they are brought with the like care and curioſity to the place where the thing is to be done, riding upon Oxen, becauſe their bellies being ſo thick, might defend them the more ſecurely from the defilement of any ſepulchre in the way.

Beth-phage. בות פגי.

THERE is very frequent mention of this place in the Talmudiſts: and certainly a more careful compariſon of the Maps with thoſe things, which are ſaid by them of the ſituation of this place, is worthy to be made; when they place it in Mount Olivet theſe make it contiguous to the buildings of Jeruſalem.

a Bab. Sanhedr. fol. 14.2.

I. a In the place cited in the margin, the caſe זקן ממרא of a ſtubborn Judge, (or Elder) is handling. For when by the preſcript of the Law difficult matters, and ſuch things as concerning which the lower Councels could not judge, were to be brought unto the chief Council, unto the place which God ſhould chuſe, Deut. XVII. 8. and when that Judge of the lower Council, who after the determination and ſentence pronounced in that cauſe, which he propounded, ſhall refuſe to obey, and ſhall deny to behave himſelf according to their ſentence, is guilty of death, verſ. 12. inquiry is made, Whether, מצון אבירא פני &c. If he ſhall find the Sanhedrin ſitting in Beth-phage, and ſhall rebel againſt the ſentence pronounced by them there, that ſtubbornneſs be to be judged for rebellion, which according to the Law is to be puniſhed with death: and it is anſwered, The Text ſaith, Thou ſhalt ariſe, and go up to the place, &c. Whence it is taught, that the place it ſelf (the chamber Gazith only) adds force to the ſentence. The Gloſs writes thus, בית פאגי מקום לפנים מן &c. Beth-phage was a place within the Walls of the City, and was reckoned as Jeruſalem it ſelf in reſpect of all things. Obſerve, Beth-phage was within the Walls of Jeruſalem: ſo that if the ſentence of the Sanhedrin pronounced at Jeruſalem (out of the Chamber Gazith) obtained in the caſe propounded, it had obtained when pronounced in Beth-phage.

b Idem, Piſachin, fol 63.2.

II. b He that kills a ſacrifice of thanksgiving within the Wall, and bread of it is without the Wall, the bread is not holy. What is without the Wall? R. Jochanan ſaith, Without the Wall of Beth-phage, but without the Wall of the Court, it is holy. The Gloſs thus, בית פאגי חיינו מקום חיצון שבירושלם Beth-phage is the outmoſt place in Jeruſalem: and whoſoever is without the Walls of Beth-phage, is without Jeruſalem, where is no place to eat the holy things.

c Ibid. fol. 91.1

III. c It is diſputed, whether the Paſſover be to be ſlain in the name of a perſon in priſon ſingly; and among other things thus it is determined: If he be within the Walls of Beth-phage, let them kill it for him ſingly. Why? Becauſe it is poſſible, to come to him, and he may eat it. The Gloſs, Beth-phage is the outmoſt place in Jeruſalem: and thither they carry the Paſſover to the perſon impriſoned, that he may eat it, becauſe he is there within Jeruſalem. For it was by no means lawful to eat the Paſſover without Jeruſalem.

d Menacoth, cap. 11. hal. 2.

IV. d The two loaves (daily offered by the chief Prieſt) and the ſhew-bread are baked aright either in the Court, or in Beth-phage.

e Bab. Sotah, fol. 45.1.

V. That which we produced firſt concerning the cauſe זקן ממרא of the ſtubborn Elder, is recited alſo elſewhere, and theſe words are added, e He found the Councel ſitting in Beth-phage: for example ſake, if he betook himſelf thither to meaſure for the beheading of the Cow, or to add to the ſpace of the City, or the Courts.

f Id. Bava Mezia, fol. 90.1.

VI. f He threſhes within the Walls of Beth-phage. The Gloſs, Beth-phage is the outmoſt circuit of Hieruſalem. The Aruch, the Wall of Beth-phage is the Wall of Hieruſalem.

Now conſult the Maps and the Commentaries of Chriſtians, and you have Beth-phage ſeated far from the Walls of the City, not very far from the top of Mount Olivet: where alſo the footſteps of it (even at this day) are falſly ſhewn to Travailers. So our Countryman Sands, an Eye witneſs, writes concerning it: We now aſcend Mount Olivet (ſaith (ſaith he) another way bending more Northwards: (For before, he had deſcribed the Aſcent to Bethany) On the right-hand, nor far from the top was Beth-phage ſeated, whoſe very foundations are confounded, from whence Chriſt ſitting upon the fole of an Aſſe, went in triumph to Jeruſalem: The Father Guardian every Palm-Sunday now ſuperſtitiouſly imitating him.

They took their reſolutions concerning the ſituation of this place not elſewhere certainly than from the Goſpel hiſtory, which ſeems openly to delineate Beth-phage at the Mount Olivet. True indeed, and yet nothing hinders, but we may believe the Jews, aſſerting it to be within the Walls of Jeruſalem, ſince they illuſtrate the thing with ſo many examples; nor is there any reaſon, why they ſhould either feign or diſſemble any thing in this matter.

To the determining therefore of the buſineſs, we muſt have recourſe, firſt to the derivation of the word: Beth-phage is rendred by ſome a houſe or place of a fountain, from the Greek Πηγὴ, a fountain: but this is ſomething hard: by the Gloſſer in Bava Mezia, in the place laſt cited, it is rendred, a paved Cauſeway; The outmoſt compaſs of Jeruſalem, ſaith he, which they added to it, is called Beth-phage, and ſeems to me to denote a beaten way. To which that of the Targumiſts ſeem to agree, who render אר עמק שוה At the Valley of Shaveh, Gen. XIV. 17. למישר מפגיא But what need is there of wandring abroad either into a ſtrange, or more unuſual dialect, when the word פגי Phagi moſt vulgarly, and in all mens mouths denotes Green figs, which Mount Olivet was not a little famous for? For although it took its name from Olives, yet it produced both Fig trees and Palms; and according to the variety of theſe, growing in divers tracts of the Mount, ſo various names were impoſed upon thoſe Tracts, which we note elſewhere. That loweſt part therefore of the mountain, which runs out next the City, is called from the green Figs, Beth-phage: by which name alſo that part of Jeruſalem next adjacent is called, by reaſon of the vicinity of that place. And from theſe things well regarded one may more rightly and plainly underſtand the ſtory of Chriſt coming this way.

He had lodged in Bethany the Town of Lazarus, Joh. XII. 1. From thence in the morning going onward he is ſaid to come to Beth-phage, and Bethany, Mark XI. 1. that is, to that place, where thoſe Tracts of the Mountain known by thoſe names did touch upon one another. And when he was about to aſcend into Heaven, he is ſaid to lead out his Diſciples Ἕως εἰς Βηθανίαν, as far as Bethany, Luke XXIV. 50. but not further than a Sabbath days journey, Act. I. 12. whereas the Town where Lazarus dwelt was almoſt twice as far, Joh. XI. 18. He went therefore out of Jeruſalem through Beth-phage within the Walls, and Beth-phage without the Walls, and meaſuring a Sabbath-days journey, or thereabouts, arrived to that place and Tract of Olivet, where the name of Beth-phage ceaſed, and the name of Bethany began, and there he aſcended. I doubt therefore, whether there was any Town in Olivet called Beth-phage, but rather a great Tract of the Mountain was ſo called, and the outermoſt Street of Jeruſalem within the Walls was called by the ſame name by reaſon of its nearneſs to that Tract.

Τὸ δ' ἀ ἐλαιῶν καλούμενον ὄρος, ὃ τῇ πόλει πρὸς ἀνατολὰς ἀντίκειται, μέση φάραγξ βαθεῖα διείργει, ἡ Κεδρὼν ὀνόμασται. A deep bottom, called Kedron, bounds the Mount of Olives, which lyes againſt the City Eaſtward. כבש היו בונין מהר הבית b They built a foot-cauſey, or a foot-bridge, upheld with arches, from the Mount of the Temple to the Mount of Olives, upon which they led away the red Cow to be burned. In like manner ſuch a foot-cauſey they made, upon which they led away the Scape-goat: Both were built at the charges of the publick treaſure, which was in the Temple. The reaſon of that curioſity concerning the Red Cow was this: when the aſhes of that Cow were eſpecially purifying above all other things, (for they cleanſed from the uncleanneſs contracted by the touch of a dead perſon) they thought no caution enough to keep him ſafe from uncleanneſs, who was to burn the Cow. When therefore there might be perhaps ſome Sepulchres not ſeen, in the way he was to go, whereby he might be defiled, and ſo the whole action be rendred uſeleſs, they made him a path at no ſmall coſt all the way upon arches joyning to one another, where it was not poſſible to touch a place of burial. The like care and curioſity was uſed in leading away the Scape-goat.

The firſt day of the feaſt of the Paſover certain perſons departed from the Sanhedrin went forth into that valley, a great company attending them, and very many out of the neighbouring Towns flocked together, that the thing might be done a great multitude being preſent. And the reaſon of the pomp was fetched thence, becauſe the Baithuſeans or Sadduces, did not think well of doing that action on that day: therefore that they might croſs that croſſing opinion, they performed the buſineſs with as much ſhew as could be. *When it was now Even, he, on whom the office of reaping laid, ſaith, the Sun is ſet, and they anſwered, Well. d Hieroſ. Nazir, fol. 57. 4.

In d the place marked in the margin they are treating concerning removing a Sepulchre, ſeated in an inconvenient place, that it might not pollute any man. Examples are brought in of the Sepulchres of the houſe of David, which were moved out of their places, and of the Sepulchres of the ſons of Huldah, which were within Jeruſalem, and were not moved out of their places. *Hence it appears, ſaith R. CHAP. XXXIX.

The Valley of Hinnom,

a See Kimchi upon the place

A Great part of the Valley of Kidron was called alſo the Valley of Hinnom. Jeremiah going forth into the Valley of Hinnom, went out by the gate החרסית Hacharſith, the Sun gate; Jer. XIX. 2. that is, the a Rabbins and others being interpreters, by the Eaſt gate. For thence was the beginning of the Valley of Hinnom, which after ſome ſpace bending it ſelf Weſtward ran out along the South ſide of the City.

There is no need to repeat thoſe very many things, which are related of this place in the Old Teſtament; they are hiſtorical. The mention of it in the New is only myſtical and metaphorical, and is transferred to denote the place of the damned. Under the ſecond Temple, when thoſe things were vaniſhed, which had ſet an eternal mark of infamy upon this place, to wit, Idolatry, and the howlings of Infants roaſted to Moloch, yet ſo much of the filthineſs, and of the abominable name remained, that even now it did as much bear to the life the repreſentation of Hell, as it had done before.

It was the common ſink of the whole City, whither all filth, and all kind of naſtineſs met. It was probably the common burying place of the City, (if ſo be they did now bury within ſo ſmall a diſtance from the City.) They ſhall bury in Tophet, until there be no more any place, Jer. VII. 32. And there was there alſo a continual fire, whereby bones and other filthy things were conſumed, leſt they might offend or infect the City. There is a tradition according to the School of Rabban Jochanan ben Zaccai. b There are two Palm trees in the Valley of Ben-Hinnom, between which a ſmoak ariſes: and this is that we learn, The Palms of the Mountain are fit for Iron. And, this is the door of Gehenna.

b Bab. Erubbin, fol. 19. 1.

Some of the Rabbins apply that of Eſaiah hither, Chap. LXVI. verſ. the laſt. They ſhall go out, and ſee the dead carcaſſes of the men that rebel againſt me, for their worm ſhall not die, and their fire ſhall not be quenched. Thoſe Gentiles (ſaith Kimchi upon the place) who come to worſhip from month to month, and from Sabbath to Sabbath, ſhall go out without Jeruſalem into the Valley of Jehoſaphat, and ſhall ſee the carkaſſes of Gog and Magog, &c. And a little after, The juſt ſhall go out without Jeruſalem into the Valley of Hinnom, and ſhall ſee thoſe that rebel, &c.

What

What is to be reſolved concerning the Valley of Jehoſaphat, he himſelf doubts, and leaves undetermined: c For either Jehoſaphat, ſaith he, here erected ſome building, or did ſome work, or it is called the Valley of Jehoſaphat becauſe of judgment. So alſo Jarchi יהושפט משפטי יה Jehoſaphat means all one with the Judgment of the Lord. c Kimchi upon *Joel.*3.

Mount Olivet. הר הזיתים The Mount of Olives, 2 Sam. XV. 30. Zech. XIV. 4. In the Rabbines commonly הר המשחה The Mount of Oyle.

ΟΡΟΣ τὸ προκαταβεβλημένον Ἐλαιῶν, τῆς πόλεως ἀντικρυς κείμενον, ἀπέχει σταδίους πέντε The Mount called the Mount of Olives, lying over againſt the City, is diſtant five furlongs. But Luke ſaith, Act. I. 12. Then they returned from the Mount, called Olivet, ὅ ἐστιν ἐγγὺς Ἱερουσαλὴμ σαββάτου ἔχον ὁδόν· which is near Jeruſalem, a Sabbath days journey. But now a Sabbath days journey contained eight furlongs, or a whole mile. Neither yet for all this doth Luke fight againſt Joſephus. For this laſt meaſures the ſpace to the firſt foundation of Olivet; the other to that place of Olivet, where our Saviour aſcended. The firſt foot of the Mount was diſtant five furlongs from the City: but Chriſt being about to aſcend went up the Mountain three furlongs further. a Joſeph. Antiq. lib.20. cap.6.

The Mount had its name from the Olive trees, however other trees grew in it; and that becauſe the number of theſe perhaps was greater, and the fruit better. Among other trees two Cedars are mentioned, or rather two monſters of Cedars. b Two Cedars, they ſay, were in the Mount of Olivet, under one of which were four ſhops, where all things needful for purifications were ſold: out of the other they fetched every month forty Sea's (certain meaſures) of Pigeons, whence all the women to be purified were ſupplied. b Hieroſ. Taanith, fol.69.1.

It is a dream like that ſtory, that beneath this mountain all the dead are to be raiſed. c When the dead ſhall live again, ſay they, Mount Olivet is to be rent in two, and all the dead of Iſrael ſhall come out thence: yea, thoſe righteous perſons, who died in captivity, ſhall be rolled under the Earth, and ſhall come forth under the Mount of Olivet. c Targum upon *Cant.*8.1.

There was a place in the Mount directly oppoſite againſt the Eaſt-gate of the Temple, d to which the Prieſt, that was to burn the red Cow, went along a foot-bridge laid upon arches, as it was ſaid before. And e when he ſprinkled his blood there, he directly levelled his eyes at the Holy of Holies. d See Middoth, cap.1 hal.3. e Parah, cap.3. hal.9.

Thoſe ſignal flames alſo, accuſtomed to be waved up and down on the top of this Mount in token of the New Moon now ſtated, are worthy of mention. The cuſtom and manner is thus deſcribed. f Formerly they held up flames; but when the Cutheans ſpoiled this, it was decreed, that they ſhould ſend Meſſengers: The Gloſs is this, They held up the flames preſently after the time of the New Moon was ſtated: and there was no need to ſend meſſengers to thoſe that were a far off in captivity, to give them notice of the time; for thoſe flames gave notice: and the Cutheans ſometime held up flames in an undue time, and ſo deceived Iſrael. f Roſh Haſhannah, cap. 2. hal. 2.3. &c.

The Text goes forward: How did they hold up the flames? They took long ſtaves of Cedar, and Canes, and Fat wood, and the courſe part of the Flax, and bound theſe together with a thred. And one going up to the Mount put fire to it, and ſhakes the flame up and down, this way and that way, until he ſees another doing ſo in a ſecond Mountain, and another ſo in a third Mountain. But whence did they lift up theſe flames firſt? מהר חמשחה לסרטבא From the Mount of Olivet to Sartaba; From Sartaba to Gryphena; From Gryphena to Hauran; From Hauran to Beth Baltin. And he who held up the flame in Beth Baltin, departed not thence, but waved his flame up and down, this way and that way, until he ſaw the whole captivity abounding in flames. כמוורית האש The Gemariſts enquire, What, From Beth Baltin means? This is Biram. What the Captivity means? Rabh Joſeph ſaith, This is Pombeditha. What means כמוורית האש As it were a burning pit of fire? There is a tradition, that every one taking a torch in his hand, goes up upon his houſe, &c.

The Jews believe the Meſſias ſhall converſe very much in this mountain: which is agreeable to truth and reaſon. For when they think his primary ſeat ſhall be at Jeruſalem, they cannot but believe ſome ſuch thing of that Mount. g R. Janna ſaith, שכינה The divine g Midras Tillin.

divine Majeſty ſtood three years and an half in Mount Olivet, and preached, ſaying, Seek ye the Lord, while he may be found; call upon him while he is near.

And now let us from this mountain look back upon the City. Imagine your ſelf ſitting in that place, where the Prieſt ſtood, while he burnt the red Cow, directly over againſt the Eaſt gate of the Temple. Between the Mount and the City you might ſee a Valley running between, compaſſing Sion on the right hand, and Jeruſalem on the left: the gate of Waters againſt you, leading to the Temple, on the left hand Ophla and the Horſe-gate. From thence, as we have ſaid, was the beginning of the Valley of Hinnom, which at length bowed towards the South ſide of the City. In that place near the Wall was the Fullers field: which whether it was ſo called from Wood framed together, where Fullers dried their cloth, or ἀπὸ χναφέως μνήματος, from a Fullers monument, of which b Joſephus writes, we do not diſpute.

b De bello, lib. 5. cap. 13.

From the Horſe-gate Weſtward runs out the Valley Kidron, (in which is a Brook, whence the Valley takes its name) embracing Sion alſo on the North, and ſpreading abroad it ſelf in a more ſpacious breadth.

i Below the City there was a place (we do not dare to mark it out) which was called מוצא Motza: hither they came down (in the feaſt of Tabernacles) and cropped off thence long boughs of Willow (it may be from the banks of the brook Kidron) and going away placed them near the ſides of the Altar, bended after that manner, that their heads might bow over the top of the Altar, &c.

i Succah, cap. 4 hal. 5.

It is no mervail, if there were a multitude of gardens without the City, when there were none within. Among them גנזרים ורדים k A Garden of Jeruſalem is famed, wherein Figs grew, which were ſold for three or four aſſarii each: and yet neither the Truma, nor the Tenth was ever taken of them.

k Maaſaroth, cap. 2. hal. 5.

Joſephus hath theſe words, l Ἐκλειτάρχοντο ἀπὸ τοῦ τείχους πρὸς τὰς κηπείας, &c. The gardening was all compaſſed about from the Wall with trenches, and every thing was divided with crooked gardens, and many walls.

Bethany. בית חיני. Beth-hene.

Bethany ſeems to be the ſame with בית חיני among the Talmudiſts. Of which they write thus. a They treat in the place noted in the margin concerning eating of fruits the ſeventh year, and concerning ביעור Beor, b of which we have ſpoke before. They enquire, how long one may eat of theſe or the other fruits. And they ſtate the buſineſs thus: They eat Olives, ſay they, until the laſt ceaſes in Tekoa. R. Eleazar ſaith, Until the laſt ceaſes in Guſh Chalab, (in the Tribe of Aſher.) They eat dry figs, until green figs ceaſe בית חיני in Beth-hene. R. Judah ſaith, The green figs of Beth-hene are not mentioned; unleſs in reſpect of the Tenths; as the Tradition is פגי בית חיני ואחיני דטובני &c. The figs of Beth-hene, and the dates of Tubni are bound to be tithed. The Gloſs is this, They are not mentioned in the Schools among fruits, unleſs in reſpect of tithing. Theſe words are recited in Erubbin: c where the word בית־חיני Beth-hene is writ, ביתיוני Beth jone, and טובני Tubni is writ טובינא Tubina.

c Erubbin, fol. 28. 2.

Beth-hene certainly ſeems to be the ſame altogether with our Bethany, and the Name to be drawn from the word אחיני Athene, which ſignifies the Dates of Palm trees, not come to ripeneſs: as the word פגי alſo ſignifies Green-figs, that is, ſuch figs as are not yet ripe.

And now take a Proſpect a little of Mount Olivet. Here you may ſee Olive-trees, and in that place is Geth-ſemani, The place of oyl-preſſes. There you may ſee Palm-trees growing, and that place is called Bethany בית חיני The place of Dates. And we may obſerve in the Goſpel-hiſtory, how thoſe that met Chriſt, as he was going forward from Bethany, had branches of Palm-trees ready at hand. There you may ſee Fig-trees growing, and that place was called Beth-phage, The place of Green-figs.

Therefore ſome part of Olivet was called Bethany from the Palm-trees; there was a Town alſo called of the ſame Name over againſt it. The Town was fifteen furlongs diſtant from Jeruſalem. And the Coaſt of that name went on till it reached the diſtance of a Sabbath days journy only from the City.

IN that manner as Mount Olivet laid over againſt the City on the Eaſt, the Valley of Kidron running between: ſo on the North behind a Valley ſomewhat broader, ſtretched out from Sion North-ward, the land ſwelled into a Hill, at the place which from thence was called Zophim, becauſe thence there was a Proſpect on all ſides, but eſpecially towards the City.

Concerning it Joſephus thus. a Ceſar when he had received a legion by night from Ammaus, the day after moving his Tents thence, Ἐπὶ τὸν Σκοπὸν καλούμενον προσῆειεν· Ἔνθεν ἦν πόλις ἤδη καταφαινὴς, καὶ τοῦ ναοῦ μέγεθος ἔκλαμπρον, &c. He entred into Scopo ſo called. Where the City appeared, and the greatneſs of the Temple ſhining out: as that plain Tract of land touching upon the North coaſt of the City is truly called Scopus, The Viewer. a Joſeph. de Bello, lib. 5. cap. 8.

Hence thoſe Canons and Cautions. b He that piſſeth, let him turn his face to the North, he that eaſeth nature, to the South. R. Joſi ben R. Bon ſaith, The Tradition is, From Zophim and within. That is, if this be done by any one from Zophim inwards, when he is now within the proſpect of the City; when he piſſeth, let him turn his face to the North, that he do not expoſe his modeſt parts before the Temple: when he eaſeth nature, let him turn his face to the South, that he expoſe not his buttocks before it. b Hieroſ. Beracoth, fol. 13. 2.

c If any one being gone out of Jeruſalem, ſhall remember, that holy fleſh is in his hand, if he be now gone beyond Zophim, let him burn it in the place where he is. (For it is polluted by being carried out of the Walls of Jeruſalem.) But if he be not beyond Zophim, let him go back, and burn it before the Temple. Where the Gloſs thus, Zophim is a place, whence the Temple may be ſeen. But another Gloſs doth not underſtand the thing here of that proper place, but of the whole compaſs about the City, whereſoever the City could firſt be ſeen. So R. Eliezar of Abraham, going from the South to Jeruſalem, d The third day they came to Zophim: but when he came to Zophim, he ſaw the glory o fthe divine Majeſty ſitting upon the Mount (Moriah.) c *Bab. Ramah. Ramathaim Zophim. Gibeah.

THERE was a certain Ramah in the Tribe of Benjamin, Joſ. XVIII. 25. and that within ſight of Jeruſalem, as it ſeems, Judg. XIX. 13. where it is named with Gibeah: and elſewhere, Hoſ. V. 8. which Towns were not much diſtant. See 1 Sam. XXII. 6. Saul ſat in Gibeah under a grove in Ramah. Here the Gemariſts trifle. a Whence is it, ſay they, that Ramah is placed near Gibeah? To hint to you, that the ſpeech of Samuel of Ramah was the cauſe, why Saul remained two years and an half in Gibeah. They blindly look over Ramah in the Tribe of Benjamin, and look only at Ramah in Ephraim, where Samuel was born. a Bab. Taanith. fol. 5. 2.

His native Town is very often called Ramah, once Ramathaim Zophim, 1 Sam. I. 1. There was a certain man of Ramathaim: that is, one of the two Ramaths, which were ſurnamed alſo Zophim. A like form of ſpeech is that 1 Sam. XVIII. 21. בשתים התחתן בי In one of the two thou ſhalt be my ſon in Law. That Town of Samuel was Ramath Zophim, and this of Benjamin was Ramath Zophim alſo. But by a different Etymology, as it ſeems: that, it may be, from Zuph, Sauls great great Grandfather, whence that Country was ſo called, 1 Sam. IX. 5. this from Zophim, of which place we have ſpoke in the foregoing Chapter.

Gibeah was Sauls Town. b Κώμη Γαβαθ-Σαούλ καλουμένη. . Σημαίνει δὲ τοῦτο λόφον Σαούλ διέχουσα ἀπὸ τῆς Ἱεροσολύμων ὅσον ἀπὸ ἑβδομήκοντα σταδίων. The Town called Gabath-Saul. This ſignifieth Saulshill, which is diſtant from Jeruſalem about thirty furlongs. Hence you may gueſs at the diſtance of Rama from Jeruſalem. Joſephus calls the neighbouring place of Gibeah Ἀκανθῶν αὐλῶνα· the long Valley of Thorns: perhaps חצר סנה the Valley under the rock Seneh: of which mention is made, 1 Sam. XIV. 4 b Joſeph. de Bell. lib. 5. c. 6.

Nob. Bahurim.

THAT Nob was placed in the land of Benjamin, not far from Jeruſalem, whence Jeruſalem alſo might be ſeen, the words of the Chaldee Paraphraſt upon Eſa. X.32. do argue. For ſo he ſpeaks; Senacherib came and ſtood in Nob, a City of the Prieſts, before the walls of Jeruſalem; and ſaid to his army, Is not this the City of Jeruſalem, againſt which I have raiſed my whole army, and have ſubdued all the Provinces of it? Is it not ſmall and weak in compariſon of all the fortifications of the Gentiles, which I have ſubdued by the valour of my hand? He ſtood nodding with his head againſt it, and wagging his hand up and down, &c. Where Kimchi thus, Jeruſalem might be ſeen from Nob. Which when he ſaw from thence, he wagged his hand, as a man is wont to do, when he deſpiſeth any thing, &c. And Jarchi thus, When he ſtood at Nob, he ſaw Jeruſalem, &c.

The a Talmudiſts do concur alſo in the ſame ſenſe with the Chaldee Paraphraſt, and in his very words; adding this moreover, that all thoſe places which are numbred up by Eſaiah in the place alledged, were travailed through by the Enemy with his army in one day.

a Tab. Sanhedr. fol.94.2. & 95 1.

The Tabernacle ſometime reſided at Nob; when that was deſtroyed, it was tranſlated to Gibeon. b And the days of Nob and Gibeon (they are the words of Maimonides) were ſeven and fifty years.

b Maim. in Beth-Habbechirah, cap. 1.

We meet with mention of Bahurim, 2 Sam. XVI. 5. It was a Levitical City, the ſame with Almon, Joſ. XXI. 18. which is alſo called Alemeth, 1 Chron. VI. 60. Thoſe words, And David came to Bahurim, in the place alledged in the book of Samuel, the Chaldee renders אתא דוד מלכא עד עלמת And David the King came to Almath. Where Kimchi thus, Bahurim was a City of the Benjamites, and is called in the books of the Chronicles, Alemeth; for Bahurim and Alemeth are the ſame. Both ſound as much as, Young men.

I enquire, whether this word hath the ſame Etymology with Emmaus near Tyberias which from the Warm baths was called חמת Chammath. The Jews certainly do write this otherwiſe; namely either אמאוס as the Jeruſalem Talmudiſts in the place above cited, or עימאוס as the Miſhnah.

d The family, ſay they, of Beth-Pegarim, and Beth Zipperia was מעימאוס out of Emmaus. The Gloſs is this, Emmaus was the name of a place, whoſe inhabitants were Iſraelite Gentlemen, and the Prieſts married their daughters.

Joſephus mentioning ſome Noble-men, ſlain by Simeon the Tyrant, numbers one Ariſteus, who was e a Scribe of the Councel, γένος δὲ Ἀμμαεύς, and by extraction from Ammaus. By the ſame Author is mentioned alſo f Ἀνανος ὁ ἀπὸ Ἀμμαοῦς, Ananus of Ammaus, one of the ſeditious of Jeruſalem; who nevertheleſs at laſt fled over to Ceſar.

Kiriath-Jearim was before time called Baale, 2 Sam. VI. 2. or Bualath, 1 Chron. XIII. 6. Concerning it the Jeruſalem Writers ſpeak thus; g We find, that they intercalated the year in Baalath. But Baalath was ſometimes aſſigned to Judah, and ſometimes to Dan. Elteka, and Gibbethon, and Baaleth; behold theſe are of Judah. (Here is a miſtake of the Tranſcribers, for it ſhould be written, Of Dan, Joſ. XIX. 44. Baalah, and Jiim, and Azem, behold theſe are of Dan. (It ſhould be written, Of Judah, Joſ. XV. 29.) namely, the houſes were of Judah, the fields of Dan.

CHAP. XLVI.

The Country of Jericho, and the situation of the City.

HERE we will borrow Josephus his Pensil, a Ἰδρύσθαι μὲν ἐν πεδίῳ φασὶν ἡ Ἰερι-χοῦς· ὄρος δὲ ἐπικρέμασθαι αὐτῇ ἰσχνὸν μὲν καὶ ἄκαρπον ὄρος μήκιστον, &c. Jericho is seated in a Plain, yet a certain barren Mountain hangs over it, narrow indeed but long; for it runs out Northward to the Country of Scythopolis, and Southward to the Country of Sodome, and the utmost coast of the Asphaltites. a Joseph. de Bello, lib. 4. cap. 27.

Of this Mountain mention is made, Jos. II. 22. where the two Spies sent by Josua, and received by Rahab are said to conceal themselves.

Ἀντικεῖται δὲ τούτῳ τὸ πρὸς τῷ Ἰορδάνῃ ὄρος, &c. Opposite against this lyes a Mountain on the other side Jordan, beginning from Julias on the North, and stretched Southward as far as Somorrha, which bounds the Rock of Arabia. In this is a Mountain, which is called the Iron Mountain, reaching out as far as the land of Moab. But the Country which lies between these two Mountanous places is called The Great Plain, (Μέγα πεδίον) extended from the Village Ginnaber to the lake Asphaltites in length a thousand two hundred furlongs, (an hundred and fifty miles,) in bredth an hundred and twenty furlongs: (fifteen miles,) and Jordan cuts it in the middle.

Hence you may understand more plainly those things that are related of the Plains of Jericho, 2 Kings XXV. 5. and what ἡ περίχωρος τοῦ Ἰορδάνου, the Region about Jordan, means, Matth. III. 5.

Ἀπέχει δὲ Ἱεροσολύμων μὲν σταδίους ἑκατὸν πεντήκοντα, τοῦ δὲ Ἰορδάνου ἑξήκοντα, &c. Jericho is distant from Jerusalem an hundred and fifty furlongs, (eighteen miles, and three quarters) and from Jordan sixty furlongs, (seven miles and an half.) The space from thence to Jerusalem is desert and rocky; but to Jordan and the Asphaltites more plain indeed, but alike desert, and barren.

This our Author asserts the same distance between Jericho and Jordan elsewhere in these words: b Οἱ δὲ πεντήκοντα προελθόντες σταδίους βάλλονται στρατόπεδον ἀπὸ δέκα σταδίων τοῦ Ἱερι-χοῦντος. But the Israelites travailing forward fifty furlongs from Jordan, encamped the distance of ten furlongs from Jericho: that is, in Gilgal in the East coast of Jericho, Jos. IV. 19. b Antiq. lib. 5. cap. 1.

But concerning the distance between Jericho and Jerusalem he does not seem to agree with his Country-men. For however they according to their Hyperbolical style feign very many things to be heard from Jerusalem as far as Jericho, to wit, c the sound of the gate of the Temple, when it was opened, the sound of Migrepha, or the little bell, &c. yet there are some of them, who make it to be the distance of Ten Parsæ, d Rabbath bar Bar Channah saith, Rabbi Jochanan saith, מירושׁ לירחו יפרסי From Jerusalem to Jericho were ten Parsæ: and yet from thence thither the voice of the high Priest in the day of expiation pronouncing the name Jehovah was heard, &c. The hinges of the gates of the Temple are heard בשמונה תחומי שבת as far as the eighth bound of the Sabbath, that is, as far as a Sabbaths days journey eight times numbred. The Glos hath these words, The hinges indeed not further, but the gates themselves are heard to Jericho. There is an Hyperbole in their measuring of the space, as well as in the rest. c Tamid. cap. 3 hal. 8. d Bab. Joma, fol. 20. 2. & 39. 2.

Ἐκπυροῦται δὲ ὥρᾳ θέρους τὸ πεδίον, καὶ διὰ ὑπερβολὴν αὐχμοῦ ψυχεῖ νοσώδη τὸν ἀέρα, &c. And that Plain burns in the Summer, and by too much heat renders the air unhealthful: for it is all without water, except Jordan; the Palms that grow in whose banks are more flourishing, and more fruitful, than those that grow more remote.

Παρὰ μέντοι τὴν Ἱερι-χοῦντα ὅτι πηγή, δαψιλὴς τε, καὶ πρὸς ἀρδείας λιπαρωτάτη, ταύτὴν πάλαι ἀναβλύζουσα πόλιν, &c. Near Jericho is a very plentiful spring, and very rich for watering, and moistening the ground; it riseth near the old City, and Jesus the Son of Nave took it. Of which Spring there is a report, that in former times it did not only make the fruits of the Earth and of the Trees to decay, but also the offspring of women; and was universally unwholsom and harmful to all: but it was changed into a better condition by Elizeus, &c. (See 2 King. II. 21.) So that those waters, which before were the cause of barrenness and famine, did thenceforth produce fruitfulness and abundance: and they have so great great a vertue in their watering, that whatsoever place they touch, they bring on to a very speedy ripeness.

Καὶ πεδίον μὲν ἔστιν ἐξηδομήκοντα σταδίων μῆκος, εὖρος δὲ εἴκοσιν. And they overflow the Plain seventy furlongs in length, and twenty in bredth: and there they nourish very fair and thick gardens of Palm-trees of divers kinds, &c. That place also feeds Bees, and produceth Opobalsamum, and Cyprinum, and Myrobalanum: so that one might not call it amiss Θεῖον τὸ χωρίον, A divine Country, &c.

[a] Strabo. Geogr. lib. 16. Strabo speaks like things, Ἰερειχὼς δὲ ἡ πεδίον κύκλῳ περιεχόμενον ὀρεσιν ἔστιν, &c. Jericho is a plain arrounded with Mountains, which in some places bends to it after the manner of a Theatre. A grove of Palmtrees is there, with which are mixed also other garden plants, a fruitful place, abounding with Palmtrees for the space of an hundred furlongs, all well watered, and full of habitations. The Royal Court and Paradice of Balsom is there, &c.

[f] Plin. lib. 5. cap. 14. And Pliny, f Jericho planted with Groves of Palms, and well watered with springs, &c.

Hence the City is called the City of Palmtrees, Deut. XXXIV. 3. and Judg. I. 16. where for that, which in the Hebrew is מעיר התמרים, From the City of Palmtrees, the Targum hath מן קרתא דירחו From the City Jericho: which nevertheless Kimchi approves not of, reckoning the City of Palmtrees to be near Hebron: whom see. See also the Targum upon Judg. III. 13. and Kimchi there; and the Targum upon Judg. IV. 5.

When you take a view of that famous fountain, as it is described by Josephus, thence you understand what waters of Jericho the Holy Ghost points out in Jos. XVI. 1. And when you think of that most pleasant Country watered from thence, let that Rabbinical story come into your mind of דושנו טורא דירחו The Gift of Jericho of five hundred cubits square, granted to the sons of Hobab, Moses father in Law: of which see Baal Turim upon Numb. X. 29. and the Rabbins upon Judg. I.

CHAP. XLVII.

Jericho it self.

[e] Hieros. Sanhed. fol. 25. 4. WE read that this City was not only wasted by Josua with fire and sword, but cursed also. Cursed be he before the Lord, who shall rise up, and build that City Jericho, Jos. VI. 26. a Nor was another City to be built, (say the Talmudists) which was to be called by the name of Jericho: nor was Jericho it self to be built, although to be called by another name. And yet I know not by what chance, this City crept out of dust and rubbish, lived again, and flourished, and became the second City to Hierusalem. The same persons which were just now cited, suppose, that the Restorer of it was Hiel, the

[b] Id. Ibidem. son of Jehosaphat, to wit, the same with Jechiel, 2 Chron. XXI. 2. b Hiel, say they, was of Jehosh phat, and Jericho of Benjamin. And that is a just scruple, which R. David ob-

[c] Kimchi upon 1 King. 16. jects, c How it came about, that the pious King Jehoshaphat should suffer such a horrid thing to be done within his Kingdom? Much more, how this should have been done by his son? Let them dispute the business, we hasten some where else.

That which ought not to be done, being once done stands good. Hiel did a cursed thing in building Jericho: yet Jericho was not to be cursed being now built. A little after its restauration it was made noble by the Schools of the Prophets, 2 Kings II. 5. and it flourished with the rest of the Cities of Judea unto the destruction of the Nation by the Babylonians.

It flourished more under the second Temple, so that it gave place to no City in Judea; yea, all gave place to it, besides Jerusalem. d A royal Palace was in it, e where Herod ended his days: f an Hippodromus, where the Jewish Nobility being imprisoned by him, were to be slain, when he expired: g an Amphitheatre, where his Will was publickly opened, and read over: and sometime a Sessions of the Sanhedrin, and a noble troup of those that waited in their Courses at the Temple.

Zarah, fol. 42. 3 h The Elders sometime assembled together in the Chamber Beth-gadia in Jericho: The Bath Kol went forth, and said to them, There are two among you, who are fit to receive the Holy Ghost, and Hillel is one of them: They cast their eyes upon Samuel the Little, as the Second. Another time the Elders assembled together in a Chamber in Jafne; the Bath Kol went forth, and said, There are two among you, who are fit to receive the Holy Ghost, and Samuel the Little is one of them, They cast their eyes upon R. Lazar. And they rejoyced, that their judgment agreed with the sentence of the Holy Ghost.

i There

i There is a Tradition, that there were at Jeruſalem twenty four thouſand men of the Station; and half a Station (that is twelve thouſand men) at Jericho. Jericho alſo could have produced an whole Station, but becauſe ſhe would give place to Jeruſalem, ſhe produced only the half of a Station. i Id. Taanith, fol. 67. 4.

Behold! five hundred men of every Courſe reſiding at Jericho! But what were they? They were ready at hand to ſupply any courſes that wanted, if there were any ſuch at Jeruſalem; and they took care of ſupplying them with neceſſaries who officiated at Jeruſalem. Hence it is the leſs to be wondred at, if you hear of a Prieſt and a Levite paſſing along in the Parable of him that travailed between Jeruſalem and Jericho, Luke X. 31, 32.

In ſo famous and populous a Town, there could not but be ſome Councel of three and twenty, one at leaſt of more remark, if not more, when ſo many of the Stations dwelling there were at hand, who were fit to be employed in Government; and ſo many to be governed.

k אנשי יריחו The men of Jericho are famed for ſix things done by them: in three of which the chief Councel conſented to them, but in the other three they conſented not. Thoſe things, concerning which they oppoſed them not, were theſe. k Peſach. cap. 4 hal 8.

I. מרכיבין דקלים כרי חיוה They engrafted, or folded together Palmtrees every day. Here is need of a long Commentary, and they produce one but very obſcure. The buſineſs of the men of Jericho was about Palmtrees; which they either joyned together, and mingled males with females, or they ingrafted, or (as they commonly ſay) inoculated the more tender ſprouts of the branches into thoſe that were older. So much indulgence was granted them by the Wiſe-men concerning the time, wherein theſe things are done, which elſewhere would ſcarcely have been ſuffered, unleſs, as it ſeems, the nature of the place, and of the Groves of Palms required it.

II. כורכין את שמע They folded up the recitations of their Phylacteries: that is, either not ſpeaking them out diſtinctly, or omitting ſome doxologies, or Prayers, or pronouncing them with too ſhrill a voice. See the Gemara and the Gloſs.

III. קוצרין וגודשין לפני עומר They reaped, and gathered in their Sheaves before the Sheaf (of firſt fruits) was offered: and this, partly becauſe of the too early ripeneſs of their Corn in that place, and partly, becauſe their Corn grew in a very low Valley, and therefore it was not accounted fit to be offered unto the Mincha, or daily ſacrifice. See the Gloſs.

The three things, concerning which the Wiſe-men conſented not to them, were theſe.

I. מתירין בנמזורת של הקדש Such fruits and branches, alſo certain fruits of the Sycomine-trees, which their fathers had devoted to ſacred uſes, they alienated into common.

II. אוכלין תחת הנשרים בשבת They eat on the Sabbath day ander the tree ſuch fruits as fell from the tree, although they were uncertain, whether they had fallen on the Sabbath day, or the Eve of the Sabbath: for ſuch as fell on the Sabbath were forbidden.

III. נותנין פאה לירק They granted a corner of the Garden for herbs, in the ſame manner as a corner of the Field was granted for corn.

Let the deſcription of this City and place be concluded with thoſe words of the Talmud in the place noted in the margin. l משחא דאפרסמא Do they uſe a certain form of prayer upon Balſome? Bleſſed be he, who hath created the oyntment of our land. The Gloſs is, The oyntment of our land: for it grows at Jericho, and for its ſmell it is called יריחו Jericho: and it is that Pannag, of which mention is made in the book of Ezekiel, Judah and the land of Iſrael were thy Merchants in wheat of Minnith, and Pannag. This I have ſeen in the book of Joſephus ben Gorion. Judge, Reader. l Bab. Some Miſcellaneous matters belonging to the Country about Jericho.

LET us begin from the laſt encampings of Iſrael beyond Jordan. Numb. XXXIII. 29. They encamped near Jordan from Beth-Jeſhimoth unto Abel Shittim. a From Beth-Jeſhimoth to Abel-Shittim were twelve miles. It is a moſt received opinion among the Jews, that the Tents of the Iſraelites in the Wilderneſs contained a ſquare of twelve miles. So the Targum of Jonathan upon Numb. II. 2. משריתא דישרא׳ &c. The encamping of Iſrael was twelve miles in length, and twelve miles in bredth. And the Gemariſts ſay, b It is forbidden a Scholar to teach a Tradition before his Maſter, yea, not to do it, until he be twelve miles diſtant from him, according to the ſpace of the encamping of Iſrael. But whence is that ſpace proved? And they encamped near Jordan from Beth-Jeſhimoth to Abel-Shittim. How far is that? Twelve miles.

a Hieroſ. Sheviith, fol. 36. 3. & Gittin, fol. 43. 3.

c They believe alſo, that the bulk of the Hoſt took up the ſame ſpace, while they paſſed Jordan; nor is it unfit ſo to believe: for it indeed ſeems at leaſt to have taken up a very large ſpace in its paſſage: this eſpecially being obſerved, that while the Ark ſtood in the middle of Jordan, none might come within two thouſand cubits near it, Joſ. III. 4. When therefore it is ſaid, that the people paſſed over againſt Jordan, it is to be underſtood of the middle of the Hoſt, or of thoſe that carried the Ark, and of thoſe that went next after the Ark.

c Bab. Sotah, fol. 34. 1. in the Gloſſ.

d From Abel to Jordan were ſixty furlongs (ſeven miles, and an half.) The bredth of Jordan from bank to bank was but of a moderate ſpace. The Jeruſalem Talmudiſts do write thus of it, in ſome part of it: e A fire ſometime paſſed over Jordan. (That is, a flame kindled on this bank flew over to that.) But how far is the flame carried? R. Eleazar ſaith, For the moſt part to ſixteen cubits, but when the wind drives it, to thirty. R. Judah ſaith, To thirty cubits, and when the wind drives it, to fifty. R. Akibah ſaith, To fifty cubits, and when the wind blows, to an hundred.

d Joſ. Antiq. lib. 5 cap. 1.

e Baba Kama, fol. 3. 5.

f From Jordan to Gilgal were fifty furlongs. (ſix miles and a quarter.) Therefore the whole journy of that day from Abel to Gilgal, was fourteen miles or thereabouts. The Talmudiſts being deceived by the ambiguity of the word גלגל Gilgal, extend it to ſixty miles, and more. Whom ſee afterwards quoted in the eighty eighth Chapter. It is thus ſaid in Midras Tillin, h Saul went in one day three ſcore miles.

Hebron.

FROM Jericho we proceed to Hebron, far off in ſituation, but next to it in dignity: yea, there was a time, when it went before Jeruſalem it ſelf in name and honour; namely, while the firſt foundations of the Kingdom of David were laid; and at that time Jericho was buried in rubbiſh, and Jeruſalem was trampled upon by the profane feet of the Jebuſites.

Hebron was placed, as in the Mountainous Country of Judea, ſo in a place very rocky, but yet in a very fruitful coaſt.

אין לך טרשים &c. a There is no place in all the land of Iſrael more ſtony than Hebron: thence a burying place of the dead is there. The Gemariſts ſift what that means, Hebron was built ſeven years before Zoan in Egypt, Numb. XIII. 22. And they reduce it to this ſenſe, which you may find cited alſo in R. Salomon upon that Text of Moſes, There is no land more excellent than Egypt, as it is ſaid; As the Garden of the Lord, as Egypt: nor is there in Egypt any place more excellent than Zoan: as it is ſaid, Her Princes were in Zoan; and yet Hebron was ſeven times nobler, however it were rocky, than Zoan. For this Tradition obtained

You may obſerve the ſituation of Hebron in reſpect of Jeruſalem from thoſe things, which are related of a daily cuſtom and rite in the Temple. b The Preſident of the ſervice in the Temple was wont to ſay every morning, Go, and ſee, whether it be time to kill the ſacrifice. If it were time, he, that was ſent to ſee, ſaid, ברקאו It is light. Mathia ben Samuel ſaid, The whole face of the Eaſt is light unto Hebron: to whom another anſwers, Well, &c. d And therefore they made mention of Hebron, אעפי &c. (although the Eaſt was on that Coaſt) that the memory of the merit of thoſe that were buried in Hebron might occur at the daily ſacrifice. They are the words of the Author of Juchaſin, out of which thoſe are eſpecially to be marked, Though the Eaſt was on that Coaſt; or, Though the Eaſt were on that quarter of the Heaven. Conſider which words, and conſult the Gemariſts upon the place quoted: for they underſtand thoſe words, What? As the light is unto Hebron? Of the light reaching as far as Hebron; juſt as the Gloſs underſtands them of his eyes reaching thither, that went to look. All which things compared come at laſt to this, (if credit may be given to theſe Authors) that Hebron, however it be placed South of Jeruſalem, yet did decline ſomewhat towards the Eaſt, and might be ſeen from the high Towers in the Temple and in Jeruſalem. Let the Reader judge.

Of Macpelah, the burying place near Hebron very many things are ſaid by very many men. The City was called Hebron, that is, A Conſociation, perhaps from the Pairs there buried, Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob and their wives.

Not a few believe Adam was buried there in like manner: ſome, that he was buried once; and buried again. e Adam ſaid, ſay they, after my death, they will come perhaps, and taking my bones will worſhip them, but I will hide my Coffin very deep in the Earth, in a Cave within a Cave. It is therefore called, The Cave Macpelah, or the doubled Cave.

Of the Cities of Refuge.

HEBRON, the moſt eminent among them, excites us to remember the reſt. a The Rabbines deliver this, Moſes ſeparated three Cities of refuge beyond Jordan; and againſt them Joſua ſeparated three Cities in the land of Canaan. And theſe were placed by one another juſt as two ranks of Vines are in a Vinyard. Hebron in Judea againſt Bezer in the Wilderneſs. Shechem in Mount Ephraim againſt Ramoth in Gilead. Cadeſh in Mount Nephthali againſt Golan in Baſan. And theſe three were ſo equally diſpoſed, that there was ſo much ſpace from the South coaſt of the land of Iſrael to Hebron, as there was from Hebron to Schechem; and as much from Hebron to Shechem, as from Shechem to Cadeſh, and as much from Shechem to Cadeſh, as from Cadeſh to the North coaſt of the land.

b It was the Sanhedrins buſineſs, to make the ways to thoſe Cities convenient, by enlarging them, and by removing every ſtop, againſt which one might either ſtumble or daſh his foot. No hillock, or river was allowed to be in the way, over which there was not a bridge: and the way leading thither was at leaſt two and thirty cubits broad. And every double way, or in the parting of the ways was written מקלט, מקלט Refuge, Refuge, leſt he that fled thither might miſtake the way.

d The Jews dream, that in the days of the Meſſias three other Cities are to be added to thoſe ſix, which are mentioned in the Holy Scripture, and they to be among the Kenites, the Kenezites, and the Kadmonites. Let them dream on.

Beth-lehem.

THE Jews are very ſilent of this City: nor do I remember that I have read any thing in them concerning it, beſides thoſe things, which are produced out of the Old Teſtament; this only excepted, that the a Jeruſalem Gemariſts do confeſs, that the Meſſias was born there before their times.

d Baron. Annal. ad annum Chriſt. 137.

The Father of the Eccleſiaſtical Annals, citing theſe words of Euſebius, c Ἀκμάζαντος ἤδη τοῦ πολέμου ἔτους ὀκτωκαιδεκάτου ὑπὸ ἡγεμονίας Ἀδριανοῦ κατὰ Βήθηρα πόλιν, &c. thus renders them in Latine, d Jam vero, cum decimo octavo anno imperii Hadriani bellum, juxta urbem Beth-lehem nuncupatam (quæ erat rerum omnium præſidiis munitiſſima, neque adeo longe a Civitate Hieroſolymarum ſita) vehementius accenderetur, &c. But now, when in the eighteenth year of the Empire of Adrian the war was more vehemently kindled near the Town called Beth-lehem, (which was very well fortified with all manner of defence, nor was ſeated far from the City of Jeruſalem,) &c.

The Interpreter of Euſebius renders Βήθηρα, Beth-thera: not illy, however it be not rendered according to the letter. Perhaps x crept into the word inſtead of ϱ by the careleſneſs of the Coppiers. But by what liberty the other ſhould render it Beth-lehem, let himſelf ſee. Euſebius doth certainly treat of the City, ביתר, Betar, (it is vulgarly written Bitter) of the deſtruction of which the Jews relate very many things with lamentation: which certainly is ſcarcely to be reckoned the ſame with Beth-lehem.

The ſame Father of the Annals adds, that Beth-lehem from the times of Adrian to the times of Conſtantine, was profaned by the Temple of Adonis: for the aſſerting of which he cites theſe words of Paulinus: Hadrianus, ſuppoſing that he ſhould deſtroy the Chriſtian Faith by offering injury to the place, in the place of the Paſſion dedicated the Image of Jupiter, and profaned Beth-lehem with the Temple of Adonis: As alſo like words of Hierome: yet he confeſſes the contrary ſeems to be in Origen againſt Celſus: and that more true. For Hadrian had no quarrel with the Chriſtians, and Chriſtianity, but with the Jews, that curſedly rebelled againſt him.

CHAP. LII.

Betar. ביתר.

OF this City there is a deep ſilence in the Holy Scriptures, but a moſt clamorous noiſe in the Talmudic Writings. It is vulgarly written ביתר, Betar, and rendred by Chriſtians Bitter, or Bither: but I find it written in the Jeruſalem Talmud pretty often in the ſame page a ביתחר, to be read, as it ſeems ביתחר, Beth-Tar; and caſting away the firſt ת Thau, which is very uſual in the word בירא, ביתר, Be-Tar, (The Houſe of the Inquirer.) Wherefore, ſay they, was ביתחר Beth-Tar laid waſte? Becauſe it lighted candles after the deſtruction of the Temple. And why did it light candles? Becauſe the Councellors בולווטי at Jeruſalem dwelt in the midſt of the City. And when they ſaw any going up to Jeruſalem, they ſaid to him, We hear of you, that you are ambitious to be made a Captain,

a Captain, or a Councellor: but he anſwered, There is no ſuch thing in my mind. We hear of you, that you are about to ſell your wealth. But he anſwered, Nor did this come into my mind. Then would one of the company ſay, Whatſoever you ask of this man, Write it, and I will ſeal it. He therefore wrote, and his fellow ſealed it: and they ſent this feigned Inſtrument to their friends, ſaying, if N. endeavours to come again to the poſſeſſion of his wealth, ſuffer him not to do it, for he hath ſold it among us.

The principal cauſe of the deſtruction of Beth-Tera was Ben-Cozba, and his Rebellion againſt the Romans. The Babylonian Writers aſſign another cauſe.

'For the foot of a chariot was Bethara laid waſte. It was b אשקאי דרספק חדיב ביחר 'a cuſtom, that when an Infant male was born, they planted a Cedar; when an Infant 'female, a pine. And when the children contracted marriage, out of thoſe trees they 'made the Bed-chamber. On a certain day the daughter of the Emperour paſſed by, and 'the foot of her chariot broke. They cut down ſuch a Cedar, and brought it to her. '(The Jews) roſe up againſt them, and beat them. It was told the Emperour that the 'Jews rebelled. Being angry he marched againſt them, and deſtroyed the whole horn of 'Iſrael, &c. b Bab. Gittin, fol. 57. 1.

'c Hadrian beſeiged Bether three years and an half. d And when they took it, they 'ſlew the men, the women and the children, ſo that their blood flowed into the great 'Sea. You will ſay perhaps, that it was near the Sea; but it was a mile diſtant. The 'Tradition is, that R. Eliezar the Great ſaith, that there were two Rivers in the Valley 'of Jadaim, of which one flowed this way, the other that. And the Rabbins computed, 'that the third part of them was blood, and two parts water. It is delivered alſo, that 'the Heathen gathered the Vintages for the ſpace of ſeven years without dunging the 'land, becauſe the Vinyards were made fruitful enough by the blood of the Iſraelites. c Hieroſ. in the place above. d Gittin. in the place above.

The Jeruſalem Writers do hyperbolize enough concerning the diſtance of this City from the Sea. 'For if you ſay, ſay they, that it was near the Sea, was it not diſtant 'forty miles? They ſay, that three hundred ſkulls of young children were found upon 'one ſtone: and that there were three cheſts of torn Phylacteries, each cheſt contain-'ing nine buſhels: but there are others that ſay, Nine cheſts, each containing three 'buſhels.

Joſephus mentions e Βήθαιρα ἢ Καφάρτοβ δύο κώμας τὰς μεσογαίους τῆς Ἰδουμαίας, Betaris, and Kaphartobas two midland Towns of Idumea. Where by Idumea he means the Southern part of Judea, eſpecially that that was mountanous: as appears by the Context. He calls Idumea properly ſo called Μεγάλην Ἰδουμαίαν, Idumea the Great. e Joſ. de Bell. lib. 4. cap. 26.

a Bab. Joma, fol. 66. 2.

WHEN a they sent forth the Goat Azazel on the day of expiation, before that, they set up ten Tents, a mile distant one from another: where some betook themselves before that day, that they might be ready to accompany him, who brought forth the Goat. Those of the better rank went out of Jerusalem with him, and accompanied him to the first Tent. There others received him, and conducted him to the second; others to the third, and so to the tenth. From the tenth to the Rock עוק Tsok, whence the Goat was cast down, were two miles. They therefore, who received him there, went not further than a mile with him, that they might not exceed a Sabbath days journey: but standing there they observed what was done by him. He snapt the scarlet threed into two parts of which he bound one to the horns of the Goat, and the other to the rock: and thrust the Goat down, which hardly coming to the middle of the precipice was dashed and broke into pieces. The rock Tsok therefore was twelve miles distant from Jerusalem, according to later computation. But there are some, who assign nine tents only, and ten miles. See the Gemarists.

צוק Tsok among the Talmudists is any more craggy and lofty rock. Hence is that

b Bab. Bava Metzia, fol. 36. 2 & 93. 2.

c Joma, fol. 68. 2.

The first entrance into the Desert was three miles from Jerusalem, and that place was called בית חדורו Beth Chadudo. The Mishnah of Babylon writes thus of it: c They say to the high Priest, The Goat is now come into the wilderness. But whence knew they that he was now come into the wilderness? They set up high stones, and standing on them they shook handkerchiefs, and hence they knew, that the Goat was now got into the wilderness. R. Judah saith, Was not this a great sign to them? מירושלם ועד בית־חדורו ג' מילין: From Jerusalem to Beth-Chadudo were three miles. They went forward the space of a mile, and went back the space of a mile, and they tarried the space of a mile; and so they knew that the Goat was now come to the wilderness.

The Jerusalem Mishnah thus: R. Judah saith, Was not this a great sign to them? מירושלם ועד בית־חורון ג' מילין: From Jerusalem to Beth-Horon were three miles. They went forward the space of a mile, &c.

From these things compared, it is no improbable conjecture, that the Goat was sent out towards Beth-Horon, which both was twelve miles distant from Jerusalem, and had rough and very craggy rocks near it: and that the sense of the Gemarists was this, In the way to Beth-Horon were three miles to the first verge of the Wilderness, and the name of the place was Beth-Chadudo.

And it is ſeated in a valley between the mountains Garizim and Ebal: and in it are about an hundred Cutheans obſerving the Law of Moſes only, and they are called Samaritans: and they have Prieſts of the ſeed of Aaron.* And a little after, They ſacrifice in the Temple in mount Gerizim, on the day of the Paſsover, and the feaſt days, upon the Altar, which they built upon mount Gerizim, of thoſe ſtones, which the children of Iſrael ſet up, when they paſſed over Jordan, &c. And afterwards, In mount Gerizim are Fountains and Paradiſes: but mount Ebal is dry like the ſtones and rocks: and between them in the valley is the City Sichem.

f R. Ismael ben R. Jose, אזל לחורא ניפוליס, went to Neapolis. The Cutheans came to him: to whom he said, I see that ye do not worship to that mountain, but to the Idols, which are under it: for it is written; And Jacob hid the Idols under the Grove, which was near Shechem. f Hieros. Avod. Zar. fol. 44 4.

You may not improperly divide the times of Samaria under the second Temple, into Heathenism, namely before the building of the Temple at Garizim, and after that into Samaritanism, as it was distinguished from Judaism, and as it was an Apostasie from it: although both Religions indeed, departed not an hairs bredth from deceitful superstition.

The Author of Juchasin does not speak amiss here. g 'Then (under Simeon the Just) 'Israel went into parties. Part followed Simeon the Just, and Antigonus his Scholar, and 'their School; as they had learned from Ezra and the Prophets: Part Sanaballat, and his 'son in law: and they offered sacrifices without the Temple of God, and instituted rites 'out of their own heart. In that Temple, Manasseh, the son in law of Sanaballat, the 'son of Jehoshua, the son of Jozedek the high Priest performed the Priests office. And at 'that time Zadok and Baithus, the Scholars of Antigonus did flourish; and hence was 'the beginning of the Schism; namely, when in the days of Antigonus many went back 'to mount Gerizim. g Juchas. fol. 14.2.

h That Temple flourished about two hundred years, and i it perished by the sword and fire of Hyrcanus: but the Samaritane superstition perished not, but lasted for many ages; as odious to the Jews as Heathenism, Joh. IV. 9. Yet they confess that ארץ כותים טהורה l the land of the Samaritanes was clean, and their fountains clean, and their dwellings clean, and their paths clean. But much dispute is made about their victuals, in the place noted in the margin. R. Jacob Bar Acha in the name of R. Lazar saith, 'The victuals of the Cutheans are 'lawful, which is to be understood of that food, with which their wine and vinegar is not 'mingled. It is a Tradition. They sometime said, Why is the wine of Ugdor, [אוגדור] 'forbidden? Because of (its nearness to) Caphar Pagash. Why the wine of Burgatha? 'Because of Birath Sorika. Why the wine of En Cushith? Because of Caphar Salama. 'But they said afterwards. If it be open, it is every where forbidden; if it be covered, 'it is lawful. And a story concerning R. Simeon ben Lazar follows; who came into a certain City of the Samaritanes, and a certain Samaritane Scribe came to him; from whom when he asked something to drink, and it was set before him אטרח עלוי, he doubted about it, &c. And other things to that purpose are read not much after. לא אשתבח חמרא בכרכי סמרטקי 'No wine was found in all Samaria on a certain Eve of the Sab- 'bath, but in the end of the Sabbath there was abundance; for the Syrians had brought 'it, and the Samaritanes received it of them, &c. h Ibid. i Joseph. Antiq. lib. 13. cap. 17. l Hieros. Avod. Zarah, fol. 44.4 m They took not the half shekel of the Cutheans, nor the pigeons of women after child birth, &c. n Rabbi said, 'A Samaritane is as a Heathen. R. Simeon ben Gamaliel 'saith, A Cuthean is as an Israelite in all things. R. Lazar, The tradition is concer- 'ning the Heathen, not concerning the Cutheans, &c. But the Tradition contradicts R. 'Lazar, &c. m Shekalim, cap. 1. hal 5. n Hieros there fol. 46.2.

But that deserves to be observed בותים כל זמן שעושין מצותן עם ישראל נאמנים על ביעור חמץ o 'The Cutheans, when they make their unlevened bread with the Israelites, are 'to be believed concerning the putting away of leven: but when they do not make 'their unlevened bread with the Israelites, are not to be believed concerning the putting 'away of leven. R. Josah saith, This is to be understood of them as to their houses; 'but as to their Courts, they may be suspected: for so they interpret, Leven shall not be 'found in your houses; not, In your Courts. It is a Tradition. Rabban Simeon ben Ga- 'maliel saith, In whatsoever precept the Cutheans converse, they are more accurate in it, 'than the Israelites. This is to be understood, saith R. Simeon, בראשונה שהיו משוקעין בכופריניהון Concerning the time past, namely when they were scattered about in their 'Towns; but now when they have neither precept, nor any remainders of a precept, 'they are suspected, and they are corrupted. The word משוקעין, they that were scatter- 'ed, from a word that signifies drowning, brings that of R. Abhu to mind, who said יג' עירות נשתקעו בכותים, p Thirteen Cities were drowned among the Cutheans, that is, mixed and confounded among them. It is something difficult, what that means, They were scattered in their Towns, whether it is spoken of the Cutheans residing within their own Towns, or of the Jews residing with them, or of them residing with the Jews. Whatsoever that is, it is clear certainly both hence and elsewhere, that the Samaritans sometime did dwell together with the Jews, being here and there sprinkled among them, and the Jews here and there among the Samaritans. Certainly that is worthy of observing, which Josephus relates of Herod, rebuilding Sebaste, heretofore called Samaria: q Ἐν μὲν γε Σαμαρείτιδι πόλιν καλλίστῳ τε περιβόλῳ τειχισάμενος, ὅθεν ἦσαν ἕξακισχίλιοι εἰς αὐτὴν ἐποίησας, &c. 'In the land of Samaria (saith he) he compassed a City with a very fair wall twenty furlongs, and brought six thousand inhabitants into 'it, o Hieros. Pesachim, fol. 29.2. p Id. Kiddushin. fol. 65.3. q Joseph. de Bell. lib. 1. cap. 6.

'it, (Do you think all theſe were Samaritans?) and on theſe he beſtowed a very fertile 'land, and in the middle of this work he ſet up a very great Temple to Ceſar, and made 'a Grove about it of three half furlongs, and called the City Sebaſte.

r In Itinerar. mihi, p 65. The Samaritans, r ſaith R. Benjamin, have not the letters ה He, or ע Ain, or ח Cheth. 'ה, He is in the name of Abraham, ואין להם הור, And they have not Honour. ח, 'Cheth is in the name of Iſaac, ואין להם חסד, And they have not Mercy. ע, Ain is in 'in the name of Jacob, ואין להם ענוה, And they have not Gentleneſs. But for theſe 'letters they uſe א Aleph: and hence it is known that they are not of the ſeed of Iſrael. Compare theſe things with the Samaritane interpreter of the Pentateuch, and judge.

CHAP. LVII.

a Bab. Megill. fol. 6. 1. THE Arabian Interpreter thinks the firſt name of this City was Hazor, Joſ. XI. 1. The Jews, Ekron, Zeph. II. 4. a R. Abhu ſaith, (He was of Ceſarea) עקרון תעקר 'Ekron ſhall be rooted out, this is Ceſarea, the daughter of Edom, which is ſituated 'among things prophane. She was a goad ſticking in Iſrael in the days of the Grecians. 'But when the Kingdom of the Aſmonean family prevailed, it overcame her, &c. R. Joſe 'bar Chaninah ſaith, What is that that is written, And Ekron ſhall be as a Jebuſite? (Zech. 'IX. 7. Theſe are the Theatres and Judgment ſeats, which are in Edom, in which the 'chief men of Judah hereafter ſhall publickly teach the Law. R. Iſaac ſaid, Leſhem is 'Panias, and Ekron is Ceſarea, the daughter of Edom.

The Jews are ſcarce in earneſt, when they ſay Ceſarea is the ſame with Ekron: but partly they play with the ſound of the words עקרון Ekron, and תעקר, ſhall be rooted out; partly they propound to themſelves to reproach her, while they compare that City, for the moſt part Heathen with Ekron, the City of Beelzebub.

When the Aſmoneans had ſnatched away this City out of the hand of the Grecians, the name of it was changed into אחזרת מגדל שור, The taking of the Tower Shur, as b Juchas. fol. 74. 1. the Gemariſts tell us in the place alledged: or as the Author of Juchaſin, b The taking of the Tower צור Tzur: or as the Jeruſalem Talmudiſts, (unleſs my conjecture deceives me) c Hieroſ. Shevith, fol. 36. 3. מגדל שיר, The Tower Sider. Whether out of theſe words you can make out the name of πύργος Στράτωνος, The Tower of Strato, it is your part to ſtudy; that certainly was the denomination of this place, before it was called Ceſarea.

It was diſtant ſix hundred furlongs, or thereabout from Jeruſalem (that is ſeventy five mile) as Joſephus relates in that ſtory of an Eſſene Jew that propheſied. d Who, when d Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 13. cap. 19. De Bel. lib. 1. cap. 13. he ſaw Antigonus, the brother of Ariſtobulus, paſſing by in the Temple, having been now ſent for by his brother, (indeed that he might be ſlain by treachery) O ſtrange! ſaith he, now it is good for me to die, becauſe that which I foretold proves a lie. For Antigonus lives, who ought this day to die: and Stratoes Tower is the place appointed for his death: ἡ δὲ μὰν ἀφ' ἑκακοσίων σταδίων ἐντεῦθέν ἐστιν. Which is diſtant ſix hundred furlongs hence: and there remains yet four hours of day. But the very time makes my prediction falſe. Having ſaid theſe things, the old man remained perplexed in his thoughts, but by and by news was brought that Antigonus was ſlain in a certain place under ground, ἐν σκοτεινῇ τινι παρόδῳ, in a certain dark paſſage, which alſo was called Στράτωνος πύργος, Stratoes Tower.

Herod built the City to the honour and name of Ceſar, and made a very noble haven e Idem, ibid, cap. 10. at vaſt expences. e Πόλιν πᾶσι ἀνέθηκε λίθῳ λευκῷ, καὶ λαμπροτάτοις ἐκόσμησε βασιλείοις. ἐν ᾗ μάλιστα τὸ φύσει μεγαλόνουν ἐπεδείξατο, &c. 'He built all the City with white ſtone, 'and adorned it with moſt ſplendid Houſes: in which eſpecially he ſhewed the natural 'greatneſs of his mind. For between Dori and Joppa, in the middle of which this City 'lay, it happened that all the Sea coaſt was deſtitute of Havens, &c. He made the 'greater Haven of Pireus, &c. And at the mouth of it ſtood three great ſtatues, &c. 'There were houſes joyning to the Haven, and they alſo were of white ſtone, &c. Over 'againſt the Havens mouth, was the Temple of Ceſar ſituate upon a riſing ground, ex-'cellent both for the beauty and greatneſs of it: and in it a large ſtatue of Ceſar, &c. 'The reſt of the works which he did there was an Amphitheatre, a Theatre and a market, 'all worthy to be mentioned, &c. See more in Joſephus.

Ceſarea was inhabited mixedly by Jews, Heathens, and Samaritans. Hence ſome places in it were profane and unclean to the Jews.

Of the various strifes and uproars between the Cesarean Greeks and Jews, in which the Jews always went by the worst, Josephus hath very much. Where the Reader will observe, that the Syrians and Greeks are convertible terms. h De Bello, lib. 2. cap. 23. i Ibid. cap. 25.

You may read of more seditions, and bloodshed at that place before the destruction of the Nation, in the Author quoted. l Ibid. m Ibid. cap. 32

WE find this Town marked out heretofore by a double name, if we believe some. 1. It is called Καφαρσαλαμᾶ by some, of which mention is made by a Josephus, and the book of the Maccabees. 2. Χαφαρζαβᾶ by Josephus himself: b Δείσας δὲ ὁ Ἀλεξανδρεὺς τὴν ἔφοδον ἀπὸ [Ἀντιόχου Διονύσου] πόρρω ὀρύττει βαθεῖαν ἀπὸ τῆς Χαφαρζαβᾶ καλουμένης, ἣ νῦν Ἀντιπατρὶς καλεῖται, &c. But Alexander fearing his [Antiochus Dionysus] coming, digs a deep trench, beginning at Capharzaba, which is now called Antipatris, unto the Sea of Joppa, an hundred and fifty furlongs. Note by the way, From Joppa to Antipatris is an hundred and fifty furlongs, that is eighteen miles. a Josph. Antiq. lib. 12. cap. 17. 1 Macc. 7. 31. b Josph. Antiq. lib. 13. cap. 23.

We

We will not contend about the Name; of the ſituation of it, as it ſtands almoſt in all Maps, we doubt. We will give the reaſon of our ſcruple by thoſe things that follow, in the mean time we will give ſome hiſtory of the place.

I. Herod built it in memory of his Father Antipater. c Καὶ γὰρ τῷ πατρὶ μνημεῖον κατέστησεν, καὶ πόλιν, ἣν ἐν τῷ κάλλίστῳ τῆς βασιλείας πεδίῳ κτίσας ποταμοῖς τε καὶ δένδρεσι πολυτελῶς, ὠνόμασεν Ἀντιπατρίδα. For he raiſed, ſaith Joſephus, a monument to his father, and a City, which he built in the beſt plain of his Kingdom, rich in ſprings and woods, and called it Antipatris.

c Idem, De bello, lib. 1. cap. 16.

II. Hither was Paul brought, when he was carried to Ceſarea, Act. XXIII. 31. Where, unleſs thoſe words, ἤγαγον διὰ τῆς νυκτὸς εἰς τὴν Ἀντιπατρίδα, be rendred by no unuſual interpretation, they brought him by night towards Antipatris, you muſt place that City much nearer Jeruſalem, than almoſt all the Maps do.

III. This meaſuring once and again occurs among the Gemariſts, מגבת ועד אנטיפטרס From Gebath to Antipatris, ſay they, were ſixty myriads of Cities, the leaſt of which was Beth-Shemeſh. We do not aſſert the truth of the thing, we only take notice of the phraſe.

d Hieroſ. Taanith, fol. 69. 2. & Megill. fol. 70. 1.

And again, 'e Hezekiah the King, ſay they, fixed his ſword to the door of Beth-Midraſ, 'and ſaid, Whoſoever ſtudieth not the Law, ſhall be run through with that ſword. 'They made enquiry from Dan even to Beerſheba, and found not עם הארץ any one 'uninſtructed: מגבת, &c. from Gebath to Antipatris, and found not boy or girl, man 'or woman, who did not well know the Traditions of cleanneſs and uncleanneſs. 'Where the Gloſs is, Gebath and Antipatris were places in the utmoſt borders. Think of the ſcene of the ſtory, and how ſuch an Encomium could reach as far as Antipatris, almoſt in the middle of Samaria, as it is placed in the Maps. And what authority had Ezekiah to make enquiry among the Samaritans?

e Bab. Sanhedr. fol. 94. 2.

The Talmudiſts alſo ſay, that the meeting of Alexander the Great, and of Simeon the Juſt was at Antipatris. 'f The Cutheans, ſay they, prayed Alexander the Great, that he 'would deſtroy the Temple (of Jeruſalem:) Some came, and diſcovered the thing to 'Simeon the Juſt. Therefore what does he? He puts on the High Prieſts garments, 'and vails himſelf with the High Prieſts vail: and he and the chief Men of Iſrael went 'forth, holding torches in their hands. Some went this way, and others that all night, 'till the morning brake forth, when the morning grew light ſaid (Alexander) to his 'men, who are thoſe? The Jews, ſaid they, who have rebelled againſt you. When they 'were come לאנטיפטרס to Antipatris, the Sun aroſe, and they were met by theſe: 'when Alexander ſaw Simeon the Juſt, lighting down out of his Chariot he worſhiped 'him, &c.

f Id. Jom. fol. 69. 1.

Do you think, that the High Prieſt cloathed in his prieſtly garments, and the Jews, went through all Samaria almoſt, in ſuch ſolemn proceſſion? Joſephus, relating this ſtory, only the name of Jaddua changed, ſaith this meeting was g εἰς τόπον τινὰ Σαφὰ λεγόμενον. Τὸ δ' ὄνομα τοῦτο μεταφερόμενον εἰς τὴν Ἑλλήνων γλῶτταν σημαίνει, &c. at a certain place called Sapha. But this name being changed into the Greek language ſignifies A Watch Tower. For the buildings of Jeruſalem and the Temple might from thence be ſeen. Of which place, He and We treat elſewhere under the name of Σκοπὸς, Scopus, and צופים, Tzophim.

Mention is made of this place once and again: [b] If any one have five ſheep in Caphar Hananiah, and five more in Caphar Uthni, [בכפר עותני] they are not joyned together, (that is, they are not numbred to be tithed) until he hath one in Zippor. The Gloſs is, From Caphar Uthni to Caphar Hananiah are two and thirty miles, and Zippor is in the middle.

[c] The men of the family of Mamal, and the men of the family of Gorion, in the years of death diſtributed to the poor figs and raiſins, in Aruma. And the poor of Caphar Shichin, and the poor of Caphar Hananiah came: ומחשכין על התחום and when it now grew dark, they contained themſelves within the bounds (of the Sabbath,) and in the morning went forward. The Gloſs is, Arumah is the name of a place. The poor of Caphar Shichin were neighbours to thoſe of Arumah, being diſtant only four thouſand (cubits.) Which diſtance exceeding a Sabbath days journy, the poor, before the coming in of the Sabbath, contained themſelves within the bounds of Arumah; that the morning following they might betake themſelves to the houſes of theſe that diſtributed their charity, and not break the Sabbath. He that turns over the Talmudical Writers will meet with very frequent mention of this City.

[c] Bab. Erubh. fol. 51. 1.

You obſerve before in Pliny that Sycaminum was ſeated between Dor, and Carmel, and in the Talmudic Writers, that the plenty of Sycamines began at Caphar Hananiah.

CHAP. LXII.

The Diſpoſition of the Tribes in Galilee.

THE Country of Samaria contained only two Tribes, and thoſe of the brethren, Ephraim and Manaſſes: Galilee four, Iſachar, Zebulon, Nephthalim, and Aſher, and a part alſo of the Danites.

The Maps agree indeed about the order, in which theſe Tribes were ſeated, but about the proper place of their ſituation, Oh! how great a diſagreement is there among them! The Tribe of Iſachar held the South Country of Galilee: ſome Maps place it on the South of the Sea of Geneſaret, not illy: but tis ill done of them to ſtretch it unto the Sea it ſelf. And others worſt of all, who ſet it on the Weſt of that Sea. Of this land Joſephus writes thus, [a] ἐχ μετὰ τούτους Ἰσάχαρις Κάρμηλόν τε ὄρος, καὶ τὸν ποταμὸν τὸν μήκους πασσυμβόλου τέμνοντα, τὸ δὲ Ἰταβύριον ὄρος τὸ πλάτους: And after theſe (the Manaſſites) Iſachar maketh Mount Carmel and the River her bounds in length, and Mount Itaburion in bredth.

The Country of Zabulon touched upon that of Iſachar on the North. Some Maps ſpread it out unto the Sea of Geneſaret, ſome place it a long way above that Sea Northwardly; the former not well, the latter exceedingly ill. Of it thus writes the ſame Joſephus, [b] Ζαβυλωνῖται τὴν μέχρι Τεννησαρίτιδος, καθήκουσαν δὲ καὶ Κάρμηλον καὶ θάλασσαν, ἔλαχον. The Zabulonites had for their portion the land unto Geneſaret, extending unto Carmel and the Sea. Obſerving that clauſe μέχρι Τεννησαρίτιδος, unto Geneſaret, we (perſwaded alſo by the Talmudical Writers, and led by reaſon) do ſuppoſe the land of Zabulon to lie on the South ſhore and coaſt of the Sea of Geneſaret, and that whole Sea to be compriſed within the land of Nephthali. With what arguments we are led, we ſhew afterwards, when we treat of that Sea. Which aſſertion we know is expoſed and lies open to this objection.

Object. Joſephus ſaith in the place but now quoted, that ἡ Γαλιλαία τὰ καθύπερθεν, ἕως τοῦ Λιβάνου ὄρους, καὶ τῶν περὶ τὸν Ἰορδάνην πηγῶν, the upper parts of Galilee unto Mount Libanus, and and the ſprings of Jordan, belonged to the portion of Nephthali. But now if you ſtretch the portion of Nephthali from the ſprings of Jordan to the utmoſt Southern coaſt of the Sea of Geneſaret (which our opinion does,) alas! how much doth this exceed the proportion of the other Tribes! For from Scythopolis, the utmoſt South border of Galilee to the South coaſt of the Sea of Geneſaret, was not above fifteen miles: within which ſpace the whole bredth of the two Tribes of Iſachar and Zabulon is contained. But from the South coaſt of Geneſaret to the ſprings of Jordan were about forty miles, which to aſſign to the land of Nephthali alone, is neither proportionable, nor congruous.

Anſw. This objection indeed would have ſome weight in it, if the land of Nephthali did extend it ſelf Eaſtwardly as much as the land of Iſachar and Zabulon. For theſe run out as far as the Mediterranean Sea; but that hath the land of Aſher, and the juriſdiction of Tyre and Sydon lying between it and the Sea. So that, when the bredth of thoſe Countries is meaſured from South to North, the bredth of this is meaſured from Eaſt to Weſt. There is therefore no ſuch great inequality between theſe, when this is contained in the like ſtraits of bredth with them, and theyenjoy the like length with this.

The confines of the land of Nephthali bounded the land of Aſher on one ſide, and thoſe of Tyre and Sydon on the other: and this land, in the ſame manner as the portion of Nephthali, extends it ſelf in length from South to North; and (which ſomewhat agrees with our opinion, and anſwers the objection mentioned before) Joſephus allows it a greater length, than we do the land of Nephthali, or at leaſt equal to it. For, [c] Τὴν δὲ ἀπὸ τοῦ Καρμήλου κοιλάδα περιαγρεδυομένην, διὰ τὸ τοιαύτην εἶναι, Ἀσηρῖται φέρονται πᾶσαν· ἔστι δὲ αὕτη Σιδῶνος πλησιόχωρος: The Aſherites poſſeſs all that hollow Valley ſo called, becauſe it is ſuch, that runs from Carmel to Sidon.

The Weſt coaſt of Galilee-Carmel.

THE [a] people of Iſachar had Τέρμονα τὸ μῆκος Κάρμηλον καὶ ποταμόν· Carmel and the River for their bounds in length: the people of Zabulon, Κάρμηλον καὶ θάλασσαν, Carmel and the Sea.

[a] Joſeph. in the place above.

Carmel was not ſo much one mountain, as a mountanous Country, containing almoſt the whole bredth of the land of Iſachar, and a great part of that of Zabulon. It was as it ſeems, a certain famous Peak, among many other mountain tops, known by the ſame name, lift up and advanced above the reſt. [b] The Promontory Carmel, in Pliny, and in the mountain a Town of the ſame name, heretofore called Ecbatane; [עקבתן] where probably Veſpaſian ſometime conſulted [c] the Oracle of the god Carmel.

Chaninah, Any one ſitting upon Mount Carmel, when the Orb of the ſetting Sun begins now to diſappear, if he goes down and waſhes himſelf in the Great Sea, and goes up and eats his Truma,* חזקתו ביום טבל it is to be preſumed, that he waſhed in the day time.

Κάρμηλον καὶ ποταμόν· Carmel and the River. What is that River? Kiſhon, ſay the Maps: for ſome deſcribe it not far from Carmel, pouring out it ſelf into the Sea: and that not without a reaſon, fetched from 1 King. XVIII. 40. But you muſt ſuppoſe Kiſhon to flow South of Carmel, not as ſome would have it, on the North.

The lake Cendevia flows at the foot of Carmel; and out of it the River Pagida, or Bel, mingling glaſſie ſands with its ſmall ſhore. So Pliny, [e] who hath moreover theſe words, Near is the Colony of Claudius Ceſar, Ptolemais, heretofore Ace, the Town Ecdippa, the white Promontory, Tyrus heretofore an Iſland, &c. Thence are the Towns Ide, [otherwiſe Enhydra] and Sarepta, and Ornithon; and Sydon skilful in making glaſs, &c.

Theſe places you may call not ſo much the bounds of Galilee, as of Phenicia: for in Ptolemais it ſelf, or Acon, was the ſeparation and parting of the land of Iſrael from Phenicia. Hence Joſephus, [f] Δύο δ' ἔσας τὰς Γαλιλαίας, &c. Phenice and Syria do compas the two Galilees, the upper and the nether ſo called: and Ptolemais and Carmel ſet bounds to the Country on the Weſt. What? Do Ptolemais and Carmel ſtint the whole length of Galilee on the Weſt? He had ſaid elſewhere, which we alſo have produced elſewhere, that the land of Nephthali was extended as far as mount Libanus (on the North:) alas! how how far behind Ptolemais! And the land of Aſher was extended ſo far alſo: But Ptolemais was the Sea borders of Paleſtine, (to uſe Plinies words:) for from hence onward were the territories of Tyre and Sydon; and Galilee was not now bounded any longer by the Sea, but by thoſe territories.

We ſaw, in the Scheme, produced by us in the ſecond Chapter of this little Work, wherein the compaſs of the land under the ſecond Temple is briefly deſcribed, how שׁוּרא דעכו, The walls of Aco are there ſet for a bound, and that in the ſenſe which we ſpeak of, which afterwards alſo will appear more. Thoſe names therefore, which follow in the mentioned Scheme, to wit, I. קְצִירָא דגלילא. II. ככרתה. III. בית זניתה. IV. קובעיא, and ſome others, ſeem to denote the places, which were the boundaries between Galilee, and the borders of Tyre and Sydon.

Πτολεμαὶς a πόλις ϑϛὶ τ Γαλιλαίας ϖλησίον, &c. Ptolemais (which is alſo called Acon) is a City of Galilee on the Sea coaſt, ſituate in a great champaign, but it is compaſſed with hills; on the Eaſt, ſixty furlongs off, with the hill Country of Galilee; on the South, with Carmel diſtant an hundred and twenty furlongs; on the North, with a very high mountain, which is called Climax (or The Ladder,) belonging to the Tyrians, and is an hundred furlongs diſtant. Two miles off of that City, the River Belus flows, a very ſmall one, near which is the Sepulchre of Memnon; having about it the ſpace of an hundred cubits, but well worthy admiration. For it is in the form of a round Valley, affording glaſſie ſand, which when many ſhips coming thither have gathered, the place is again repleniſhed.

A ſtory done at Acon before R. Judah is related, not unworthy to be mentioned.

h Bab. Sanhedr. fol. 5. 2. *h Rabbi came to a certain place, and ſaw the men of that place baking their dough in uncleanneſs. Now hear the Gloſſer; Rabbi ſaw this, ſaith he, in Acon, in which is Iſraelitic land, Heathen land: now he ſaw them ſtanding within the limits of Iſraelitic land, and baking their dough in uncleanneſs, and wondred, until they told him, A certain Scholar came hither, &c.

CHAP. LXV.

Ecdippa. Achzib. Joſ. XIX. 29. Judg. I. 31. Κλίμαξ Τυρίων. Climax of the Tyrians.

TRavailing a from Acon to Achzib, on the right hand of the way, Eaſtwardly, it is clean from the notion of Heathen land, and is bound to tithes, and to the law of the ſeventh year, until you are certified that it is free. On the left hand of the way, Weſtward, it is unclean under the notion of Gentile land; and it is free from tithes, and from the law concerning the ſeventh year, till you are certified it is bound to thoſe things, even until you come to Achzib. The Gemara hath theſe words. But the Text, on which is this Commentary, is this: b The three Countries (namely Judea, Galilee, and Perea) are bound to the law of the ſeventh year: whatſoever they poſſeſſed, who came up out of Babylon, from the land of Iſrael unto כזיב Chezib (the Hieruſalem Miſhnah reads גזיב Ghezib) is not fed, nor tilled: but whatſoever they poſſeſſed, who came up out of Egypt, from Chezib to the River, and to Amanah, is fed, but not tilled: from the River and from Amanah, inwards is fed and tilled. a Hieroſ. Sheviith, fol. 36.2 b Sheviith, cap. 6. hal. 1.

Of Amanah we ſhall ſpeak by and by. The River (ſaith R. Solomon upon the place) is the River of Egypt. And Chezib (c ſaith Rambam) is the name of a place, which divided between the land of Iſrael, which they poſſeſſed that came up out of Babylon, and that land, which they poſſeſſed that came up out of Egypt. Now that land, which they poſſeſſed that came up out of Egypt, as to the Demai (or doubt of tithing) is as it were without the land. Hence is that in the Text, on which he makes this Comment, מכזיב ולהלן פטור מן הדמאי From Chezib, and beyond is free from the Demai. c Rambam in Demai, fol.12.2

The word Chezib, and Achzib at laſt paſſed into Ecdippa, according to the manner of the Syrian dialect; to which it is common to change ז Zain of the Hebrews into ד Daleth.

Κλίμαξ Τυρίων, Climax (or the Ladder) of the Tyrians, in the Talmudiſts is סולמה דצור, The Ladder of Tyre. לא מטון לסולמיה דצור וכו' Before they came to Climax of the Tyrians they forgot all. The diſcourſe is, in the place cited, about ſome Romans, ſent to Rabban Gamaliel, to enquire of the Jewiſh law. d Hieroſ. Bava Kama, fol.4.2

Of him alſo is this ſtory, and of the ſame place. e When he went ſometime out of Chezib, one came to him, to ask him of a certain vow of his. He ſaid to him, who went with him, Tell him, that we have drunk an Italian quart of wine. He ſaith to him, Well. He ſaith to him that asked, Go with us, until our Wine be allayed. When they came רסולמה של צור to the Ladder of the Tyrians, Rabban Gamaliel came down, and vails himſelf, and ſitting reſolved his vow. From this Example we learn theſe things, that a quart of wine makes one drunk, that the way allays wine, &c. e Id. Avod. Zara fol.40.1.

Let this be marked by the way, that it is ſaid רביעית יין משכרת A quart of wine makes drunk: and let it be compared with what R. Chaia ſaith, ארבעה כוסותיהן f Four Pots (to be drunk by every one in their ſacred Feaſts) contain an Italian quart of wine: and judge how ſoberly they carried it in thoſe feaſts, if they mingled not much water with their wine. f Id. CHAP. LXVI.

The Northern coaſt of Galilee. Amanah. The mountain of Snow.

THIS Coaſt is deſcribed by Moſes, Numb. XXXIV. 7. From the great Sea to mount Hor. From mount Hor to the entrance of Hamath, &c.

Mount Hor in the Jewiſh Writers is Amanah; mention of which occurs, Cant. IV. 8. where R. Solomon thus, Amanah is a mount in the Northern Coaſt of the land of Iſrael, which in the Talmudical Language is called טורי אמנון, The mountanous place of Amanon. The ſame with mount Hor.

In the Jeruſalem Targum for mount Hor is טורום מנוס The mount Manus: but the Targum of Jonathan renders it טורום אומנים The mountain Umanis.

a Hieroſ. Shevith, fol. 36.4. & Challah, fol. 60.1.

a What, ſay the Jeruſalem Writers, is of the land of Iſrael, and what without the land? Whatſoever comes down from mount Amanah inwards, is of the land of Iſrael; whatſoever is without the mountanous place of Amanah, is without the land.

And a little after; R. Juſta Bar Shunem ſaid, When the Iſraelites that return (from their Diſperſion) ſhall have arrived at the mountanous places of Amana, they ſhall ſing a ſong; which is proved from that, which is ſaid (Cant. IV. 8.) תשורי ראש אמנה He renders it, Thou ſhalt ſing from the head of Amanah.

There was alſo a River of the ſame name with the Mountain, of which the Targum in that place; b They that live by the River Amanah, and they that live on the top of the mountain of Snow, that offer thee a Preſent. And the Aruch, which we have noted before, writes thus, c Kirmion is a River in the way to Damaſcus, and is the ſame with Amana.

CHAP. LXVII.

פמיים Pamias. Paneas, the ſpring of Jordan.

THE Maps aſſign a double ſpring of Jordan; but by what right it ſcarce appears: much leſs does it appear, by what right they ſhould call this Jor, and that Dan. There is indeed mention in Joſephus of little Jordan and great Jordan. Hence, as it ſeems, was the firſt original of a double ſpring in the Maps, and of a double River at thoſe firſt ſprings. For thus Joſephus, a Πηγαὶ, αἱ τὸν μικρὸν καλούμενον Ἰορδάνην ἀποπέμπουσι τῷ μεγάλῳ. There are fountains (in Daphne) which ſend little Jordan, as it is called into the great. He treats, in the Text cited, of the lake Samochonitis, and ſaith, Λαλτείνει ἡ αὐτῆς τὰ ἕλη μέχρι Δάφνης χωρίου, &c. That the fens of it are extended to the Country Daphne, which as it is otherwiſe pleaſant, ſo it contains ſprings, from which iſſue little Jordan, &c.

Riblah (that we may note this by the way) by the Targumiſts is rendred Daphne. They upon Numb. XXXIV. 11. for that which is in the Hebrew, and the Border ſhall go down to Riblah, render it, And the border ſhall go down to Daphne. See alſo Aruch in דפני Daphne. But this certainly is not that Daphne, of which Joſephus here ſpeaks; which will ſufficiently appear by thoſe things that follow. But as to the thing before us.

I. Both he, and the Talmudiſts, aſſign Panium or Paneas to be the ſpring of Jordan; nor do they name another.

b Near Panium, as they call it, saith he, is a most delightsom Cave in a Mountain, and under it the land hollowing it self into a huge Vale, full of standing waters. Over it a great Mountain hangs, and under the Cave rise the springs of the River Jordan. b Id. Antiq. lib. 15. cap 1.

And again, c Παρὰ τὰς Ἰορδάνου πηγάς· καλεῖται δὲ Πάνιον ὁ τόπος. By the springs of Jordan: now the place is called Panium. c Id. de bell. lib. 1. cap. 12.

And elsewhere, d Δοκεῖ μὲν Ἰορδάνου πηγὴ τὸ Πάνιον. Panium seems to be the fountain of Jordan: and more may be read there. d Ibid. lib. 3. cap. 3.

The Talmudists write thus, e Rabh saith, ירדן יוצא ממערת פמיס Jordan riseth out of the Cave of Paneas: and so is the Tradition. e Bab. Batra Bathra, fol. 74. 2

And Pliny, g The River of Jordan ariseth out of the Fountain Paneas. g Plin. Nat. Hist. lib. 5. cap 15.

II. That fountain of Jordan was the so much famed fountain of little Jordan, as it is called. For so it is plainly collected from Josephus. Concerning the Danites invading Laish, or Leshem, which being subdued they called Dan, he speaks thus; h Οἱδ' ἐπορεύθησαν τὴν μεγάλην Σιδῶνος πεδιάδα, καὶ ἐλάσσονος Ἰορδάνου πηγῶν, &c. But they travailing a days journey through the great Plain of Sidon, not far from Mount Libanus, and the springs of lesser Jordan, observe the land to be good and fruitful, and shew it unto their Tribe, who invading it with an army build the City Dan. h Joseph Antiq. lib. 5. cap. 2.

In like manner speaking of Jeroboam, he saith these things; i He built two Temples for the Golden Calves, one in Bethel: ἕτερον δὲ ἐν Δάνῃ, ἣ δὲ ὅτι πρὸς ταῖς πηγαῖς τοῦ μικροῦ Ἰορδάνου: The other in Dan, which is at the springs of little Jordan. i Id. Ibid. lib. 8

You may certainly wonder, and be amazed, that the fountain of little Jordan should be so famed and known; and in the mean time the fountain of great Jordan to lie hid, not to be spoken of, and to be buried in eternal obscurity. What? Is the less worthy of so much fame; and the greater of none at all? Let us have liberty to speak freely what we think, with the leave of Chorographers.

I. It does not appear, that any other River of Jordan flows into the lake Samochonitis, beside that, which ariseth from Paneas. In what Author will you find the least sign of such a River? But only that such a conjecture crept into the Maps, and into the minds of men, out of the before alledged words of Josephus, misconceived.

II. We think therefore, that Jordan is called the Greater and the Less, not upon any account of two fountains, or two rivers different, and distant from one another; but upon account of the distinct greatness of the same River. Jordan rising out of Paneas was called little, until it flowed into the lake Samochonitis, but afterwards coming out of that lake, when it had obtained a great encrease from that lake, it was thenceforth called Jordan the Greater. Samochonitis received little Jordan, and sent forth the Great. For since both that lake, and the Country adjacent was very fenny, as appears out of Josephus, the lake was not so much encreased by Jordan flowing into it, as it encreased Jordan flowing out of it. k Κύπλει τὰ δὲ Σεμεχωνίτιδος λίμνης ἕλητε καὶ τέλματα; Moors and Fenny places possess the parts about the lake Samochonitis. The River therefore below Samochonitis seems to be called Jordan, above Samochonitis, little Jordan. k Id. de bello, lib 3. cap. 35.

Cesarea Philippi was built at Paneas, the fountain of Jordan: which let the Maps observe that they place it not too remote thence. Φίλιππος πρὸς ταῖς Ἰορδάνου πηγαῖς ἐν Πανεάδι πόλιν κτίζει Καισάρειαν. l Philip built the City Cesarea in Paneas at the springs of Jordan. And also, Πανεάδα καλλισθένους ἐπωμάζει Καισάρειαν. m Having finished Paneas he named it Cesarea. l Id. Antiq. lib. 18. cap 3. m Id. de bell. lib. 3. cap. 13.

CHAP. LXVIII.

What is to be said of ימא דאפמיא The Sea of Apamia.

ימא דאפמיא The Sea of Apamia is reckoned the seventh among those Seas, that compass the land of Israel; which word hath a sound so near a kin to the word Pamias, by which name the Rabbins point out the fountains of Jordan, that the mention of that word cannot but excite the memory of this, yea almost perswade, that both design one and the same place: and that the Sea Apamia was nothing else, but some great collection of waters at the very springs of Jordan.

This alſo might moreover be added, to ſtrengthen that perſwaſion, that in both places, in the quotations cited in the Jeruſalem Talmud, theſe words are added, The Sea of Apamia is the ſame with the Sea of Chamats, which gathering together of the waters cauſed to be made. But now that Diocletianus, whoſoever he was, (we prove elſewhere that he was the Emperor) lived ſometime at Paneas; as is clear alſo from a the ſame Talmud. דוקליטינוס Diocletianus by the a Hieroſ. Trauuth, fol. 45. 2.

But the thing is otherwiſe. Pamias and Apamia, were different places, and far diſtant from each other: one in the land of Iſrael, the other in the confines indeed of the land of Iſrael, but in Syria.

b Challah, cap. 4. hal. 11.

Let this Tradition be marked. b Ariſton brought his firſt fruits from Apamia, and they were received: for they ſaid, He that hath a poſſeſſion in Syria, is as if he had it in the ſuburbs of Jeruſalem. The Gloſs is, Apamia is the name of a place in Syria.

And theſe things do appear more clearly in the Targumiſts, to omit other Authors. The Samaritane Interpreter renders the word שפם Shepham, Numb. XXXIV. 10. by עפמיה Apamia with ע Ain. (Note ש Shin changed into ע Ain. Note alſo in the word Bozor, 2 Pet. II. 15. ע Ain changed into ש Shin.) Jonathan reads it אפמיאה Apamia with א Aleph: for משפם הרבלה From Shepham to Riblah, he renders מן אפמיאה לדפני From Apamia to Daphne.

The Lake Samochonitis.

a Bab Bava Bathra, fol. 74. 2

IN the Holy Scriptures, it is the Water of Merom, Joſ. XI. 5. In the Babylonian Talmudiſts, it is ימה דסבכי The Sibbechean Sea. Hence is that, a Jordan ariſeth out of the Cave of Paneas, and flowes into the Sibbechean Sea. In the Jeruſalem Talmudiſts, ſometimes it is ימא דכובבו The Sea of Cobebo, as we have noted before, and ſometimes ימא דסמכו The Sea of Samaco; whence in other Languages it is Samochonitis.

The ſcruple lies concerning the pointing of ὑπὸ τὸν τοῦ χρυσοῦς βοὸς νεών. The ſentence and ſenſe ſeems indeed to flow more ſmoothly, if you ſhould render it thus, The ſprings which nouriſhing little Jordan, as it is called, ſend it out into the Great, under the Temple of the Golden Calf: but then a juſt doubt ariſeth of the ſituation of that Temple. That clauſe therefore is rather to be referred to the foregoing, ſo that the ſenſe may go thus, The ſprings, which nouriſhing little Jordan, as it is called, under the Temple of the Golden Calf, ſend it into the Great: and ſo you have the Temple of the Golden Calf at the ſprings of Jordan, and the place adjacent called Daphne, and the Marſhes of Samochonitis reaching thither.

And they ſhall go down into the Plain, that is, into the Sea of Tyberias. And they ſhall go out into the Sea, that is, into the dead Sea.*

CHAP. LXX.

The lake of Genneſaret, or, the Sea of Galilee, and Tiberias.

JORDAN a is meaſured at CXX furlongs from the lake of Samochonitis to that of Genneſaret. That lake in the Old Teſtament is ים כנרת The Sea of Cinnereth, Numb. XXXIV. 11. &c. In the Targumiſts, ימא דגניסר, The Sea of Geneſar, ſometimes דגניסור of Geneſor, ſometimes דגינוסר of Ginoſar: it is the ſame alſo in the Talmudiſts, but moſt frequently ימא דטבריא The Sea of Tiberiah. Both names are uſed by the Evangeliſts; The Lake of Geneſareth, Luk. V. 1. The Sea of Tiberias, Joh. XXI. 1. And the Sea of Galilee, Joh. VI. 1. a Joſeph. de bell. lib. 3. cap 35.

The name Chinnereth paſſed into Geneſar, in regard of the pleaſantneſs of the Country, well filled with Gardens and Paradiſes: of which we ſhall ſpeak afterwards.

It is diſputed by the Jeruſalem Talmudiſts, why כנרות Cinneroth occurs ſometimes in the plural number, as Joſ. XI. 2. נגב כנרות The South of Cinneroth, and Joſ. XII. 3. ים כנרות The Sea of Cinneroth. b Thence, ſay they, are there two Geneſareths? Or there were אלא ב" אבטוניות but two Caſtles, as Beth-Jerach, and Sinnabris, שהן מגדלות כינרים which are Towers of the people of Chinnereth, but the fortification is deſtroyed, and fallen into the hands of the Gentiles: You ſee by the very ſenſe of the place what the word אבטוניות means. Perhaps it is the ſame with the word אבטליות in the Aruch, and with אבטילאות in the c Babylonian Writers. In whom the Gloſſer being interpreter שני אבטילאות are two Preſidentſhips in the ſame Kingdom. The Gemara affords an Example in נמור ונמורי. But in the Aruch שני אבטליות are two Caſtles, between which is a bridge, under which notwithſtanding is no water. And it yields an Example in שולנמי ופטורי. But we make no tarrying here. צינברי Sinnabri in the Talmudiſts is Σενναβεὶς, Sennabris in Joſephus, being diſtant from Tiberias thirty furlongs. For he tells us that Veſpaſian encamped thirty furlongs from Tiberias, d κατὰ ἕνα χαθμὸν εὐζωώπτον τοῖς νεωτερίζουσι, Σενναβεὶς ὀνομάζεται, at a certain ſtation, that might eaſily be ſeen by the Innovators, called Sennabris. He ſpeaks alſo of the Town Γίνναβρι, Ginnabri, not far diſtant certainly from this place. For deſcribing the Country about Jordan, e he ſaith, that from both regions of it runs out a very long back of mountains (but diſtant ſome miles from the River:) on this ſide from the region of Scythopolis to the Dead Sea, on that ſide from Julias to Somorrha towards the Rock of Arabia: and that there lies a Plain between, which is called μέγα πεδίον, ἀπὸ κώμης Γιναβρὶν δῆκον μέχρι τῆς Ἀσφαλτίτιδος λίμνης: the great Plain, laying along from the Town Ginnabris to the lake Aſphaltites. b Jeruſ. Megill. fol. 70. 1. c Bab. Becoroth, fol. 55. 1. d Joſeph. de bell. lib. 3. cap. 31. e Id. ibid. lib. 4 cap. 17.

The ſame Joſephus writes thus of the lake of Genneſaret. f Ἡ δὲ λίμνη Γεννησὰρ ἀπὸ τῆς παρεχούσης χώρας καλεῖται· σταδίων ἐστὶν ἑκατὸν τὸ μῆκος, πλάτος δὲ τὰ τεσσαράκοντα, ἃ πρὸς τάτοις ἕτερον ἐγγίον τὸ μῆκος, γλυκεῖά τε ὅμως ἐστὶ καὶ πολυμαθεστάτη. The Lake Genneſar is ſo called from the adjacent Country, being forty furlongs in bredth, and moreover an hundred in length, it is both ſweet, and excellent to drink. f Id. ibid. lib. 3 cap. 35.

Pliny thus, g Jordan upon the firſt fall of the Vallies pours it ſelf into the Lake, which many call Geneſar, ſixteen miles long, and ſix miles broad. g Plin. lib. 5. cap. 15.

ימא דטבריא כגין המים המהלכין הן h The Sea of Tiberias is like the gliding waters. While the Maſters produce theſe words, they diſcourſe what is to be thought of thoſe waters, where the unclean fiſh ſwim together with the clean, whether ſuch waters are fit to boyl food, or no: and it is anſwered, Flowing and gliding waters are fit, thoſe that do not glide are not, and that the Lake of Genneſaret is to be numbred among gliding waters. h Hieroſ. Avod. Zar. fol. 42. 1.

The Jews believe, or feign, that this Lake is beloved by God above all the Lakes of the land of Canaan. i Seven Seas, ſay they, have I created, ſaith God, and of them all, I have choſen none, but the Sea of Geneſaret. Which words perhaps were invented for the praiſe of the Univerſity at Tiberias, that was contiguous to this Lake; but they are much more agreeable to truth, being applied to the very frequent reſorts of our Saviour thither. i Midras Tillin, fol. 4. 1.

CHAP. LXXI.

Within what Tribe the Lake of Geneſaret was.

BY comparing the Maps with the Talmudic Writers, this queſtion ariſeth: for there is not one among them, as far as I know, which does not altogether define the Sea of Geneſaret to be without the Tribe of Nephthali; but the Talmudiſts do moſt plainly place it within.

a Bab. Bava Kama, fol. 81. 2. חר" ימה של טבריה חלקו של נפתלי: a The Rabbins deliver. The Sea of Tiberias is the portion of Nephthali; yea, it takes a full line for the nets on the South ſide of it: as it is ſaid, Poſſeſs the Sea and the South (Deut. XXXIII. 23.) The Gloſs is, (Nephthali) had a full line in the dry land on the South coaſt, that he might draw out his nets. So alſo the Hieruſalem writers; b They gave to Nephthali a full line on the South coaſt of the Sea, as it is ſaid, Poſſeſs the Sea and the South. They are the words of Rabbi Joſi of Galilee. So that Talmud, that was written at Tiberias: ſo R. Joſi who was a Galilean.

c Joſ. Antiq. lib. 5. cap. 1. The words of Joſephus which we cited before, are agreeable to theſe. c Ζαβουλωνίται, τὸν μέχρι Γεννησαρίτιδος &c. The Tribe of Zabulons portion was to the Sea of Geneſaret ſtretched out alſo (in length) to Carmel and the Sea. On the South the land of Zabulon was bounded by that of Iſachar, extending it ſelf in bredth μέχρι Γεννησαρίτιδος to Geneſaret: touching only upon Geneſaret, not comprehending Geneſaret within it. So the ſame Joſephus ſpeaks in the place alledged, that Νεφθαλίται παρέλαβον τὰ πρὸς τὰς ἀνατολὰς πεδία μέχρι Δαμασκοῦ πόλεως, the men of Nephthali took thoſe parts that ran out Eaſtwardly unto the City of Damaſcus. It would be ridiculous if you ſhould ſo render μέχρι Δαμασκοῦ πόλεως, unto the City of Damaſcus, as to include Damaſcus within the land of Nephthali. The Maps are guilty of the like Soloeciſm, while they make Zabulon, which only came μέχρι Γεννησαρίτιδος, unto the Lake of Genneſaret, to compriſe all the Lake of Genneſaret within it. Look into Adrichomius, to ſay nothing of others, and compare theſe words of Joſephus with him.

Hither perhaps is that to be reduced, which hath not a little vexed Interpreters in Joſ. cap. XIX. where Jordan is twice mentioned, in defining the limits of the Tribe of Nephthali; verſ. 33. The outgoings of the border, hence, was to Jordan; and verſ. 34. וביהודה הירדן מזרח השמש The going out from thence, that is, from the South border, was to Jordan in Judah towards the Sun riſing.

What hath the land of Nephthali to do with Jordan in Judah?

I anſwer, Juda, that is, Judea, is here oppoſed to Galilee: Judah is not here ſpoken of as oppoſed to the other Tribes. Before ever the name of Samaria was riſen, the name of Galilee was very well known, Joſ. XX. 7. and ſo was the name of Judea: and at that time one might not improperly divide the whole land within Jordan, into Galilee and Judea: when as yet there was no ſuch thing as the name of Samaria. The words alledged therefore come to this ſenſe, as if it had been ſaid, 'The North bounds of Naph-'thali went out Eaſtwardly to Jordan in Galilee: in like manner the South bounds went 'out Eaſtwardly to Jordan now running into Judea: that is, the Country without Galilee, which as yet was not called Samaria, but rather Judea.

The bounds certainly of the land of Nephthali ſeem to touch Jordan on both ſides, both on the North and the South; and ſo to contain the Sea of Geneſaret within its boſom, according to that which is ſaid by the Talmudiſts, before alledged, and thoſe alſo men of Tiberias.

d Hieroſ. Shabb. fol. 7. 1. While I am diſcourſing of Jordan, and this Lake, let me add this moreover concerning the boat of Jordan. d R. Jacob bar Aidai ſaith, in the name of R. Jochanan, Let no man abſent himſelf from Beth-Midraſh, for this queſtion was many a time propounded in Jabneh, עריבת הירדן למה הוא טמאה The boat, or barge of Jordan, why is it unclean? Nor was there any, who could anſwer any thing to it; until R. Chaninah the ſon of Antigonus came, and expounded it in his City. The boat of Jordan is unclean, becauſe they fill it with fruit, and ſail with it down from the Sea unto the dry land, and from the dry land into the Sea. עריבה the Jews themſelves being interpreters, is ספנה קטנה A ſmall veſſel, Πλοιάριον, a little Ship. Joſephus hath theſe words, e Τὰ ἅπαξ ἐν τῇ λίμνης σκάφη πάντα συναθροίσας, &c. Having gathered together all the boats in the Lake, they were found to be two hundred and thirty, and there were no more than four mariners in each.

Tiberias.

ALL the Jews declare almoſt with one conſent, that this was a fortified City from antient times, even from the days of Joſua, and was the ſame with Rakkath, of which mention is made, Joſ. XIX. 35.

רקת היא טבריא : a Rakkath is Tiberias, ſay the Jeruſalem Gemariſts. And those of Babylon ſay the ſame, and that more largely. קיימא לן רקת זו טבריא b It is clear to us, that Rakkath is Tiberias. And when after a few lines, this of Rabbi Jochanan was objected, 'When I was a boy, I ſaid a certain thing, concerning which I 'aſked the Elders, and it was found as I ſaid; namely, that Chammath is Tiberias, and 'Rakkath Zippor: it is thus at laſt concluded, 'Rabba ſaid, Who is it, to whom it was 'ſaid, that Rakkath is not Tiberias? For behold! when any dyes here (in Babylon,) they 'lament him there (at Tiberias) after this manner: The Hearſe of a famous man deceaſed in Sheſhach (Babylon,) whoſe name alſo is of note in Rakkath, is brough hither: 'thus lament ye him. O ye lovers of Iſrael, O Citizens of Rakkath, come forth, and 'bewail the dead of Babylon. When the Soul of R. Zeira was at reſt, thus one lamented him, The land of Babylon conceived and brought forth delights, the land of Iſrael 'nouriſhed them. Rakkath ſaid, Wo to it ſelf becauſe ſhe loſt the Veſſels of her delights. Therefore ſaith Rabba, Chammath is the ſame with the warm baths of Gadar, 'and Rakkath is Tiberias.

This City touched on the Sea, ſo that the Sea ſerved on one ſide for a wall to it. Hence is that, in the place but now cited, 'Rabh Hezekiah read the book of Eſther in Tiberias, 'on the fourteenth day (of the month Adar,) and alſo on the fifteenth day (ſee Eſth. 'IX. 21. doubting whether it were compaſſed with walls from the days of Joſua, or not. 'But who would doubt this of Tiberias? When it is written, And the fenced Cities, were 'Ziddim, Zer, Chammath, Rakkath, and Chinnereth. But it is clear to us, that Rakkath is Tiberias. The reaſon therefore, why he doubted, was this, becauſe on one ſide 'it was encloſed by the Sea inſtead of a wall. But if it were ſo, why did he doubt? 'Becauſe truly it was no wall. When the Tradition is thus, אשר לו חומה ולא שיר איגר סביב 'A City which hath a wall, but not fortified walls, the contiguous 'houſes are for ſuch walls. פרט לטבריא שימה חומתה But Tiberias is excepted, which hath the Sea for a wall. So alſo R. Simeon Ben Jochai, in the Jeruſalem Gemara juſt now alledged: 'Among the Cities fortified with walls Tiberias is excepted, as 'having the Sea for a wall.

What fortune this City underwent under the name Rakkath, remains unknown. Herod the Tetrarch put the name of Tiberias upon it, and built the City for the ſake and memory of Tiberius Ceſar. The Etymology of which place while the Gemariſts deduce elſewhere, namely either from טוב ראיה Tob reja, becauſe it was fair to behold, or שבטיבורה becauſe it was Betiborah in the Navel or middle, &c. they ſeem rather to ſport out of a luxuriant wit, than to be ignorant of the thing it ſelf.

CHAP. LXXIII.

Of the ſituation of Tiberias.

WHEN I read Pliny of the ſituation of this City, and compare ſome things, which are ſaid by Joſephus and the Talmudiſts, with him, I cannot but be at a ſtand, what to reſolve upon here. Pliny ſpeaks thus of the ſituation of it: a The lake (of Geneſar) is compaſſed round with pleaſant Towns: on the Eaſt Julias and Hippo, on the South Tarichea, by which name ſome call the lake alſo, on the Weſt Tiberias, healthful for its warm waters.

[a] Plin Nat. Hiſt. lib. 5. cap. 15.

Conſult

Conſult the Maps, and you ſee Tiberias in them ſeated as it were in the middle ſhore of the Sea of Geneſaret, equally diſtant almoſt from the utmoſt South and North coaſts of that Sea. Which ſeems well indeed to agree with Pliny, but illy with Joſephus and his Countrymen.

I. Joſephus aſſerts, that Hippo (in Perea, i. e. the Country on the other ſide Jordan) is diſtant from Tiberias only thirty furlongs. For ſpeaking to one Juſtus a man of Tiberias, thus he ſaith, Ἦ οὐ παλαὶς, ὦ Ἰῶστε, χειμῶνι τῇ Γεννησαρίτιδι λίμνῃ, ἢ ἀπέχουσα μὸν

Ἵππου Τεμάκοντα ςάδια, &c. [b] The native Country, O Juſtus, lying upon the Lake of Genneſaret, and diſtant from Hippo thirty furlongs, &c. The ſame Author aſſerts alſo (which we produced before) [c] that the bredth of the Sea of Geneſaret was forty furlongs. Therefore with what reaſon do the Maps place the whole Sea of Genneſaret between Tiberias and Hippo? Read thoſe things in Joſephus, look upon the Maps, and Judge.

[c] Id. de bell. lib. 3 35.

II. The ſame Joſephus ſaith of the ſame Juſtus, Ἐμπέμπεσον, ὁ Ἰῶστε, τὰς τε Γαδαρέων καὶ Ἱππηνῶν κώμας. Αἱ δὲ μεθόριοι τῆ Τιβεριάδι, καὶ ἡ τῆς Σκυθοπολίτιδος γῆς, ἐτύγχανον κείμεναι. [d] Juſtus burnt the Towns of thoſe of Gadara and Hippo. And the Towns bordering upon Tiberias, and the land of the Scythopolitans, were laid waſte. Note, how the Towns of thoſe of Gadara and Hippo are called μεθόριοι, Towns bordering upon Tiberias; which certainly cannot conſiſt together, if the whole Sea be between, which is ſo put by the Maps.

III. Thoſe things which we learn from the Talmudiſts concerning the ſituation of this place, cannot be produced, until we have firſt obſerved certain neighbouring places to Tiberias, from the ſituation of which, it will be more eaſie to judge of the ſituation of this.

In the mean time, from theſe things, and what was ſaid before, we aſſert thus much: that you muſt ſuppoſe Tiberias ſeated either at the very flowing in of Jordan into the lake of Genneſaret, namely on the North ſide of the lake, where the Maps place Capernaum (illy:) or at the flowing out of Jordan out of that lake, namely on the South ſide of the lake. But you cannot place it where Jordan flows in to it, becauſe Joſephus ſaith, Tiberias is not diſtant from Scythopolis above an CXX furlongs (that is fifteen miles;) but now the lake of Geneſaret it ſelf was an hundred furlongs in length, and Scythopolis was the utmoſt limits of Galilee Southward as we ſhewed before.

Therefore we are not affraid to conclude, that Tiberias was ſeated where Jordan flows out of the lake of Geneſar, namely at the South ſhore of the lake; where Jordan receives it ſelf again within its own channel. This will appear by thoſe things that follow.

We doubt therefore of the right pointing of Pliny. Certainly we are not ſatisfied about it; and others will be leſs ſatisfied about our alteration of it. But let me, with their good leave, propoſe this reading, Ab Oriente Juliade: & Hippo a Meridie. Tarichæa, quo nomine aliqui lacum appellant, ab Occidente. Tiberiade, aquis calidis ſalubri. On the Eaſt Julias, and Hippo on the South. Tarichea, by which name ſome call the lake, on the Weſt. Tiberias, wholſom for its warm waters. Which reading is not different from Plinies ſtile, and agrees well with the Jewiſh Writers: but we ſubmit our judgment to the learned.

CHAP. LXXIV.

Hammath and Rakkath are joyned together, Joſ. XIX. 35. For they were very neighbouring Cities: Rakkath is Tiberias, and Chammath Κώμη Ἀμμαοῦς, The Town Ammaus, in Joſephus.

Of their neighbourhood the Hieruſalem Talmudiſts write thus. [a] The men of a great City may walk (on the Sabbath) through an whole ſmall City (which was within a Sabbaths days journy:) but the Inhabitants of a ſmall City walk not through an whole great City. And then follows. Formerly the men of Tiberias walked through all Chammath; but the men of Chammath paſſed not beyond the Arch: but now thoſe of Chammath and thoſe of Tiberias do make one City.

And the Babylonian Talmudists thus, b מחמתן למבריא מיל From Chammath to Tiberias is a mile. b Bab. Megill. fol. 2. 2.

c Chammath is Tiberias. And why is it called Chammath? By reason of the Chammi, warm Baths of Tiberias. על שום חמי מבריא c Ibid. fol 6. 1.

It is not seldom called חמת דגדר Chammath of Gadara, not only, because it was very near the Gadarene Country, for the channel of Jordan was only between, but because it was built, as it seems, on both the banks of Jordan, the two parts of the Town joyning by a bridge.

d Rabbah said, Chammath is the same with the warm Baths of Gadara, and Rakkath is Tiberias. d Idem, ibid.

e It was lawful for the Gadarens, R. Judah Nasi permitting them, to go down into Chammath (on the Sabbath) and to return into Gadara: but the men of Chammath might not go up into Gadara. e Hieros. Erubhin, fol. 23. 4.

Behold! Tiberias so near to Chammath, that it was almost one City with it: and Chammath so near to the Country of Gadara, that thence it took the name of Chammath of Gadara.

f R. Samuel bar Nathan in the name of R. Chama bar Chaninah said, I and my Father went up to Chammath of Gadara, and they set before us small eggs. f Hieros. Shabb. fol. 5. 4. & Taanoth, fol. 41. 1.

g R. Jonathan and R. Judah Nasi went חמתא דגדר to Chammath of Gadara. g Idem, Kiddush, fol. 64. 3.

h R. Immai, and R. Judan Nasi (He was Grandson of R. Judah Nasi) went to Chammath of Gadara. h Id. Avodah Zarah fol. 42. 1 & 45. 2.

Of the warm Baths of Tiberias the Talmudists speak much. Let these few things be collected out of them.

i R. Josua ben Levi being sick, washed sometime in the warm Baths of Tiberias, מסחי בההן דימוסין דמבריא leaning on the shoulders of R. Chajia bar Ba. i Id. Shabb. fol. 3 1.

Gadara. גדר

THERE was a double Gadara. One at the shore of the Mediterranean Sea: that was first called Gezer, 1 King. IX. 15. In Josephus Γάζαρα, Gazara. a Κατεσρέψατο δὲ Σίμων Γάζαρά τε πόλιν, καὶ Ἰόππην, καὶ Ἰάμνειαν. Simon destroyed the City Gazara, and Joppe, and Jamnia. And in the book of the Maccabees, b Καὶ Ἰόππην ὠχύρωσεν εἰς τὸ εἶναι αὐτὸ ἔχον τὴν θάλασσαν, καὶ τὸ Γάζαρα τὸ ἔστι πρὸς τοῖς ὁρίοις Ἀζώτου. And he fortified Joppe, which is on the Sea, and Gazara, which is on the borders of Azotus. a Joseph. Antiq. lib. 13. cap. 11. b 1 Macc. 14. 34

At length, according to the idiom of the Syrian Dialect, ז Zain passed into ד Daleth; and instead of Gazara, it was called Gadara. Hence Strabo after the mention of Jamnia, saith, c καὶ ἡ Γαδαρὶς ἔστιν, εἶτ' Ἄζωτος καὶ Ἀσκάλων: and there is Gadaris, then Azotus and Ascalon. And a little after, Philodemus the Epicurean was a Gadarene, and so was Meleager, and Menippus ὁ σπουδογέλοιος, surnamed the ridiculous student, and Theodorus the Rhetorician, &c. c Strab. lib. 16 pag. mihi 878.

But the other Gadara, which we seek, was in Perea, and was the Metropolis of Perea. Ἐλθόντων ἐπὶ τὰ Γάδαρα, Μητρόπολιν δὲ Περαίας ἐκείνην. Being come into the parts of Gadara, the strong Metropolis of Perea. They are the words of d Josephus. d Jos. de bell. lib. 4. cap. 26.

It was sixty furlongs distant from Tiberias, e by the measure of the same Author. e Id. in his own life, p. 650.

f Gaddara, the River Hieramiace (ירמוך Jarmoc, of which before) flowing by it, and now called Hippodion. Some reckon it among the Cities of the Country of Decapolis. f Plin. lib. 5. cap. 18.

Another

Another City, alſo Gergeſa by name, was ſo near it, that that which in Mark is called χώρα Γαδαρηνῶν, the Country of the Gadarens, Chap. V. 1. in Matthew is χώρα Γεργεσηνῶν, the Country of the Gergeſens, Chap. VIII. 28. Which, whether it took its name from the Girgaſhites, the poſterity of Canaan, or from the clayiſh nature of the ſoyl, (גרגישתא Gargiſhta, ſignifying *Clay,) we leave to the more learned to be decided. The Chaldee certainly renders that עובי גרגשתא Thick durt, which is in the Hebrew מעבה האדמה the clay ground, 1 King VII. 46.

* Clay.

g Hieroſ. Sheviith, fol. 36. 3. The Jeruſalem Writers ſay, that g the Girgaſhites, when Joſua came, and proclaimed, He that will go out hence, let him go, betook themſelves into Africa.

Magdala.

NOT far from Tiberias and Chammath was Magdala. You may learn their neighbourhood hence.

a Hieroſ. Maaſaroth, fol. 50. 3 a If a man have too floors, one in Magdala, and another in Tiberias, he may remove his fruits from that in Magdala, to be eaten in that of Tiberias.

b Id. Sheviith, fol. 38. 4. b R. Simeon ben Jochai, by reaſon of certain Shambles in the ſtreets of Tiberias, was forced to purifie that place. And whoſoever travailed by Magdala, might hear the voice of a Scribe, ſaying, Behold! Bar Jochai purifies Tiberias.

c Id. Erubhin, fol. 23. 4. c A certain old ſhepherd came, and ſaid before Rabbi, I remember the men of Magdala going up to Chammath, and walking through all Chammath (on the Sabbath,) and coming as far as the outmoſt ſtreet, as far as the bridge. Therefore Rabbi permitted the men of Magdala to go into Chammath, and to go through all Chammath, and to proceed as far as the furthermoſt ſtreet, as far as the bridge.

d Joſeph. in his own life. d Joſephus hath theſe words of Magdala; Πέμπει δ' ὁ βασιλεὺς Ἀγρίππας δυνάμιν ἱκανὴν ἐπ' αὐτῆς Μαγδαλὰ τὸ φρούριον ἐξαιρήσοντας. King Agrippa ſends forces and a Captain into Magdala it ſelf to deſtroy the Gariſon. We meet with frequent mention of the Rabbins, or Scholars of Magdala.

YOU may ſuppoſe upon good grounds, that Hippo is the ſame with סוסיתה Suſitha in the Talmudiſts, from the very ſignification of the word. Enquire. Of it there is this mention.

a Hieroſ. Sheviith, fol. 36. 3 a R. Joſua ben Levi ſaith, It is written, And Jephtah fled from the face of his brethren, and dwelt in the land of Tobh. זו סוסיתה, which is Suſitha. If you would render it in Greek, it is Ἱππωνῆ, Hippene.

This City was repleniſhed with Gentiles, but not a few Jews mixed with them. Hence b Id. Rob Haſhanah, fol. 54. 4 is that, b If two witneſſes come out of a City, the major part whereof conſiſts of Gentiles כגון הדא סוסיתה as Suſitha, &c. And after a few lines, R. Immai circumciſed from the teſtimony of women, who ſaid the Sun was upon Suſitha. For it was not lawful to circumciſe, but in the day time.

c Joſeph. in his own life, pag. mihi 650. c Hippo was diſtant from Tiberias thirty furlongs only.

Some other Towns near Tiberias. בית מעון Beth-Meon. כפר חיטיא Caphar Chittaia. פלטתה Paltathah.

AMong the Towns neighbouring upon Tiberias, Tarichee is especially commemorated in Josephus, a a City thirty furlongs distant from Tiberias: you will find in him the history and mention of it very frequent. a Joseph. in his own life, p 637

In the Talmudists we meet with other names also.

I. בית מעון Beth-Meon. b The men of Tiberias, who went up to Beth-Meon to be hired for workmen, were hired according to the custom of Beth-Meon: the men of Beth-Meon, who went down to Tiberias to be hired, were hired according to the custom of Tiberias. b Hieros. Bava Metzia, fol. 11. 2

This place is also called, as it seems בית מעין Beth-Mein. c In the place noted in the margin, they are treating of the Town Timnath: of which it is said, that Samson went up to Timnath, and elsewhere, that the Father in Law of Samson went down to Timnath: so that there was both a going up, and a going down thither. R. Aibu bar Nigri at last concludes, and saith, It is like to Beth-Mein, by which you go down from Paltathah; but by which you go up from Tiberias. c Id. Sotah, fol. 17. 1.

In Josephus, d Βηθμαῦς ἀπέχουσα Τιβεριάδος σταδίους τέσσαρας; Beth-Maus (Beth-Meon) is distant from Tiberias four furlongs. The Maps place it too remote from thence. d In his own life, p. 629.

II. There was also a place not far from Tiberias, or Magdala, whose name was כפר חיטיא Caphar Chittaia. Which we may guess at from this story. e R. Simeon ben Lachish said thus, They whip a Prince, that offends, in the Sessions of the three men. R. Judah Nasi hearing these words was angry, and sent to apprehend him. But he fled without Magdala: but some say, Without Caphar-Chittaia. f Ziddim (Jos. XIX. 35.) is Caphar Chittaia. Zer is neighbour to it. e Hieros. Horaioth, fol. 47. 1. f Id. Megill. fol. 70. 1.

CHAP. LXXIX.

The Country of Genneſaret.

JOsephus thus describes it: a By the lake Genneſar is a Country extended of the same name, of a wonderful nature, and pleasantness. For such is the fruitfulness of it, that it denies no plant, &c. The temper of the air suits it self with different fruits: so that here grow Nuts, a more winter fruit; there Palms, which are nourished with heat, and near them Figs and Olives, which require a more moderate air, &c. a Joseph de bell. lib. 3. cap. 35.

The Talmudists speak like things of the fertility and pleasure of this place.

b The Rabbins say, Why is it called Genesar? גני סרים Because of the Gardens of Princes. Those are the great Men, who have Gardens in that place. And it was of the lot of Nephthali (they are the words of the Author of Aruch) as it is said, And a thousand Princes were of Nephthali. b Aruch in גנסר

The fruits of Genneſaret are mentioned, as being of great fame. c Wherefore (say they) are there not of the fruits of Genneſaret at Jerusalem? The reason is, that they who came to the Feasts should not say, We had not come, but to eat the fruits of Genneſaret. c Bab. Pesach. fol. 8. 2.

d And elsewhere, where it is disputed, what is the more noble part of food, something seasoned with salt, or a morsel, and it is concluded, that that which is seasoned is to be preferred, and that thanks is to be given upon it; the mention of the fruits of Genneſaret is brought in, חשובים מן הפת which are preferred also before a morsel. d Id. Beracoth, fol. 44. 1.

Hereupon there is mention of the Tent of Gennneſaret, e סכת גנוסר: that is, as the Gloss speaks, When Genosar, which is also called Cinnereth, abounded with noble Gardens, they made certain shady bowres, or small Tents, for that time, wherein they gathered the fruits. e Maasaroth, cap. 3. hal. 7.

f Joseph. in the place before.

f The length of this most fruitful soil, lying along the Sea shore, was but thirty furlongs, and the bredth twenty.

g Aruch in the place before.

"ים מקם קרוב לטבריא ויש בו גנות ופרדסים: g And Expositors say, (they are the words of the Aruch,) that there is a place near to Tiberias, in which are Gardens and Paradices. Let that be noted, There is a place near to Tiberias.

CHAP. LXXX.

Capernaum.

FROM the things last spoken, we gather no trifling conjecture concerning the situation of the Town of Capernaum.

a Jos. de bell. lib. 3 cap. 25.

Josephus relates, that the Country of Gennesar, which we have described, was watered a Πηγῇ πίονι πότιμον, Καπερναοὺμ αὐτοὺς ὀνομάζουσι κώμην with a spring of excellent water; the people thereabouts call it Capernaum. From that either the City hath its name, or rather that hath its name from the City; and the City from the pleasantness of the place. The Evangelists compared together do make it clear, that this City was seated in the land of Genesaret. For when it is said by Matthew and Mark, that Christ sailing over from the desert of Bethsaida arrived at the Country of Genesareth, Matth. XIV. 34. Mark VI. 53. it is manifest from John, that he arrived at Capernaum, Joh. VI. 22, 24, 25. When therefore that most pleasant Country laid near Tiberias, and that Capernaum was in that Country, we must necessarily suppose, that it was not very remote from Tiberias.

It was παραθαλασσία, ἐν ὁρίοις Ζαβουλὼν καὶ Νεφθαλείμ, Upon the Sea coasts, in the borders of Zabulon and Nepthali, Matth. IV. 13. Not that it was the bounds of each, but because it was within the borders of Zabulon and Nephthali, they being put in opposition to the other parts of Galilee. So Μεθόρια Τύρου καὶ Σιδῶνος, the borders of Tyre and Sidon, Mark VII. 24. denote not that very centre, where the territories of Tyre are parted from those of Sidon; but the bounds of Tyre and Sidon, as distinguished from the bounds of Galilee. Nevertheless neither was this City far distant from the very limits, where the bounds of Zabulon and Nephthali did touch upon one another, namely, near the South coast of the Sea of Gennesaret, which we observed before.

We suppose Capernaum seated between Tiberias and Tarichee. Whether Κεφαρνώμη, Cepharnome in b Josephus be the same with this we do enquire.

CHAP. LXXXI.

Some history of Tiberias: The Jerusalem Talmud was written there. And when.

TIBERIAS a was built by Herod the Tetrarch in honour of Tiberius: and that in a common burying place, or in a place where many Sepulchres had been. Hence it was, that the Founder was fain to use all manner of perswasion, inticements and liberality, to invite inhabitants. The very delightful situation of the place seemed to put him on to wrestle with such a difficulty, and inconvenience, rather than not to enjoy so pleasant a soil and seat. For on this side the Sea washing upon it, on that side within a little way Jordan gliding by it, on the other side the hot Baths of Chammath, and on another the most fruitful Country Gennesaret adjacent, did every way begirt this City, when it was built, with pleasure and delight.

It did every day encrease in splendor, and became at last the chief City, not only of Galilee, but of the whole land of Israel. It obtained this honour, by reason of the University translated thither by Rabbi Judah, and there continued for many ages. It was innobled by b thirteen Synagogues: among which כנשתא עיתקתא דסרונגין c The antient Serongian Synagogue was one. It was famous also for the Sanhedrin sitting there, for the Taimudic Mishna, perhaps collected here by R. Judah, and for the Jerusalem Talmud,

c H. of Kilaim, fol. 32. 3.

Talmud, written there for certain. That very Volume does openly speak the place where it was published: in which the words הבא here, and להבא hither, do most plainly design Tiberias, almost in infinite places. But there is a greater controversie about the time: it is agreed upon by very many learned Men, that this Talmud was written about the year of Christ CCXXX. which I do indeed wonder at, when the mention of the Emperor Diocletian, unless I am very much mistaken, does occur in it. Let us note the places.

d : כד סליק דוקליטינוס מלכא להבא When the King Docletinus came hither (to Tiberias,) they saw R. Chaija bar Abba climing a Sepulchre to see him. This story is repeated in e Nazir, and he is there called דוקלינוס Doclinus, by an error, as it seems, of the Coppiers. d Beracoth, fol. 6. 1. e Naz. fol. 56. 1

f דיקליטינוס הקוה נהרות ועשאו וכו׳ Dicletinus gathered the Rivers together, and made the Sea of Apamia. And this story is recited in g Chetubboth, and there he is called דוקליטיאנוס Docletianus. f Kilaim, fol. 32. 3. g Chetubb. fol. 35. 2.

h זהב דוקלטינוס היה לו משקל דינר׳ גורדינון שחוט Docletinus had most fine gold, even to the weight of a Gordian peny. h Joma, fol. 41. 4.

i דוקליטיאנוס כד נחת תמן וכר׳ When Docletianus came thither, he came with an hundred and twenty myriads. i Shevuoth, fol. 34. 4.

k דיקלוט חזירא מחניה טליי דר׳ יודה נשיאה The boys of R. Judah the Prince bruised Diclot the keeper of hogs with blows. That King at length escaped, and coming to Paneas, sent for the Rabbines, &c. He said to them, Therefore, because your Creator worketh miracles for you, you contemn my Government. אמרין ליה דיקלוט חזירא בוזנן דיקליטיאנוס מלכא לא בוזנן To whom they said, we contemned Diclot the hogheard, we contemned not Diocletianus the King. Hence arose a suspition among some learned Men, that this was not to be understood of Diocletian the Emperor, but of some little King. I know not whom, of a very beggerly original: of which opinion I also was sometime, until at last I met with something, that put the thing past all doubt. k Trumoth, fol. 46. 2, 3.

That you find in l Avodah Zarah. There enquiry is made by one אדן ירידה What of the Mart of Tsur? There is this Inscription there, אנא דיקלטיאנוס מלכא שבנית אדן ירידה צור לגידה לארקלים אחי תמניא יומין: I Diocletianus the King built this Mart of Tsur (or Tyre) to the fortune of my Brother Herculius eighty days. The very sound perswades to render ארקלים Herculius, and the agreeableness of the Roman History, from which every one knows, how near a kin there was between Diocletian, and Maximian Herculius. l Avod. Zar. fol. 39. 4.

m Eusebius mentions the travailing of Diocletian through Palestine; and all the Roman Historians speak of his sordid and mean birth; which agree very well with the things, that are related by the Talmudists. m Of the life of Constant. lib. 1. cap. 13.

These are all the places, unless I am much mistaken, where this name occurs in this Talmud, one only excepted, which I have reserved for this place, that after we have discovered by these quotations, that this was Diocletian the Emperour, some years after him might be computed. That place is in Sheviith, n דיקליטיאנוס אעיק לבני פניים Diocletianus afflicted the men of Paneas: they said therefore to him, We will depart hence: but סופיסטה a certain Sophist said to him, Either they will not depart, or, if they do, they will return again: but if you would have an Experiment of it, let two young Goats be brought hither, and let them be sent to some place afar off, and they will at last come back to their place. He did so: for the Goats were brought, whose horns he gilded, and sent them into Africa: and they after thirty years returned to their own place. Consider that thirty years passed from this action of Diocletian, which if you compute even from his first year, and suppose that this story was writ in the last year of those thirty, you come as far as the ninth or tenth year of Constantine. n Shev. fol. 38. 4

Mention also of King Sapor occurs, if I do not fail of the true reading. הא חויה דשבור מלכא בלע גמלין: o A Serpent under Sapor the King devoured Camels. Yea, I have I know not what suspicion, that לוליינוס מלכא Lulianus the King, of whom there is mention in that very same place, does denote Julianus the Emperor. When Lulianus the King, say they, came thither, an hundred and twenty myriads accompanied him. But enough of this. o Nedarim, fol. 51. 4.

There are some, who believe the Holy Bible was pointed by the wise men of Tiberias. I do not wonder at the Impudence of the Jews, who invented the story; but I wonder at the credulity of Christians who applaud it. Recollect, I beseech you, the names of the Rabbines of Tiberias, from the first situation of the University there to the time that it expired: and what at length do you find, but a kind of men mad with Pharisaism, bewitching with Traditions and bewitched, blind, guileful, doting, they must pardon me, if I say, Magical and monstrous? Men, how unfit, how unable, how foolish, for the under-undertaking ſo divine a work! Read over the Jeruſalem Talmud, and ſee there, how R. Judah, R. Chaninah, R. Judan, R. Hoſhaia, R. Chaija Rubba, R. Chaija bar Ba, R. Jochanan, R. Jonathan, and the reſt of the grand Doctors among the Rabbines of Tiberias, behave themſelves, how earneſtly they do nothing, how childiſhly they handle ſerious matters, how much of ſophiſtry, froth, poyſon, ſmoke, nothing at all, there is in their Diſputes! And if you can believe the Bible was pointed in ſuch a School, believe alſo all that the Talmudiſts write. The pointing of the Bible ſavours of the work of the Holy Spirit, not the work of loſt, blinded, beſotted men.

R. Juda, who firſt removed the Univerſity to Tiberias, ſat alſo in Zippor for many years, and there died: ſo that in both places were very famous Schools. He compoſed and digeſted the Miſhnaioth into one volume. For when he ſaw the Captivity was prolonged (they are the words of Tſemach David, tranſlated by Vorſtius) and the Scholars to become faint hearted, and the ſtrength of Wiſdom and the Cabala to fail, and the Oral Law to be much diminiſhed, he gathered, and ſcraped up together all the Decrees, Statutes, and ſayings of the wiſe Men; of which he wrote every one apart, which the houſe of the Sanhedrin had taught, &c. And he diſpoſed it into ſix claſſes; which are Zeraim, Moed, Nezikin, Naſhim, Kedoſhim, Tahoroth. And a little after, All the Iſraelites ratified the Body of the Miſhnaioth, and obliged themſelves to it: and in it, during the life of Rabbi, his two ſons, Rabban Gamaliel, and R. Simeon, employed themſelves, in the School of the land of Iſrael: and R. Chaija, R. Oſhaia, R. Chanina, and R. John, and their companions. And in the School of Babylon, Rabh and Samuel exerciſed themſelves in it, &c.

Therefore it is worthy of examination, whence thoſe differences ſhould ariſe between the Jeruſalem Miſhna, and the Babylonian, differences in words without number, in things in great number, which he that compares them will meet with every where. You have a remarkable example in the very [p] entrance of the Jeruſalem Miſhna, where the ſtory of R. Tarphons danger among thieves is wanting, which is in that of Babylon.

Whether R. Judah compoſed that Syſtem in Tyberias, or in Zippor, we are not ſolicitous to enquire: he ſat in both, and enriched both with famed Schools, and Tiberias was the more eminent. For ישיבת מבריא גדולה משל צפורי [q] The Univerſity of Tiberias was greater than that of Zippor.

We do not apprehend the reaſon, why Rabban Gamaliel went thither; whatſoever it were, either ſome diſturbance raiſed by the Romans, or indignation that *R. In that Scheme, which we exhibited in the beginning of this work, out of the Jerusalem Gemarists, delineating the limits of the land under the second Temple, among other names of places you observe the mention of a place, called תרנגולא עילאה דלמעלה מן קיסרין The upper Tarnegola, or, Cock, &c. I render it Geber, or Gabara the upper, which is above Cesarea. Why I render תרנגולא Tarnegola by Geber, those that are versed in the Talmudic Writings will easily perceive; for in them A Cock is indifferently called in the Chaldee Language תרנגולא Tarnegola, and by the Rabbins גבר Geber. Nor is there an example wanting of this our rendring. For the Targum of Jonathan in Numb. XXXIII. 35, 36. renders Ezion-Geber כרך תרנגולא Cerac Tarnegola, The City of the Cock. And he mentions this very place, which we are now upon, Numb. XXXIV. 8. תרנגולא עד קיסרין Tarnegola at Cesarea. And the Targum of Jerusalem there, reads תורנגולא דקיסריון Tornegola of Cesarion. Now that Cesarea, which they mean, is Cesarea Philippi, which is at the Fountain of Jordan: and that Gabara is called תרנגולא עילאה Gabara the upper, for distinction sake, from other Cities of the same name. Josephus calleth g Tiberias, Sipphor, and Gabara, the three greatest Cities of Galilee. He mentions also Ταβαρθά, h Gabaroth, and Ταβαραγαναίους, i Gabaraganeus, which are reckoned with the Gadarens, and Tyrians by him. g In his own life, p. 634. & 640 h Ibid. p. 642 i Ibid p. 628.

CHAP. LXXXVI.

The difference of some customs of the Galileans from those of Judea.

IT is not impertinently questioned, with what Inhabitants Galilea and Perea were first planted after the return out of Babylon, when you scarce find any mention of them in the Books of Ezra, and Nehemiah, but of those only who inhabited Judea, and the land of Benjamin. But whosoever they were, whether pure Israelites, or those that were more mixed, or some of the ten Tribes, it is certain, those that inhabited Galilee differed much from those that dwelt in Judea, in certain rites, and not a little in the Dialect of their speech.

The Jewish Pandects observe a various difference between them: out of which we produce these few instances, instead of more.

a In the place noted in the Margin, it is discoursed concerning the form and manner of writing the Donation of the marriage dowry. So and so, say they, the people of Jerusalem writ, and the Galileans writ as those of Jerusalem: but the Inhabitants of Judea something varied, &c. Where the Gemarists thus, The Galileans care was of reputation, not a Hieros. Chetubb. fol. 29.2.

not of mony; the Inhabitants of Judea their care was of mony, not of reputation, &c.

b P. Sed. in, cap. 4. hal. 5.

b The wise Men say, In Judea they did servile works on the Passover Eves, until noon; in Galilee not at all.

c Nedarim, cap. 2. hal. 3.

חא"ס תם תרומה בידודה אסורה ובגליל מותרת : שאין אנשי גליל מכיריז תרומת הלשכה c The wise Men say, That the Trumah taken generally is bound in Judea, in Galilee is loosed. For the Galileans know not the Trumah of the Temple chamber. The sense of the Tradition is this, When any one pronounced a Vow in general terms, for example, saying thus, Let this be to me as the Trumah, not naming what kind of Trumah, a Galilean so speaking was loosed from his vow, because he by reason of the distance of the place (as the Glos tells us) knew not the Trumah of the holy Treasury: but he that inhabited Judea, and spoke thus, was bound by his vow.

And in the same Text is added, סתם חרמים בידודה מותרין ובגליל אסורין : If any vows generally by curses, he is loosed in Judea; he is bound in Galilee, because the Galileans do not know the curses of the Priests. Where the Glos is this, There were no Priests among the Galileans: therefore when they cursed, they cursed to none but to God. And the Gemara of Hierusalem thus, Because they were fastned to the curse of Achan, it is said, that they are bound: but in Judea, because they are not fastned to the curse of Achan, it is said, that they are loosed.

d Rabbi Judah saith, In Judea they made inquiry concerning the bridegroom, and bride three days before the wedding: but in Galilee they did not so. In Judea they allowed the bridegroom and bride private company one hour before the wedding; but they did not so in Galilee. It was a custom in Judea, that the married persons should have two שושבינין friends, one of the family of the bridegroom, and the other of the family of the bride: but it was not so in Galilee. In Judea those friends slept in the same place, where the bridegroom and bride slept: but in Galilee it was not so, &c.

The Dialect of the Galileans, differing from the Jewish.

Ἀληθῶς καὶ σὺ ἐξ αὐτῶν εἶ, καὶ γὰρ ἡ λαλιά σου δῆλόν σε ποιεῖ. Surely thou also art one of them, for thy speech bewrayeth thee, Matth. XXVI. 73. Let these passages, which are delivered by the Masters, be instead of a Comment.

a To the men of Judea, who were exact in their Language, their Law is established in their hands. To the men of Galilee, who were not exact in their Language, their Law is not established in their hands. The Glos is, They (the men of Judea) were exact in their Language: so that their speech was pure, not corrupt.

To the men of Judea, who are exact about their Language, and appoint to themselves certain signs, their Law is established in their hands: to the men of Galilee, who are not exact about their Language, nor appoint to themselves signs, their Law is not established in their hands. The Glos is, They were exact about their Language, namely, in rendring the same words, which they had heard from their Masters. And because they were taught orally, by hearing after hearing, they appointed to themselves from them sign after sign. And because they were exact about their Language, they knew how to appoint to themselves fit signs, that they might not forget.

The men of Judea learn from one Master, and their Law is established in their hands: the Galileans learn not from one Master, and their Law is not established in their hands. The Glos writes, The Galileans heard one Master in one Language, and another in another; and the diversity of the Language, or pronuntiation, confounded them so, that they forgat. And a little after,

R. Abba said, If any ask the men of Judea, who are exact about their Language, מעברין הנן או מיעברין הנן Whether they say, מעברין Maabrin with ע Ain, or מעברין Maabrin with א Aleph? Whether they say, עכוזו Acuzo with Ain, or אכוזו Acuzo with Aleph? They will answer, There are some, who pronounce it מעברין (with Aleph,) and there are others, who pronounce it מעברין (with Ain.) There are some, who say, אכוזו, and there are others, who say עכוזו. And a little after,

A certain Galilean said, אמר למאן אמר למאן They answered him, O foolish Galilean, חמר מרכב : עמר למלבש : חמר למשתי : אימר לאיתבכאה : The sense is, When the Galilean asked אמר למאן, Whose is אמר

אמר Immar, (this Lamb?) He pronounced the first letter in the word אמר, Immar, so confusedly and uncertainly, that the hearers knew not, whether he meant חמר Chamar, that is, an Asse, or חמר Chamar, Wine, or עמר Amar, Wool, or אימר Immar, a Lamb.

A Galilean woman, when she should have said to her neighbour, תאי דאוכליך חלבא Come, and I will feed you with milk (or some fat thing:) said, שלובתי תוכליך My neighbour, a Lion shall eat you. The Gloss is, She distinguished not, but confounded the letters: for when she should say, שלובתי Shelubti, with ב Beth, which signifies, a Neighbour, she said שלוכתי Shelucti, with כ Caph, (a barbarous word.) For תאי דאוכליך חלבא Tai Doclic Chalaba, Come, and I will feed you with milk, she said, תוכליך לבא Toclic Labe, words that imply a curse; as much as to say, Let a Lion devour thee.

A certain woman said before the Judge, מרי בירי הפלא הות לי וגנבוך מין וכדו הות דכד שדרולך עילווח לא מטי כרעיך אארעא: That which she intended to say, was this, Δεσποτα κλεπτε, My Lord, I had a Picture, which they stole, and it was so great, that if you had been placed in it, your feet would not have touched the ground. But she so spoiled the business with her pronouncing, that, as the Glosser interprets it, her words had this sense, Sir, slave, I had a beam, and they stole thee away, and it was so great, that if they had hung thee on it, thy feet would not have touched the ground.

Among other things you see, that in this Galilean Dialect, the pronuntiation of the Gutturals are very much confounded, which however the Jews correct in the words alledged, yet it was not unusual among them; so that b the Mystical Doctors distinguished not between Cheth and He. They are the words of the Jerusalem Talmudists: and these also are the words of those of Babylon, c The Schools of R. Eleazar ben Jacob pronounced Aleph Ain, and Ain Aleph.

c Bab. Berat. fol. 32. 1.

We observed d before one example of such confusion of letters, when one teaching thus מי בצעים אין מכשירין The waters of the marshes are not to be reckoned among those waters, (that make unclean,) he meant to have it understood of מי ביצים The water of eggs: but he deceived his hearers by an uncertain pronuntiation.

d Chap. LXIII.

You have another place noted in the margin: e Rabh said, עידיכן (with Ain,) Samuel said, אידיכן (with Aleph,) Rabh said, מאברין (with Aleph,) Samuel said, מעברין (with Ain,) Rabh said, יאותו (with Aleph,) Samuel said, יעותו (with Ain.)

e Hieros. Avod. Zar. fol. 39. 3.

If you read the Samaritane Version of the Pentateuch, you will find so frequent a changing of the Gutturals, that you could not easily get a more ready key of that Language, than by observing that variation.

CHAP. LXXXVIII.

גלגל Gilgal in Deut. XI. 30. What that place was.

THAT which is said by Moses, that Gerizim and Ebal were מול גלגל Over against Gilgal, Deut. XI. 30. is so obscure, that it is rendred into contrary significations by Interpreters. Some take it in that sense, as if it were סמוך לגלגל a Near to Gilgal; some רחוק מן הגלגל b Far off from Gilgal; The Targumists read, Before Gilgal: while, as I think, they do not touch the difficulty, which lays not so much in the signification of the word מול Mul, as in the ambiguity of the word גלגל Gilgal. These do all seem to understand that Gilgal, which the people of Israel took the first night after their passage over Jordan, Jos. IV. 19. which, as Josephus relates, was distant only c fifty furlongs from Jordan: but which the Gemarists guess to be fifty miles and more. For d they say, the journey of that day was more than sixty miles, to wit, from Jordan to Gilgal. And this they say, that they may fix Gilgal near Gerizim and Ebal; where they think the people encamped the first night after their entrance into the land of Canaan, from those words of Moses, Deut. XXVII. 2. In the day, wherein thou shalt pass over Jordan, thou shalt set thee up great stones, and shalt plaister them with plaister, &c. Now those stones, say they, are set up in Gerizim and Ebal. Hence is that of the Gemarists, e The Lord said, I said, when ye shall pass Jordan, ye shall set up stones, but you have ſpread your ſelves as far as ſixty miles. And, f Gerizim and Ebal were ſixty miles diſtant from Jordan.

f Id. Sotah, fol. 36.1.

But certainly that Gilgal, of which Moſes in thoſe words ſpeaks, Are not Gerizim and Ebal מול גלגל over againſt Gilgal? Is to be underſtood ſome other, than that, which Joſua named by that name, Joſ. V. 9. For when Moſes ſpoke thoſe words, the name of that Gilgal near Jericho was not at all: nor can that, which is ſpoke in the book of Joſua concerning גוים גלגל the Nations of Gilgal, Joſ. XII. 23. be applied to that Gilgal, when it had obtained that name. Therefore in both places by Gilgal ſeems to be underſtood Galilee; and that as well from the nearneſs of the words, for גלגל Gilgal, and גליל Galil, are of the ſame root and etymology; as from the very ſenſe of the places. For when in Joſua ſome Kings of certain particular Cities in Galilee, Kedeſh, Jokneam, Dor, &c. are reckoned up, the King of the Nations of Gilgal or Galilee, is alſo added, who ruled over many Cities and Countries in Galilee.

So alſo the words of Moſes may very well be rendred in the like ſenſe, 'Are not thoſe 'mountains, Gerizim and Ebal, beyond Jordan, over againſt Gilgal or Galilee?

Theſe things following ſtrengthen our conjecture. I. The Verſion of the LXX who render גוים לגלגל The nations of Gilgal, by Τὴ γῆ Γαλιλαίας The land of Galilee. II. Divers Towns called by the name of צור Tyre.

BEſides Tyre, the noble Mart of Phenicia, we meet with various places of the ſame name, both in the Talmudiſts, and in Joſephus.

a Hieroſ. Demai, fol.22.4. a In the place noted in the Margin, they mention צור, one Tyre in the very borders of the land, which was bound to pay Tiths, and another in like manner in the borders, which was not bound: we ſhall hereafter produce their words. And in theſe examples which follow, and in very many others, which might be produced, they leave it undecided, whether the diſcourſe is of Tyre of Phenicia, or of ſome other place of that name.

b Id. Kiddaſhin, fol.64.4. b Jacob Navorienſis travailed to Tyre (לצור) and there taught ſome things, for which R. Chaggai would have him beaten.

c Id. Avod. Zar. fol.42.1. c R. Mena went to Tyre (לצור:) whom R. Chaija bar Ba found there, and going forward he told R. Jochanan thoſe things which he had taught.

d Ibid. fol.44.2 d R. Iſſa went to Tyre, (לצור) and ſaw them drinking wine, &c.

e Joſ. Antiq. lib.12. cap.5. Joſephus thus writes of Hircanus, the brother of Simon the High Prieſt. He built a ſtrong place between Arabia and Judea beyond Jordan: ἐ καὶ τοῦτον ἀπεχρῶντι τόπον Τύρον ὠνόμασεν· and called it Tyre.

f Joſ. in his own life. The ſame Author, of John ben Levi thus: When he had endeavoured to retain the Giſcalites, now attempting to ſhake off the Romane yoke, it was no purpoſe: f πρὸς γὰρ πλείω ἔθνη, Γαδαρηνοὺς, καὶ Γαβαραγανοῖους, καὶ Τυρίους, for the bordering people, the Gadarens, the Gabaraganeans, and the Tyrians, having got together conſiderable forces, invade Giſcala. You can ſcarcely ſuppoſe that theſe Tyrians came out of Tyre of Phenicia; but from ſome other place, of the ſame name.

Upon that reaſon, that very many Towns in the land of Iſrael were called by the name of Rama, namely becauſe they were ſeated in ſome high place: by the ſame reaſon very many are called by the name of עיר Tyre, becauſe they were built in a rocky place.

CHAP. XC.

Cana.

WE have little to certifie as of the ſituation of this place: only we learn this of Joſephus concerning Cana, that it was ſuch a diſtance from Tiberias, as he could meaſure with his Army in one night. For when word was brought him by letters, that the enemy Juſtus had endeavoured to draw away the Tiberians from their fidelity towards him, a I was then, ſaith he, in a Town of Galilee, called Cana: taking therefore with me two hundred Souldiers, I travailed the whole night, having diſpatched a meſſenger before, to tell the Tiberians of my coming: and in the morning, when I approached the City, the people came out to meet me, &c.

a Joſeph. in his life, p. 631.

He makes mention alſo of Cana in the ſame book Of his own life, in theſe words; b Sylla, King Agrippa's General, encamping five furlongs from Julias, blocked up the ways with guards, Τήν τε εἰς Κανᾶ ἀγύσην, καὶ τὴν εἰς Γάμαλα τὸ φρούριον, both that which leads to Cana, and that which leads to the Caſtel Gamala. But now when Julias and Gamala without all doubt were beyond Jordan, it may be enquired, whether that Cana were not alſo on that ſide. But thoſe things that follow ſeem to deny this: for he blocked up the ways ὡσὰν τῶ τὰς ἄνωθεν τῆς Γαλιλαίων ὠφελείας τοῖς ἐνοίκοις ἀποκλείειν, that by this means he might ſhut out all ſupplies that might come from the Galileans. Mark that, that might come from the Galileans, that is, from Cana, and other places of Galilee about Cana.

b Ibid. p. 653.

That Julias, which Sylla beſieged, was Julias Betharamphtha (of which afterwards) which was ſeated on the further bank of Jordan, there where it is now ready to flow into the Sea of Geneſaret. Therefore Cana ſeems on the contrary to lie on this ſide Jordan, how far removed from it, we ſay not, but, we gueſs, not far, and it was diſtant ſuch a ſpace from Tiberias, as the whole length of the Sea of Geneſaret doth contain.

CHAP. XCII.

Adam, and Zaretan, Jos. III.

I Suspect a double error in some Maps, while they place these two Towns in Perea; much more, while they place them at so little a distance.

We do not deny indeed that the City Adam was in Perea; but Zaretan was not so. Of Adam is mention, Jos. III. 16. where discourse is had of the cutting off, or cutting in two the waters of Jordan; that they might afford a passage to Israel. קמו נד אחד הרחק מאד באדם The waters rose up upon an heap afar off in Adam. For the textual reading באדם In Adam, the marginal hath מאדם From Adam. You may very fitly apply both readings.

Adam was the centre where the waters parted: here was the station of the Ark of the Covenant, now ready to enter Jordan. Hence the Psalmist, אהל שכן באדם The Tabernacle, which he had fixed in Adam, Psal. LXXXVIII. 60. Therefore the textual reading באדם In Adam, holds well, because there was the centre of the cutting in two of the waters: but the marginal reading מאדם from Adam, does moreover add light, because the gathering those waters together on an heap was far above it.

f Hieros. Sotah, fol. 21. 4. a R. Jochanan saith, Adam is a City, and Zaretan is a City, and they are distant from one another twelve miles. From Adam to Zaretan were the waters dried up; from Zaretan and upwards they stood on an heap. Adam was in Perea, over against Jericho; Zaretan was in the land of Manasseh on this side Jordan. It is called Zarthanah, 1 King. IV. 12. and is defined to be near Beth-shean, which was the furthest bounds of the land of Manasseh Northward. The brazen Vessels of the Temple are said to be cast in the Plain of Jordan, in the clay ground between Zaretan (on this side Jordan) and Succoth (beyond it,) 1 King. VII. 46. Therefore the words cited in Josua, הרחק מאדם אשר מצד צרתן far off from Adam which is beside Zaretan, are so to be understood, as not so much to denote the nearness of Adam and Zaretan, as to intimate, that the heaping up of the waters was by Zaretan. They are to be rendred in this sense, And the waters that came down from above stood together; they rose up into one heap, in a very long distance from the City Adam, namely, to that distance, which is by Zaretan.

Adam and Zaretan on this and the other side were both something removed from Jordan: but they are named in that story, because there the discourse is of the time, when Jordan contained not it self within its own Channel, but had overflown its banks.

CHAP. XCIII.

Julias-Bethsaida.

THERE were two Julias's, both in Perea, one built by Herod, called before Betharamphtha: of which Josephus, Ἡρώδης Βηθαραμφθᾶ ἦ, πόλις ἣν ἦ αὖτη, τείχει περιλαβὼν Ἰουλιάδα, ἀπὸ τῆς Αὐτοκράτορος ἀγορεύει δ γυναικός. a At Betharamphtha, which before was the Cities name, Herod compassed Julias with a wall, calling it by the name of the Empress. The other built by Philip, heretofore called Beth-saida, of which the same Author writes thus; Φίλιππος κώμην ἦ Βηθσαϊδὰν πρὸς λίμνῃ τῇ Γεννησαρίτιδι πόλεως ἀξίωμα, πλήθει τε οἰκητόρων, καὶ τῇ ἄλλῃ δυνάμει, Ἰουλίᾳ θυγατρὶ τῆς Καίσαρος ὁμώνυμον ἐκάλεσεν. b Philip having raised the Town Beth-saida on the lake of Genneſaret to the honour of a City, both in respect of the number of the inhabitants, and other strength, gave it the same name with Julia the Emperors daughter.

b Ibid.

The Maps have one Julias only: not amiss, because they substitute the name of Beth-saida for the other. But they do not well agree about the situation of both. Julias-Betharamphtha was seated at the very influx of Jordan into the lake of Genesaret. For thus Josephus, c Jordan having measured an hundred furlongs more from the lake Samochonitis, after the City Julias, cuts the lake of Genneſar in the middle. Do not these words argue, that Jordan being now ready to enter into the lake did first glide by Julias? To which those things, which are said elsewhere by the same Author, do agree. d Sylla, saith he, encamped five furlongs from Julias, and stopped up the ways; namely, that which led to Cana, and that which led to the Castel Gamala. But I, when I understood this, sent two thousand armed men, under Jeremias their Captain; ὁι ἦ κὰ καταλαβόντες ἀπὸ σταδίε δ Ἰουλιάδ ἧ πλησίον τῆ Ἰορδάνε πολαμῆ. And they having encamped a furlong from Julias near the river Jordan, &c. Note that, when they were distant from Julias a furlong only, they are but a little way off of Jordan. The Maps place it more remote from the influx of Jordan into the lake of Genesaret, than these words will bear.

d Id. in his own life.

Julias-Beth-Saida, was not seated in Galilee, as it is in the Maps, but beyond the Sea of Galilee, in Perea. This we say upon the credit of Josephus. e Philip, saith he, built Cesarea in Paneas, κὰν τῇ κάτω Γαυλανίτικῇ Ἰουλιάδα· Mark that, and Julias (which before time was Bethsaida) in nether Gaulonitis. But now, there is no body but knows, that Gaulonitis was in Perea. This certainly is that Julias, which f Pliny placeth Eastward of the lake of Genesaret, (for the other Julias was scarcely near the Sea at all:) and that Julias, of which Josephus speaks, when he saith, g that a certain Mountanous Country beyond Jordan runs out from Julias to Somorrha.

Gamala. Chorazin.

THESE things determine the situation of Gamala. 1. It was a ὧ κάτω Γαυλονῖ, in lower Gaulon, in which, as we have seen, Beth-saida was. 2. It was ἐπὶ τῇ λίμνῃ [Γεννησαρίτιδι·] upon the lake (of Genneſaret.) 3. It was Ταριχαιῶν ἄντικρυς, Over against Tarichee. Compare the Maps, whether in their placing of it they agree with these passages. b Here was Judas born, commonly called Gaulonites, and as commonly also, the Galilean. So Peter, and Andrew, and Philip, were Gaulonites; of Beth-saida, Joh. I. 44. and yet they were called Galileans.

b Id. Antiq. lib. 18. cap. 1.

While we are speaking of Beth-saida, Chorazin comes into our mind, which is joyned with it, in the words of Christ, Matth. XI. 21. as partaking with it in his miracles, and being guilty of equal ingratitude. If you seek for the situation of this place, where will you find it? Some Maps place it on this side Jordan, and others beyond Jordan: but on what authority do both depend? It is meer conjecture, unless I am deceived. Let me also conjecture.

The

The word חורשין Choraſhin, denotes Woody places, both in the Holy Bible, and in the Rabbinical writings. Hence we ſuppoſe the Chorazin that is now before us, is called, namely, becauſe it was ſeated in ſome Woody place. For ſuch places the land of Nephthali was famous above the other Tribes: to which the words of Jacob have regard, Nephthali is an Hind let looſe, Gen. XLIX. that is, Nephthali ſhall abound with Veniſon; as Aſher (of whom mention is made in the words going before) ſhall abound in bread, and royal diſhes: thoſe words alſo of the Talmudiſts refer to this, [c] It is lawful for cattle to feed in common, בחורשין אפילו שבט יהודה בשבט נפתלי in the Woods, yea for the Tribe of Judah to feed in the Tribe of Nephthali. Hence Haroſheth of the Gentiles hath its name, Judg. IV. 2. which was in that Tribe. Led by theſe reaſons, I ſuppoſe our Chorazin to have been in Galilee, rather than in Perea, where moſt Maps place it.

[c] Hieroſ. Bava Batra, fol. 15. 1

But when this place ſeems to have been ſo famous for the frequent preſence and miracles of Chriſt, it is a wonder, that it hath no where elſe ſo much as a mention in the Goſpel ſtory, but in the bare remembrance of it in thoſe words of Chriſt, Wo to thee, Chorazin, &c. Whereas Beth-ſaida and Capernaum, places that he mentioneth with it, are ſpoken of elſewhere. What if under this name, Cana be concluded, and ſome ſmall Country adjacent, which from its ſituation in a Wood might be named Chorazin, that is, The Woody Country? Cana is famous for the frequent preſence and miracles of Chriſt. But away with conjecture, when it grows too bold.

The Consistories of more note: out of the Babylonian Talmud, Sanhedr. fol. 32. 2.

THE Rabbins deliver, Follow after righteousness, follow after righteousness. Go to (Beth-Din) the famous Consistory, to R. Eleazar to Lydda, to Rabban Jochanan ben Zaccai לברור חיל*: A Tradition. The sound of mills* בבורני In Burni. The sons week, the sons week. A Candle in ברור חיל Beror Chel. A Feast is there, a Feast is there.

These things are something obscure, and do require light.

ברור חיל Beror Chel, seems to design a place: but what place? Indeed the Sanhedrin of R. Jochanan was in Jafne, but his Consistory, ביתּ דינו his seat of Judgment, seems to be distinguished from the Sanhedrin. So Paul was brought up at the feet of Rabban Gamaliel; not in his Sanhedrin, but בביתּ דינו in his Consistory, or School. So you may conjecture, that Rabban Jochanan, besides that he sat President of the chief Sanhedrin, had his peculiar Consistory in Jafne it self, or in some neighbour place.

That which follows, A Tradition, The sound of mills, &c. is cleared by the Glossers. 'The sound of mills in Burni was a sign, that there was a Circumcision there; as if it 'had been publickly proclaimed, The Infants week expires in this place. And the sound 'of a mill was a sign, that spices were ground to be applied to the wound of the Cir-'cumcision. It was a time of persecution, wherein it was forbidden to circumcise: they 'feared therefore by any publick notice to make known, that there was to be a Circum-'cision: but they appointed this sign.

'A candle in Beror Chel, The Gloss writes, The light of one candle in the day time, 'but many candles burning in the night, gave a sign, as if one had given notice by a pub-'lick Proclamation, that a feast of Circumcision was there, &c.

Another Gloss is thus, 'They were wont to light candles at a Circumcision. It was 'also a custom, to spread a Table cloth at the door: hence is that, A custom prevailed 'at Jerusalem, that as long as the Table cloth was spread at the door, travailers 'went in.

The Aruch writes thus, a 'In the time of persecution they could not celebrate publick 'matrimony, nor publick Circumcision: therefore they did them secretly: whereso ever 'therefore were lighted candles on the lintel of the door, they knew that there was a 'wedding feast there, and whereso ever was the sound of mills, there was a Circum-'cision.

CConcerning them, see Numb. Chap. XXXV. and Jos. Chap. XXI.

a Maimon. in Shemitt h. Vejobel, cap. 13.

a The ſuburbs of the Cities of the Levites were three thouſand cubits on every ſide, viz. from the walls of the City, and outwards, as it is ſaid, From the walls of the City and outwards a thouſand Cubits: and thou ſhalt meaſure from without the City two thouſand Cubits (Numb. XXXV. 4, 5.) The former thouſand were the Suburbs, and the latter two thouſand were for Fields and Vineyards. They appointed the place of burial to every one of thoſe Cities to be without theſe bounds; for within them it was not lawful to bury a dead corps. Do you aſk the reaſon? It was not ſo much for the avoiding Pollution, which might be contracted from a Sepulchre, as by reaſon of the Scribes curious interpretation of the Law, that ſaith, The Suburban lands of theſe Cities were given to the Levites, for their Cattel and Oxen ולכל חיתם and for all their living (creatures) Numb. XXXV. 3. therefore, ſay they, Not for the dead, or for burial.

b Id. in Kotzrah, cap. 8.

b All the Cities of the Levites were Cities of refuge; but with this diſtinction from thoſe ſix, which were properly ſo called; that thoſe ſix afforded refuge to every one that dwelt in them, whether he betook himſelf thither for that end, or no: but the other Levitical Cities were not ſo. And alſo, that the unwitting Manſlayer, flying to theſe ſix Cities, dwelt there at free coſt without paying any rent for his houſe; but in the other Levitical Cities he lived not at free coſt.

Thoſe forty eight Cities of the Levites were ſo many Univerſities, where the Miniſterial Tribe, diſtributed in companies, ſtudied the Law, became learned, and thence ſcattered through the whole Nation, diſperſed learning, and the knowledge of the Law in all the Synagogues.

Two things are not without good reaſon to be obſerved here, which perhaps are not ſeriouſly enough obſerved by all.

I. The ſetled Miniſtry of the Church of Iſrael was not Prophets, but Prieſts and Levites, Mal. II. 7. For it was not ſeldom, when there were no Prophets; and the Prophets ſend the people to the Prieſts for inſtruction, Hag. II. 11. and Mal. in the place mentioned already.

II. That Tithes were granted to the Prieſts and Levites, not only when they miniſtred at the Altar, or in the Temple, but when they ſtudied in the Univerſities, and preached in the Synagogues.

Behold the method of Gods own Inſtitution! God chuſeth Iſrael to be a peculiar people to himſelf: to this choſen people he gives a Law and a Clergy: on the Clergy he enjoyns the ſtudy of the Law: to their ſtudies he ſuits Academical Societies: on the Univerſities he beſtows Lands and Tithes: on the Synagogues he beſtows Tithes and Univerſity men.

And the Schools of the Prophets were little Univerſities, and Colleges of Students. For their Governor they had ſome Venerable Prophet, inſpired with the Holy Spirit, and that partook of Divine Revelations. The Scholars were not inſpired indeed with the ſame Prophetical Spirit, but received Propheſies from the mouth of their Maſter. He revealed to them thoſe things that were revealed to him, of the Will of God, and the ſtate of the people, of the times and events of Iſrael, and above all, of the Myſteries of the Goſpel; of the Meſſias, of his coming, times, death, reſurrection, and thoſe things that were to be done by him.

In theſe ſmall Univerſities, the Prophets, who propheſied of the grace that ſhould come (as the Apoſtle Peter ſpeaks) enquired diligently of Salvation: ſearching what, or what manner of time that was, which was pointed out by the Spirit of Chriſt, that was in them, when he foretold the ſufferings of Chriſt, and the Glory that ſhould follow. Theſe things not to be fetched out by the meer and bare ſtudy of the Law, were here taught, and ſo the ſtudies of the Law and Goſpel together rendred the Miniſter of the Divine Word compleat.

CHAP. XCVIII.

Some Miscellaneous matters, respecting the face of the land.

I. LET us begin with that Canon concerning reading the book of Esther in the feast of Purim. כרכים המוק פיז חומה מימות יהשוע a Towns that were begirt with walls from the days of Joshua, read it the fifteenth day (of the month Adar:) בפרים ועיירות גדולות Villages, and great Cities read it the fourteenth day. אלא שהכפרים מקדימין ליום הכוניסה Unless that the Villages anticipate it, to the day of the Congregation. a Megill. cap. 1 hal. 1.

You see a threefold distinction of Cities and Towns.

1. כרכים Fortifications, or Towns girt with walls from the days of Joshua. But whence shall we know them? They are those, which are mentioned in the book of Joshua, b which however in after times they were not begirt with walls, are nevertheless reckoned under the Catalogue of them, as to the reading of that book. פסקיו הראש artic. 2

2. עירות גדולות Great Cities. That was called a great City, in which was a Synagogue. So it is defined by the Piske Tosaphoth, עיר גדולה הויא שיש c That is a great City, in which are ten men at leisure, to pray and read the Law. See what we say concerning these things on Matth. Chap. IV. vers. 23. when we speak of Synagogues. c Piske Tosaph. artic. 2.

3. כפרים Villages. That is such, where there was not a Synagogue. Yea, saith the Piske Haroth, a fortified Town, wherein are not ten men of leisure (or such as ceased from the things of the World; and these made up a Synagogue) נרון כבפר is reputed as a Village, &c.

That which is added in the Text of the Mishna, Unless the Villages do anticipate it to the day of the Congregation, is thus explained by the Glossers. When Towns girt with walls read the book of Esther on the fifteenth day, and those that were not walled, on the fourteenth, (see Esth. IX. 21.) and yet it is said before (in the same Text of the Mishna) that that book is read the eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth day; the wise Men granted liberty to the Villages, to preoccupate the reading, namely on that day, wherein they resorted to the Synagogue: that is, either the second day of the week that went before the fourteenth day of the month, or the fift day of the week: which were days of Assembly, in which the Villages resorted into the Cities to judgment. For the second and fift days of the week, the Judiciary Consistories sat in the Cities, by the appointment of Ezra. Now the Villagers were not skilful in reading, therefore it was needful, that they should have some reader in the City, &c.

II. Let the Canons, and cautions of the spaces and places, next joyning to the City or Town, be observed.

1. מרחיקין את סובך מן העיר חמשים אמה d A Dovecoat was not built within fifty Cubits from the City: and that least the Pigeons might do injury to the Gardens that were sown. d Bava bathra, cap. 2. hal. 5.

2. מרחיקין אילן מן העיר כה אמה They permitted not a tree within five and twenty Cubits from the City. And this (as the Gloss speaks) for the grace of the City.

3. מרחיקין גורן קבוע מן העיר נ אמה They allowed not a barn-floor within fifty cubits from the City: that, when they fanned their corn, the chaff might not offend the Citizens.

4. They permitted not dead carkasses, or burying places, nor a Tanners shop to be within fifty Cubits from the City (because of the stink.) Nor did they allow a Tanners Workshop at all but on the Eastside of the City. R. Akiba saith, On any side, except the West, but at the distance of fifty cubits.

III. From the Cities let us walk forth into their plowed grounds and fields.

Here you might see in some places e certain tokens hung upon some figtrees, to shew of what year the fruit that grew there, was. See what we say on Matth. XXI. 19. In other places you might see barren trees stigmatized with some mark of infamy. f A tree, which shook off its fruits before they were ripe, סוקרין אותו בסיקרא they mark with red, and load it with stones. e Hieros. Shevi'ith, fol. 35. 4 f Ibid. Col. 3.

You might see the plowing and mowing of their fields, the dressing of their Vines, and their Vintage to be done by the rules of the Scribes, as well as by the art of the Husbandman, or the Vinedresser. For such was the care and diligence of the Fathers of the Traditions, concerning tithing Corn and Fruits, concerning leaving a corner for the poor, concerning the avoiding of sowing different seeds, and of not transgressing the Law concerning the seventh year; that they might not plow, nor sow, nor reap, but according according to the Traditional rule. Hence are thoſe infinite Diſputes in the books Peah, Demai, Kilaim, Sheviith, g of the corner of the field to be left, what and how much the portion of it was, and of what things ſuch corners ought to conſiſt? h Of thoſe that divide the field ſo, that a double corner of it is due to the poor: i Whether a corner is due from beds of corn that grow among Olive-trees? Of their rows, of the beds of the Vineyard, of ſowing within the Preſs, &c. and innumerable deciſions of that nature, which did ſo keep the Countryman within bounds, that he could not plow nor mow his land according to his own will, but according to the rule of Tradition.

Subterraneous places. Mines. Caves.

THUS having taken ſome notice of the ſuperficies of the land, let us a little ſearch into its bowels. You may divide that ſubterraneous Country into three parts: The Metal mines, the Caves, and the places of Burial.

This land was eminently noted for Metal mines, ſo that its ſtones in very many places, were iron, and out of its hills was digged braſs, Deut. VIII. 9. From theſe, gain accrued to the Jews, but to the Chriſtians not ſeldom ſlavery and miſery; being frequently condemned hither by Tyrants: So Euſebius of Edeſſus, Τοῖς κατ' Παλαιςίνην δεδοῦ μετάλλοις, a He was condemned to the Metal mines in Paleſtine. And again concerning others, Ἔιτ' ὀπὶ τὰς λοιπὰς μελαῶας ὁμολογητὰς, τοῖς κατ' Φαινὼ δ Παλαιςίνης χαλκῷ μετάλλοις τὰς πάντας ἀπεδείδεσν· b Then paſſing to the other Confeſſors of Chriſt, he condemns them all to the braſs mines, which were in Pheno of Paleſtine.

b Ibid. cap. 17

On the North part of the land, in the Country of Aſer, were mines of metal. Hence is that in Deut. XXXIII. 25. Thy ſhoes ſhall be iron and braſs. On the South, in the deſert of Sin, the utmoſt bounds of Judea, were mines alſo: hence וְעָבַר צִנָּה And ſhall paſs to Sin, as our tranſlation reads, Numb. XXXIV. 4. in the Jeruſalem Targumiſt is עֲבַר בְּטוּר פַּרְזְלָא Over againſt the mountain of iron: and in Jonathan לְצִינֵי טוּר פַּרְזְלָא Unto the Palmtrees of the mountain of iron: and in the Talmudiſts, צִינֵי הַר בַּרְזֶל כְּשֵׁרוֹת c The Palmtrees of the mountain of iron are fit to make a ſmall bundle to carry in the hand, in the feaſt of Tabernacles. On the Eaſt coaſt of Perea was alſo Σιδηρᾶν ὄρος, An iron mountain, witneſs d Joſephus. And without doubt, there were other ſuch like mines, ſcattered here and there in other parts of that land, though of them we have no mention.

d De bello, lib 4 cap 27.

You will not at all wonder at theſe underminings of the Earth, ſeeing they brought ſo much profit and gain with them, and were ſo neceſſary to the life of man. But what ſhall we ſay of thoſe Dens and Caves in Rocks and Mountains, whence no gain ſeemed to be digged, but rather danger aroſe to the neighbouring places oftentimes? For what were theſe, but lurking places for wild beaſts and robbers? There is infinite mention of theſe Caves both in the Holy Scriptures, and in other Writings, eſpecially in Joſephus, where σπήλαια, and ἀπήλαγα, ſubterraneous paſſages, and Dens are mentioned a thouſand times. And many of theſe were of a vaſt largeneſs, ſcarcely to be credited; thoſe eſpecially in the Talmudiſts, which are called The Dens of Zedekiah, not a few miles in meaſure.

But were thoſe hollows the work of nature, or of the hands and induſtry of man? By one example taken out of Joſephus, the thing may be determined. Relating the ſtory of a Caſtel built by Hyrcanus in Perea, among other things he ſpeaks thus: Ἐκ δὲ τοῦ κατ' ἀντικρὺ τοῦ ὄρους πέτρας διατεμὼν αὐτῆς τὸ προέχον, ἀπήλαγα πολλῶν σταδίων τὸ μῆκος, κατεσκεύασεν· e Out of the Rock againſt the Mountain having cut in two the prominent part of it, he made Dens of many furlongs long. And a little after, Τὰ μὲν τοι σώματα τῶν ἀπηλαίων, ὥστε

ὥστε ἕνα δι' αὐτῆς εἰσιέναι, καὶ μὴ πλείους, βραχύτερα ἤνοιξε· He made the mouths that opened into these Dens to be strait, that but one might go in at a time, and no more: καὶ ταῦτ' ἐπίτηδες ἀσφαλείας ἕνεκα, τὸ μὴ πολιορκηθεὶς ὑπὸ τῶν Ἀδελφῶν κινδυνεῦσαι ληφθεὶς κακῶσθαι· and this he did on purpose for security sake, and for avoiding danger in case he should be besieged by his brethren.

These Dens therefore were cut out of Mountains and Rocks for the uses of War, that they might serve for refuge and strength. And it is probable, the Canaanites, a warlike and Gygantic Nation, had digged very many of these Caves, before the entrance of the Israelites into that land; and that the Israelites also encreased the number of them. See concerning these Caves, Jos. X. 16. Judg. VI. 2. 1 Sam. XXII. 1. & XXIV. 3. 1 King. XVIII. 13. Esa. II. 19. &c.

CHAP. C.

Of the places of burial.

THERE were more common, and more noble Sepulchres. The common were in publick burying places, as it is with us: but they were without the City. a And through that place was no current of waters to be made, through it was no publick way to be, cattel were not to feed there nor was wood to be gathered from thence. a Massech. Semahoth, c. 14.

b Nor was it lawful to walk among the Sepulchres with Phylacteries fastned to their heads, nor with the book of the Law hanging at their arm. b Bab. Berac. fol. 18. 1.

Some Sepulchres were extraordinary, that is in reference to the place of their situation. As 1. קבר הנמצא c A Sepulchre found; that is, when a Sepulchre is in some bodies field without his knowledge; but at last the sepulchre is discovered. 2. קבר מזיק את הרבים A Sepulchre that is publickly noxious; that is, digged near some place of common walk or travail: from the nearness of which the passengers contract pollution. c Bab. Sanhedr. fol 47.2. & Hieros. Nidarim, fol. 57.4.

The more noble Sepulchres were hewn out in some Rock, in their own ground, with no little charge and art. You have the form of them described in the place noted in the margin, in these words:

d He that selleth his neighbour a place of burial, and he that takes of his neighbour a place of burial, let him make the inner parts of the Cave four cubits, and six cubits: and let him open within it ח' כוכין eight Sepulchres. They were not wont, say the Glosses, to bury men of the same family here and there, scatteringly, and by themselves, but altogether in one Cave: whence if any one sells his neighbour a place of burial, he sells him room for two Caves, or hollows on both sides, and a floor in the middle. כוך is the very place, where the deads Corps is laid. d Bava Bathra, cap. 6 hal. ult.

The Tradition goes on. ג' כוכין מכאן Three Sepulchres are on this side, and three on that, and two near them. And those Sepulchres are four cubits long, seven high, and six broad.

To those that entred into the Sepulchral Cave, and carried the Bier, there was first a floor, where they stood, and set down the Bier, in order to their letting it down into the Sepulchre; on this and the other side, there was a Cave, or a hollowed place, deeper than the floor by four cubits, into which they let down the Corps, divers Coffins being there prepared for divers Corps. R. Simeon saith, The hollow of the Cave consists of six cubits, and eight cubits, and it opens thirteen Sepulchres within it, four on this side, and four on that, and three before them, and one on the right hand of the door, and another on the left. And the floor within the entrance into the Cave consists of a square, according to the dimensions of the Bier, and of them that bear it: and from it it opens two Caves, one on this side, and another on that. R. Simeon saith, Four at the four sides of it. Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel saith, The whole is made according to the condition of the ground.

These things are handled by the Gemarists, and Glossers very curiously and very largely, whom you may consult. From these things now spoken, you may more plainly understand many matters, which are related of the Sepulchre of our Saviour. Such as these,

Mark XVI. 5. The women entring into the Sepulchre saw a young man sitting on the right hand: in the very floor immediately after the entrance into the Sepulchre.

Luke XXIV. 3. Going in they found not his body, &c. verſ. 5. While they bowed down their faces to the Earth, verſ. 12. Peter ran to the Sepulchre, and when he had ſtooped down, he ſaw the linnen cloths. That is, The Women, and Peter after them, ſtanding in the floor (בחצר) bow down their faces, and look downward into the place, where the Sepulchres themſelves were, (למערת הכוכין the Cave of the graves) which, as we ſaid before, was four cubits deeper than the floor.

John XX. 5. The Diſciple, whom Jeſus loved, came firſt to the Sepulchre; and when he had ſtooped down (ſtanding in the floor, that he might look into the burying place) ſaw the linnen cloths lie; yet went he not in. But Peter went in, &c. that is, From the floor he went down into the Cave it ſelf, where the rows (כוכין) of the Graves were (in which nevertheleſs no corpſes had been as yet laid, beſides the body of Jeſus:) thither alſo after Peter, John goes down. And verſ. 11. But Mary weeping ſtood at the Sepulchre without: and while ſhe wept ſhe ſtooped down to the Sepulchre, and ſaw two Angels in white ſitting, one at the head, and another at the feet, where the body of Chriſt had lain.

She ſtood at the Sepulchre without: that is, Within the Cave, on the floor, but without that deeper Cave, where the very Graves were, or כוכין the places for the bodies: bowing her ſelf, to look down thither, ſhe ſaw two Angels at the head and foot of that כוך Coffin, wherein the body of Chriſt had been laid.

LONDON,

Printed by William Rawlins, for Richard Chiſwell at the Roſe and Crown in St. Paul's Church-yard. MDCLXXXIII.

To his dear Friends, the Students of Katharine-Hall, Health.

THOSE very arguments, which first and chiefly moved me to turn over the Talmudical Writings, moved me also to this present work: so that from the same reasons, whence that reading first proceeded, from them, proceed also this fruit and benefit of it. For first, When all the books of the New Testament were written by Jews, and among Jews, and unto them; and when all the discourses made there, were made in like manner by Jews, and to Jews, and among them, I was always fully perswaded, as of a thing past all doubting, that that Testament could not but every where taste of, and retain the Jews style, idiom, form and rule of speaking.

And hence in the second place, I concluded, as assuredly, that in the obscurer places of that Testament (which are very many) the best and most natural method of searching out the sense is, to enquire how and in what sense those phrases and manners of speech were understood according to the vulgar and common dialect and opinion of that Nation; and how they took them, by whom they were spoken, and by whom they were heard. For it is no matter, what we can beat out concerning those manners of speech on the anvil of our own conceit, but what they signified among them in their ordinary sense and speech. And since this could be found out no other way, then by consulting Talmudic Authors who both speak in the vulgar dialect of the Jews, and also handle and reveal all Jewish matters; being induced by these reasons, I applied my self chiefly to the reading these Books: I knew indeed well enough, that I must certainly wrestle with infinite difficulties, and such as were hardly to be overcome, yet I undervalued them all, and armed my self with a firm purpose, that if, it were possible, I might arrive to a fuller and more deep knowledge and understanding of the style and Dialect of the New Testament.

The ill report of those Authors, whom all do so very much speak against, may at first discourage him that sets upon the reading of their Books. The Jews themselves stink in Marcellinus (Lib. XXII.) and their Writings stink as much almost among all; and they labour under this, I know not what, singular misfortune, that, being not read, they displease, and that they are sufficiently reproached by those that have read them, but undergo much more infamy by those that have not.

The almost unconquerable difficulty of the Stile, the frightful roughness of the Language, and the amazing emptiness and sophistry of the matters handled, do torture, vex and tyre him that reads them. They do every where abound with trifles in that manner, as though they had no mind to be read; with obscurities and difficulties, as though they had no mind to be understood. So that the Reader hath need of patience all along, to inable him to bear both trifling in sense, and roughness in expression.

I indeed propounded three things to my self, while I turned them over, that I might, as much as I could, either undervalue those vexations of reading, or soften them, or recreate my self with them, and that I might reap and enjoy some light to the Holy Scriptures, but especially either to the Phrases, or Sentences, or history of the New Testament.

I. I resolved with my self to observe those things, which seemed to yield fruit from them, if I could, and as much as I could.

II. To set down such things in my Note-books, which carried some mention of of certain places in the land of Israel, or afforded some light into the Chorography of that land.

III. To note those things, which referred to the history of the Jews, whether Ecclesiastical, or Scholastick, or Civil; or which referred to the Christian history, or the history of the rest of the world.

And now, after having viewed and observed the nature, art, matter and marrow of these Authors, with as much intention as we could, I cannot paint out in little a true and lively character of them better, than in these paradoxes and riddles. There are no Authors do more affright and vex the Reader, and yet there are none, who do more intice and delight him. In no Writers is greater or equal trifling, and yet in none is greater, or so great benefit. The Doctrine of the Gospel hath no more bitter enemies than they, and yet the Text of the Gospel hath no more plain interpreters. To say all in a word, To the Jews their Countrymen they recommend nothing but toys, and destruction and poyson; but Christians, by their skill and industry, may render them most usefully serviceable to their Studies, and most eminently tending to the Interpretation of the New Testament.

We here offer some specimen of this our reading and our choice, for the Readers sake, if so it may find acceptance with the Reader. We know, how exposed to suspicion it is, to produce new things, how exposed to hatred the Talmudic Writings are, how exposed to both, and to sharp censure also, to produce them in holy things. Therefore this our more unusual manner of explaining Scripture cannot upon that very account, but look for a more unusual censure, and become subject to a severer examination. But when the lot is cast, it is too late at this time to desire to avoid the sequel of it, and too much in vain in this place, to attempt a defense. If the work and book it self does not carry something with it, which may plead its cause, and obtain the Readers pardon and favour, our oration, or beging Epistle will little avail to do it. The present work therefore is to be exposed, and delivered over to its fate and fortune, whatsoever it be: Some there are, we hope, who will give it a milder and more gentle reception; for this very thing dealing favourably and kindly with us, that we have been intent upon our Studies, that we have been intent upon the Gospel, and that we have endeavoured after Truth; they will shew us favour, that we followed after it, and if we have not attained it, they will pity us. But as for the wrinkled forehead, and the stern brow, we are prepared to bear them with all patience, being armed and satisfied with this inward Patronage, That we have endeavoured to profit.

But this Work whatever it be, and whatever fortune it is like to meet with, we would dedicate to You, My very dear Katherine-Hall men, both as a Debt, and as a Desire. For by this most close bond and tye, wherewith we are united, to You is due all that we study, all that we can do, if so be that All is any thing at all. And when we desire to profit all (if we could) which becomes both a Student and a Christian to do, by that bond and your own merits, You are the very centre and rest of those Desires and wishes. We are sufficiently conscious to our selves how little or nothing we can do either for the publick benefit, or for Yours, yet we would make a publick Profession before all the World of our Desire and Study; and before You of our inward and cordial affection.

Let this pledge therefore of our love and endearment be laid up by You, and while we endeavour to give others an account of our Hours, let this give You an assurance of our Affections. And may it last in Katherine-Hall, even to future Ages, as a Testimony of Service, a Monument of Love, and a Memorial both of Me and You.

Βίβλος Γενέσεως Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. The Book of the Generation of Jeſus Chriſt.

ע"ש שרה יוחסין עלו מבבל וגו":

TEN a Stocks came up out of Babylon: 1. כהני Prieſts. 2. לוי Levites. 3. ישראל Iſraelites. 4. חללי Common Perſons, as to the Prieſthood: ſuch whoſe Fathers indeed were ſprung from Prieſts, but their Mothers unfit to be admitted to the Prieſts Marriage Bed. 5. גורי Proſelytes. 6. חרורי Liberrty, or Servants ſet Free. 7. ממזרי Nothi: for ſuch as were born in Wedlock; but that which was unlawful. 8. נתיני Nethinims. 9. שתוקי Baſtards: ſuch as came of a certain Mother, but of an uncertain Father. 10. אסופי Such as were gathered up out of the Streets, whoſe Fathers and Mothers were uncertain.

a Talm. in Kiddush. cap. 4. Art. 1.

A defiled Generation indeed! and therefore brought up out of Babylon in this common ſink, according to the Opinion of the Hebrews, that the whole Jewiſh Seed, ſtill remaining there, might not be polluted by it. כי לא עלה צורא מבבל עד שעשא כסורת נקיה: For Ezra went not up out of Babylon, until he had rendred it pure as flower. They are words of the Babylonian Gemara, which the gloſs explains thus: He left not any there that were illegitimate in any reſpect, but the Prieſts and Levites only, and Iſraelites of a pure and undefiled Stock. Therefore he brought up with him theſe ten kinds of Pedigrees, that theſe might not be mingled with thoſe when there remained now no more a Sanhedrin there, which might take care of that matter. Therefore he brought them to Jeruſalem, where care might might be taken by the Sanhedrin fixed there, that the legitimate might not marry with the illegitimate.

Let us think of theſe things a little, while we are upon our entrance into the Goſpel Hiſtory.

I. How great a cloud of obſcurity could not but ariſe to the people concerning the original of Chriſt, even from the very return out of Babylon, when they either certainly ſaw, or certainly believed that they ſaw, a purer ſpring of Jewiſh blood there, than in the Land of Iſrael it ſelf?

II. How great a care ought there to be in the Families of pure blood, to preſerve themſelves untouched and clean from this impure ſink; and to lay up among themſelves Genealogical Scrols from generation to generation, as faithful witneſſes and laſting monuments of their legitimate ſtock and free blood?

b Hieroſ. Kiddush, fol. 65.2. Bab. ibid, fol. 71.

Hear a complaint and a Story in this caſe; b R. Jochanan ſaid, By the Temple, it is in our hand to diſcover who are not of pure blood in the Land of Iſrael: But what ſhall I do when the chief men of this generation lie hid? (that is, when they are not of pure blood, and yet we muſt not declare ſo much openly concerning them.) He was of the ſame Opinion with R. Iſaac, who ſaid, משפחה שנטמעה נטמעה A Family (of the poluted blood) that lies hid, let it lie hid. Abai alſo ſaith, We have learned this alſo by tradition, that there was a certain Family called the Family of Beth-Zeripha, beyond Jordan, and a Son of Zion removed it away. (The gloſs is, ſome eminent Man by a publick Proclamation declared it impure.) But he cauſed another, which was ſuch (that is, impure) to come near. And there was another which the Wiſe-men would not manifeſt.

III. When it eſpecially lay upon the Sanhedrin, ſealed at Hieruſalem, to preſerve pure Families, as much as in them lay, pure ſtill; and when they preſcribed Canons of preſerving the legitimation of the people (which you may ſee in thoſe things that follow at the place alledged) there was ſome neceſſity to lay up publick Records of Pedigrees with them: whence it might be known what Family was pure, and what defiled. Hence that of Simon Ben Azzai deſerves our notice; c I ſaw, ſaith he, a Genealogical ſcrol in Jeruſalem, in which it was thus written, N. a Baſtard of a ſtrang Wife. Obſerve, that even a Baſtard was written in their publick Books of Genealogy, that he might be known to be a Baſtard, and that the purer Families might take heed of the defilement of his ſeed. Let that alſo be noted, d They found a Book of Genealogy at Jeruſalem, in which it was thus written, Hillel was ſprung from David. Ben Jatſaph from Aſaph. Ben Tſitſith hacceſeth from Abner. Ben Cobeſin from Achab, &c. And the Records of the Genealogies ſmell of thoſe things which are mentioned in the Text of the Miſhnah concerning Wood-carrying. e The Prieſts and Peoples times of Wood-carrying were nine. On the firſt day of the month Niſan, for the Sons of Erach the Son of Judah: the twentieth day of Tammuz, for the Sons of David, the Son of Judah: the fifth day of Ab, for the Sons of Paroſh, the Son of Judah: the ſeventh of the ſame month, for the Sons of Jonadab; the Son of Rechab: the tenth of the ſame for the Sons of Senaah the Son of Benjamin, &c.

e Taanith, cap. 4 hal. 5.

It is therefore eaſie to gueſs whence Matthew took the laſt fourteen generations of this Genealogy, and Luke the firſt forty Names of his: namely, from the Genealogical Scrols, at that time well enough known, and laid up in the publick ταμιεῖα, Repoſitories, and in the private alſo. And it was neceſſary indeed, in ſo noble and ſublime a ſubject, and a thing that would be ſo much inquired into by the Jewiſh people, as the Lineage of the Meſſiah would be, that the Evangeliſts ſhould deliver a truth not only that could not be gain-ſaid; but alſo, that might be proved and eſtabliſhed from certain and undoubted Rolls of Anceſtors.

Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. Of Jeſus Chriſt.

That the Name of Jeſus is ſo often added to the Name of Chriſt in the New Teſtament, is not only, that thereby Chriſt might be pointed out for the Saviour; (which the Name Jeſus ſignifies) but alſo that Jeſus might be pointed out for true Chriſt: againſt the unbelief of the Jews; who though they acknowledged a certain Meſſiah, or Chriſt, yet they ſtifly denyed that Jeſus of Nazareth was he. This obſervation takes place in numberleſs places of the New Teſtament, Act. ii. 36. & viij. 35. 1 Cor. vi. 22. 1 John ii. 22. & iv. 15, &c.

Υἱοῦ Δαβίδ. The Son of David.

That is, the true Meſſias. For by no more ordinary, and more proper Name did the Jewiſh Nation point out the Meſſiah, then by בן דוד The Son of David. See Mat. XII. 23. & XXI. 9. & XXII. 42. Luke XVIII. 38. and every where in the Talmudic Writings, but but eſpecially in f Bab. Sanhedrin: where it is alſo diſcuſſed, what kind of times thoſe ſhould be when the Son of David ſhould come. f fol. 97. 1.

The things which are deviſed by the Jews concerning Meſſiah Ben Joſeph (which the Targum upon Cant. IV. 5. calls Meſſiah Ben Ephraim) are therefore deviſed, to comply with their giddineſs, and loſs of judgment in their opinion of the Meſſiah. For ſince they deſpiſed the true Meſſiah, who came in the time foreallotted by the Prophets, and Crucified him; they ſtill expect I know not what Chimerical one, concerning whom they have no certain opinion: whether he ſhall be one, or two; whether he ſhall ariſe from among the living, or from the dead; whether he ſhall come in the clouds of Heaven, or ſitting upon an Aſs, &c. They expect a Son of David, but they know not whom, they know not when.

Ἰούδαν. JUDA.

IN Hebrew יהודה Jehudah. Which word not only the Greeks for want of the Letter h in the middle of a word, but the Jews themſelves do contract into יורה Judah: which occurs infinite times in the Jeruſalem Talmud. g The ſame perſon who is called ר' יוסי בי ר' יהודה R. Joſe Bi R. Jehudoh; in the next line is called ר' יוסי בי ר' יורה R. Joſe Bi R. Judah. So alſo h Shabb. And this is done i elſewhere in the very ſame line. g Demai, fol. 22. 3. h fol. 4. 4. i Tom. Iobh, fol. 62. 3.

VERS. 5.

Βοὸζ ἐκ τῆς Ῥαχάβ. Booz of Rachab.

SO far the Jewiſh Writers agree with Matthew, that they confeſs Rachab was Married to ſome Prince of Iſrael, but miſtaking concerning the perſon; whether they do this out of ignorance, or wilfully, let themſelves look to that. Concerning this matter, the Babylonian Gemara hath theſe words: k Eight Prophets, and thoſe Prieſts ſprang from Rachab, and they are theſe; Neriah, Baruch, Seraiah, Maaſeiah, Jeremiah, Hilkiah, Hanameel, and Shallum. R. Judah ſaith, Huldah alſo was of the Poſterity of Rachab. And a little after, There is a tradition that ſhe being made a proſelyteſs, was Married to Joſua. (Which Kimchi alſo produceth in Joſ. Chap. VI.) Here the gloſs caſts in a ſcruple: It ſounds ſomewhat harſhly, ſaith it, that Joſua Married one that was made a Proſelyte; when it was not lawful to contract Marriage with the Canaanites, though they became Proſelytes. Therefore we muſt ſay, that ſhe was not of the Seven Nations of the Canaanites, but of ſome other Nation, and ſojourned there. But others ſay, That that prohibition took not place before the entrance into the Promiſed Land, &c. k Megill, fol. 14. 2.

VERS. 8.

Ἰωρὰμ δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Ὀζίαν. And Joram begat Ozias.

THE Names of Ahazias, Joaſh, and Amazias are ſtruck out. See the Hiſtory in the Books of the Kings, and 1 Chron. III. 11, 12.

I. The Promiſe, That the Throne of David ſhould not be empty, paſſed over after a manner for ſome time into the Family of Jehu, the overthrower of Jorams Family. For when he had razed the Houſe of Ahab, and had ſlain Ahaziah, ſprung on the Mothers ſide of the Family of Ahab; the Lord promiſeth him, that his Sons ſhould Reign unto the fourth generation, 2 King. X. 30. Therefore however, the mean time the Throne of David was not empty; and that Joaſh and Amazias ſate during the ſpace between: yet their Names are not unfitly omitted by our Evangeliſt, both becauſe they were ſometimes not very unlike Joram in their manners; and becauſe their Kingdom was very much eclipſed by the Kingdom of Iſrael, when Ahazias was ſlain by Jehu; and his Couſin Amazias taken and baſely ſubdued by his Couſin Joas, 2 Chron. XXV.

II. זרע רשאום נכרת The ſeed of the wicked ſhall be cut off, Pſal. XXXVII. verſ. 28. Let the ſtudious Reader obſerve, That in the Original, in this very place, the Letter ע Ain, which is the laſt Letter of רשע Wicked; and of זרע Seed, is cut off, and is not expreſſed; when by the rule of Acroſtic Verſe, (according to which this Pſalm is compoſed) that Letter ought to begin the next following Verſe.

III. Thou ſhalt not make to thy ſelf any graven Image, &c. For I the Lord thy God am a jealous God; viſiting the iniquity of the Fathers upon the Children, unto the third and fourth generation, Exod. XX. 5.

Joram walked in the idolatrous ways of the Kings of Iſrael, according to the manner of the Family of Ahab, 2 King. VIII. 18. Which horrid violation of the Second Command God viſits upon his Poſterity, according to the threatning of that Command; and therefore the Names of his Sons are daſhed out unto the fourth Generation.

IV. The Old Teſtament alſo ſtigmatizeth that Idolatry of Joram in a way not unlike this of the New; and ſhews that Family unworthy to be numbred among Davids progeny, 2 Chron. XXII. 2. בן ארבעים ושתים שנה אחזיהו Ahazias the Son of two and forty years: that is, not of his age, (for he was not above two and twenty, 2 King. VIII. 26.) but of the duration of the Family of Omri, (of which Stock Ahazias was, on the Mothers ſide) as will ſufficiently appear to him that computes the years. A fatal thing ſurely! that the years of a King of Judah ſhould be reckoned by the account of the Houſe of Omri.

V. Let a Genealogical ſtile, not much different be obſerved, 1 Chron. IV. 1. where Shobal, born in the fifth or ſixth Generation from Judah, is reckoned as if he were an immediate Son of Judah. Compare Chap. II. 50.

In the like manner Ezr. VII. in the Genealogy of Ezra five or ſix Generations are erazed.

Ἰωσίας δὲ ἐγέννησε τὸν Ἰεχονίαν. And Joſias begat Jechonias.

THE Sons of Joſias were theſe: The firſt born Jochanan, the ſecond Joachim, the third Zedechiah, the fourth Shallum, 1 Chron. III. 15. Who this Shallum was the Jeruſalem Talmudiſts do diſpute. a R. Jochanan ſaith, Jochanan, and Jehoachaz were the ſame. And when it is written, Jochanan the firſt born, it means this, That he was the firſt born to the Kingdom: that is, He firſt Reigned. And R. Jochanan ſaith, Shallum and Zedekias are the ſame. And when it is written, Zedekias the third, Shallum the fourth; he was the third in birth, but he reigned fourth. The ſame things are produced in the Tract b Sotah. But R. Chimchi much righter: c Shallum, ſaith he, is Jechonias, who had two names, and was reckoned for the Son of Joſias, when he was his Grandchild, (or the Son of his Son.) For the Sons of Sons are reputed for Sons. Compare Jer. XXII. verſ. 11. with 24. and the thing it ſelf ſpeaks it. And that which the Gemariſts now quoted, ſay, Zedekiah was alſo called Shallum, שנשלמה מלכות בית דוד Becauſe in his days Shalmah, an end, was put to the Kingdom of the Family of David: This alſo agrees very fitly to Jechonias, Jer. XXII. 28, 29, 30.

Ἰεχονίας ἐγέννησε τὸν Σαλαθιήλ. Jechonias begat Salathiel.

THAT is, a ſon of the Kingdom, or Succeſſor in that dignity of the Houſe of David whatſoever it was which was altogether withered in the reſt of the Sons of Joſiah, but did ſomewhat flouriſh again in him, 2 King. XXV. 27. And hence it is, that of all the poſterity of Joſiah, Jechonias only is named by St. Matthew.

Jeohonias in truth was Ἄτεκνος, without Children, Jer. XXII. 30. and Salathiel, properly ſpeaking, was the Son of Neri, Luk. III. 27. but yet Jechonias is ſaid to beget him; not that he was truly his Father, but that the other was his Succeſſor; not indeed in his Kingly dignity, for that was now periſhed, but into that which now was the chief Dignity among the Jews. So 1 Chron. III. 16. Zedekias is called the Son, either of Joakim, whoſe Brother indeed he was; or of Jechonias, whoſe Uncle he was; becauſe he ſucceeded him in the Kingly Dignity.

The Lord had declared, and that not without an Oath, that Jechonias ſhould be ערירי Without Children. The Talmudiſts do ſo interpret ערירי d R. Judan ſaith, All they, of whom it is ſaid ערירים יהיו theſe ſhall be Ἄτεκνοι, without Children, they ſhall have no Children. And thoſe of whom it is ſaid ערירים ימותו They ſhall die without Children; they bury their Children.

So Kimchi alſo upon the place. The word ערירי ſaith he, means this, That his Sons ſhall die in his life, if he ſhall now have Sons: but if he ſhall not now have Sons he never ſhall. But our Rabbins of bleſſed memory, ſay, That he repented in priſon. And they ſay moreover, Oh! how much doth Repentance avail, which evacuates a penal Edict? For it is ſaid, Write ye this Man Childleſs: but he repenting; this Edict turned to his good, &c. R. Jochanan ſaith, His carrying away expiated. For when it is ſaid, Write this Man Childleſs; after the carrying away, it is ſaid, The Sons of Coniah, Aſſir his Son, Shealtiel his Son. Theſe things are in e Bab. Sanhedr. where theſe words are added, אסיר בנו שעברתו אמו בבית

But the words in the Original are theſe, ובני יכניה אסר שאלתיאל בנו which are thus to be rendred, Now the ſons of Jechonias bound (or, impriſoned) were Shealtiel his ſon. Which Verſion both the accents, and the order of the words confirm. For Zakeph hung over אסר to which Munach beneath יכניה ſerves, perſwades that it is a conjunct conſtruction, to wit, that יכניה Jechoniah, and אסר bound ſhould be joyned together that is, a Subſtantive and an Adjective. And the word בנו his ſon, placed after שאלתיאל Shealtiel, not after אסר bound, fixeth the genealogy in Salathiel, not in אסר Aſir at all.

VERS. XVI.

משפחת אם אין קרויה משפחה: f The mothers family is not to be called a family. Hence the reaſon may very eaſily be given, why Matthew brings down the generation to Joſeph, Maries huſband; but Luke to Eli, Maries Father. Theſe two frame the Genealogy two ways, according to the double notion of the promiſe of Chriſt. For he is promiſed, as the Seed of the Woman, and as the Son of David: that as a man, this as a King. It was therefore needful in ſetting down his Genealogy, that ſatisfaction ſhould be given concerning both. Therefore Luke declareth him the promiſed ſeed of the Woman, deducing his Mothers ſtock, from whence man was born, from Adam. Matthew exhibits his Royal Original, deriving his pedegree along through the Royal family of David to Joſeph his (reputed) Father.

VERS. XVII.

Γενεαὶ δεκατέσσαρες. Fourteen Generations.

ALthough all things do not ſquare exactly in this three fold number of fourteen generations, yet there is no reaſon why this ſhould be charged as a fault upon Matthew, when in the Jewiſh Schools themſelves it obtained for a cuſtom, yea almoſt for an Axiome, to reduce things and numbers to the very ſame, when they were near alike. The thing will be plain by an Example or two, when an hundred almoſt might be produced.

Five Calamitous things are aſcribed to the ſame day, that is, to the ninth day of the month Ab. g For that day, ſay they, it was decreed, that the people ſhould not go into the promiſed land: the ſame day the firſt Temple was laid waſte, and the ſecond alſo: the City Bitter was deſtroyed, and the City Jeruſalem plowed up. Not that they believed all theſe things fell out preciſely the ſame day of the month, but as the Babylonian Gemara notes upon it. מגלגלין צורת ליום וכאו וחובדה ליום חיוב That they might reduce a fortunate thing to a holy day, and an unfortunate to an unlucky day.

g Taanith, cap. 4. artic. 6.

The Jeruſalem Gemara, in the ſame tract, examines the reaſon, why the daily prayers conſiſt of the number of eighteen, and among other things hath theſe words; h The daily prayers are eighteen, according to the number of the eighteen Pſalms, from the beginning of the book of Pſalms to that Pſalm, whoſe beginning is, The Lord hear thee in the day of trouble, (which Pſalm indeed is the Twentieth Pſalm.) But if any object that nineteen Pſalms reach thither, you may anſwer, The Pſalm, which begins, Why did the Heathen rage, is not of them. A diſtinct Pſalm. Behold with what liberty they fit numbers to their own caſe.

h Taanith, fol. 65.3.

Inquiry is made, whence the number of the thirty nine more principal ſervile works to be avoided on the Sabbath day, may be proved. Among other we meet with theſe words; אלף הרבים רבר רברי רבריס i R. Chaninah of Zippor ſaith in the name of R. Abhu, אלף Aleph denotes one, למר Lamed thirty, הא He five, רבר Dabar one, רבריס Debarim two. Hence are the forty works, ſave one, concerning which it is written in the Law. The Rabbins of Ceſarea ſay, Not any thing is wanting out of his place: אלף Aleph one, למר Lamed thirty, ח Cheth eight: לא חסרנין וכו' Our profound Doctors do not diſtinguiſh between He and Cheth: that they may fit numbers to their caſe, for אלה Theſe, they write, אלח, and change ה He and ח Cheth at their pleaſure.

i Hieroſ. Schabb. fol. 9.2.

l R. Joſua ben Levi ſaith, In all my whole life I have not looked into the (myſtical) book of Agada, but once: and then I looked into it, and found it thus written, An hundred ſeventy five Sections of the Law; where it is written דבר אשר צוה He ſpake, he ſaid, he commanded, they are for the number of the years of our Father Abraham. And a little after, An hundred and forty and ſeven Pſalms which are written in the book of the Pſalms, (note this number) are for the number of the years of our father Jacob. Whence this is hinted hinted, that all the praiſes, wherewith the Iſraelites praiſe God, are according to the years of Jacob. Thoſe hundred and twenty and three times, wherein the Iſraelites anſwer Hallelujah, are according to the number of the years of Aaron, &c.

They do ſo very much delight in ſuch kind of concents, that they oftentimes ſcrew up the ſtrings beyond the due meaſure, and ſtretch them till they crack. So that, if a Jew carps at thee, O Divine Matthew, for the unevenneſs of thy fourteens, out of their own Schools and Writings thou haſt that, not only whereby thou mayeſt defend thy ſelf, but retort upon them.

VERS. XVIII.

Μνηστευθείσης τῆς μητρὸς αὐτοῦ. When as his Mother was eſpouſed.

NO woman of Iſrael was married, unleſs ſhe had been firſt eſpouſed. m Before the giving of the Law (ſaith Maimonides) if the man and the woman had agreed about marriage, he brought her into his houſe, and privately married her. But after the giving of the Law, the Iſraelites were commanded, that if any were minded to take a woman for his wife, he ſhould conceive her firſt before witneſſes; and thenceforth let her be to him a wife, as it is written, כי יקח איש אשה If any one take a wife. This taking is one of the Affirmative precepts of the Law, and is called Eſpouſing. Of the manner and form of Eſpouſing you may read till you are weary in that Tractate, and in the Talmudic Tract, Kiddushin.

Πρὶν ἢ συνελθεῖν αὐτούς. Before they came together.

In many places the man eſpouſeth the woman, but doth not bring her home to him, but after ſome ſpace of time. So the n Gloſs upon Maimonides.

Diſtinction is made by the Jewiſh Canons, and that juſtly and openly between יחוד Private ſociety or Diſcourſe between the Eſpouſer and the Eſpouſed, and הכנסה The bringing of the Eſpouſed into the huſbands houſe. Of either of the two may thoſe words be underſtood, πρὶν ἢ συνελθεῖν αὐτούς, before they came together, or rather of them both. He had not only not brought her home to him, but he had no manner of ſociety with her alone, beyond the Canonical limits of diſcourſe that were allowed to unmarried perſons; and yet ſhe was found with child.

Εὑρέθη ἐν γαστρὶ ἔχουσα. She was found with child.

Namely after the ſpace of three months from her conception, when ſhe was now returned home from her Cozin Elizabeth. See Luke I. 56. and compare Gen. XXXVIII. 24. The Maſters of the Traditions aſſign this ſpace to diſcover a thing of that nature. A Woman, o ſay they, who is either put away from her husband, or become a Widdow, neither marrieth, nor is eſpouſed, but after ninety days. Namely, that it may be known, whether ſhe be big with child or no; and that diſtinction may be made between the offſpring of the firſt husband, and of the ſecond. In like manner a husband and wife, being made proſelytes, are parted from one another for ninety days, that judgment may be made between children begotten in holineſs, (that is, within the true Religion. See 1 Cor. VII. 14.) and children begotten out of holineſs.

VERS. XIX.

Ἰωσὴφ δὲ δίκαιος ὢν, &c. But Joſeph being a juſt man, &c.

THERE is no need to wrack the word δίκαιος juſt, to fetch out thence the ſenſe of gentleneſs or mercy, which many do: for conſtruing the clauſes of the verſe ſeparately, the ſenſe will appear clear and ſoft enough. Joſeph, being a juſt man, could not, would not indure an adultereſs: but yet not willing παραδειγματίσαι to make her a publick example, being a merciful man, and loving his wife, was minded to put her away privily.

Παραδειγματίσαι. To make her a publick Example.

This doth not imply death, but rather publick diſgrace לפרסמה To make her publick. For it may not without reaſon be enquired, whether ſhe would have been brought to capital puniſhment, if it had been true, that ſhe had conceived by adultery. For although there was a Law promulged of puniſhing adultery with death, Levit. XX. 10. Deut.

Deut. XXII. 22. and in this caſe ſhe that was eſpouſed would be dealt withal after the ſame manner, as it was with her who was become a wife; yet ſo far was that Law mollified, that I ſay not weakned, by the Law of giving a bill of Divorſe, Deut. XXIV. 1. &c. that the huſband might not only pardon his adulterous wife, and not compel her to appear before the Sanhedrin, but ſcarcely could, if he would, put her to death. For why otherwiſe was the bill of Divorſe indulged?

Joſeph therefore endeavours to do nothing here, but what he might with the full conſent both of the Law and Nation. The Adultereſs might be put away; ſhe that was eſpouſed could not be put away, without a bill of Divorſe, concerning which thus the Jewiſh Laws: p A woman is eſpouſed three ways, by mony, or by a writing, or by being lain with. And being thus eſpouſed, though ſhe were not yet married, nor conducted into the mans houſe, yet ſhe is his wife. And if any ſhall lye with her beſide him; he is to be puniſhed with death by the Sanhedrin. And if he himſelf will put her away he muſt have a bill of divorſe. p Maimon. in אישות cap. 1

Let the Talmudic Tract Gittin be looked upon, where they are treating of the manner of delivering a bill of Divorſe to a wife to be put away; among other things, it might be given privately, if the huſband ſo pleaſed, either into the womans hand, or boſom, two witneſſes only preſent.

VERS. XXIII.

Ἰδοὺ ἡ παρθένος ἐν γαστρὶ ἕξει. Behold a Virgin ſhall be with child.

THat the word עלמה in the Prophet denotes an untouched Virgin, ſufficiently appears from the ſenſe of the place, Eſa. VII. King Achaz there was affraid, leſt the enemies, that were now upon him, might deſtroy Jeruſalem, and utterly conſume the Houſe of David. The Lord meets with this fear by a ſignal and moſt remarkable promiſe, namely, that ſooner ſhould a pure Virgin bring forth a child, than the family of David periſh. And the promiſe yields a double comfort: namely, of Chriſt hereafter to be born of a Virgin: and of their ſecurity from the imminent danger of the City and houſe of David. So that, although that Propheſie of a Virgins bringing forth a ſon ſhould not be fulfilled till many hundreds of years after; yet at that preſent time, when the Propheſie was made, Ahaz had a certain and notable ſign, that the houſe of David ſhould be ſafe and ſecure from the danger that hung over it. As much as if the Prophet had ſaid, Be not ſo troubled, O Ahaz, does it not ſeem an impoſſible thing to thee, and that never will happen, that a pure Virgin ſhould become a Mother? But I tell thee, a pure Virgin ſhall bring forth a ſon, before the Houſe of David periſh.

Hear this, O unbelieving Jew, and ſhew us now ſome remainders of the Houſe of David; or confeſs this Propheſie fulfilled in the Virgins bringing forth: or deny that a ſign was given, when a ſign is given.

Ὅ ἐστι μεθερμηνευόμενον. Which is being interpreted.

I. All confeſs, that the Syriac Language was the Mother Tongue to the Jewiſh Nation dwelling in Judea; and that the Hebrew was not all underſtood by the common people may eſpecially appear from two things.

1. That in the Synagogues, when the Law and the Prophets were read in the original Hebrew, an Interpreter was always preſent to the Reader, who rendred into the Mother Tongue that which was read, that it might be underſtood by the common people. q Hence thoſe rules of the office of an Interpreter, and of ſome places, which were not to be rendred into the Mother Tongue. q Bab. Megill. fol. 25. &c. Maſſech. Sopherim, cap. 11. 12 &c.

2. That Jonathan the ſon of Uzziel, a Scholar of Hillel, about the time of Chriſts birth, rendred all the Prophets (that is, as the Jews number them, Joſhua, Judges, Samuel, the Books of the Kings, Eſaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and the twelve leſſer Prophets) into the Chaldee Language, that is, into a Language much more known to the people than the Hebrew, and more acceptable than the Mother Tongue. For if it be aſked, why he tranſlated them at all, and why he tranſlated not rather into the Mother Tongue, which was known to all: and if it be objected concerning S. Matthew, and S. Paul, that writing to the Jews, one his Goſpel, the other his Epiſtle (to the Hebrews,) Hebrews,) must have written in the Syriac Tongue, (if so be they wrote not in Hebrew,) that they might be understood by all. We answer,

First, It was not without reason, that the Paraphrast Jonathan translated out of the Hebrew original into the Chaldee Tongue, because this Tongue was much more known and familiar to all the people, than the Hebrew. The holy Text had need of an Interpreter into a more known Tongue, because it was now in a Tongue not known at all to the Vulgar. For none knew the Hebrew, but such as learned it by Study. However therefore all the Jews, inhabiting the land of Canaan, did not so readily understand the Chaldee Language, as the Syriac, which was their Mother Language; yet they much readilier understood that, than the Hebrew, which to the unlearned was not known at all. Hence it was not without necessity, that the Prophets were turned into the Chaldee Language by Jonathan, and the Law not much after by Onkelos, that they might a little be understood by the common people, by whom the Hebrew original was not understood at all

r Hieros. Schabb. fol. 15. col. 3. r We read also, that the Book of Job had its Targum in the time of Gamaliel the Elder, that is Pauls Master.

Secondly, It is no impertinent question, Why Jonathan and Onkelos did not rather translate into the Syriac Language, which was the Mother Language to all the people, when both they themselves were in Judea, while they were employed about this work, and laboured in it for the use of the Jews that dwelt there? To which we give this double answer, 1. That by turning it into the Chaldee Language they did a thing, which might be of use both to them that dwelt in Judea, and in Babylon also. 2. The Syriac Language was not so grateful unto the Jews, who used it for their Mother Tongue, as the Chaldee was, as being a Language more neat and polite, and the Mother Tongue to the brethren in Babylon, and which they that came up out of Babylon carried thence with them into Judea. You may wonder, Reader, when you hear that Canon, which permits a single man, to say his prayers in any Language, when he asks those things, that are needful for him, except only the Syriac. : יחיד שואל צרכיו אומר בכל לשון חוץ מלשון ארמי

s פסקו הר אש i. e. R. Obaie Rabbe. See Jarchas, fol. 84. 1. in Beracoth, cap. 2. & Bab. Schab. fol. 12. 2. & Sotah, fol. 33. 1.

s While he asketh necessaries for himself, let him use any Language but the Syriac. But you will laugh, when you hear the reason: Therefore by all means, because the Angels do not understand the Syriac Language.

Whether they distinguish the Syriac Language here from the pure Chaldee, is not of great moment solicitously to enquire: We shall only produce these things of the Glosser upon t Beracoth, which make to our purpose. There are some, saith he, who say, that that prayer, which begins קדיש, is therefore to be made in the Syriac Language, because it is a noble Prayer, and that deserves the highest praise; and therefore it is framed in the Targumistical Language, that the Angels may not understand it, and envy it to us, &c. And a little after, It was the custom to recite that Prayer קדיש אחר הדרשה after Sermon: and the common people were there present, who understood not the Hebrew Language at all, and therefore they appointed it to be framed in the Targumistical Language, that it might be understood by all: for this is their Tongue.

Mark, the Hebrew was altogether unknown to the common people; no wonder therefore, if the Evangelists and Apostles wrote not in Hebrew, when there were none who understood things so written, but learned Men only.

That also must not be passed over, which at first sight seems to hint, that the Syriac Language was not understood even by learned Men. u Samuel the little at the point of death said, : שמעון וישמעאל לחרבא ושאר כל עמא Simeon and Ismael to the sword And all the other people to the spoil : ועקין סגיאין הויין לביזה : And there shall be very great calamities. ובלשון ארמית אמרן וכו' And because he spoke these things in the Syriac Language, they understood not what he had said. This story you have repeated in the Babylonian Gemara, where the words of the dying man are thus related, שמעון וכו' x Let the Glosser upon the place be the Interpreter: Simeon and Ismael to the sword (that is, Rabban Simeon the Prince, and R. Ismael ben Elisha the high Priest, were slain with the sword) And his fellows to slaughter; (that is R. Akibah, and R. Chananiah ben Teradion were slain by other deaths: namely R. Akibah by iron teeth, and R. Chananiah by burning alive before Idols) And the other people for a prey, and very many calamities shall fall upon the World.

Now where it is said, That they understood not what he said, because he spake in the Syrian Tongue, we also do not easily understand. What? For the Jerusalem Doctors not to understand the Chaldee Language? For Samuel the little died before the destruction of the City; and he spake of the death of Rabban Simeon, who perished in the Seige of the City; and he spake these things, when some of the learnedst Rabbins were by: and yet, that they understood not these words; which even a smatterer in the Oriental Tongues would very easily understand?

Therefore perhaps you may beat out the sense of the matter from the words of the Author of Juchasin, who saith, y He propheseid in the Syriac Language, התנבא בלשון ארמי But now when Propheses were spoken only in the Hebrew Language, however they understood

derſtood the ſenſe of the words, yet they reputed it not for a propheſie, becauſe it was not uttered in the Language that was proper for prophetical predictions. But we tarry not here. That which we would have, is this, that Matthew wrote not in Hebrew, (which is proved ſufficiently by what is ſpoken before) if ſo be we ſuppoſe him to have written in a Language vulgarly known and underſtood, which certainly we ought to ſuppoſe: Nor that he, nor the other Writers of the New Teſtament writ in the Syriac Language unleſs we ſuppoſe them to have written in the ungrateful Language of an ungrateful Nation, which certainly we ought not to ſuppoſe. For when the Jewiſh people were now to be caſt off and to be doomed to eternal curſing, it was very improper certainly, to extol their Language, whether it were the Syriac Mother Tongue, or the Chaldee its cozin Language, unto that degree of honour, that it ſhould be the original Language of the New Teſtament. Improper certainly it was, to write the Goſpel in their Tongue, who above all the Inhabitants of the World moſt deſpiſed and oppoſed it.

II. Since therefore the Gentiles were to be called to the Faith, and to embrace the Goſpel by the preaching of it, the New Teſtament was writ very congruouſly in the Gentile Language, and in that, which among the Gentile Languages was the moſt noble, viz. The Greek. Let us ſee what the Jews ſay of this Language, envious enough againſt all Languages beſides their own.

z Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel ſaith, Even concerning the holy Books, the wiſe Men permitted not that they ſhould be writ in any other Language, than Greek. R. Abhu ſaith, that R. Jochanan ſaid, the Tradition is according to Rabban Simeon; that R. Jochanan ſaid moreover, Whence is that of Rabban Simeon proved? From thence, that the Scripture ſaith, The Lord ſhall perſwade Japhet, and he ſhall dwell in the tents of Sem? The words of Japhet ſhall be in the Tents of Sem: and a little after, יפת אלהים ליפת God ſhall perſwade Japhet, i. e. The grace of Japhet ſhall be in the Tents of Sem. Where the Gloſs ſpeaks thus; The Grace of Japhet is the Greek Language; the faireſt of thoſe Tongues, which belong to the ſons of Japhet. z Megillah, fol. 9. 2.

a Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel ſaith, Even concerning the ſacred books, they permitted not, that they ſhould be written in any other Language than Greek. They ſearched ſeriouſly, and found, שאין התיקרה יכולה וכו' That the Law could not be tranſlated according to what was needful for it, but in Greek. אלא יונית You have this latter clauſe cut off in Maſſecheth Sopherim, where this ſtory alſo is added: b The five Elders wrote the Law in Greek for Ptolomy the King: and that day was bitter to Iſrael, as the day wherein the golden Calf was made, becauſe the Law could not be tranſlated according to what was needful for it. This ſtory of the five Interpreters of the Law, is worthy of conſideration, which you find ſeldom mentioned, or ſcarce any where elſe. The Tradition next following after this, in the place cited, recites the ſtory of the LXX. Look it. a Hieroſ. Megill. fol. 71. 3. b Cap. 1. artic. 7.

When therefore the common uſe of the Hebrew Language had periſhed, and when the Mother Syriac or Chaldee Tongue of a curſed Nation, could not be bleſſed, our very enemies being judges, no other Language could be found, which might be fit to write the (New) divine Law, beſides the Greek Tongue. That this Language was ſcattered, and in uſe among all the Eaſtern Nations almoſt, and was in a manner the Mother Tongue; and that it was planted every where by the Conqueſts of Alexander, and the Empire of the Greeks, we need not many words to prove, ſince it is every where to be ſeen in the Hiſtorians. The Jews do well near acknowledge it for their Mother Tongue even in Judea.

c R. Jochanan of Beth Gubrin ſaid, There are four noble Languages, which the world uſeth: The Mother Tongue for Singing, the Roman for War, the Syriac for Mourning, and the Hebrew for Elocution; and there are ſome who ſay, the Aſſyrian for Writing. What is that which he calls the Mother Tongue? It is very eaſily anſwered, The Greek, from thoſe encomiums added to it, mentioned before: and that may more confidently be affirmed from the words of Midras Tillin, reſpecting this ſaying of R. Jochanan, and mentioning the Greek Language by name. d R. Jochanan ſaid, There are three Languages, The Roman for War, the Greek for Speech, the Aſſyrian for Prayer. To this alſo belongs that, that occurs once and again in Bab. Megillah, בלעז יוני e In the Greek mother Tongue, you have an Inſtance of the thing: f R. Levi coming to Ceſarea heard ſome קרין שמע אלתיסתין reciting the Phylacteries in the Helleniſtical Language. This is worthy to be marked. At Ceſarea flouriſhed the famous Schools of the Rabbins. רבנין דקיסרין The Rabbins of Ceſarea are mentioned in both Talmuds moſt frequently, and with great praiſe, but eſpecially in that of Jeruſalem. But yet among theſe, the Greek is uſed as the Mother Tongue, and that in reciting the Phylacteries, which you may well think, above all other things, in Judea were to be ſaid in Hebrew. c Hieroſ. Megill. in the place above, col. 2. d Midr. Till. fol. 25. 4. e Fol. 18. 1. f Hieroſ. Sotah, fol. 21. 2.

In that very Ceſarea, Hierom mentions the Hebrew Goſpel of S. Matthew to be laid up in the Library of Pamphilus, in theſe words: Matthew, who was alſo called Levi, from a Publican made an Apoſtle, firſt of all in Judea compoſed the Goſpel of Chriſt in Hebrew letters and and words, for their ſakes, who were of the circumciſion and believed. Which Goſpel, who he was that afterwards tranſlated it into Greek, it is not ſufficiently known. Moreover that very Hebrew Goſpel is reſerved to this day in the Library at Ceſarea, which Pamphilus the Martyr with much care collected. I alſo had leave given me by the Nazareans, who uſe this Book in Berea, a City of Syria, to write it out.

It is not at all to be doubted, that this Goſpel was found in Hebrew, but that which deceived the good man, was not the very hand writing of Matthew, nor indeed did Matthew write the Goſpel in that Language; but it was turned by ſome body out of the original Greek into Hebrew, that ſo, if poſſible, the Learned Jews might read it. For ſince they had little kindneſs for forreign books, that is, Heathen Books, or ſuch as were written in a Language different from their own, which might be illuſtrated from various Canons concerning this matter; ſome perſon converted to the Goſpel, excited with a good zeal, ſeems to have tranſlated this Goſpel of S. Matthew out of the Greek Original into the Hebrew Language, that learned Men among the Jews, who as yet believed not, might perhaps read it, being now publiſhed in their Language: which was rejected by them, while it remained in a foreign ſpeech. Thus I ſuppoſe this Goſpel was written in Greek by S. Matthew for the ſake of thoſe that believed in Judea, and turned into Hebrew by ſome body elſe for the ſake of thoſe that did not believe.

The ſame is to be reſolved concerning the original Language of the Epiſtle to the Hebrews. That Epiſtle was written to the Jews inhabiting Judea, to whom the Syriac was the Mother Tongue, but yet it was writ in Greek for the reaſons above named. For the ſame reaſons alſo the ſame Apoſtle writ in Greek to the Romans, although in that Church there were Romans, to whom it might ſeem more agreeable to have written in Latine; and there were Jews, to whom it might ſeem more proper to have written in Syriac.

VERS. I.

Τῦ δ' Ἰησῦ γενηθέντος. Now when Jeſus was born.

A calculation of the times, when Chriſt was born.

WE thus lay down a Scheme of the times, when Chriſt was born.

I. He was born in the year of the World, MMMDCCCCXXVIII. For from the Creation of the World to the Deluge are commonly reckoned MDCLVI. years.

From the Deluge to Abrahams promiſe are CCCCXXVII years. This being ſuppoſed, that Abraham was born the CXXXth year of Tharah: which muſt be ſuppoſed.

From the promiſe given to the going out of Egypt, CCCCXXX years, Exod. XII. 40. Gal. III. 17.

From the going out of Egypt to the laying the foundations of the Temple are CCCCLXXX years, 1 King. VI. 1.

The Temple was building VII years, 1 King. VI. 38. Caſting up therefore all theſe together, viz.

the ſum of years amounts to

And it is clear the building of the Temple was finiſhed and compleated in the year of the world MMM.

The Temple was finiſhed in the eleventh year of Solomon, 1 King. VI. 38. and thence to the revolting of the ten Tribes, in the firſt year of Rehoboam, were XXX years. Therefore that Revolt was in the year of the World MMMXXX.

From

From the Revolt of the ten Tribes to the deſtruction of Jeruſalem under Zedekiah were CCCXC years: which appears ſufficiently from the Chronical computation of the parallel times of the Kings of Judah and Iſrael: and which is implied by Ezekiel, Chap. IV. verſ. 5. Thou ſhalt ſleep upon thy left ſide, and ſhalt put the iniquities of the houſe of Iſrael upon it, &c. according to the number of the days, three hundred and ninety days. And when thou ſhalt have accompliſhed them, thou ſhalt ſleep upon thy right ſide the ſecond time, and ſhalt take upon thee the iniquity of the houſe of Judah forty days. Concerning the computation of theſe years it is doubted, whether thoſe forty years are to be numbred together within the three hundred and ninety years, or by themſelves, as following after thoſe three hundred and ninety years. We not without cauſe embrace the former opinion, and ſuppoſe thoſe forty years to be included within the ſum of the three hundred and ninety; but mentioned by themſelves particularly, for a particular reaſon. For by the ſpace of forty years before the deſtruction of the City by the Chaldeans, did Jeremiah propheſie daily, namely, from the third year of Joſias to the ſacking of the City: whom the people not harkning to, they are marked for that peculiar iniquity with this note.

Therefore theſe three hundred and ninety years being added to the year of the World MMMXXX, when the ten Tribes fell off from the houſe of David, the age of the World, when Jeruſalem periſhed, aroſe to the year MMMCCCCXX.

At that time there remained fifty years of the Babylonian captivity to be compleated. For thoſe remarkable Seventy years took their beginning from the third year of Jehoiachim, Dan. I. 1. Whoſe fourth year begins the Babylonian Monarchy, Jer. XXV. 1. And in the nineteenth year of Nebuchadnezzar the Temple was deſtroyed, 2 *King.*XXV.8. when now the twentieth year of the Captivity paſſed: and other fifty remained. Which fifty being added to the year of the World MMMCCCCXX, a year fatal to the Temple, the years of the World amount, in the firſt year of Cyrus, unto MMMCCCCLXX.

From the firſt of Cyrus to the death of Chriſt are Seventy weeks of years, or CCCCXC years, Dan. IX. 24. Add theſe to the MMMCCCCLXX, and you obſerve Chriſt crucified in the year of the World MMMDCCCCLX. When therefore you have ſubtracted thirty two years and an half, wherein Chriſt lived upon the Earth, you will find him born in the year of the World MMMDCCCCXXVIII.

II. He was born in the one and thirtieth year of Auguſtus Ceſar, the computation of his Monarchy beginning from the Victory at Actium. Of which matter thus Dion Caſſius writes. Τοιαύτης ἡ ναυμαχία αὐτῇ τῇ δευτέρᾳ τοῦ Σεπτεμβρίου ἐγένετο· Τοῦτο δὲ οὐκ ἀλλως εἶπον, &c. a This their Sea-fight was on the ſecond of September: And this I ſpeak upon no other account, (for I am not wont to do it) but becauſe then Ceſar firſt obtained the whole Power: ſo that the computation of the years of his Monarchy muſt be preciſely reckoned from that very day. We confirm this our computation, by drawing down a Chronological Table from this year of Auguſtus to the fifteenth year of Tiberius, when Chriſt, having now compleated the nine and twentieth year of his age, and entring juſt upon his thirtieth, was baptized. Now this Table, adding the Conſuls of every year, we thus frame.

In the early ſpring of this year came John baptizing. In the month Tiſri Chriſt is baptized, when he had now accompliſhed the nine and twentieth year of his age, and had now newly entred upon his thirtieth. The thirtieth of Chriſt is to be reckoned with the ſixteenth of Tiberius.

Of Auguſtus now entring upon his one and thirtieth year (wherein Chriſt was born) Dion Caſſius hath moreover theſe words. Πληρωθείσης δὲ ἤδη τῆς τρίτης δεκαετίας τῷ ἡγεμονεύειν ἐς τὸ τέταρτον ἐκβιασθεὶς δὴ ἐν ἀναπαύσει ἐγένετο· πρεσβύτερός τε ἤδη ὢν καὶ τῷ σώματι καὶ τῷ γήρᾳ. Having now compleated thrice ten years, being compelled indeed to it he continued his Government, and entred upon a fourth ten of years: being now more eaſie and ſlothful by reaſon of age. In this very year was the Taxation under Cyrenius, of which Luke ſpeaks Chap. II. So that if it be aſked, when the fifth Monarchy (of the Romans) aroſe, after the diſſolution of thoſe four mentioned by Daniel? An eaſie anſwer may be fetched from S. Luke, who relates, that in that very year, wherein Chriſt was born, Auguſtus laid a Tax upon the whole World.

III. Chriſt was born in the thirty fift year of the reign of Herod: which we gather from the obſervation of theſe things. 1. d Herod reigned, from that time he was firſt declared King by the Romans, ſeven and thirty years. 2. Between the death of Herod, and the death of Auguſtus, there was this ſpace of time.

d Joſeph. antiq. lib. 17. cap. 10.

1. e The ten years current of the reign of Archelaus.
2. f Coponius ſucceeds him, baniſhed into Vienna, in the Preſidentſhip of Judea.
3. Marcus Ambibuchus ſucceeds Coponius.
4. g Annius Ruſus ſucceeds Ambibuchus, during whoſe Preſidentſhip Auguſtus dies.

e Joſ. Antiq. lib. 18. cap. 1. f Id. ibid & lib. 18 cap. 1. g Id ibid cap. 3

Since therefore only fourteen years paſſed from the nativity of Chriſt to the death of Auguſtus (out of which ſum when you ſhall have reckoned the ten years current of Archelaus, and the times of the three Preſidents) we muſt reckon, that Chriſt was not born, but in the laſt years of Herod. Thus we conjecture:

In his thirty fift Chriſt was born.

In his thirty ſeventh now newly begun, the Wiſe men came: preſently after this, was the ſlaying of the infants, and after a few months the death of Herod.

IV. Chriſt was born about the twenty ſeventh year of the Preſidentſhip of Hillel in the Sanhedrin.

The riſe of the family of Hillel took its beginning at the deceaſe of the Aſmonean family: (Herod indeed ſucceeded in the Kingly government:) a family ſprung from Babylon, and, as was believed, of the ſtock of David. For h a book of genealogy was found at Jeruſalem, (which we mentioned before) in which it was written, that Hillel was ſprung from the ſtock of David, by his wife, Abital. Now Hillel went up out of Babylon to Jeruſalem, to enquire of the Wiſe men concerning ſome things, when now, after the death of Shemaia and Abtalion, the two ſons of Betira held the chief ſeats. And when he, who had reſorted thither to learn ſomething, had taught them ſome things of the Paſſover rites, which they had forgot, they put him into the chair. You have the full ſtory of it in the i Jeruſalem Talmud. We mention it Chap. XXVI. 1.

i Pſachen, fol. 33.

Now Hillel went up to Jeruſalem, and took the Chair an hundred years before the deſtruction of the City. הילל ושמעון גמליאל ושמעון נהגו נשיאותן לפני הבירה ק' שנה k Hillel and

and his ſon Simeon, and his ſon Gamaliel, and his ſon Simeon bare the Government for an hundred years before the laying waſte of the Temple. Of thoſe hundred years if you take away two and thirty, and an half of the life of Chriſt, and forty years (as it is commonly computed) coming between the death of Chriſt, and the deſtruction of the City, there remain the twenty ſeven years of Hillel before the birth of our Saviour.

Hillel held the government forty years. So that his death happened about the twelfth or thirteenth year of Chriſt: His ſon alſo held it after him, and his grandſons in a long ſucceſſion, even to R. Judah the Holy. The ſplendor and pomp of this family of Hillel had ſo obſcured the reſt of the families of Davids ſtock, that perhaps they believed or expected the leſs, that the Meſſias ſhould ſpring from any of them. Yea, one in the Babylonian Gemara was almoſt perſwaded, that Rabbi Judah the Holy of the Hillelian family was the Meſſias. אי מן חיים כגון רבינו הקודש l Rabh ſaid, If Meſſiah be among the living, our Holy Rabbi is ſuch: if among the dead, Daniel was he. l Sanhedr. fol. 98.2.

V. Chriſt was born in the month Tiſri: ſomewhat anſwering to our September. This we conclude, omitting other things, by computing backwards from his death. For if he died in his two and thirtieth year and an half, at the feaſt of the Paſsover, in the month Niſan, you muſt neceſſarily lay the time of his birth in the month Tiſri: But that he died at that age, not to make any delay by mentioning more things, appears hence, that he was baptized now beginning his thirtieth year, and that he lived after his baptiſm three years and an half; as the ſpace of his publick Miniſtry is determined by the Angel Gabriel, Dan. IX. in the half of a week, (that is, three years and an half,) he ſhall make the ſacrifice to ceaſe, &c. But of this hereafter.

This month was innobled in former times, 1. For the Creation of the World. Weigh well Exod. XXIII. 15. Joel II. 23. 2. For the nativity of the firſt Fathers; which the m Jews aſſert not without reaſon. 3. For the repairing the Tables of the Law. For Moſes after the third Faſt of forty days, comes down from the mountain, a meſſenger of good things, the tenth day of this month, which was from hence appointed for the Feaſt of Expiation to following ages. 4. For the Dedication of the Temple, 1 King. VIII. 2. And 5. For three ſolemn Feaſts, namely, that of the beginning of the year, that of Expiation, and that of Tabernacles. From this month alſo was the beginning of the Jubilee. m Hitrof Roſh Haſhanah, fol. 56.4.

VI. It is probable Chriſt was born at the Feaſt of Tabernacles.

1. So it ariſeth exactly to three and thirty years and an half when he died at the Feaſt of the Paſsover.

2. He fulfilled the Typical equity of the Paſsover and Pentecoſt; when at the Paſsover he offered himſelf for a Paſsover, at Pentecoſt he beſtowed the Holy Ghoſt from Heaven, as at that time the Law had been given from Heaven. At that time the firſt fruits of the Spirit were given by him, (Rom. VIII. 23.) when the firſt fruits of corn had been wont to be given, Levit. XXIII. 17. It had been a wonder, if he had honoured the third ſolemnity, namely the Feaſt of Tabernacles, with no Antitype.

3. The Inſtruction of the Feaſt of Tabernacles agrees excellently with the time of Chriſts birth. For when Moſes went down from the Mount on the tenth day of the month Tiſri, declaring that God was appeaſed, that the people was pardoned, and that the building of the holy Tabernacle was forthwith to be gone in hand with, (hitherto hindred by, and becauſe of the Golden Calf) ſeeing that God now would dwell among them, and forſake them no more: the Iſraelites immediately pitch their Tents, knowing they were not to depart from that place before the divine Tabernacle was finiſhed, and they ſet upon this work withal their ſtrength. Whence the tenth day of that month, wherein Moſes came down, and brought this good news with him, was appointed for the Feaſt of expiation; and the fifteenth day, and ſeven days after, for the Feaſt of Tabernacles, in memory of their dwelling in Tents in the wilderneſs, when God dwelt in the midſt of them: which things with how aptly Typical an aſpect they reſpect the Incarnation, when God dwelt among men in humane fleſh, is plain enough.

3. Weigh Zechar. XIV. verſ. 16, 17. And it ſhall come to paſs that every one, that is left of all the Nations, which came againſt Jeruſalem, ſhall even go up from year to year to worſhip the King, the Lord of Hoſts, and to keep the Feaſt of Tabernacles. And it ſhall be, that whoſo will not come up of all the families of the Earth unto Jeruſalem, to worſhip the King the Lord of Hoſts, even upon them ſhall be no more rain.

Ἐν Βηθλεέμ. In Bethlehem.

It will not be improper here to produce the Gemariſts themſelves openly confeſſing that the Meſſias was born now a good while ago before their times. For ſo they write: n After this the children of Iſrael ſhall be converted and ſhall enquire after the Lord their God, and David their King, Hoſ. III. 5. Our Rabbins ſay, That is King Meſſias, if he n Hitrof. Bira-coth, fol. 5. 1.

he be among the living, his name is David, or if dead, David is his name. R. Tanchum said, Thus I prove it: He sheweth mercy to David his Messiah (Psal. XVIII. 50.) R. Jesua ben Levi saith, His name is צמח A Branch (Zech. III. 8.) R. Judan bar Aibu saith, His name is Menahem, (that is, παράκλητος, The Comforter.) And that which happened to a certain Jew, as he was plowing agreeth with this business. A certain Arabian travailing, and hearing the Ox bellow said to the Jew at Plow, O Jew, loose thy Oxen, and loose thy Plows, for behold! the Temple is laid waste. The Ox bellowed the second time; the Arabian saith to him, O Jew, Jew, yoke thy Oxen, and fit thy plows: דהא יליד מלכא משיחא For behold! King Messiah is born. But saith the Jew, What is his name? Menahem, saith he. And what is the name of his father? Hezekiah, saith the Arabian. To whom the Jew, but whence is He? The other answered, From the palace of the King of Bethlehem Judah. Away he went, and sold his Oxen, and his Plows, and became a seller of Infants swadling cloths, going about from Town to Town. When he came to that City (Bethlehem,) all the women bought of him, but the Mother of Menahem bought nothing. He heard the voice of the women saying, O thou Mother of Menahem, thou Mother of Menahem, carry thy son the things that are here sold. But she replied, May the enemies of Israel be strangled, because on the day that he was born, the Temple was laid waste. To whom he said, But we hoped, that as it was laid waste at his feet, so at his feet it would be built again. She saith, I have no mony. To whom he replied, But why should this be prejudicial to him? Carry him what you buy here, and if you have no mony to day, after some days I will come back and receive it. After some days he returns to that City, and saith to her, How does the little infant? And she said, From the time you saw me last, Spirits and Tempests came, and snatched him away out of my hands. R. Bon saith, What need have we to learn from an Arabian? Is it not plainly written, And Lebanon shall fall before the Powerful one? (Esa. X. 34.) And what follows after? A Branch shall come out of the root of Jesse; (Esa. XI. 1.)

[o] Avodah Zarah, fol 9. 2. The Babylonian Doctors yield us a confession not very unlike the former: o R. Chaninah saith, After four hundred years are past from the destruction of the Temple, if any one shall say to you, Take to thy self for one peny a field worth a thousand pence, do not take it. And again, After four thousand two hundred thirty and one years from the creation of the World, if any shall say to you, Take for a peny a field worth a thousand pence, take it not. The Gloss is, For that is the time of Redemption, and you shall be brought back to the holy Mountain, to the inheritance of your Fathers, why therefore should you misspend your peny?

[p] Fol. 97. You may fetch the reason of this calculation, if you are at leisure, out of the Tract Sanhedrin. p The Tradition of the School of Elias, the World is to last six thousand years, &c. And a little after, Elias said to Rabh Judah, The world shall last not less, than eighty five Jubilees: and in the last Jubilee shall the son of David come. He saith to him, Whether in the beginning of it, or in the end? He answered him, I know not. Whether is this whole time to be finished first, or not? He answered him, I know not. But Rabh Asher asserts, that he answered thus, Until then expect him not, but from thence expect him. Hear your own Countrymen, O Jew, how mony Centuries of years are past by and gone from the eighty fift Jubilee of the World, that is, the year MMMMCCL, and yet the Messias of your expectation is not yet come.

Daniels weeks had so clearly defined the time of the true Messias his coming, that the minds of the whole Nation were raised into the expectation of him. Hence it was doubted of the Baptist, whither he were not the Messias, Luk. III. 15. Hence it was, that the Jews are gathered together from all Countries unto Jerusalem, Act. II. expecting, and coming to see, because at that time, the term of revealing the Messias that had been prefixed by Daniel, was come. Hence it was, that there was so great a number of false Christs, Matth. XXIV. 5, &c. taking the occasion of their impostures hence, that now the time of that great expectation was at hand, and fulfilled: and in one word, They thought the Kingdom of God should presently appear; Luk. XIX. 11.

But when those times of expectation were past, nor did such a Messias appear, as they expected, (for when they saw the true Messias, they would not see him) they first broke out into various, and those wild, conjectures of the time; and at length all those conjectures coming to nothing, all ended in this curse, (the just cause of their eternal blindness) תפח רוחן שרל מחשבי קצין May their soul be confounded who compute the times.

Μάγοι, Magi, that is Wizzards, or such as practised ill arts: for in this sense alone this word occurs in holy Writ.

From the East. This more generally denotes as much as, Out of the land of the Heathen, in the same sense as the Queen of the South is taken, Matth. XII. 42. that is, An Heathen Queen. Consider this passage in the Talmud, מרקם למזרח ורקם כמזרח וכו' From Rekam to the East, and Rekam is as the East: From Ascalon to the South, and Askalon is as the

the South: From Acon to the North, and Acon is as the North. These words [q] R. Nissim quotes from R. Judah, and illustrates it with this Gloss, From Rekam to the furthest bounds of the land Eastward, is Heathen land: and Rekam it self is reckoned for the East of the World, and not for the land of Israel. So also from Askalon onwards to the South is the Heathen Country, and Askalon it self is reckoned for the South: that is, for Heathen land.

Those Countries, where the sons of Abraham by his wife Keturah were dispersed, are more particularly called the Eastern Countries, Gen. XXV. 6. Judg. VI. 3. and elsewhere often. And hence came these first fruits of the Gentiles: whence it is not unlikely that Jethro also came, the first Proselyte to the Law: And that which is spoken by the Gemara concerning the Arabian, the first pointer out of the Messias born, is perhaps some shadow of this story of the Magicians coming out of Arabia, and who first publickly declared him to be born.

VERS. II.

Εἴδομεν γὰρ αὐτοῦ τὸν ἀστέρα ἐν τῇ Ἀνατολῇ. For we have seen his Star in the East.

WE, being in the East, have seen his Star. That heavenly light, which, in that very night wherein the Saviour was born, shone round about the Shepherds of Bethlehem, perhaps was seen by these Magicians, being then a great distance off, resembling a Star hanging over Judea; whence they might the more easily guess that the happy sign belonged to the Jews.

VERS. IV.

Καὶ συναγαγὼν πάντας τοὺς Ἀρχιερεῖς καὶ Γραμματεῖς τοῦ λαοῦ. And when he had gathered all the Chief Priests, and Scribes of the people together.

THAT is, He assembled the Sanhedrin. Herod is said by very many Author to have slain the Sanhedrin, but this is neither to be understood of the whole Sanhedrin, nor, if it were to be understood of the whole, would it denote the total subversion of the Sanhedrin. The Babylonian Gemarists do thus relate the story. [r] Herod was a servant of the Asmonean family. He cast his eyes upon a young maid (of that family,) on a certain day he heard the Bath Kol (a Voice from Heaven) saying, Whatsoever servant shall now rebel, shall prosper. He arose up against his Masters, and slew them all. And a little after, Herod said, Who is there, that interprets these words, Thou shalt set a King over thee out of the midst of thy brethren, (Deut. XVII. 15.) The Rabbins (interpreted the words.) He rose up and slew all the Rabbins, leaving only Bava ben Buta, with whom he consulted.

Herod was to overcome two difficulties, that he might with the peace and favour of the Jews, become their King. For although he had been raised unto the Kingdom by the Romans, nevertheless that he might establish his Throne, the people remaining quiet, and accepting him, first it seemed necessary to him, that the Asmonean family should be removed out of the way, which, formerly governing the people, they had some affection and love for, and which still remaining, he suspected he could scarse be secure. Secondly, That Law of setting no King over them, but of their brethren debarred him, since he himself was of the stock of Edom. Therefore he took away all those Rabbines, who adhering stifly to this Law, opposed, what they could, his coming to the Kingdom. But all the Rabbins indeed he slew not (saith the Gloss upon the place alledged) for the sons of Betira were left alive, who held the chair, when Hillel came out of Babylon.

Therefore he slew not all the Elders of the Sanhedrin, but those only, who taking occasion from that Law, opposed his access to the Kingdom. Out of that slaughter the two sons of Betira escaped, who held the first places in the Sanhedrin after the death of Shemaiah and Abtalion. Shammai also escaped, who according as Josephus relates, foretold this slaughter. Hillel escaped likewise, if he were then present, and Menahem, who certainly was there, and who thenceforth sate second in the chair. Bava ben Buta escaped also, as the Gemara relates, who afterwards perswaded Herod, that he should repair the Temple, to expiate this bloody impiety. And others escaped.

Ἀρχιερεῖς. The Chief Priests.

When the Sanhedrin consisted of Priests, Levites, and Israelites, (as [s] Maimonides teacheth,) under the word Ἀρχιερεῖς, Chief Priests, are comprehended the two former, namely, whosoever of the Clergy were members of the Sanhedrin; and under the Scribes of the people are comprehended all those of the Sanhedrin, who were not of the Clergy.

Among

Among the Prieſts were divers differences.

I. Of the Prieſts ſome were called כהני עם הארץ as if you would ſay, The Plebeian Prieſts, namely ſuch, who indeed were not of the common people, but wanted School education, and were not reckoned among the Learned, nor among ſuch as were devoted to Religion. For ſeeing the whole ſeed of Aaron was Sacerdotal, and Prieſts were not ſo much made, as born, no wonder, if ſome ignorant and poor were found among them. Hence is that diſtinction עני ישראל ועני כהנים מלקטין t The poor Iſraelites, and the poor Prieſts are gatherers. כהן חבר וכהן עם הארץ A Votary Prieſt, and a Plebeian Prieſt. And caution is given שאין תרומה לכהן עם הארץ u That the Oblation be not given to a Plebeian Prieſt. And the reaſon of it is added, becauſe whoſoever giveth an Oblation to a Plebeian Prieſt, doth all one, as if he ſhould give it to a Lion, of which it may be doubted, whether he will tread it under his feet, and eat it, or not. So it may be doubted of a Plebeian Prieſt, whether he will eat it in cleanneſs or in uncleanneſs. However ignorant and illiterate theſe were, yet they had their courſes at the Altar according to their lot, being inſtructed at that time by certain rules for the performing their office appointed them by lot. You would ſtand amazed to read x thoſe things which are ſuppoſed concerning the ignorance and rudeneſs even of the High Prieſt himſelf.

II. There were others who were called כהנים הדיוטות Idiot, or private, Prieſts; who although they both were learned, and performed the publick office at the Altar, yet were called Private, becauſe they were Prieſts of a lower, and not of a worthier, order.

III. The worthier degree of Prieſts was fourfold, beſides the degree of the High Prieſt, and of the Sagan his ſubſtitute. For 1. There were ראש משמר the Heads of the Ephemeries, or Courſes: in number twenty four. 2. There were ראש בית אב the Heads of the Families in every Courſe. y Of both ſee the Jeruſalem Talmud. 3. ממונים שהיו במקדש The Preſidents over the various Offices in the Temple. z Of them ſee Shekalim. 4. Any Prieſts, or Levites indeed, (although not of theſe orders) that were choſen into the chief Sanhedrin. Ἀρχιερεῖς Chief Prieſts, therefore here and elſewhere, where the diſcourſe is of the Sanhedrin, were they, who being of the Prieſtly or Levitical ſtock, were choſen into that chief Senate,

סופרי A Scribe, denotes more generally any man learned, and is oppoſed to the word בור Rude, or clownish. a Two, who eat together, are bound to give thanks each by themſelves, כש שניהם סופרים When both of them are Scribes. אבל אחד סופר ואחד בור סופר מברך ובור יוצא: But if one be a Scribe, and the other ignorant, or a Clown, let the Scribe give thanks, and thence ſatisfaction is made for the duty of the ignorant, or unlearned perſon. So we read of סופרי כותיים b The Scribes of the Samaritanes: that is, The learned among the Samaritans: for among them there were no Traditionarians.

b Bab. Sotah, fol. 33. 2.

More particularly סופרים Scribes, denote ſuch, who being learned, and of Scholaſtick education, addicted themſelves eſpecially in handling the Pen, and in Writing. Such were the Publick Notaries in the Sanhedrins, Regiſters in the Synagogues, Amanuenſes, who employed themſelves in tranſcribing the Law, Phylacteries, ſhort ſentences to be fixed upon the door poſts, bills of contracts, or divorſe, &c. And in this ſenſe ספרא A Scribe, and תנא A Talmudick Doctor, are ſometimes oppoſed; although he was not תנא Tanna, A Talmudick Doctor, who were not ספרא Sophra, a Scribe in the ſenſe above mentioned. c In the Babylonian Talmud, it is diſputed (a paſſage not unworthy our reading) what diſagreement in calculation may be born with between תנא An Expounder out of the Chair, or the Pulpits, and ספרא A Writer of Contracts, or bills of divorſe, or a Regiſter, &c. in reckoning up the year of the Temple, of the Greek Empire, &c. Concerning which matter this among other things is concluded on, ספרא בצירא תנא תוספאה That a Scribe computes more briefly, a Doctor more largely. It will not repent one to read the place; nor that whole Tract, called מסכת סופרים The Tract of the Scribes; which dictates to the Scribes of that ſort, of which we are now ſpeaking, concerning writing out the Law, the Phylactaries, &c.

c Zeb. 14. 1 &c.

But above all others the Fathers of the Traditions are called Scribes, (who were indeed the Elders of the Sanhedrin.) Which is clear enough in theſe, and ſuch like expreſſions. דברי סופרים חביבים מדברי תורה: The words of the Scribes are more lovely, than the words of the Law: that is, Traditions are better than the written Law: וזה מדברי סופרים This is of the Words of the Scribes; that is, This is from the Traditionary Decrees.

Theſe therefore, whom Matthew calls the Scribes of the people, were thoſe Elders of the Sanhedrin, who were not ſprung from the Sacerdotal or Levitical ſtock, but of other Tribes: The Elders of the Sanhedrin ſprung of the blood of the Prieſts, were the Scribes of the Clergy, the reſt were the Scribes of the People.

We

We may therefore gueſs, and that no improbable conjecture, that in this aſſembly called together by Herod, theſe were preſent, among others: 1. Hillel, the Preſident. 2. Shammai, Vice-Preſident. 3. The ſons of Betira, Judah and Joſua. 4. Bava ben Buta. 5. Jonathan the ſon of Uzziel, the Chaldee Paraphraſt. 6. Simeon the ſon of Hillel.

VERS. VI.

Οὐδαμῶς ἐλαχίστη εἶ. Art not the leaſt.

THESE words do not at all diſagree with the words of the Prophet, whence they are taken, *Mich.*V. צעיר להיות באלפי יהודה Which I thus render, But thou Bethlehem Ephrata it is a ſmall thing that thou art (or, art reckoned) among the thouſands of Iſrael: for thou art to be crowned with higher dignity, for from thee ſhall go forth a Ruler, &c. And in effect to this ſenſe, unleſs I miſtake, does the Chaldee Paraphraſt plainly render it, whom I ſuſpect to be preſent at this very Councel, : זעיר הויתא לאתמנאה Thou art within a little, to become chief. See the ſame ſenſe of the word זעיר in the Targum upon Pſal. LXXIII. 2. Hoſ. I. 4. &c.

VERS. IX.

Ἀστὴρ, ὃν εἶδον ἐν τῇ Ἀνατολῇ προῆγεν αὐτούς. The Star, which they ſaw in the Eaſt went before them.

IT is probable, the Star had ſhone in the very birth night: and thence forward to this very time it had diſappeared. The Wiſe men had no need of the Star to be their guide, when they were going to Jeruſalem, a City well known but going forward thence to Bethlehem, and that, as it ſeems, by night, it was their guide.

VERS. XIV.

Ἀνεχώρησεν εἰς Αἴγυπτον. Departed into Egypt.

EGYPT was now repleniſhed with Jews above meaſure, and that partly by reaſon of them that travailed thither under Jochanan the ſon of Kareah, Jer. XLIII. partly with them that flocked thither, more latewardly, to the Temple of Onias, of which d Joſephus writes, and e both Talmuds. When Simeon the Juſt ſaid, I ſhall dye this year. They ſaid to him, Whom therefore ſhall we put in thy place? He anſwered, : הניחו בני נחוניון Behold! my ſon Onias is before you. They made Onias therefore High Prieſt. But his brother Simeon envyed him. Onias therefore fled, firſt into the Royal Mountain, and then into Egypt, and built there an Altar, repeating that of the Prophet, In that day there ſhall be an Altar to the Lord in the midſt of Egypt.

f He that hath not ſeen the Cathedral Church of Alexandria, hath never ſeen the Glory of Iſrael. It was after the manner of a Court Walk, double cloiſtred. There were ſometimes there ſo many, as doubly exceeded the number of thoſe that went out of Egypt. There were ſeventy golden Chairs ſet with gems, according to the number of the Seventy Elders. A Wooden Pulpit alſo placed in the middle, in which the Biſhop of the Synagogue ſtood. And when the Law was read, after every benediction a ſign being given by a private perſon, waving an handkerchief, they all anſwered, Amen. But they ſat not confuſedly, and mixedly together: but every artificer with the Profeſſors of the ſame art: So that if a ſtranger came, he might mingle himſelf with the workmen of the ſame trade, &c. Theſe did wicked Trajane deſtroy, &c.

g The Babylonian Gemara repeats almoſt the ſame things, alledging theſe laſt matters after this manner: They ſate not confuſedly, but the Artificers, by themſelves, the Silver Smiths by themſelves, the Braziers by themſelves, the Weavers by themſelves, &c. ſo that if a poor ſtranger came in, he might know his own fellow workmen, and betake himſelf to them, and thence receive ſuſtinence for himſelf, and family.

g Succah, fol. 51. 2.

So proviſion was made for the poverty of Joſeph and Mary, while they ſojourned in Egypt (at Alexandria probably) partly by ſelling the Preſents of the Wiſe men, for food and proviſion by the way, and partly by a ſupply of Victuals from their Country-folks in Egypt, when they had need.

There are ſome footſteps in the Talmudiſts of this journey of our Saviour into Egypt, but ſo corrupted with venomous malice and blaſphemy, (as all their Writings are) that they ſeem only to have confeſſed the truth, that they might have matter the more liberally to reproach him. For ſo they ſpeak. *h When Jannai the King ſlew the Rabbins, R. Joſua ben Perachiah, and Jeſus went away unto Alexandria in Egypt. Simeon ben Shetah ſent thither, ſpeaking thus, From me Jeruſalem the holy City, to thee, O Alexandria in Egypt, my Siſter, Health. My husband dwells with thee, while I in the mean time ſit alone. fore he rose up, and went. And a little after, He brought forth four hundred trumpets, and anathematized [Jesus.] And a little before that, Elizæus turned away Gehazi with both his hands, and R. Joshua ben Perachiah thrust away Jesus with both his hands.

i Sabb. fol. 104. 2. i Did not ben Satda bring inchantments out of Egypt in the cutting, which was in his flesh? Under the name of Ben Satda they wound our Jesus with their reproaches, although the Glosser upon the place from the authority of R. Tam, denies it. For thus he, R. Tam saith, This was not Jesus of Nazareth, because they say here, Ben Satda was in the days of Papus the son of Judah, who was in the days of R. Akiba: but Jesus was in the days of Joshua the son of Perachiah, &c.

VERS. XVI.

Ἀπὸ διετοῦς καὶ κατωτέρω. From two years old, and under.

IT was now two years ago, or thereabouts, since the Star had shone, and Christ was born. The reason of the tarrying of Joseph and Mary in Bethlehem, was this, that they believed that the Messias, who according to the Prophet was born there, should have been brought up no where but there also; nor dared they to carry him elsewhere, before they had leave so to do by an Angel from Heaven.

The Jewish Nation are very purblind, how and whence the Messias shall arise; and whence is that Nemo novit, no man knows, whence the Son of man is, Joh. VII. 27. that is, אין מי חייא הוא אין מי דמכייא הוא : It was doubted, b whether from what original. he should come from the living, or from the dead. Only it was confessed by all without controversie, that he should first make some shew of himself from Bethlehem, which the Priests and Scribes of the people assert, vers. 4. Hence you have Christ now in his second year at Bethlehem, whether Joseph and Mary had again betaken themselves with him, when they had now presented him in the Temple, according to the Law, being forty days old, Luke II. 22. And had taken care for his education in this place, and not elsewhere, until he himself going forth from hence, might shew himself openly the Messias, if they had not been sent away some where else by permission from Heaven.

k Hieros. Berac. fol. 5. 1.

VERS. XXIII.

Ὅτι Ναζωραῖος κληθήσεται. He shall be called a Nazarene.

THOSE things which are brought from Esa. XI. 1. concerning נצר Netzer, the Branch; and those things also produced concerning Samson the Nazarite, a most noble Type of Christ, have their weight by no means to be despised. We add, that Matthew may be understood concerning the outward humble and mean condition of our Saviour. And that, by the word Ναζωραῖος, Nazarene, he hints his separation, and estrangement from other men, as a despicable person, and unworthy of the society of men:

I. Let it be observed, that the Evangelist does not cite some one of the Prophets, but All: τὸ ῥηθὲν διὰ τῶν Προφητῶν, spoken by the Prophets. But now all the Prophets in a manner do preach the vile and abject condition of Christ; none, that his original should be out of Nazareth.

II. David in his person speaks thus, : מוזר הייתי לאחי I was a stranger to my brethren, Psal. LXIX. 6.

III. If you derive the word Ναζωραῖος Nazarene, which not a few do, from נזיר Nazir, a Nazirean, that word denotes not only a separation, dedicated to God, such as that of the Nazareans was; but it signifies also the separation of a man from others, as being unworthy of their society, Gen. XLIX. 26. They shall be on the head of Joseph, and on the crown of the head of him, that was separate from his brethren.

Therefore let us digest the sense of the Evangelist by this Paraphrase. Joseph was to depart with Christ to Bethlehem the City of David, or to Jerusalem the royal City, had not the fear of Archelaus hindred him. Therefore by the signification of an Angel he is sent away into Galilee, a very contemptible Country, and into the City Nazareth, a place of no account: whence from this very place, and the name of it, you may observe that fulfilled to a tittle, which is so often declared by the Prophets, that the Messias should be Nazor, a stranger or separate from men, as if he were a very vile person, and not worthy of their company.

CHAP. III.

VERS. I.

Ἰωάννης ὁ Βαπτιστὴς κηρύσσων ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ τ῀ Ἰουδαίας. John the Baptiſt preaching in the wilderneſs of Judea.

THAT John was born in Hebron, one may not unfitly conjecture, by comparing Luke I. 39. with Joſ. XXI. 11. and that he was born about the feaſt of the Paſſover, namely, half a year before the Nativity of our Saviour, Luke I. 36. So the conceptions and births of the Baptiſt and our Saviour, innobled the four famous Tekupha's (Revolutions) of the year: One being conceived at the Summer Solſtice, the other at the Winter; one born at the Vernal Equinox, the other at the Autumnal.

John lived in the deſerts, until he made himſelf known unto Iſrael, Luke I. 80. That is, if the Popes School may be interpreter, he led the life of an Hermite. But

I. Be aſhamed, O Papiſt, to be ſo ignorant of the ſenſe of the word Ἔρημος, Wilderneſs, or Deſert, which in the common dialect ſounds all one, as if it had been ſaid, He lived in the Country, not in the City; his education was more courſe, and plain in the Country, without the breeding of the Univerſity, or Court at Jeruſalem. תודה היתה ה' מאין ירושלמיות שתין שש מדבריות׃ l An oblation for thanksgiving conſiſts of five Jeruſalem Seahs, which were in value ſix Seahs of the wilderneſs; that is, ſix Country Seahs. l Menachoth, cap. 7. hal. 1.

m A Jeruſalem Seah exceeds a Seah of the wilderneſs by a ſixt part. m Bab. Erubh. fol. 83. 1.

אילנות מדבריות׃ n The trees of the wilderneſs are thoſe, which are common, and not appropriate to one Maſter: that is Trees in common Groves and Meddows. n Rambam in Dimai, cap. 1.

So 2 Cor. XI. 26. Κινδυνοις ἐν πόλει, κινδυνοις ἐν ἐρημίᾳ, that is, in perils in the City, and in perils in the Country.

II. The Wilderneſſes of the land of Canaan were not without Towns, and Cities; nor was he preſently to be called an Eremite, who dwelt in the Wilderneſs. The Hill Country of Judea, Johns native ſoil, is called by the Talmudiſts הר המלך The royal Mountain, or Hill; and by the Pſalmiſt, מדבר הרים The deſert Hill Country, Pſal. LXXV. 6. and yet o in the Royal Mountain were a myriad of Cities. o Hieroſ. Taanith, fol. 69. 1.

III. David paſſed much of his youth in the Wilderneſs, 1 Sam. XVII. 28. but yet who will call him an Eremite? In the like ſenſe I conceive John living in the Deſarts, not only ſpending his time in leiſure and contemplation, but employing himſelf in ſome work, or ſtudies. For when I read, that the Youth of our Saviour was taken up in the Carpenters trade, I ſcarcely believe his forerunner employed his youth in no calling at all.

Beginning now the thirtieth year of his age, when according to the cuſtom of the Prieſts he ought to have come to the chief Sanhedrin, to undergo their examination, and to be entred into the Prieſthood by them, the Word of God coming unto him, Luke III. 2. as it had done before to the Prophets, he is diverted to another Miniſtry.

VERS. II.

Μετανοεῖτε. Repent ye.

A Doctrine moſt fit for the Goſpel, and moſt ſutable to the time, and the word, or the phraſe as agreeable to the Doctrine.

I. A Nation leavened with the error of the Phariſees, concerning Juſtification by the works of the Law, was neceſſarily to be called off to the contrary Doctrine of Repentance. No receiving of the Goſpel was otherwiſe to be expected.

II. However the Schools of the Phariſees had illy defined Repentance, which we obſerve preſently, yet they aſſerted, that Repentance it ſelf was neceſſary to the reception of the Meſſias. p Concerning this matter the Babylonian Gemariſts do diſpute: whom Kimchi alſo upon Eſa. LIX. 19. cites, and determines the queſtion. From the words of our Rabbins, ſaith he, it is plain, there aroſe a doubt among them concerning this matter, namely, whether Iſrael were to be redeemed with repentance, or without repentance. And it ſprang from this occaſion, that ſome texts of Scripture ſeemed to go againſt them: ſuch as thoſe, He ſaw, and there was no man, and he wondred, that there was none to interceed, there- p Sanhedr. fol. 98. &c.

therefore his own arm brought ſalvation. And alſo, Not for your ſake O Iſrael, do I this. And again, I will remember for them my old Covenant, &c. And theſe places on the other hand make for repentance, Thou ſhalt return to the Lord thy God, and ſhalt harken to his voice. And again, And thence thou ſhalt ſeek the Lord thy God, and ſhalt find him, if thou ſeekeſt him with all thy heart, &c. But theſe may be reconciled after this manner; namely, that many of Iſrael ſhall repent, when they ſhall ſee the ſigns of redemption. And hence is that which is ſaid, And he ſaw that there was no man, becauſe they will not repent, untill they ſee the beginning of redemption.

q If Iſrael ſhall repent but one day, forthwith the Redeemer cometh.

q Hier. of. Taanith. fol. 64. 1.

Therefore it is very fitly argued by the Baptiſt, and by our Saviour after him, Matth. IV. 17. from the approach of the Kingdom of Heaven to Repentance, ſince they themſelves, to whom this is preached, do acknowledge, that thus the Kingdom of Heaven, or the manifeſtation of the Meſſias is to be brought in. For however the Gemariſts who diſpute of this, were of a later age, yet for the moſt part they do but ſpeak the ſenſe of their fathers.

III. The word Μετάνοια, Repentance, as it does very well expreſs the ſenſe of true repentance, ſo among the Jews it was neceſſary, that it ſhould be ſo expreſſed, among whom repentance, for the moſt part, was thought to conſiſt in the confeſſion of the mouth only.

r Whoſoever out of error or preſumption ſhall tranſgreſs the precepts of the Law, whether they be thoſe that command, or thoſe that forbid, when he repents and returns from his ſins, he is bound to make confeſſion. Whoſoever brings an offering for a ſin, committed either out of ignorance or preſumption, his ſin is not expiated by the offering, untill he makes an oral confeſſion. Or whoſoever is guilty of death or of ſcourging by the Sanhedrin, his ſin is not taken away by his death, or by his ſcourging, if he do not repent and make confeſſion. And becauſe the ſcape Goat is the expiation for all Iſrael, therefore the High Prieſt makes confeſſion over him for all Iſrael.

It is worthy obſerving, that, when John urgeth thoſe that came to his Baptiſm to repent; it is ſaid, that they were baptized, Confeſſing their ſins: which was a ſign of repentance highly requiſite among the Jews, and neceſſary for thoſe that were then brought in to the profeſſion of the Goſpel; that hereby they might openly profeſs, that they renounced the Doctrine of Juſtification by the works of the Law.

It is worthy of obſerving alſo, that John ſaid not, repent, and believe the Goſpel, which our Saviour did, Matth. IV. 17. (And yet John preached the Goſpel, Mark I. 1, 2. Joh. I. 7.) for his office chiefly was to make Chriſt known, who, when he ſhould come, was to be the great Preacher of the Goſpel.

Therefore the Baptiſt doth very properly urge repentance upon thoſe that lookedfor the Meſſias, and the Text of the Goſpel uſed a very proper word to expreſs true and lively repentance.

I. The Kingdom of Heaven in Matthew is the Kingdom of God for the moſt part in the other Evangeliſts. Compare theſe places:

II. This

II. This manner of ſpeech, the Kingdom of Heaven, is taken from Daniel, Chap. VII. 13, 14. Where after the deſcription of the four earthly and Tyrannical Monarchies, that is, the Babylonian, Mede-Perſian, Grecian, and Syro-grecian, and the deſtruction of them at laſt; the entrance, and nature of the reign of Chriſt is deſcribed, as it is univerſal over the whole World, and eternal throughout all ages. Under whom the Rule, and Dominion, and Authority of Kingdoms under the whole Heaven is given to the people of the Saints of the moſt High, verſ. 27. that is, Whereas before the Rule had been in the hands of Heathen Kings, under the Reign of Chriſt, there ſhould be Chriſtian Kings. Unto which that of the Apoſtle hath reſpect, 1 Cor. VI. 2. Know ye not, that the Saints ſhall judge the World?

Truly I admire, that the fulfilling of that Viſion and Propheſie in Daniel ſhould be lengthened out ſtill into, I know not what, long and late expectation, not to receive its completion before Rome and Antichriſt ſhall fall: ſince the books of the Goſpel afford us a Commentary clearer than the Sun, that that Kingdom of Heaven took its beginning immediately upon the preaching of the Goſpel. When both the Baptiſt and Chriſt, publiſhed the approach of the Kingdom of Heaven from their very firſt preaching, certainly, for any to think, that the fulfilling of thoſe things in Daniel did not then begin, for my part I think, it is to grope in the dark, either through wilfulneſs, or ignorance.

III. The Kingdom of Heaven implies, 1. The Exhibition and manifeſtation of the Meſſias, Matth. XII. 28. But if I by the finger of God caſt out Devils, the Kingdom of God is come upon you: that is, Hence is the manifeſtation of the Meſſias. See Joh. III. 3. & XII. Chap. 13, &c. 2. The Reſurrection of Chriſt, Death, Hell, Satan being conquered: whence is a moſt evident manifeſtation, that he is that eternal King, &c. See Matth. XXVI. 29. & Rom. I. 4. 3. His vengance upon the Jewiſh Nation, his moſt implacable enemies; this is another, and moſt eminent manifeſtation of him. See Matth. XVI. 28. & Chap. XIX. 28. 4. His Dominion by the Scepter of the Goſpel among the Gentiles, Matth. XXI. 43. In this place, which is before us, it points out the exhibition and revelation of the Meſſias.

IV. The Phraſe מלכות שמים The Kingdom of Heaven very frequently occurs in the Jewiſh Writers. We will produce ſome places, let the reader gather the ſenſe of them.

Joſhua ben Kercha ſaith, In reciting the Phylacteries, why is שמע Hear, O Iſrael, (Deut. VI. 4. &c.) recited, before that paſſage והיה אם שמע And it ſhall come to paſs, if you ſhall harken, (Deut. XI. 13.) &c. To wit, that a man firſt take upon himſelf the Kingdom of Heaven, and then the yoke of the Precept. So the Jeruſalem Miſhnah hath it: but the Babylonian thus, That a man firſt take upon himſelf the yoke of the Kingdom of Heaven, and then the yoke of the Precept. t Beraceth, cap. 2. hal. 2.

u Rabh ſaid to Rabbi Chaijah, לא חזינא ליה לרבי דמקבל עליה מלכות שמים: We never ſaw Rabbi (Judah) *taking upon himſelf the Kingdom of Heaven. x Doth any eaſe nature? Let him waſh his hands, put on his Phylacteries, repeat them, and pray, אם חפרש וזו היא מלכות שמים שלמה: And this is the Kingdom of Heaven fulfilled. וכו' y If thou ſhatt have explained Shaddai, and divided the letters of the Kingdom of Heaven, thou ſhalt make the ſhadow of death to be cool to thee; that is, if in the repeating of that paſſage of the Phylacteries, Deut. VI. 4. Hear, O Iſrael, the Lord our God is one Lord, &c. you ſhall pronounce the letters diſtinctly, and deliberately, ſo that you ſhall have ſounded out the names of God rightly, thou ſhalt make cool the ſhades of death. For the ſame Gloſs had ſaid, קריאה שמע וכו' The repeating of that paſſage, Hear, O Iſrael, &c. is the taking of the Kingdom of Heaven upon thee. But the repeating of that place, And it ſhall be, if thou ſhalt harken, &c. (Deut. XI. 13.) הוא קבלת עול מצוה: is the taking of the yoke of the Precept upon thee. x Ibid. fol. 15. 1. y Ibid. col. 2. in the Gloſs.

a What is the yoke of the Kingdom of Heaven? In like manner as they lay the yoke upon an Ox, that he may be ſerviceable: and if he bear not the yoke, he becomes unprofitable: ſo it becomes a man firſt to take the yoke upon himſelf, and to ſerve in all things with it; but if he caſts it off, he is unprofitable; as it is ſaid, Serve the Lord in fear. What means, In fear? The ſame that is written, The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wiſdom. And this is the Kingdom of Heaven. a Zohar. in Levit. fol. 53.

a The Scholars of Jonathan ben Zaccai asked, why a ſervant was to be bored through the ear, rather than through ſome other part of the body? He anſwered, When he heard with the ear thoſe words from Mount Sinai, Thou ſhalt have no other Lord before my face, he broke the yoke of the Kingdom of Heaven from him, and took upon himſelf the yoke of fleſh and blood.

If by the Kingdom of Heaven in theſe and other ſuch like places, which it would be too much to heap together, they mean the inward love and fear of God, which indeed they ſeem to do, ſo far they agree with our Goſpel ſenſe, which aſſerts the inward and ſpiritual Kingdom of Chriſt eſpecially. And if the words of our Saviour, Behold the Kingdom of God is within you, Luke XVII. 21. be ſuited to this ſenſe of the Nation, concerning the Kingdom of Heaven, there is nothing ſounds hard or rough in them: for it is as much, as if he had ſaid, Do you think the Kingdom of Heaven ſhall come with ſome remarkable obſervation, or μετὰ πολλῆς φανλασίας, with much ſhew? Your very Schools teach, that the Kingdom of God is within a man.

But however they moſt ordinarily applied this manner of ſpeech hither, yet they uſed it alſo for the exhibition and revelation of the Meſſiah in the like manner, as the Evangelical Hiſtory doth. Hence are theſe expreſſions, and the like to them, in Sacred Writers; The Phariſees asked Jeſus, when the Kingdom of God ſhould come, Luke XVII. 20. They thought that the Kingdom of God ſhould preſently be manifeſted, Luke XIX. 11. Joſeph of Arimathea waited for the Kingdom of God, Luke XXIII. 52. &c.

And theſe words in the Chaldee Paraphraſt, Say ye to the Cities of Judah, the Kingdom of your God is revealed, Eſa. XL. 9. They ſhall ſee the Kingdom of their Meſſiah, Eſa. LIII. 11.

The Baptiſt therefore by his preaching ſtirs up the minds of his hearers, to meet the coming of the Meſſiah now preſently to be manifeſted, with that repentance and preparation, as is meet.

THE word περίχωρος, the region round about, is uſed by the Jeruſalem Gemara: d From Beth Horon to the Sea מבית חורון ואחרי פרי כורין is one region περίχωρος, round about, or, one circumjacent region. Περίχωρος perhaps both in the Talmudiſts and in the Evangeliſt, is one and the ſame thing with a Coaſt, or a Country along a coaſt, in Pliny. e The country, ſaith he, along the coaſt is Samaria: that is, the Sea coaſt, and the country further, lying along by that coaſt: which may be ſaid alſo concerning the region round about Jordan. Strabo concerning the Plain bordering on Jordan hath theſe words, It is a place of an hundred furlongs all well watered, and full of dwellings.

VERS. VI.

Καὶ ἐβαπτίζοντο. And were baptized.

IT is no unfit or unprofitable queſtion, whence it came to paſs, that there was ſo great a conflux of men to the Baptiſt, and ſo ready a reception of his Baptiſm.

I. The firſt reaſon is, Becauſe the manifeſtation of the Meſſias was then expected, the weeks of Daniel being now ſpent to the laſt four years. Let us conſult a little his Text.

Dan. IX. 24. Seventy years (of years) are decreed concerning thy people, &c. That is, four hundred and ninety years, from the firſt of Cyrus to the death of Chriſt. Theſe years are divided into three parts, and they very unequal.

1. Into ſeven weeks, or forty nine years, from the giving of Cyrus his Patent for the rebuilding Jeruſalem, to the finiſhing the rebuilding of it by Nehemiah.

2. Into ſixty two weeks, or four hundred thirty four years, Namely, from the finiſhing the building of the City to the beginning of the laſt week of the ſeventy. In which

ſpace of time, the times of the Perſian Empire (which remained after Nehemiah, if indeed there was any time now remaining) and the times of the Grecian Empire, and of Syro-Grecian, were all run out, and thoſe times alſo, wherein the Romans ruled over the Jews.

3. The holy Text divides the laſt week, or the laſt ſeven years, into two equal parts, verſ 27. which I thus render, And he ſhall ſtrengthen, or confirm, the Covenant with many in that one week: and the half of that week ſhall make the ſacrifice and oblation to ceaſe: or, in the half of that week he ſhall make to ceaſe, &c. Not in the middle of that week, but in the latter half, that is, the latter three years and an half of the ſeven.

Firſt, Seven weeks having been reckoned up before, and then ſixty two weeks, verſ. 25. now there remained one only of the ſeventy; and in reference to that, in the middle of it the Meſſias ſhall begin his Miniſtry, which being finiſhed in three years, and an half (the latter halved part of that week) he ſhall make the ſacrifice and oblation to ceaſe, &c.

The Nation could not but know, could not but take great notice of the Times ſo exactly ſet out by the Angel Gabriel: Since therefore the coming of the Meſſias was the great wiſh and deſire of all, and ſince the time of his appearing was ſo clearly decreed by the Angel, that nothing could be more, and when the latter half of the laſt ſeven years, chiefly to be obſerved, was now within a very little come; it is no wonder, if the people hearing from this venerable Preacher, that the Kingdom of Heaven was now come, ſhould be ſtirred up beyond meaſure to meet him, and ſhould flock to him. For as we obſerved before, They thought that the Kingdom of God would immediately be manifeſted, Luke XIX. 11.

II. Another reaſon of it was this, The Inſtitution of Baptiſm, for an Evangelical Sacrament, was firſt in the hand of the Baptiſt, who, the Word of the Lord coming to him, (Luke III. 11.) went forth backed with the ſame authority, as the chiefeſt Prophets had in times paſt. But yet the firſt uſe of Baptiſm was not exhibited at that time. For Baptiſm very many centuries of years backwards had been both known, and received in moſt frequent uſe among the Jews, and for the very ſame end, as it now obtains among Chriſtians, namely, that by it Proſelytes might be admitted into the Church; and hence it was called טבילת גרות Baptiſm for Proſelytiſm: and was diſtinct from טבילת נדה Baptiſm, or waſhing from uncleanneſs. See the f Babylonian Talmud in Jevamoth. f Fol. 45. 2. In the Gloſs.

I. I aſcribe the firſt uſe of it for this end to the Patriarch Jacob, when he choſe into his family, and Church, the young women of Sichem, and other Heathens, who then lived with him. Jacob ſaid to his family, and to all who were with him, Put away from you the ſtrange Gods, and be ye clean, and change your garments, &c. Gen. XXXV. 2. What that word means, והטהרו and be ye clean, Aben Ezra does very well interpret to be שירחצו הגוף The waſhing of the body, or Baptiſm; which reaſon it ſelf alſo perſwades us to believe.

II. All the Nation of Iſrael do aſſert as it were with one mouth, that all the Nation of Iſrael, were brought into the Covenant, among other things, by Baptiſm. g Iſrael (ſaith Maimonides, the great Interpreter of the Jewiſh Law) was admitted into the Covenant by three things, namely, by Circumciſion, Baptiſm, and Sacrifice. Circumciſion was in Egypt, as it is ſaid, None uncircumciſed ſhall eat of the Paſover. Baptiſm was in the Wilderneſs before the giving of the Law, as it is ſaid, Thou ſhalt ſanctifie them to day and to morrow, and let them wath their garments. g Iſſure Biah, cap. 13.

III. They aſſert that that infinite number of Proſelytes in the days of David and Solomon were admitted by Baptiſm. h The Sanhedrins received not Proſelytes in the days of David and Solomon: Not in the days of David, leſt they ſhould betake themſelves to Proſelytiſm out of a fear of the Kingdom of Iſrael: Not in the days of Solomon, leſt they might do the ſame by reaſon of the glory of the Kingdom. And yet abundance of Proſelytes were made in the days of David and Solomon before private men; and the great Sanhedrin was full of care about this buſineſs: For they would not caſt them out of the Church, becauſe they were baptized, &c. h Maimonid. ibid.

IV. i Whenſoever any Heathen will betake himſelf, and be joyned to the Covenant of Iſrael, and place himſelf under the wings of the Divine Majeſty, and take the yoke of the Law upon him, voluntary Circumciſion, Baptiſm, and Oblation are required: but if it be a Woman, Baptiſm and Oblation. i Id. ibid.

That was a common Axiom, אין גר עד שימול ויטבול No man is a Proſelyte, untill he be circumciſed and baptized. It is diſputed by the Babylonian Gemara, k A Proſelyte, that is circumciſed and not baptized, what of him? R. Eliezer ſaith, Behold he is a Proſelyte: for ſo we find concerning our Fathers, that they were circumciſed, but not baptized. One is baptized, but not circumciſed, what of him? R. Joſhua ſaith, Behold he is a Proſelyte. For ſo we find concerning the maidſervants, who were baptized, but not circumciſed. k Jevamoth, fol. 46. 2.

But

But the wise men say, is he baptized, and not circumcised? Or, Is he circumcised, and not baptized? He is not a Proselyte, until he be circumcised, and baptized.

But Baptism was sufficient for women so far forth, as this held good, אטבלה לההיא

l Jevam. fol. 45 2. נכרית לשם לאנתתא וכו' l One baptizeth a Heathen woman in the name of a woman, we can assert that for a deed rightly done. Where the Gloss is thus, To be baptized in the name of a woman, was to be baptized טבילת נדה with the washing of a woman polluted, and not with the baptism to Proselytism. But we may nevertheless assert her who is so baptized for a compleat Proselytess; because that Baptism of washing for uncleanness serves for Proselytism to her, for a Heathen woman is not baptized, or washed, for uncleanness.

V. They baptized also young children (for the most part with their Parents.) גר

m Bab. Chrubb. fol. 11. 1. קטן מטבילין אותו ע"ד דעת בר' m They baptize a little Proselyte according to the judgment of the Sanhedrin; that is, as the Gloss renders it, If he be deprived of his father, and his mother brings him to be made a Proselyte, they baptize him (because none becomes a Proselyte without Circumcision and Baptism) according to the judgment, or rite, of the Sanhedrin, that is, that three men be present at the Baptism, who are now instead of a father to him.

And the Gemara a little after גר שנתגיירו בניו ובנותיו עמו וכו' If with a Proselyte his sons and his daughters are made Proselytes also, that which is done by their father redounds to their good. א"ר יוסף הגדילו יכולים למחות R. Joseph saith, When they grow into years, they may retract. Where the Gloss writes thus, This is to be understood of little children, who are made Proselytes together with their father.

n Jevam. fol. 78 1. n An Heathen woman, if she is made a Proselytess, when she is now big with child, the child needs not baptism: דסלקא ליה טבילה דאימיה for the Baptism of his mother serves him for baptism. Otherwise, he were to be baptized.

o Maimon. in Avadim, cap. 8 או מצא תינוק גוי ישראל שתקף בגוי קטן: o If an Israelite take a Gentile child, או מצא תינוק גוי or find a Gentile infant, and baptizeth him in the name of a Proselyte, behold he is a Proselyte.

p Hieros. Jevamoth, fol. 8. 4. We cannot also pass over that which indeed is worthy to be remembred. p Any ones servant is to be circumcised, though he be unwilling, but any ones son is not to be circumcised, if he be unwilling. R. Johanan enquired, Behold a little son, do you circumcise him by force? Yea, although he be as the son of Urcan. R. Hezekiah saith, Behold, a man finds an infant cast out, and he baptizeth him in the name of a servant: in the name of a freeman, do you also circumcise him in the name of a freeman.

We have therefore alledged these things the more largely, not only that you may receive satisfaction concerning the thing propounded, namely, how it came to pass, that the people flocked in so universal a concours, to Johns Baptism (because Baptism was no strange thing to the Jews;) but that some other things may be observed hence, which afford some light to certain places of Scripture, and will help to clear some knotty questions about Baptism.

First, You see baptism inseparably joyned to the Circumcision of Proselytes. There q Jevam. fol. 45. 2. was indeed some little distance of time; For q they were not baptized till the pain of circumcision was healed, because water might be injurious to the wound. But certainly baptism ever followed. We acknowledge indeed, that Circumcision was plainly of divine Institution, but by whom Baptism, that was inseparable from it, was instituted, is doubtful. And yet, it is worthy of observation, our Saviour rejected Circumcision, and retained the Appendix to it: and when all the Gentiles were now to be introduced into the true Religion, he preferred this proselytical Introductory (pardon the expression) unto the Sacrament of Entrance into the Gospel.

One might observe the same almost in the Eucharist. The Lamb in the Passover was of divine Institution, and so indeed was the Bread. But whence was the Wine? But yet rejecting the Lamb, Christ instituted the Sacrament in the Bread and Wine.

Secondly, Observing from these things which have been spoken, how very known and frequent the use of Baptism was among the Jews, the reason appears very easie, why the Sanhedrin by their messengers enquired not of John concerning the reason of Baptism, but concerning the authority of the Baptizer; not what Baptism meant, but whence he had a licence so to baptize, Joh. I. 25.

Thirdly, Hence also the reason appears, why the New Testament doth not prescribe by some more accurate rule, who the persons are to be baptized. The Anabaptists object, It is not commanded, to baptize Infants, therefore they are not to be baptized. To whom I answer, It is not forbidden to baptize Infants, therefore they are to be baptized. And the reason is plain. For when Pedobaptism in the Jewish Church, was so known, usual, and frequent in the admission of Proselytes, that nothing almost was more known, usual and frequent.

1. There was no need to strengthen it with any precept, when Baptism was now passed into an Evangelical Sacrament. For Christ took baptism into his hands, and into Evangelical use, as he found it, this only added, that he might promote it to a worthier end, and a larger use. The whole Nation knew well enough that little children used to be baptized:

baptized: There was no need of a precept for that, which had ever by common uſe prevailed. If a Royal Proclamation ſhould now iſſue forth in theſe words, Let every one reſort on the Lords day to the publick aſſembly in the Church; certainly he would be mad, who in times to come ſhould argue hence, that Prayers, Sermons, Singing of Pſalms were not to be celebrated on the Lords day in the publick aſſemblies, becauſe there is no mention of them in the Proclamation. For the Proclamation provided for the celebration of the Lords day in the publick Aſſemblies in general, but there was no need to make mention of the particular kinds of the Divine Worſhip to be celebrated there, when they were always, and every where well known, and in daily uſe, before the publiſhing of the Proclamation, and when it was publiſhed. The caſe is the very ſame in Baptiſm. Chriſt inſtituted it for an Evangelical Sacrament, whereby all ſhould be admitted into the profeſſion of the Goſpel, as heretofore it was uſed for admiſſion into Proſelytiſm to the Jewiſh religion. The particulars belonging to it, as the manner of baptizing, the age, the ſex to be baptized, &c. had no need of a rule and definition, becauſe theſe were by the common uſe of them ſufficiently known even to Mechanics, and the moſt ignorant men.

2. On the other hand therefore, there was need of a plain and open prohibition, that infants and little children ſhould not be baptized, if our Saviour would not have had them baptized. For, ſince it was moſt common in all ages foregoing, that little children ſhould be baptized, if Chriſt had been minded to have that cuſtom aboliſhed, he would have openly forbidden it. Therefore his ſilence, and the ſilence of the Scripture in this matter, confirms Pedobaptiſm, and continueth it unto all ages.

Fourthly, It is clear enough by what hath been already ſaid, in what ſenſe that is to be taken in the New Teſtament, which we ſometimes meet with, namely, that the Maſter of the family was baptized with his whole family, Act. XVI. 15, 33. &c. Nor is it of any ſtrength, which the Antipedobaptiſts contend for, that it cannot be proved there were infants in thoſe families: for the inquiry is not ſo proper, whether there were infants in thoſe families, as it is concluded truly and deſervedly; If there were, they had all been to be baptized. Nor do I believe this People, that flocked to Johns baptiſm, were ſo forgetful of the manner and cuſtom of the Nation, that they brought not their little children alſo with them to be baptized.

Some things are now to be ſpoken of the manner and form which John uſed.

Firſt, In ſome things he ſeems to have followed the manner, whereby Proſelytes were baptized, in other things not to have followed them. Concerning it the Talmudic Canons have theſe ſayings.

I. אין מטבילין גר בלילה r They do not baptiſe a Proſelyte by night. Nor indeed s were the unclean to be waſhed, but in the day time. Maimonides adds, t They baptized not a Proſelyte on the Sabbath, nor on a holy day, nor by night.

t Iſſure Biah, cap. 13.

II. גר צריך שלשה u A Proſelyte hath need of three: that is, It is required that three men who are Scholars of the Wiſemen, be preſent at the Baptiſm of a Proſelyte; who may take care that the buſineſs be rightly performed, and may briefly inſtruct the Catechumen, (the perſon to be baptized) and may judge of the matter it ſelf. For the admiſſion of a Proſelyte was reckoned no light matter: קשים גרים לישראל כנספחת x Proſelytes are dangerous to Iſrael, like the itch, was an Axiom. For they, either tenacious of their former cuſtoms, or ignorant of the Law of Iſrael, have corrupted others with their Example, or being mingled with Iſrael were the cauſe, that the divine glory did reſt the leſs upon them, it reſteth not on any but upon families of a nobler pedegree. Theſe reaſons the Gloſſers give. When therefore the admiſſion of Proſelytes was of ſo great moment, they were not to be admitted but by the judicial conſiſtory of Three.

x Jevam. fol. 47. 2.

III. במקוה הכשר לטבילת נדה שם מטבילין את הגרים: y They baptize a Proſelyte in ſuch a confluence of waters, as was fit for the waſhing of a menſtruous woman. Of ſuch a confluence of waters the Lawyers have theſe words: z A man that hath the Gonorrhea is cleanſed no where but in a fountain: but a menſtruous woman, as alſo all other unclean perſons, were waſhed in ſome confluence of waters; in which ſo much water ought to be, as may ſerve to waſh the whole body at one dipping. Our wiſe men have eſteemed this proportion to be to a cubit ſquare, and three cubits depth: and this meaſure contains forty Seahs of water.

z Maim. in Mikvaoth, c. 1. & 4 Talmud. in Mikvaoth, c. 2. & 3

When it is ſaid, that he that hath the Gonorrhea is to waſh in a ſpring, or a ſtream, but a menſtruous woman, and all other unclean perſons in ſome confluence of waters, it forbids not a menſtruous woman, and other unclean perſons to waſh in ſtreams, where they might: but it permits, where they might not, to waſh in ſome confluence of waters; which was not lawful for a man that had the Gonorrhea to do. The ſame is to be underſtood concerning the Baptiſm of a Proſelyte, who was allowed to waſh himſelf in ſtreams, and was allowed alſo, where there were no ſtreams, to waſh in a confluence of waters.

IV. When a Proſelyte was to be baptized, they firſt aſked him concerning the ſincerity of his Converſion to Judaiſm: Whether he offered not himſelf to Proſelytiſm for the obtaining riches, for fear, or for love to ſome Iſraelite woman, &c. And when they ſaw that he came out of love of the Law, they inſtructed him concerning the various articles of the Law, of one God, of the evil of Idolatry, of the reward of Obedience, of the World to come, of the privileges of Iſrael, &c. All which if he profeſſed, that he embraced them, he is forthwith circumciſed.

a As ſoon as he grows whole of the wound of circumciſion, they bring him to Baptiſm, and being placed in the water, they again inſtruct him in ſome weightier, and in ſome lighter commands of the Law. בטל ועלה הרי הוא כישראל לכל דבריו: Which being heard, he plungeth himſelf, and comes up, and behold, he is as an Iſraelite in all things. The women place a woman in the waters up to the neck: and two Diſciples of the Wiſemen, ſtanding without, inſtruct her about ſome lighter precepts of the Law, and ſome weightier, while ſhe in the mean time ſtands in the waters. ואחר כך טובלת בפניהם: And then ſhe plungeth her ſelf; and they turning away their faces go out, while ſhe comes up out of the water.

In the baptizing of a Proſelyte this is not to be paſſed over, but let it be obſerved, namely, that מטבילין אותו others baptized him, and that והוא טובל he baptized himſelf, or dipped, or plunged himſelf in the waters. Now what that plunging was, you may underſtand from thoſe things which Maimonides ſpeaks in Mikvaoth in the place before cited. כל טובל Every perſon baptized (or dipped, whether he were waſhed from pollution, or baptized into Proſelytiſm) muſt dip his whole body, now ſtripped, and made naked, at one dipping. And wher eſoever in the Law, waſhing of the body or garments is mentioned, it means nothing elſe, than the waſhing of the whole body. For if any waſh himſelf all over, except the very top of his little finger, he is ſtill in his uncleanneſs. And if any hath much hair, he muſt waſh all the hair of his head, for that alſo was reckoned for the body. But if any ſhould enter into the water with their cloths on, yet their waſhing holds good, becauſe the water would paſs through their cloths, and their garments would not hinder it.

And now a little to compare the baptiſm of John with that Proſelytical baptiſm, and ours with both, theſe things are to be conſidered.

I. If you compare the waſhing of polluted perſons preſcribed by the Law with the baptiſm of Proſelytes, both that and this implies uncleanneſs, however ſomething different, that implies legal uncleanneſs, this Heathen, but both polluting. But a Proſelyte was baptized not only into the waſhing off of that Gentile pollution, nor only thereby to be tranſplanted into the Religion of the Jews; but that, by the moſt accurate rite of tranſlation that could poſſibly be, he might ſo paſs into an Iſraelite, that being married to an Iſraelite woman, he might produce a free and legitimate ſeed, and an undefiled offſpring. Hence ſervants that were taken into a family, were baptized, and ſervants alſo that were to be made free: Not ſo much becauſe they were defiled with heathen uncleanneſs, as that by that rite כישראר לכל דבר becoming Iſraelites in all reſpect, they might be more fit to match with Iſraelites, and their children be accounted as Iſraelites. And hence the ſons of Proſelytes, in following generations were circumciſed indeed, but not baptized. They were circumciſed that they might take upon themſelves the obligation of the Law, but they needed not baptiſm, becauſe they were already Iſraelites. From theſe things it is plain, that there was ſome difference, as to the end, between the Moſaical waſhings of unclean perſons, and the baptiſm of Proſelytes; and ſome between the Baptiſm of Proſelytes, and John's baptiſm: Not as though they concurred not in ſome parallel end, but becauſe other ends were added over and above to this, or that, or ſome ends were withdrawn.

II. The Baptiſm of Proſelytes was the bringing over of Gentiles into the Jewiſh Religion; The Baptiſm of John, was the bringing over of Jews into another Religion: And hence tis the more to be wondered at, that the people ſo readily flockt to him, when he introduced a Baptiſm ſo different from the known Proſelytical baptiſm. The reaſon of which is to be fetcht from hence, that at the coming of the Meſſias, they thought, not without cauſe, that the ſtate of things was plainly to be changed; and that, from the Oracles of the Prophets, who with one mouth deſcribed the times of the Meſſias for a new World. Hence was that received opinion אלף שנים עתיד ה"קבה לחדש עולמו: That God at that time would renew the World for a thouſand years. See the Aruch, in the word צרק and after in Chap. 24. 3. And that alſo, that they uſed עולם הבא the world to come, by a form of ſpeech very common among them, for the times of the Meſſias, which we obſerve more largely elſewhere.

III. The baptiſm of Proſelytes, was an obligation to perform the Law; that of John, was an obligation to repentance: for although Proſelytical baptiſm admitted of ſome ends, and Circumciſiou of others, yet a Traditional and erroneous Doctrine at that time, had joyned this to both, that the Proſelyte covenanted in both, and oblig'd himſelf to perform the Law; to which that of the Apoſtle relates; Gal. V. 3. I teſtifie teſtifie again to every man that is circumciſed, that he is a debtor to do the whole Law.

But the baptiſm of John was a baptiſm of repentance; Mark I. 4. which being undertaken, they who were baptized, profeſſed to renounce their own legal righteouſneſs, and on the contrary acknowledged themſelves to be obliged to repentance and faith in the Meſſias to come. How much the Phariſaical doctrine of Juſtification differed from the Evangelical, ſo much the obligation undertaken in the baptiſm of Proſelytes, differed from the obligation undertaken in the baptiſm of John: Which obligation alſo holds amongſt Chriſtians to the end of the World.

IV. That the baptiſm of John was by plunging the body, (after the ſame manner as the waſhing of unclean perſons, and the baptiſm of Proſelytes, was) ſeems to appear from thoſe things which are related of him, namely that he baptized in Jordan, that he baptized in Enon, becauſe there was much water there; and that Chriſt being baptized came up out of the water: to which, that ſeems to be parallel, Act. VIII. 38. Philip and the Eunuch went down into the water, &c. Some complain that this rite is not retained in the Chriſtian Church, as though it ſomething derogated from the truth of baptiſm; or as though it were to be called an innovation, when the ſprinkling of water is uſed inſtead of plunging. This is no place to diſpute of theſe things. Let us return theſe three things only, for a preſent anſwer.

1. That the notion of waſhing in John's baptiſm differs from ours, in that he baptized none who were not brought over from one Religion, and that an irreligious one too, into another, and that a true one. But there is no place for this among us, who are born Chriſtians: the condition therefore being varied, the rite is not only lawfully, but deſervedly varied alſo. Our baptiſm argues defilement indeed, and uncleanneſs; and demonſtrates this doctrinally, that we being polluted have need of waſhing; but this is to be underſtood of our natural and ſinful ſtain, to be waſhed away by the blood of Chriſt and the grace of God: with which ſtain indeed they were defiled, who were baptized by John. But to denote this waſhing by a Sacramental ſign, the ſprinkling of water is as ſufficient, as the dipping into water, when in truth this argues waſhing and purification, as well as that. But thoſe who were baptized by John were blemiſhed with another ſtain, and that an outward one, and after a manner viſible; that is, a polluted religion, namely Judaiſm, or Heatheniſm; from which, if according to the cuſtom of the Nation they paſt, by a deeper and ſeverer waſhing, they neither underwent it without reaſon; nor with any reaſon may it be laid upon us, whoſe condition is different from theirs.

2. Since Dipping was a rite uſed only in the Jewiſh Nation and proper to it, it were ſomething hard, if all Nations ſhould be ſubjected under it; but eſpecially, when it is neither neceſſarily to be eſteemed of the eſſence of baptiſm, and is moreover ſo harſh and dangerous, that in regard of theſe things, it ſcarcely gave place to Circumciſion. We read, that ſome leavened with Judaiſm to the higheſt degree, yet with't that Dipping in Purification might be taken away; becauſe it was accompanied with ſo much ſeverity. b In the days of R. Joſhua ben Levi, ſome endeavoured to abroliſh this dipping, for the ſake of the women of Galilee; becauſe by reaſon of the cold, they became barren. R. Joſhua ben Levi ſaid unto them, do ye go about to take away that which hedges in Iſrael from tranſgreſſion? Surely it is hard to lay this yoke upon the neck of all Nations, which ſeemed too rough to the Jews themſelves, and not to be born by them, men too much given to ſuch kind of ſeverer rites. And if it be demanded of them, who went about to take away that dipping, Would you have no purification at all by water? It is probable, that they would have allowed of the ſprinkling of water, which is leſs harſh, and not leſs agreeable to the thing it ſelf.

b Hieroſ. Biracoth, fol. 6. 3.

3. The following ages with good reaſon, and by Divine Preſcript, adminiſtred a Baptiſm differing in a greater matter from the Baptiſm of John; and therefore it was leſs to differ in a leſs matter. The application of water was neceſſarily of the eſſence of Baptiſm; but the application of it in this or that manner ſpeaks but a circumſtance: The adding alſo of the word, was of the nature of a Sacrament; but the changing of the word into this or that form, would you not call this a circumſtance alſo? And yet we read the form of Baptiſm ſo changed; that you may obſerve it to have been threefold in the hiſtory of the New Teſtament.

Secondly, In reference to the form of John's Baptiſm, which thing we have propounded to conſider in the ſecond place; it is not at all to be doubted but he Baptized in the name of the Meſſias now ready to come: and it may be gathered from his words, and from his ſtory. As yet he knew not that Jeſus of Nazareth was the Meſſias; which he confeſſeth himſelf, John I. 31. yet he knew well enough that the Meſſias was coming; therefore he Baptiſed thoſe that came to him in his name, inſtructing them in the Doctrine of the Goſpel, concerning faith in the Meſſias and repentance; that they might be the readier to receive the Meſſias, when he ſhould manifeſt himſelf. Conſider well, Malac. III. 1. Luke

Luke I. 17. John I. 7, 31. &c. The Apoſtles baptizing the Jews, baptized them in the name of Jeſus; (becauſe Jeſus of Nazareth had now been revealed for the Meſſias) and that they did, when it had been before commanded them by Chriſt, baptize all Nations in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt. So you muſt underſtand that which is ſpoken Joh. III. 23. & IV. 2. concerning the Diſciples of Chriſt baptizing; namely, that they baptized in the Name of Jeſus, that thence it might be known that Jeſus of Nazareth was the Meſſias in the Name of whom, ſuddenly to come, John had baptized. That of St. Peter is plain, Act. II. 38. Be baptized every one of you in the Name of Jeſus Chriſt: and that, Act. VIII. 16. They were baptized in the Name of Jeſus.

But the Apoſtles baptized the Gentiles according to the precept of our Lord, in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt, Matth. XXVIII. 19. For ſince it was very much controverted among the Jews about the true Meſſias, and that unbelieving Nation denied ſtifly and without ceaſing that Jeſus of Nazareth was He, (under which virulent Spirit they labour even to this day) it was not without cauſe, yea nor without neceſſity, that they baptized in the Name of Jeſus; that by that ſeal might be confirmed this moſt principal truth in the Goſpel, and that thoſe that were baptized, might profeſs it; That Jeſus of Nazareth was the true Meſſias. But among the Gentiles, the controverſie was not concerning the true Meſſias, but, concerning the true God: among them therefore it was needful that baptiſm ſhould be conferred in the Name of the true God, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.

We ſuppoſe therefore that men, women and children came to John's baptiſm, according to the manner of the Nation in the reception of Proſelytes; Namely, that they ſtanding in Jordan, were taught by John, that they were baptized into the Name of the Meſſias that was now immediately to come; and into the profeſſion of the Doctrine of the Goſpel concerning Faith and Repentance; that they plunged themſelves into the River, and ſo came out. And that which is ſaid of them, that they were baptized by him, confeſſing their ſins, is to be underſtood according to the tenor of the Baptiſts preaching; not that they did this man by man, or by ſome auricular confeſſion made to John, or by openly declaring ſome particular ſins; but when the Doctrine of John exhorted them to Repentance and to Faith in the Meſſias, they renounced and diſowned the Doctrine and Opinion of Juſtification by their works, wherewith they had been before time leavened, and acknowledged and confeſſed themſelves ſinners.

John could not baptize in any part of Jordan, ſo it were within the bounds of Judea, (which the Evangeliſts aſſert) which had not been dried up, and had afforded a paſſage to the Iſraelites when they came out of Egypt, and were now entring into the promiſed land.

VERS. VII.

Ἰδὼν δὲ πολλοὺς τῶν Φαρισαίων καὶ Σαδδουκαίων. And ſeeing many of the Phariſees and Sadducees.

TO attempt a hiſtory of the Phariſees and Sadducees after ſo many very Learned Men who have treated of their original, manners, and inſtitutions, would be next to madneſs. We will briefly touch at a few things, and thoſe perhaps leſs obvious.

I. That the Phariſees do not derive their name (as ſome would have it) from the word פרש which ſignifies to expound, is ſufficiently evinced by this, that there were Women Phariſees as well as Men. c R. Joſhua ſaith, A religious man fooliſh, a wicked man crafty; A woman Phariſee, And the daſhing of the Phariſees againſt the ſtones, deſtroy the World. Thoſe things are worth obſerving which are ſpoke by the Babylonian Gemariſts on that clauſe אישה פרושה A woman Phariſee. תר בתולה צליניתא ואלמנה שובבותא The Rabbins teach. A praying Maid, A gadding Widdow, And a Boy, whoſe months are not fulfilled, theſe corrupt the World. But R. Jochanan ſaith, We learn the ſhunning of ſin from a Maid, and the receiving of a reward from a Widdow. The ſhunning of ſin from a Maid; for R. Jochanan heard a certain Maid proſtrate on her face, thus praying, Eternal Lord, thou haſt created Paradice, thou haſt created Hell alſo, thou haſt created the Righteous, and thou haſt created the Wicked: Let it be thy good pleaſure that I be not a Scandal to men. The receiving of a reward from a Widow; for there was a certain Widow who, when there were Synagogues neurer every where, ſhe always reſorted sorted to the School of R. Jochanan to pray: to whom R. Jochanan said, O my daughter, are there not Synagogues at hand round about you? But she answered, ולא שכר פסיעות יש לי Will there not be a reward for my steps; or, for my journy hither: for the (Tradition) saith, These destroy the World, as Joanna the daughter of Retib.

בחולה צליניה: by one Glos is rendred בעלת תפילה that is, a Maid given to prayer, or, a Maid of many prayers. By another it is rendred בחולתא צמיניה A Maid given to fasting: מציימה אוברת בחוליה Losing her Virginity by fasting.

A gadding Widow, they call her who always goes about from place to place, to visit her neighbours; they are the words of the Glos. And these corrupt the World, because they are no other but bauds and sorceresses, and yet they pretend sanctity.

Joanna the daughter of Retib, (the Glos also being witness) was a certain sorceress Widdow, who, when the time of any child birth drew near, shut up the womb of the child bearing woman with Magic arts, that she could not be delivered. And when the poor woman had endured long and great torments, she would say, I will go and pray for you; perhaps my prayers will be heard; when she was gone, she would dissolve the enchantments, and presently the infant would be born. On a certain day, as a hired man wrought in her house, she, being gone to a womans labour, he heard the charms tinkling in a pan, and taking off the cover, the charms presently come out, and strait the infant is born; and hence it was known that she was a witch.

I have therefore cited these passages, not only that it may be shewn that there were women Pharisees, and so that the name is not taken from interpreting or expounding, but that it may be observed also what kind of women, for the most part, embrace Pharisaism; namely Widows and Maids, under the vail of Sanctity and Devotion, hiding and practising all manner of wickedness. And so much we gain of the history of the Pharisees, while we are tracing the etymology of the word.

II. That the Pharisees therefore were so called from the word פרש signifying Separation, is more commonly asserted, and more truly; and the thing it self, as well as the word speaks it: so that by a word more known to us, you might rightly call the Pharisees, Separatists; but in what sense, has need of more narrow enquiry; The differences of the Jewish people are to be disposed here into divers ranks: and first we will begin with the Women.

1. It were an infinite task to search particularly how their Canons, indulged (shall I say?) or prescribed the Woman a freedom from very many rites in which a great part of the Jewish religion was placed. How numberless are the times that that occurs in the Talmudic Pandect, נשים ועבדי וקטני פטורין d Women, servants and children are not bound to these things. e Women, servants and children are not bound to recite their Phylacteries, nor to wear them. פסחין של נשים רשות The Passovers of Women are at their own Will. And not to dwell upon things that are obvious, let this one serve instead of many. f A certain Matron asked R. Eleazar, Why when Aaron sinned in making the Golden Calf, the people are punished with a threefold death? He answered, Let not a Woman be learned beyond her distaff. Hircanus his son said unto him, Because no answer is given her in one word out of the Law, She will withdraw from us three hundred tenth Cori yearly. To whom he replied, Let them rather go and be burnt, than the words of the Law be delivered to Women.

f Bab. Sotah, fol. 21. 2.

From hence it appears, that the Women that embraced Pharisaism, did it of their own free will and vow, not by command: which the Men Pharisees also did.

2. Pass we from the Women to the Men; and first to the lowest degrees of Men in the distinction relating to Religion; namely to them, whom they ordinarily called בור Illiterate, and עם הארץ The people of the Earth, or, the Plebeians. Of them thus the Gemara in Sotah newly cited. g One reads the Scriptures, and recites the Mishna, and yet he waits not upon the Scholars of the Wise-men, what of him? R. Eleazar saith, זה עם הארץ Behold! This is one of the people of the earth. R. Samuel bar Nachmani saith הרי זה בור Behold! this is an illiterate man. R. Jannai saith, behold! this is a Cuthean. R. Achabar Jacob saith, behold! This is a Magician. And a little after, Who is עם הארץ the people of the Earth? R. Meir saith, He that recites not his Phylacteries morning and evening with his prayers. But the Wise men say, He whosoever he be, that lays not up his Phylacteries. Ben Azzai saith, He, who hath not a fringe on his garment, R. Jochanan ben Joseph saith, He, that instructs not his sons in the doctrine of the Law. Others say, He, who although he read the Scriptures, and repeats the Traditions, yet attends not on the Scholars of the Wise men, this is, ע"ה the people of the Earth, or, the Plebeian. Does he read the Scriptures, and not repeat the Tradition? Behold, this man is בור Illiterate. The Glos upon the place speaks thus, The people of the Earth are they, of whom there is suspicion of Tenths, and cleanness: that is, lest they tithe not rightly, nor take care aright concerning cleansings. And בור the illiterate person is "גרוע מעה more vile, or inferior than the people of the Earth. Compare that John VII. 49. The people that knoweth not the Law is cursed.

The

The חבירים & תלמידי חכמים Collegians, or Associates, and Scholars of the Wise men, were opposed to these Vulgar persons. Under the title of תלמידי חכמים Scholars of the Wise men, are comprehended all that were learned and studious: under the title of חברים Religious, as well learned, as unlearned. There were some of the learned, whom they commonly called חבריהון דרבנין or חברייא דרבנין Collegians of the Rabbins; who as yet were Candidates, and not preferred to the publick office of teaching or judging. The thing may be illustrated by one Example. חבירים מהו ליכנס לקידוש חדש: h Do the חבירים the Collegians enter in to appoint the New Moon? R. Hoshaia said; When I was חבר a Collegian, R. Samuel ben R. Isaac led me in to the appointment of the New Moon, but I knew not, whether I were of the number or no. And a little after, Do the Collegians (or, Fellows) go in to intercalate the year? Let us learn this from the example of Rabban Gamaliel, who said, Let the seven Seniors meet me in the Chamber. But eight entred. Who came in hither, saith he, without leave? I, answered Samuel the little.

h Hieros. Sanhedr. fol. 18.3.

In this sense the word חבר a Collegue, differs nothing from תלמיד חכם A Scholar of a Wise man, in that both signifie a Student, and a Learned man. But the word חבר a Collegue hath a wider sense, denoting all such who have more professedly devoted themselves to Religion, and have professed a more devout Life and Rule, than the common people, whether they were learned, or unlearned, whether of the Sect of the Pharisees, or of the Sadduces, or some other. Hence you have mention of חבר כותי i a religious Samaritan, and of נחתים חבר k a religious Baker. And the phrase seems to be drawn from Psal. CXIX. 63. חבר אני לכל אשר יראוך I am a companion of all those that fear thee.: קבלו עליהן דברי חברות They take upon them the habit of Religion. See the Babylonian Talmud in l Avodah Zarah in the Gloss. That distinction also is worthy of consideration of חברייא רבנייא and חברייא ועמייא m The greater and the less Religious.

m Hieros. Bava Bathra, fol. 17. 1

Yet the word seems sometimes to be appropriated to the Pharisees, as being men, who above all others put on a splendidly cloaked Religion, which appears enough from the history of the Gospel. So perhaps is that to be understood חברי מרנן בגלילאה n The religious Galileans purifie: that is, as the Gloss explains it, They cleanse their Wine and their Oyl for a drink offering, if perhaps the Temple may be built in their days. Which nevertheless the Aruch citing, thus explains them: חברים אוכלים חוליהן בטהרה The Religious eat their common food in cleanness. By which very thing the Gloss defines Pharisees: לפרושין לאוכלי חוליהן בטהרה o To the Pharisees, that is, to them that eat their common food in cleanness. Behold, how the word חברים Religious, and פרושין Pharisees, are convertible terms, and how this was the proper notion, whereby a Pharisee was defined, That he eat his common food in cleanness: that is, that he washed his hands, when he eat.

o In Chagigah, fol. 18. 2.

III. We must not think, that Pharisaism arose altogether and at once, but it was long a conceiving, and of no fixed form, when it was brought forth. The same may in a manner be said of this, which is of the Traditions: both these, and that were the issue of many years. p The Traditionarians do refer the first conception of the Traditions to the times of Ezra. But how many centuries of years passed, before the birth of this whole monster was full ripe? In like manner, the first seeds of Pharisaism were cast long before its birth; and being now brought forth, was a long time growing, before it came to maturity; if so be any can define, what its maturity was.

p Hieros. Megil. fol. 75 1. Bab. Bava Kama, fol. 82. 1.

We observe presently, that the foundations of Sadducciſm were laid in the days of Ezra, before there were any Sadduces: in his days also, I suspect, the foundations of Pharisaism were laid, long before there were any Pharisees. For since the Pharisees were marked with that tittle, because they separated themselves from other men, as more prophane; and since in the days of Ezra and Nehemiah, it was the great care, and that a holy care too, to separate the seed of Israel from the Heathen inhabitants of the Land, to wit, the Samaritans, the Ashdodites, the Moabites, &c. not much after some men arrogating too much to themselves, took occasion hence of separating themselves from the men of the Israelitic seed, as too prophane, and very unfit (alas!) for their communion. Which very thing we experience in our present Separatists. For when the Scripture commands Christians, that they communicate not with Unbelievers, with those who are without, &c. that is, with Heathens, some do hence make a pretence, of withdrawing themselves from the assemblies of Christians: by what right, by what foundation, let themselves look to it.

We shall not trace the time wherein the name of Pharisee first arose: This is done by Learneder Men: And therefore let it be enough to have observed that only. After once this pretence of Religion was received, that it was a pious matter, to separate a mans self from the common people, superstition encreased every day, which served for a stay, and patronage to this Sect, and separation. For when they had espoused a Religion so supercilious, that they commonly said, Stand off, I am holier than thou, (which was also foretold by the Prophet with an execration, Esa. LXV. 5.) and that they placed the highest Sanctimony in this, to withdraw themſelves from the common people, as prophane, it was certainly neceſſary to circumſcribe, and to put themſelves under a more auſtere rule and diſcipline, that they might retain the name and fame of Religious perſons in other things, beſides that ſeparation, that argued ſo much pride and arrogancy. Hence the troubles about Tithings, and Waſhings aroſe, and encreaſed age after age: hence ſprung the frequent Faſtings and Prayers, the cares of the Phylacteries, Fringes, and other matters without number: ſo that (a thing fatal to Separatiſts) this Sect at laſt was crumbled into Sects, and a Phariſee was in a manner the ſame to a Phariſee, that the people of the Earth was to a Phariſee.

q Both Talmuds reckon ſeven Sects of Phariſees, and ſo does the r Aruch: which it will not be irkſom to deſcribe with their penſil, that the Reader may ſee, to what a degree of madneſs this Sect was come, as well as to what a degree of Hypocriſie. שבעה פרושין הן The Phariſees are ſeven.

Whether Phariſaiſm ran out into any of theſe Sects in the days of the Baptiſt, we diſpute not. Let it be granted, that the beſt, and the moſt modeſt of that order came to his baptiſm: the beſt of the Phariſees certainly were the worſt of men. And it is ſo much the more to be wondred at, that theſe men ſhould receive his baptiſm after that manner as they did, when it was highly contrary to the rule of the Phariſees to converſe among the common people, of whom there was ſo great a concourſe to John: and highly contrary to the Doctrine of the Phariſees, ſo much as to dream of any righteouſneſs, beſides that, which was of the works of the Law, which the Doctrine of John diametrically contradicted.

The original of the Sadducees, learned men as well Jews, as Chriſtians, do for the moſt part refer to one Zadoc, a Scholar of Antigonus Socheus; which Antigonus took the chief ſeat in the Sanhedrin after the death of Simeon the Juſt. Of him thus ſpeaks the Tract Avoth. c Antigonus of Socho received Traditions of Simeon the Juſt. He ſaid, Be not as ſervants, who wait upon their Maſter for the ſake of the reward; but be ye like ſervants, who wait upon their Maſter not for the ſake of the reward: but let the fear of the Lord rule you.

The Wiſe men therefore called them Sadducees and Baithuſees.* And a little after: But in theſe Countries, namely in Egypt, they call them Karaites, [קראים] but Sadducees and Baithuſees are their Names among the Wiſe men.

e Yet that raiſeth a ſcruple here. At the concluſion of all prayers in the Temple they ſaid עד עולם for ever. But when the Hereticks brake in, and ſaid, There was no age but one, it was appointed to be ſaid מן העולם ועד העולם For ever and ever, or, from age to age. Upon theſe words thus the Gloſs; In the firſt Temple they ſaid only, Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael for ever. But when the Hereticks brake in, and ſaid, There was no age but this, Ezra and his conſiſtory appointed, that it ſhould be ſaid מן ובו' For ever and ever, or from age to age, to imply there is a double world (this, and one to come) to root out of the heart the opinion of thoſe that deny the Reſurrection of the dead.

Take notice, Reader, that there were ſome, who denied the Reſurrection of the dead in the days of Ezra, when as yet Zadoc the father of the Sadducees was not born. After Ezra, and his great Synagogue (which indured many a year after Ezra was dead) ſat Simeon the Juſt, performing the office of the High Prieſt, for the ſpace of forty years: and Antigonus Socheus the Maſter of Zadoc ſucceeded him in the chair of the Sanhedrin. So that although the Sadducees with good reaſon do bear an ill report for denying the Reſurrection, and that was their principal Hereſie; yet that Hereſie was, when as yet there were no Hereticks, called by the name of Sadducees. To which perhaps thoſe words do agree (which ſufficiently taſte of ſuch a Hereſie,) Ye have ſaid, it is in vain to ſerve God, &c. Mal. III. 14.

It is not therefore to be denied, that the Sadducee Hereticks were ſo named from Zadoc, but that the Hereſie of the Sadducees concerning the Reſurrection was older than that name, one may ſuppoſe not without reaſon; nor that that curſed Doctrine firſt aroſe from the words of Antigonus illy underſtood by Zadoc and Baithus, but was of an antienter original, when as yet the Prophets Zacharias, Malachi, and Ezra himſelf were alive, if that Ezra were not the ſame with Malachi, as the Jews ſuppoſe. Therefore I do rather think, that Hereſie ſprang from the miſunderſtanding of the words of Ezekiel, Chap. XXXVII. which ſome underſtanding according to the letter, and together with it ſeeing no Reſurrection, dreamt that there would be none afterwards. And this Doctrine encreaſed, and exalted it ſelf into a Sect, when at length Zadoc and Baithus aſſerted, that it was ſo determined out of the Chair by their Maſter Antigonus, the Preſident of the Sanhedrin.

When I fetch the riſe of the Sadducees not much after the death of Simeon the Juſt, that does not unſeaſonably come into my mind, which is mentioned by the Talmudiſts, that the ſtate of things became worſe after his death. f All the days of Simeon the Juſt, the ſcape Goat had ſcarce come to the middle of the precipice of the Mountain (whence he was caſt down) but he was broken into pieces: but, when Simeon the Juſt was dead, he fled away (alive) into the deſert, and was eaten by Saracens. While Simeon the Juſt lived, the lot of God (in the day of Expiation) went forth always to the right hand: Simeon the Juſt being dead, it went forth ſometimes to the right hand, and ſometimes to the left. All the days of Simeon the Juſt, the little ſcarlet Tongue looked always white: but when Simeon the Juſt was dead, it ſometimes looked white, and ſometimes red. All the days of Simeon the Juſt, the Weſt light always burnt; but when he was dead, it ſometimes burnt, and ſometimes went out. All the days of Simeon the Juſt, the fire upon the Altar burnt clear and bright, and after two pieces of wood laid on in the morning, they laid on nothing elſe the whole day: but when he was dead, the force of the fire languiſhed in that manner, that they were compelled to ſupply it all the day. All the days of Simeon the Juſt, a bleſſing was ſent upon the two loaves, and the Shewbread ſo, that a portion came to every Prieſt, to the quantity of an Olive at leaſt, and there were ſome who eat till they were ſatisfied, and there were others, to whom ſomething remained, after they had eaten their fill: but when Simeon the Juſt was dead, that bleſſing was withdrawn, and ſo little remained to each, that thoſe that were modeſt withdrew their hands, and thoſe that were greedy ſtill ſtretched them out.

I. Ὄφεις, Serpents, Chap. XXIII. 33. Not ſo much the ſeed of Abraham, which ye boaſt of, as the ſeed of the Serpent. Ὁ Ἀντίχριστος, ὁ Ἀντικείμενος, The Antichriſt, the Oppoſer, 2 Theſ. II. 4 A Nation and offspring diametrically oppoſite, and an enemy to that ſeed of the woman, and which was to bruiſe his heel.

II. Hence, not without ground, it is concluded, that that Nation was rejected, and given over to a reprobate ſenſe, even before the coming of Chriſt. They were not only γενεὰ, a generation, but γεννήματα, an offſpring of Vipers, Serpents ſprung from Serpents. Nor is it wonder, if they were rejected by God, when they had long ſince rejected God, and Gods Word, by their Traditions. See that Matth. XIII. 13, 14, 15. & 1 Pet. II. 10. Ye were not a people.

There was indeed a certain remnant among them, to be gathered by Chriſt: and when that was gathered, the reſt of the Nation was delivered over to everlaſting perdition.

This

This is that λεῖμμα, that remnant of the Apoſtle, Rom. XI. 5. which then was, when he writ thoſe things; which then was to be gathered, before the deſtruction of that Nation.

Φυγεῖν ἀπὸ τ μελλούσης ὀργῆς. To fly from the wrath to come.

Theſe words reſpect the very laſt words of the Old Teſtament, leſt I ſmite the Earth with a curſe, Mal. IV. and denote the moſt miſerable deſtruction of the Nation, and now almoſt ready to fall upon them.

The receiving of Johns baptiſm ſigned, and fenced thoſe that received it from the ruine that was juſt coming. To this belongs that of S. Peter, Epiſt. 1 Chap. III. verſ. 20, 21. in that manner as Noah and his ſons were by water delivered from the flood, ſo alſo baptiſm now, the Antitype of that type, ſaveth us, from the deluge of divine indignation, which in a ſhort time is to overflow the Jewiſh Nation. Think here, if thoſe that came to Baptiſm brought not their little ones with them to baptiſm; when by the plain words of the Baptiſt, thoſe that are baptized are ſaid to fly from the wrath to come? That is, the wrath of God, that was not long hence to deſtroy the Nation by a moſt ſad overthrow.

VERS. IX.

Μὴ δόξητε λέγειν. Think not to ſay.

A Jeruſalem phraſe to be met with every where in the Talmud. סבר מימר To think a word, or, to be of that opinion.

VERS. X.

Ἤδη ἀξίνη πρὸς τ ῥίζαν. The ax is laid to the root.

THESE words ſeem to be taken from Eſay, Chap. X. verſ. 33, 34. The deſtruction of the Nation was to proceed from the Romans, who had now a great while held them under the yoke. That ax now laid to the root of the tree, ſhall certainly cut it down, if, from this laſt dreſſing by the Goſpel, it bears not fruit. g In the Talmud, thoſe words of Eſay are applied to the deſtruction of the City; and thence it is argued, that the Meſſias ſhould be born not much after the time of that deſtruction, becauſe preſently after the threatning of that ruine, follows, A branch ſhall ariſe out of the ſtock of Jeſſe, Eſa. XI. 1.

VERS. XI.

Οὗ οὐκ εἰμὶ ἱκανὸς τὰ ὑποδήματα βαστάσαι. Whoſe ſhoes I am not worthy to bear.

IN Luke it is, λῦσαι τ ἱμάντα τῶν ὑποδημάτων· to unlooſe the latchet of his ſhoes: which comes to the ſame thing: both ſound to the ſame import, as if he had ſaid, Whoſe ſervant I am not worthy to be.

h A Canaanite ſervant is like a farm, in reſpect of buying: for he is bought with mony, or with a writing, או בחוקה or by ſome ſervice done, as a pledge or pawn. And what is ſuch a pawning in the buying of ſervants? Namely, that he looſeth ſhoe of him (who buys,) or binds on his ſhoe, or carries to the bath ſuch things as be neceſſary for him, &c. Theſe things Maimonides produceth out of the Talmud, where theſe words are, i How is a ſervant bought בחוקה by ſervice? He looſeneth the buyers ſhoe, he carrieth ſuch things after him, as are neceſſary for the bath, he uncloths him, waſhes, anoints, rubs, dreſſes him, puts on his ſhoes, and lifts him up from the Earth, &c. l See alſo the Toſaphta.

This by the way is to be noted, which the Gloſs intimates, that all ſervants, of what Heathen Nation ſoever, bought by the Jews, were called Canaanite Servants, becauſe it is ſaid of Canaan, Canaan a ſervant of ſervants.

VERS. XV.

Οὕτω πρέπον ἐστὶν ἡμῖν πληρῶσαι πᾶσαν δικαιοσύνην. Thus it becomes us to fulfil all righteousness.

THAT is, that we fulfil every thing that is just. Now in the baptism of Christ there were these two just things especially. I. That this great Priest, being initiated into his ministerial office, should answer the Type of the admission of the Levitical Priests: who were initiated by washing and anointing. So was He by Baptism, and the Holy Ghost. II. When by the institution of Christ those that entred into the Profession of the Gospel were to be introduced by Baptism, it was just, yea necessary, that Christ, being to enter into the same profession, and to preach it too, should be admitted by Baptism.

VERS. XVI.

Καὶ βαπτισθεὶς ὁ Ἰησοῦς. And Jesus being baptized.

I. THAT Christ conversed upon Earth two and thirty years and an half (as many years as David lived at Jerusalem: compare 2 Sam. V. 5.) is proved hence. 1. That he was baptized, when he had now compleated his twenty ninth year, and had newly begun his thirtieth. That the words of Luke imply, ὡσεὶ ἐτῶν τριάκοντα ἀρχόμενος ἦν· He began to be about thirty years old. Which words although they are applied by some Christians to I know not what large latitude; yet in the Jewish Schools, and among that Nation, they would not admit certainly of another sense, than we produce. For there this axiome holds: יום אחד בשנה חשוב שנה m The first day of the year is reckoned for that year. And questionless Luke speaks with the vulgar. For let it be supposed, that the Evangelist uttered these words in some Jewish School, N. was baptized ἀρχόμενον ὡς ὡσεὶ τριάκοντα ἐτῶν, beginning to be about thirty years old: how could it be understood by them of the thirtieth compleat? (much less of the thirty first, or thirty second, as some wrest it) When the words ἀρχόμενον ὡσεί, beginning to be about, do so harmoniously agree with the said axiome, as scarcely any thing can do more clearly. 2. That from his Baptism to his cross he lived three years and an half. This is intimated by the Angel Gabriel, Dan. IX. 27. In the half of a week (that is, In three years and an half) he shall make the sacrifice and oblation to cease: and it is confirmed from the computation in the Evangelists, but especially in John, who clearly mentioneth four Passovers (Chap. II. 13. & V. 1. & VI. 4. & XIII. 1.) after his forty days fast, and not a little time spent in Galilee.

m Rosh Hashanah, fol. 2. 2.

II. Therefore we suppose Christ was baptized about the feast of Tabernacles in the Month Tisri, at which time we suppose him born; and that John was born about the feast of the Passover, and at that time began to baptize. For when Christ lived two and thirty years and an half, and died at the Feast of the Passover, you must necessarily reduce his birth to the Month Tisri, and about the time of the feast of Tabernacles; and when John the Baptist was elder than he by half a year, you must necessarily suppose him born about the feast of the Passover. But of these things we have said something already.

VERS. XVII.

CHRIST was honoured with a threefold testimony, pronounced by a voice from Heaven, according to his threefold office. See what we say at Chap. XVII. 2.

You find not a voice sent from Heaven between the giving of the Law, and the baptism of Christ. What things the Jews relate of Bath Kol, they must pardon me, if I esteem them partly for Jewish fables, partly for Devilish witchrafts. They hold it for a Tradition, n After the death of the last Prophets, Haggai, Zachariah, Malachi נסתלקה רוח הקדש מישראל The holy Spirit departed from Israel (which was most true) ואע"פ כן משתמשין בבת קול: But they used thenceforth the Bath Kol. The Bath Kol was this בשקול יוצא וכו' o When a voice (or Thunder) came out of Heaven, another voice came out from it.

o Pirke Tosaph. in Sanhedr. cap. 1. art. 29.

But why, I pray, was Prophesie withdrawn, if Heavenly oracles were to be continued? Why also was Urim and Thummim taken away? Or rather why was it not restored after the Babylonian captivity? For p five things, say they, were wanting under the second Temple, p Hieros. Taanith, fol. 65. 1.

Temple, which were under the firſt: namely, the fire from Heaven, The Ark, Urim and Thummim, the Oyl of anointing, and the Holy Spirit. It would certainly be a wonder, if God taking away from his people his ordinary oracles, ſhould beſtow upon them a nobler oracle, or as noble: and that when the Nation had degenerated, and were ſunk into all kind of impiety, ſuperſtition, hereſie. When the laſt Prophets, Haggai and the reſt, were dead, the Sadducean hereſie concerning the Reſurrection crept in, and the Phariſaical hereſie alſo weakening all Scripture, and making it of none effect by vain Traditions. And ſhall I believe, that God ſhould ſo indulge his people when they were guilty of ſo grievous Apoſtaſie, as to vouchſafe to talk familiarly with them from Heaven and to afford them oracles ſo ſublime, ſo frequent, as the Prophets themſelves had not the like? If I may ſpeak plainly what I think, I ſhould reduce thoſe numberleſs ſtories of the Bath Kol, which occur every where, under theſe two heads, namely that very many are mere fables, invented for this purpoſe, that hence the worth of this or that Rabbin or ſtory may be illuſtrated; the reſt are mere Magical and Diabolical deluſions.

When I read theſe and ſuch like paſſages, That q the Bath Kol in Jericho gave witneſs to Hillel, that he was worthy to have the Holy Ghoſt abide upon him: that the Bath Kol in Jabneh yielded the ſame teſtimony to Samuel the little. That r the Bath Kol again in Jabneh determined the controverſies between the Schools of Shammai and Hillel, for thoſe of Hillel; and innumerable other ſtories of that kind; I cannot but either ſuſpect theſe to be tales, or that theſe voices were framed by art Magick for the honour of the Rabbins.

It is remarkable, what is related in the Jeruſalem Talmud, אר" אלעזר הולכין אחר שמיעת בת קול: s R. Eliezer ſaith, They follow the hearing of Bath Kol. And a little after, R. Jochanan, and R. Simeon ben Lachiſh deſired to ſee the face of Samuel, (the Babylonian Doctor) let us follow, ſay they, the hearing of Bath Kol. Travailing therefore near a School, they heard a boys voice reading [in 1 Sam. XXV. 1.] ושמואל מת And Samuel died. They obſerved this, and ſo it came to paſs; for Samuel of Babylon was dead.

s Schab. fol. 8. 3

R. Jonah, and R. Joſah went to viſit R. Acha lying ſick: let us follow, ſay they, the hearing of Bath Kol. They heard the voice of a certain woman, ſpeaking to her neighbour, The light is put out. To whom ſhe ſaid, let it not be put out, nor let the light of Iſrael be quenched.

Behold! Reader, a people very well contented to be deceived, with a new kind of Bath Kol. Compare theſe things with Virgils lots, of which the Roman Hiſtorians ſpeak frequently. Not to be more tedious therefore in this matter, let two things only be obſerved, 1. That the Nation under the ſecond Temple was given to Magical arts beyond meaſure. And 2. That it was given to an eaſineſs of believing all manner of deluſions beyond meaſure. And one may ſafely ſuſpect, that thoſe voices, which they thought to be from Heaven, and noted with the name of Bath Kol, were either formed by the Devil in the air, to deceive the people, or by Magicians by Deviliſh art, to promote their own affairs. Hence the Apoſtle Peter ſaith with good reaſon, that the word of Propheſie was ſurer than a voice from Heaven; 2 Pet. I. 19.

The very ſame, which I judge of the Bath Kol, is my opinion alſo of the frequent appearances of Elias, with which the leaves of the Talmud do every where abound; namely, that in very many places the ſtories are falſe, and in the reſt, the Apparitions of him were Diabolical. See the notes upon the tenth verſe of the ſeventeenth Chapter.

CHAP. IV.

VERS. I.

Ἀνήχθη εἰς τὸ ἔρημον ὑπὸ τοῦ πνεύματος πειρασθῆναι, &c. He was led up by the Spirit into the wilderneſs to be tempted, &c.

THE War proclaimed of old in Eden between the Serpent, and the ſeed of the Serpent, and the ſeed of the Woman, Gen. III. 15. now takes place: when that promiſed ſeed of the Woman comes forth into the field (being initiated by Baptiſm, and anointed by the Holy Ghoſt, unto the publick office of his miniſtry) to fight with that old Serpent, and at laſt to bruiſe his head. And, ſince the Devil was always a moſt impudent ſpirit, now he takes upon him a more hardned boldneſs than ever, even of waging war with him, whom he knew to be the Son of God, becauſe from that that antient proclamation of this war he knew well enough, that he ſhould bruiſe his heel.

The firſt ſcene or field of the Combate, was the Deſert of Judea, which Luke intimates, when he ſaith, that Jeſus returned from Jordan, and that he was led by the Spirit into the wilderneſs; that is, from the ſame coaſt, or region of Jordan, in which he had been baptized.

The time of his temptations was from the middle of the month Tiſri to the end of forty days, that is, from the beginning of our month of October to the middle of November, or thereabouts: ſo that he conflicted with cold, as well as want, and Satan.

The manner of his temptations was two fold. Firſt, Inviſibly, as the Devil is wont to tempt ſinners; and this for forty days: while the Tempter endeavoured with all his induſtry to throw in his ſuggeſtions, if poſſible, into the mind of Chriſt, as he does to mortal men. Which when he could not compaſs, becauſe he found nothing in him, in which ſuch a temptation might fix it ſelf; Joh. XIV. 30. he attempted another way, namely, by appearing to him in a viſible ſhape, and converſing with him, and that in the form of an Angel of light. Let the Evangeliſts be compared. Mark, ſaith, he was tempted forty days: ſo alſo doth Luke. But Matthew, that the Tempter came to him, after forty days; that is, in a viſible form.

The matter of his Temptations was very like the Temptations of Eve. She fell, by the luſt of the fleſh, the luſt of the Eye, and the pride of Life: which are the heads of all ſins, 1 Joh. II. 16.

By the luſt of the Eyes: for ſhe ſaw the fruit, that it was pleaſant to the ſight.

By the luſt of the fleſh; ſhe luſted for it, becauſe it was deſirable to be eaten.

By the pride of life; not contented with the ſtate of perfection, wherein ſhe was created, affected an higher; and ſhe took of the fruit, and did eat, that ſhe might become wiſer by it.

The ſame tempter ſet upon our Saviour with the ſame ſtratagems.

I. As Eve was deceived by miſtaking his perſon, ſuppoſing a good Angel diſcourſed with her, when it was a bad: So the Devil in like manner puts on the good Angel here, cloathed with light, and feigned glory.

II. He endeavours to enſnare Chriſt by the luſt of the fleſh, Command, that theſe ſtones be made bread: by the luſt of the Eye, All theſe things will I give thee, and the Glory of them: by the pride of life, Throw thy ſelf down, and fly in the air, and be held up by Angels.

VERS. V.

Ἐπὶ τὸ πτερύγιον τοῦ ἱεροῦ. Upon the pinnacle of the Temple.

WHether he placed him upon the Temple it ſelf, or upon ſome building within the holy circuit, it is in vain to ſeek, becauſe it cannot be found. If it were upon the Temple it ſelf, I ſhould reflect upon the top of the אולם Porch of the Temple: if upon ſome other building, I ſhould reflect upon the Στοὰν βασιλικὴν, the Royal Gallery. The Prieſts were wont ſometimes to go up to the top of the Temple, ſtairs being made for this purpoſe, and deſcribed in the Talmudick book intitled, [t] Middoth; and they are ſaid to have aſcended hither, [u] When fire was firſt put to the Temple, and to have thrown up the keies of the chambers of the Temple towards Heaven, with theſe words, O thou eternal Lord, becauſe we are not worthy to keep theſe keies, to thee they are delivered. And there came as it were the form of a hand out of Heaven, and took them from them: and they leaped down, and fell into the fire.

[u] Bab. Taanith, fol. 29. 1.

Above all other parts of the Temple the אולם Porch of the Temple, yea the whole πρόναον, ſpace before it, may not unfitly be called τὸ πτερύγιον τοῦ ἱεροῦ, the wing of the Temple, becauſe like wings it extended its ſelf in bredth on each ſide, far beyond the bredth of the Temple: which we take notice of elſewhere.

If therefore the Devil had placed Chriſt in the very precipice of this part of the Temple, he may well be ſaid to have placed him upon the wing of the Temple, both becauſe this part was like a wing to the Temple it ſelf, and that that precipice was the wing of this part.

But if you ſuppoſe him placed ἐπὶ στοὰν βασιλικὴν, upon the Royal Gallery, look upon it thus painted out by Joſephus: [x] On the South part (of the Court of the Gentiles) was the στοὰ βασιλικὴ the Kings Gallery, that deſerves to be mentioned among the moſt magnificent things under the Sun: for upon an huge depth of a vally, ſcarcely to be fathomed by the Eye of him that ſtands above, Herod erected a Gallery of a vaſt height; from the top of which, if any looked down, σχεδὸν ὃν ἴλιγγος τῆς ὄψεως εἰς ἀμέτρητον τὸν βυθὸν· he would grow dizzy, his Eyes not being able to reach to ſo vaſt a depth.

VERS. VIII.

Δείκνυσιν αὐτῷ πάσας τὰς βασιλείας τοῦ κόσμου, &c. Shewed him all the Kingdoms of the World, &c.

THAT is, Rome with her Empire and State. For 1. That Empire is called πᾶσα οἰκουμένη, All the World, (which word Luke useth in this story) both in sacred and prophane Writers. 2. At this time all Cities were of little account in comparison of Rome, nor did any part of the Earth bear any vogue, without that Empire. 3. Rome was the seat of Satan, Rev. XIII. 2. and he granted to the beast of that City both it, and the Dominion. 4. This therefore seems to be that, whereby he attempts to ensnare our Saviour in this object, namely, that he promiseth to give him the pomp and power of Cesar, and to deliver into his hand the highest Empire of the World, that is, the Roman. This Antichrist afterwards obtained.

VERS. XIII.

Καὶ καταλιπὼν τὴν Ναζαρὲθ ἐλθὼν κατῴκησεν εἰς Καπερναούμ. And leaving Nazareth, he came and dwelt at Capernaum.

WHY he left Nazareth, after he had passed six or seven and twenty years there; the reason appears, Luke IV. 28. &c. We do not read, that he returned thither, again, and so, unhappy Nazareth, thou perishest by thine own folly and perverseness. Whether his father Joseph had any inheritance at Capernaum, which he possessed as his heir, or rather dwelt there in some hired house, we dispute not. This is certainly called his City, Matth. IX. 1, &c. and here as a Citizen, he paid the half Shekel, Matth. XVII. 24. Where it is worthy marking, what is said by the Jews. כמה יהא בעיר ויהא כאנשי העיר יב" חדש: y How long does a man dwell in some City before he be as one of the Citizens? Twelve months. The same is recited again z elsewhere. The Jerusalem Gemara thus explains it, If he tarry in the City thirty days, he becomes as one of the Citizens, in respect of the Alms-chest; if six months, he becomes a Citizen, in respect of clothing: if twelve months, in respect of tributes, and taxes. The Babylonian adds, if nine months, in respect of burial. That is, if any abide in a City thirty days, they require of him Alms for the poor; if six months, he is bound, with the other Citizens, to cloth the poor; if nine months, to bury the dead poor: if twelve months, he is bound to undergo all other taxes with the rest of the Citizens. VERS. XV.

Τῇ Ζαβουλὼν, καὶ γῇ Νεφθαλείμ. The land of Zabulon, and the land of Nephthali.

IT is needful, that the words of Esaiah be considered, whence these words are taken. He had been discoursing, in the eighth Chapter towards the end, concerning the straits and miseries, that compassed the Transgressors of the Law and the Testimony. To the Law and to the Testimony, &c. vers. 20. ועבר בה נקשה ורעב But if a man transgress against it (that is תורה and תעודה the Law and the Testimony) it will redound to his hardship, and he shall suffer hunger, &c. vers. 21. And he shall look to the Earth, and behold trouble and darkness, dimness of anguish, and he shall be driven to darkness, vers. 22. And then it follows, Chap. IX. 1. כי לא מועף לאשר מוצק לה For the dimness shall not be like to that, wherein it was ill with him, at what time the former (afflicter) lightly touched the land of Zabulon, and the land of Nephthali, and the latter grievously afflicted, &c. That people, who sat in darkness saw a great light, &c.

That which the Prophet means here, is this. 1. That the Contemners of Emanuel and his Testimony, that is, the Gospel, should undergo far greater calamities, than those places had undergone, either under their first Conqueror Benhadad, 1 King. XV. 20. or under the second, the King of Assyria, 2 King. XV. 29. For those places saw light at last restored to them, when the Messias preached the Gospel there. But the contemners of the Gospel are driven into eternal darkness. 2. He foretels the morning of liberty, and of Evangelical light, to arise there, where the first darkness and the calamities of their captivity had arisen. S. Matthew citing these words, that he might shew the Prophesie to be fulfilled, of that light that should arise there, omits those words, which speak of their former misery, that is, the first clause of the verse, and produceth those words only, and that very fitly too, which make to his purpose, and which aim directly thither, by the Prophets intention. The Prophet Hosea affords us an instance of curtailing curtailing a sentence after that manner, Chap. I. 11. & II. 1. When he proclaims Israel and Judah miserable, he calls them Lo-Ammi, and Lo-Ruchamah; when happy, Ammi, and Ruchamah.

Πέραν τοῦ Ἰορδάνου. Beyond Jordan.

Not by Jordan, but beyond Jordan. For the latter Afflicter, the King of Assyria, had carried away that Country also into banishment and bonds. 1 Chron. V. 26. Here is an Ellipsis of the conjunction And.

VERS. XVIII.

Βάλλοντας ἀμφίβληστρον εἰς τὴν θάλασσαν. Casting a net into the Sea.

מחכין בימה של טבריה: a Fishing in the Sea of Tiberias, in Talmudic speech. There the fathers of the Traditions dream, that Josua the son of Nun, gave ten Laws to the Israelites, concerning having some things in common, as lawful, and to be allowed of: ת"ר תנאין התנה יהושע Our Rabbins have a tradition, that Josua ordained ten conditions: That Cattel graze in common in woody places. ומלקטין עצים בשדותיהם: שיהו מרעין בחורשין And that a man gather wood in common in his neighbours field, &c. Among others, ומחכין בימה של טבריה And that any in comon spread his nets for fishing in the Sea of Tiberias. But yet under this caution: שלא יפרוס קלע ויעמיד ארת הספינה That none set up a wall, which may be any stop to ships. The Gloss is, It is the manner of fisher men, to fasten stakes in the water, and to make fences of canes or reeds, in which the fish may be taken: but this is not permitted, because it is an impediment to the ships. However therefore the Sea of Tiberias belonged to the Tribe of Nephthali, yet it was free for any Israelite to fish in it, so it were under the condition mentioned.

VERS. XXIII.

SINCE we meet with very frequent mention of Synagogues every where in the books of the Gospel, it may be needful to know something more clearly, what the customs and institutions of the Synagogues were, for the better understanding very many things, which have some reference thereunto in the New Testament: let us here dispatch the history of them ἐν ὄλῃ ὁμῇ, as briefly as we may, now when the mention of Synagogues first occurs.

§ Of the Synagogues.

1. A Synagogue was not formed any where, but where there were ten Learned Men, professedly Students of the Law. 1. Let that of the Talmud be observed. אי זה עיר גדולה d What is a great City? כל שיש בה "י בטלנין: That, in which were ten men of leisure. פחות מכאן הרי זה כפר: If there be less than this number, behold it is a Village. 2. Observe that of Maimonides; e Whereseever there be ten of Israel, there a house must needs be built, to which they may resort to prayers in the time of prayer, and this house is called a Synagogue. Not that any ten of Israel made a Synagogue; but whereseever were ten Learned Men, and studious of the Law; these were called בטלנין Batlanin. Men of leisure, who were not to be esteemed for lazy and idle persons, but בטלנין ממלאכתן ועוסקין בצרכי ציבור: such who

who (not being incumbred with worldly things) were at leiſure only to take care of the affairs of the Synagogues, and to give themſelves to the ſtudy of the Law.

The reaſon of the number of ten, though lean and empty enough, is given in the Talmud, and it is this, עדה הוא עשרה f A Congregation conſiſts of Ten: which they prove hence, becauſe it is ſaid עד מתי לעדה הרעה הזאת How long ſhall I bear with this evil Congregation, &c. (Numb. XIV. 27.) Take away Joſua and Caleb, and there remain only ten; namely, of the ſpies of the land. f Sanhedr. cap. 4. hal. 6.

II. Of theſe Ten Men,

1. Three bare the Magiſtracy, and were called בד של שלשה The Bench of three. Whoſe office it was, to decide the differences ariſing between the members of the Synagogue, and to take care about other matters of the Synagogue. Theſe judged concerning mony matters, thefts, loſſes, reſtitutions, of raviſhing a Virgin, of a man inticing a Virgin, of the admiſſion of Proſelytes, χειροθεσία, laying on of hands, and divers other things, of which ſee the Tract g Sanhedrin. Theſe were properly, and with good reaſon called Ἀρχισυνάγωγοι, Rulers of the Synagogue, becauſe on them laid the chief care of things, and the chief Power. g Cap. 4. hal. 1. 2.

2. Beſides theſe there was the publick Miniſter of the Synagogue, who prayed publickly, and took care about the reading of the Law, and ſometimes preached, if there were not ſome other, to diſcharge this office. This perſon was called שליח ציבור The Angel of the Church, and חזן הכנסת The Chazan or Biſhop of the Congregation. The Aruch gives the reaſon of the name: The * Chazan, ſaith he, is שליח צבור The Angel of the Church, (or, the publick Miniſter,) and the Targum renders the word רואה by the word חזוה One that overſees, שהוא צריך לראות וכו' For it is incumbent on him to overſee, how the Reader reads, and whom he may call out to read in the Law. The publick Miniſter of the Synagogue himſelf read not the Law publickly, but every Sabbath he called out ſeven of the Synagogue (on other days fewer) whom he judged fit to read. He ſtood by him that read, with great care obſerving, that he read nothing either falſely, or improperly, and calling him back, and correcting him, if he had failed in any thing. And hence he was called, חזן that is Ἐπίσκοπος, or Overſeer. Certainly, the ſignification of the word Biſhop, and Angel of the Church, had been determined with leſs noyſe, if recourſe had been made to the proper fountains, and men had not vainly diſputed about the ſignification of words, taken I know not whence. The ſervice and worſhip of the Temple being aboliſhed, as being ceremonial, God tranſplanted the worſhip, and publick adoration of God uſed in the Synagogues, which was moral, into the Chriſtian Church; to wit, the publick Miniſtry, publick Prayers, reading Gods Word, and Preaching, &c. Hence the names of the Miniſters of the Goſpel were the very ſame, The Angel of the Church, and The Biſhop, which belonged to the Miniſters in the Synagogues. * Chazan.

3. There were alſo three Deacons, or Almoners, on whom was the care of the poor; and theſe were called Parnaſim, or Paſtors. And theſe ſeven perhaps were reputed שבעה טובי העיר The ſeven good men of the City, of whom there is frequent remembrance in the Talmudiſts.

Of theſe Parnaſim we ſhall only produce theſe things. There were two, who demanded alms of the Towns men; and they were called שני גבאי צדקה hThe two collectors of Alms. ועוד אחד וכו' To whom was added a third to diſtribute it. h Maimon. In Sanhedr. cap. 1.

i R. Chelbo in the name of R. Ba Bar Zabda ſaith, They do not make fewer than three Parnaſin. For I ſee the judgments about many matters to be managed by three, therefore much more theſe, which concern life. R. Joſi in the name of R. Jochanan ſaith, They do not make two brethren Parnaſim. R. Joſi went to Chephar, intending there to ſet Parnaſim over them, but they received him not. He went away, after he had ſaid theſe words before them, Ben Bebai was only ſet over the threeded (linnen of the Lamps) and yet he was reckoned worthy to be numbred with the eminent men of that age. (See Shekalim Chap. 5.) Ye who are ſet over the lives of men, how much more are ye ſo? R. Chaggai, when he appointed the Parnaſin, argued to them out of the Law, all dominion that is given, is given from the Law. By me Kings reign. R. Chaiia bar Ba מקים ארבינין ſet ἄρχοντας, Rulers over them, that is, he appointed Parnaſin. R. Lazar was a Parnas. i Hieroſ. Peah, fol. 21. 1.

This perhaps holds out a light to thoſe words of the Apoſtle, 1 Tim. III. 13. They that have performed the office of a Deacon well, have obtained to themſelves a good degree: that is, being faithful in their care, and proviſion for the poor, as to their corporal life, they may well be Probationers for the care of Souls. For when thoſe Parnaſin, as alſo all the Ten, were learned and ſtudious, they might with good reaſon be preferred from the care of Bodies to that of Souls. The Apoſtles Deacons are to be reckoned alſo of the ſame Learned and Studious rank. And now let us turn our Eyes a little from the Synagogues to Chriſtian Churches in the hiſtory of the New Teſtament. When the Romans permitted the Jewiſh Synagogues to uſe their own laws, and proper government, why, I pray, ſhould there not be the ſame toleration allowed to the Apoſtolical Churches? The Roman cenſure had as yet made no difference between the Judaizing Synagogues of the Jews, and the Chriſtian Synagogues or Churches of Jews; nor did it permit them to live after their own Laws, and forbid theſe. I am not therefore affraid to aſſert, that the Churches of that firſt age were wanting to themſelves, if they took not up the ſame liberty of government, as the Romans allowed the Jewiſh Synagogues to uſe. And I do not think that was ſaid by the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. VI. 2, 3, &c. without this foundation. Therefore this power of their own government being allowed them, if ſo be they were minded to enjoy what they might, how eaſily may thoſe words of the Apoſtle be underſtood, which have ſo wracked Learned Men (ſhall I ſay?) or which have been ſo wracked by them, 1 Tim. V. 17. Οἱ καλῶς προεστῶτες πρεσβύτεροι, &c. Let the Elders that rule well, &c.

4. We may reckon the eighth man of theſe Ten to be the תורגמן, that is, the Interpreter in the Synagogue, who being ſkilled in the Tongues, and ſtanding by him that read in the Law, rendred in the Mother Tongue verſe by verſe thoſe things, that were read out of the Hebrew Text. The Duty of this Interpreter, and the Rules of his duty you may read at large in the k Talmud.

k Megill. cap. 4. Maimon. in Tephillah, cap. 12. &c. Maſſecheth. Sopherim, cap. 10. &c. and elſewhere.

The uſe of ſuch an Interpreter, they think, was drawn down to them from the times of Ezra, and not without good reaſon. l ויקראו בספר תורה וגו׳ And they read in the book of the Law. That was the Text. מפורש זה תרגום Explaining. That was the Targum. ושום שכל אילו טעמים And added the meaning. They are the accents. ויבינו במקרה זה המסורת׃ And they underſtood the Text. That was the Maſoreth. See Nehem. VIII. 8. ſee alſo Buxtorph's Tiberias, Chap. VIII.

5. We do not readily know who to name for the ninth and tenth of this laſt Three. Let us ſuppoſe them to be the Maſter of the Divinity School, and his Interpreter: of whom we ſhall have a fuller occaſion of enquiry. And thus much concerning the head of the Synagogue, that learned Decemvirate, which was alſo the repreſentative body of the Synagogue.

III. The days, wherein they met together in the Synagogue, were the Sabbath, and the ſecond day, and the fift of every week. Of the Sabbath there is no queſtion. They refer the appointment of the ſecond and fift days to Ezra. m Ezra, ſay they, decreed ten decrees, He appointed the publick reading of the Law in the ſecond and fift days of the week. Alſo on the Sabbath at the time of the ſacrifice. He appointed waſhing to thoſe that had the Gonorrhea. He appointed the Seſſion of the Judges in Cities on the ſecond and fift days of the week, &c. Hence perhaps it will appear, in what ſenſe that is to be underſtood, Act. XIII. 42. Παρεκάλεσαν τὰ ἔθνη εἰς τὸ μεταξὺ σάββατον λαληθῆναι αὐτοῖς τὰ ῥήματα ταῦτα. The Gentiles beſought, that theſe words might be preached to them the next Sabbath, or, the Sabbath between: that is, on the days of that intervening week, wherein they met together in the Synagogue.

m Hieroſ. Megill. fol. 75. 1. Bab. Bava kama, fol. 82. 1.

IV. Synagogues were antiently builded in fields. n To the evening recital of the Phylacteries, are to be added two Prayers going before, and two following after. Where the Gloſs thus; The Rabbins inſtituted that prayer, [יראו עינינו] that they might retain their collegues in the Synagogue. And this certainly reſpected their Synagogues at that time, becauſe they were ſituated in the fields, where they might be in danger. And ſo o Rabbenu Aſher upon the ſame Tract; Antiently their Synagogues were in fields: therefore they were affraid to tarry there until the Evening prayers were ended. It was therefore appointed, that they ſhould recite ſome verſes, in which a ſhort ſum of all the eighteen prayers had been compacted; after which that prayer יראו עינינו was to be recited.

But the following times brought back their Synagogues for the moſt part into the Cities; and proviſion was made by ſharp Canons, that a Synagogue ſhould be built in the higheſt place of the City, and that no houſe ſhould be built higher than it.

V. The like Proviſion was made, that every one, at the ſtated times of prayer, ſhould frequent the Synagogue. p God does not refuſe the prayers, although ſinners are mingled there. Therefore it is neceſſary, that a man aſſociate himſelf with the Congregation, and that he pray not alone, when an opportunity is given of praying with the Congregation. Let every one therefore come Morning and Evening to the Synagogue. And q It is forbidden to paſs by the Synagogue in the time of prayer, unleſs a man carry ſome burden upon his back: or unleſs there be more Synagogues in the ſame City; for then it may be judged, that he goes to another; or unleſs there be two doors in the Synagogue, for it may be judged, that he paſſed by one to go in at another. But if he carry his Phylacteries upon his head, then it is allowed him to paſs by, becauſe they bear him witneſs, that he is not unmindful of the Law. Theſe things are taken out of the u Babylonian Talmud. Where theſe are alſo added. The Holy Bleſſed One ſaith, whoſoever employeth himſelf in the ſtudy of the Law, and in the returning of mercy, and whoſoever prays with the Synagogue, I account concerning him, as if he redeemed me and my ſons from the Nations of the World. And whoſoever prays not with the Synagogue is called an ill Neighbour, as it is ſaid, Thus ſaith the Lord of all my evil neighbours, &c. Jer. XII. 14.

VI. When

VI. When they were met together in the Synagogue, on the Sabbath day (for this being obſerved, there is no need to ſpeak any thing of the other days) the ſervice being begun, the Miniſter of the Church calls out ſeven, whomſoever he pleaſes to call out, to read the Law in their order. Firſt, A Prieſt, then a Levite, if they were preſent, and after theſe five Iſraelites. Hence it is, O young ſtudent in Hebrew learning, that in ſome editions of the Hebrew Bible you ſee marked in the margin of the Pentateuch, 1. כהן The Prieſt. 2. לוי The Levite. 3. שלישי The third. 4. רביעי The fourth. 5. חמישי The fifth. 6. ששי The ſixth. 7. שביעי The ſeventh. Denoting by theſe words the order of the Readers, and meaſuring out hereby the portion read by each one. Thus I ſuppoſe Chriſt was called out by the Angel of the Church of Nazareth, IV. Luke 16. and reading according to the cuſtom, as a member of that Synagogue.

There is no need to mention, that prayers were made publickly by the Angel of the Church for the whole Congregation, and that the Congregation anſwered Amen to every prayer: and it would be too much particularly to enumerate what thoſe prayers were, and to recite them. It is known enough to all, that Prayers, and reading of the Law and the Prophets was the chief buſineſs in the Synagogue, and that both were under the care of the Angel of the Synagogue.

But did not he, or ſome body elſe make Sermons in the Synagogue?

I. There ſeemed to have been Catechizing of boys in the Synagogue. Conſider what that means, נשים במאי וכיון באקרויי בנייהו לבי כנ שתא׳: s What is the privilege of Women? This, that their ſons read in the Synagogue. באתנויי גבריהו בי רבנן: That their husbands recite in the School of the Doctors. Where the Gloſs thus, The boys, that were Scholars were wont to be inſtructed, (or, to learn) before their Maſter in the Synagogue. s Bab. Berac. fol. 17. 1.

II. The Targumiſt, or Interpreter, who ſtood by him that read in the Law, and rendred what was read out of the Hebrew original into the Mother Tongue, ſometimes uſed a liberty of enlarging himſelf in paraphraſe. Examples of this we meet with in the t Talmud, and alſo in the Chaldee Paraphraſt himſelf. t Hieroſ. Megil. fol. 74. 4. Sanhed. fol. 20. 2. Bab. Bab. fol. 28. 1. and elſewhere

III. Obſerve that of the Gloſſer, היו באים לשמוע הדרשה נשים ועמי הארץ: u Women and the common people were wont to meet together to hear the Expoſition or the Sermon. But of what place is this better to be underſtood than of the Synagouge? That eſpecially being well weighed, which immediately followeth והיו צריכין דרשנין וכו׳ And they had need of Expounders (or Preachers) to affect their hearts: which is not much unlike that, which is ſaid, Act. XIII. 15. Εἴ τις λόγος ἐν ὑμῖν παρακλήσεως πρὸς τὸν λαόν. If we have any word of exhortation for the people, ſay on. u In Bab. Sabb. fol 30. 2.

IV. Service being done in the Synagogue, they went to dinner. And after dinner to בית מדרש the School, or the Church, or a Lecture of Divinity: call it by what name you will. It is called alſo not ſeldom by the Talmudiſts ציבור and כנסת The Synagogue. In this ſenſe it may be, is בנישתא עילייתא the upper Synagogue to be taken, mentioned in the x Talmud; if it be not to be taken of the Sanhedrin. In this place a Doctor read to his auditors ſome Traditional matter, and expounded it. בית מדרש שם שנין משנה וגמרא y In the Beth Midraſh they taught Traditions, and their expoſition. x Hieroſ. Sabb. fol 3. 1. y Gloſſ. in Bab. Berac. fol. 17. 1

There are three things to be taken notice of concerning the rites uſed in this place.

1. He that read to the Auditors, ſpake not out with an audible voice, but muttered it with a ſmall whiſper in ſome bodies ear; and he pronounced it aloud to all the people. So that here the Doctor had his Interpreter in this ſenſe, as well as the Reader of the Law his in the Synagogue. ולא הוה אמורא למיקם עליה: z Rabh went to the place of R. Shilla, and there was no Interpreter, to ſtand by R. Shilla, Rabh therefore ſtood by him. Where the Gloſs hath theſe words לא הוה אמורא He had no ſpeaker, that is, מתורגמן He had no Interpreter preſent, who ſtood before the Doctor when he was reading the Lecture. והחכם לוחש לו לשון עברית: And the Doctor whiſpered him in the ear in Hebrew, and he rendred it in the Mother Tongue to the people. Hither that of our Saviour hath reſpect, Matth. X. 27. What ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the houſe tops. Conſult the ſame place. z Bab. Joma, fol. 20. 2.

2. It was cuſtomary in this place, and in theſe exerciſes, to propound queſtions. In that remarkable ſtory of removing Rabban Gamaliel of Jafne from his Preſidentſhip, which we meet with in || divers places of both Talmuds: when they met together in the Beth Midraſh עמד השואל ושאל The queſtioniſt ſtood forth and asked, The Evening Prayer is it obſerved by way of Duty, or of free Will? And after a few lines, the mention of an Interpreter occurs: The whole multitude murmured againſt it, and ſaid to Hotſpith the Interpreter, Hold your peace, and he held his peace, &c. || Hieroſ. Berac. fol. 7. 4 & Taanith, fol. 67. 4. & Bab. Berac. fol. 27. 2.

3. While the Interpreter preached from the mouth of the Doctor, the people ſat upon the Earth. * Let not a Judge go upon the heads of the holy people. The Gloſs is, While the Interpreter preached, the ציבור Synagogue (or, the whole Congregation) ſat on the ground, and whoſoever walked through the middle of them to take his place, ſeemed as if he walked upon their Heads. * Bab. Sanhedr. fol. 7. 2.

One may ſafely be of opinion, that the word Συναγωγὴ, Synagogue, was uſed ſometimes in the New Teſtament in this ſenſe, and that Chriſt ſometimes preached in theſe Divinity Schools, as well as in the Synagogues.

But by what right was Chriſt permitted by the Rulers of the Synagogue to preach, being the ſon of a Carpenter, and of no learned education? Was it allowed any illiterate perſon, or mechanick to preach in the Synagogues, if he had the confidence himſelf to do it? By no means. For it was permitted to none to teach there, but thoſe that were learned. But there were two things eſpecially, that gave Chriſt admiſſion to preach in every Synagogue, namely, the fame of his miracles, and that he gave out himſelf the Head of a religious Sect. For however the religion of Chriſt and his Diſciples was both ſcorned and hated by the Scribes and Phariſees, yet they accounted them among the Religious, in the ſame ſenſe as they did the Sadducees; that is diſtinguiſhed from עם הארץ the common people, or the Seculars, who took little care of religion. When therefore Chriſt was reckoned among the Religious, and grew ſo famous by the rumour of his miracles, and the ſhining raies of his Doctrine, no wonder if he raiſed among the people an earneſt deſire of hearing him, and obtained among the Governours of the Synagogues a liberty of preaching.

VERS. III, IV, V, &c.

Μακάριοι, Μακάριοι, &c. Bleſſed, Bleſſed, &c.

IT is commanded, Deut. XXVII. that upon the entrance of the people into the promiſed land, Bleſſings and Curſes ſhould be denounced from the Mounts Gerizim and Ebal: the Curſes being particularly reckoned up, but the Bleſſings not ſo. Which ſeems not to be without a myſtery, ſince the Law brought the Curſe with it: but Chriſt, who ſhould bring the Bleſſing, was yet to come a great while hence. Now he is preſent pronouncing the bleſſings, and that in a mountain. The Jewiſh Writers do thus relate that matter.

[a] Six Tribes went up to the top of Mount Gerizim, and ſix to the top of Mount Ebal. But the Prieſts and the Levites ſtood below with the ark of the Covenant. The Prieſts compaſſed the ark; the Levites compaſſed the Prieſts, and the whole people of Iſrael ſtood on one ſide, and on the other: as it is ſaid, All Iſrael and the Elders, &c. (Joſ. VIII. 33.) Turning their faces to Mount Gerizim, they began with the bleſſing, Bleſſed is the man, that ſhall make no Idol, or molten Image, &c. And both the one and the other anſwered, Amen. Turning their faces to Mount Ebal, they pronounced the curſe, Curſed is the man who ſhall make an Idol, or molten Image: and both the one and the other anſwered, Amen. And ſo of the reſt. And at laſt, Turning their faces to Gerizim, they began with the bleſſing, Bleſſed is the man, who ſhall continue in all the words of the Law, and the Anſwer on both ſides is, Amen. Turning their faces to Ebal, they pronounce the curſe, Curſed is every one, that ſhall not continue in all the words of the Law, and the anſwer from both ſides is, Amen, &c.

In like manner Chriſt here having begun with bleſſings, Bleſſed, Bleſſed, thundereth out curſes, Wo, Wo, Luke VI. 24, 25, 26.

That which many do Comment concerning the octonary number of Beatitudes, hath too much curioſity, and little benefit. It hath that which is like it among the Jews: For thus they write, [b] There is a Tradition from the School of R. Eſaiah ben Korcha, that twenty bleſſings are pronounced in the book of the Pſalms, and in like manner twenty Woes in the book of Eſaiah. But I ſay, ſaith Rabbi, that there are two and twenty bleſſings, according to the number of the two and twenty letters.

VERS. VIII.

Μακάριοι οἱ καθαροὶ τῇ καρδίᾳ. Bleſſed are the pure in heart.

HArken, O Phariſee, all whoſe praiſe lies in outward cleanneſs. How fooliſh is this boaſting of a Jew! e*Come and ſee, ſaith R. Simeon ben Eleazar, how far the purity of Iſrael extends it ſelf: when it is not only appointed, that a clean man eat not with an unclean woman: but* (that an unclean man eat not with an unclean man) that a Phariſee that hath the Gonorrhea, eat not with a comon perſon that hath the Gonorrhea.

VERS. IX.

Μακάριοι οἱ εἰρηνοποιοί. Bleſſed are the Peacemakers.

חבורת שלום בין איש לרעהו: f Making peace between neighbours is numbred among thoſe things, which bring forth good fruit in this life, and benefit in the life to come.

f Peah, cap. 1. hal. 1.

VERS. XVII.

Μὴ νομίσητε ὅτι ἦλθον καταλῦσαι τὸν νόμον, &c. Think not that I am come to deſtroy the Law, &c.

I. IT was the opinion of the Nation concerning the Meſſias, that he would bring in a new Law, but not at all to the prejudice, or damage of Moſes and the Prophets: But that he would advance the Moſaic Law to the very higheſt pitch, and would fulfil thoſe things that were foretold by the Prophets; and that according to the Letter, even to the greateſt pomp.

II. The Scribes and Phariſees therefore ſnatch an occaſion of cavilling againſt Chriſt, and readily objected that he was not the true Meſſias, becauſe he aboliſhed the Doctrines of the Traditions, which they obtruded upon the people for Moſes and the Prophets.

III. He meets with this prejudice here, and ſo onwards, by many arguments, as namely, 1. That he aboliſhed not the Law, when he aboliſhed Traditions, for therefore he came, that he might fulfil the Law. 2. That he aſſerts, that not one Iota ſhould periſh from the Law. 3. That he brought in an obſervation of the Law, much more pure and excellent than the Phariſaical obſervation of it was: which he confirms even to the end of the Chapter, explaining the Law according to its genuine and ſpiritual ſenſe.

VERS. XVIII.

Ἀμὴν γὰρ λέγω ὑμῖν. Verily I ſay unto you.

I. SUCH an aſſeveration was uſual to the Nation, though the ſyllables were ſomething changed. g A certain Matron ſaid to R. Judah bar Allai, Thy face is like to a Swineherd, or an Uſurer. To whom he anſwered וכו' הימנותא In truth both is forbidden me. The Gloſs there הימנותא In truth, is a manner of ſpeech uſed in ſwearing.

g Bab. Bruc. fol. 55. 1.

II. But our Saviour uſeth this phraſe by the higheſt divine right. 1. Becauſe he is Amen, the faithful witneſs, Rev. II. 14. 2 Cor. I. 20. See alſo Eſa. LXV. 16. and Kimchi there. 2. Becauſe he publiſhed the Goſpel, the higheſt truth, Joh. XVIII 37, &c. 3. By this aſſeveration he doth well oppoſe his divine oracles againſt the inſolent madneſs of the Traditional Doctors, who did often vent their blaſphemous and frivolous tales under this ſeal, באמת אמרו They ſpeak in truth: and whereſoever this is ſaid, ſay they, it is הלך למשה מסיני A Tradition of Moſes from Sinai.

Ἰῶτα ἕν. One jot.

The Jeruſalem Gemariſts ſpeak almoſt to the ſame ſenſe. h The book of Deuteronomy came, and proſtrated it ſelf before God, and ſaid, O Lord of the Univerſe, Thou haſt wrote in me thy Law, but now a Teſtament defective in ſome part is defective in all. Behold, Solomon endeavours to root the letter Jod out of me (to wit in this Text לא ירבה נשים He ſhall not multiply wives, Deut. XVII. 5.) *The holy bleſſed God anſwered, Solomon and a thouſand ſuch as he ſhall periſh, but the leaſt word ſhall not periſh out of thee. was given half to Sara, and half to Abraham. A Tradition of R. Hoſhaia, the letter Jod came and proſtrated it ſelf before God, and ſaid, O eternal Lord, Thou haſt rooted me out of the name of that holy woman. The Bleſſed God anſwered, Hitherto thou haſt been in the name of a woman, and that in the end, (Viz. in Sarai) but henceforward thou ſhalt be in the name of a man, and that in the beginning. Hence is that which is written, And Moſes called the name of Hoſhea, Jehoſhua. The Babylonians alſo do relate this tranſlation of the letter Jod out of the name of Sarai to the name of Joſhua after this manner: i The letter Jod, ſaith God, which I took out of the name of Sarai, ſtood and cried to me for very many years, how long will it be ere Joſhua ariſe, to whoſe name I have added it.

i Sanhedr. fol. 107. 1.

You have an Example of the eternal duration of this very little letter Jod, in Deut. XXXII. 18. where in the word חשי it is written even leſs than it ſelf, and yet it ſtands immortal in that its diminutive ſtate unto this very day, and ſo ſhall for ever.

It is written,* יהוה אלהינו יהוה אחד The Lord our God is one Lord: he that changeth ד Daleth into ר Reſh, deſtroys the World.

But that our Saviour by Ἰῶτα ἢ κεραία, Jot and Tittle, did not only underſtand the bare letters, or the little marks that diſtinguiſhed them, appears ſufficiently from verſ. 19. where he renders it, one of theſe leaſt commands: in which ſenſe is that alſo in the Jeruſalem Gemara, of Solomons rooting out Jod, that is, evacuating that precept לא ירבה נשים He ſhall not multiply Wives. And yet it appears enough hence, that our Saviour alſo ſo far aſſerts the uncorrupt immortality and purity of the holy Text, that no particle of the ſacred ſenſe ſhould periſh, from the beginning of the Law to the end of it.

To him, that diligently conſiders theſe words of our Saviour their Opinion offers it ſelf, who ſuppoſe, that the whole Alphabet of the Law, or rather the original character of it is periſhed; namely, the Samaritan, in which they think the Law was firſt given and written; and that that Hebrew, wherein we now read the Bible, was ſubſtituted in its ſtead. We ſhall not expatiate in the queſtion; but let me, with the Readers good leave, produce and conſider ſome paſſages of the Talmud, whence, if I be not miſtaken, Chriſtians ſeem firſt to have taken up this opinion.

The Jeruſalem Talmud treats of this matter in theſe words. o R. Jochanan de Beth Gubrin ſaith, There are four noble Tongues, which the World uſeth: The Mother Tongue for Singing, the Roman for War, the Syriac for Mourning, the Hebrew for Elocution: and there are ſome which add, the Aſſyrian for Writing. The Aſſyrian hath writing (that is, letters or characters) but a language it hath not. The Hebrew hath a language, but writing it hath not. They choſe to themſelves the Hebrew language in the Aſſyrian character. But why is it called אשורי The Aſſyrian? שהוא מאושר בכתבו Becauſe it is bleſſed (or direct) in its writing. R. Levi ſaith, Becauſe it came up into their hands out of Aſſyria.

o In Megill. fol. 71. 2, 3.

A Tradition, R. Joſi ſaith, Ezra was fit, by whoſe hands the Law might have been given, but that the age of Moſes prevented. But although the Law was not given by his hand, yet writing (that is, the forms of the letters) and the language were given by his hand. And the writing of the Epiſtle was writ in Syriac, and rendred in Syriac, (Ezr. IV. 7.) And they could not read the writing, (Dan. V. 8.) From whence is ſhewn, that the writing (that is, the form of the characters and letters) was given that very ſame day. R. Nathan ſaith, the Law was given in breaking (that is, in letters more rude, and more disjoyned) And the matter is, as R. Joſi ſaith. Rabbi (Judah Haccodeſh) ſaith, the Law was given in the Aſſyrian language, and when they ſinned, it was turned into breaking. And when they were worthy in the days of Ezra, it was turned for them again into the Aſſyrian. I ſhew to day, that I will render to you משנה Miſhneh, the doubled, or, as if he ſhould ſay, the ſeconded (Zech. IX. 12.) And he ſhall write for himſelf the Miſhneh (the doubled) of this Law in a book; (Deut. XVII. 18.) namely in a writing, that was to be changed. R. Simeon ben Eleazar ſaith, in the name of R. Eleazar ben Parta, and he in the name of R. Lazar, the Hammodaean, the Law was given in Aſſyrian writing. Whence is that proved? From thoſe words, שהו ויו של תורה דומים לעמודים (Exod. XXVII. 10.) ווי העמודים That the letter ו Vau in the Law is like a pillar. So the Jeruſalem Talmudiſts.

Diſcourſe is had of the ſame buſineſs in the p Babylonian Talmud, and almoſt in the ſame words, theſe being added over. The Law was given to Iſrael in Hebrew writing, and in the holy Language. And it was given to them again in the days of Ezra in Aſſyrian writing, and the Syriac Language. The Iſraelites choſe to themſelves the Aſſyrian writing, and the holy Language. והניחו להדיוטות כתב עברית ולשון ארמית And left the Hebrew writing, and the Syriac Language to ignorant perſons. מאן הדיוטות But who are thoſe Idiots (or ignorant perſons?) R. Chaſda ſaith, כותאי The Samaritans. And what is the Hebrew writing? R. Chaſda ſaith, כתב ליבונאה that is, (according to the Gloſs) Great letters, ſuch as thoſe are, which are writ in charms, and upon door poſts. p Sinhedr. fol. 21. 2. & 22. 1.

That we may a little apprehend the meaning of the Rabbins, let it be obſerved,

I. That by the Mother Tongue (the Hebrew, Syriac, Romane being named particularly) no other certainly can be underſtood than the Greek, we have ſhewn at the three and twentieth verſe of the firſt Chapter.

II. That that writing, which the Gemariſts call כתב עברי and which we have interpreted by a very known word, Hebrew writing, is not therefore called עברי becauſe this was proper to the Iſraelites, or becauſe it was the antient writing, but (as the Gloſs very aptly) כתב עברי של בני עבר הנהר becauſe the writing, or character was in uſe among them that dwelt beyond Euphrates. In the ſame ſenſe, as ſome would have Abraham called עברי Hebrew, ſignifying, on the other ſide, that is, beyond, or on the other ſide of Amana.

Many Nations were united into one Language, that is, the old Syriac, namely, the Chaldeans, the Meſopotamians, the Aſſyrians, the Syrians. Of theſe ſome were the ſons of Sem, and ſome of Cham. Though all had the ſame Language; it is no wonder, if all had not the ſame letters. The Aſſyrians and Iſraelites refer their original to Sem: theſe had the Aſſyrian writing: the ſons of Cham, that inhabited beyond Euphrates, had another; perhaps, that, which is now called by us, the Samaritane, which it may be the ſons of Cham, the Canaanites, uſed.

III. That the Law was given by Moſes in Aſſyrian letters, is the opinion (as you ſee) of ſome Talmudiſts; and that indeed the founder by much. For to think that the Divine Law was writ in characters proper to the curſed ſeed of Cham, is agreeable neither to the dignity of the Law, nor indeed to reaſon it ſelf. They that aſſert the Mother writing was Aſſyrian, do indeed confeſs that the characters of the Law were changed, but this was done by reaſon of the ſin of the people, and through negligence. For when under the firſt Temple the Iſraelites degenerated into Canaanitiſh manners, perhaps they uſed the letters of the Canaanites, which were the ſame with thoſe of the Inhabitants beyond Euphrates. Theſe words of theirs put the matter out of doubt: The Law was given to Iſrael in the Aſſyrian writing in the days of Moſes: but when they ſinned under the firſt Temple, and contemned the Law, it was changed into breaking to them.

Therefore according to theſe mens opinion, the Aſſyrian writing was the Original of the Law, and endured, and obtained unto the degenerate age under the firſt Temple. Then, they think, it was changed into the writing uſed beyond Euphrates, or the Samaritane; or, if you will, the Canaanitiſh (if ſo be, theſe were not one and the ſame:) but by Ezra it was at laſt reſtored into the original Aſſyrian.

Truly I wonder that Learned Men ſhould attribute ſo much to this tradition, (for whence elſe they have received their Opinion, I do not underſtand) that they ſhould think that the primitive writing of the Law was in Samaritane: ſeeing that which the Gemariſts aſſert concerning the changing of the characters, reſts upon ſo brittle and tottering a foundation, that it is much more probable, that there was no change at all (but that the Law was firſt writ in Aſſyrian by Moſes, and in the Aſſyrian alſo by Ezra) becauſe the change cannot be built and eſtabliſhed upon ſtronger arguments.

A ſecond queſtion might follow concerning Keri, and Chethib: and a ſuſpicion might alſo ariſe, that the Text of the Law was not preſerved perfect to one Jot and one Tittle, when ſo many various readings do ſo frequently occur. Concerning this buſineſs we will offer theſe few things only, that ſo we may return to our taſk.

I. Theſe things are delivered by Tradition: ג' ספרים מצאו בעזרה q They found three books in the Court, ספר מעוני The book מעוני Meoni, The book ועטוטי Zaatuti, and the book היא Hi. In one they found written, מעון אלהי קדם The eternal God is thy refuge: but in the two other they found it written, מעונה אלהי קדם (Deut. XXXIII. 27.) They approved (or, confirmed thoſe two, but rejected that one. In one they found q Hieroſ. Taanith, fol. 68. 1.

found written וישלח את נערי בני ישראל But in two it was written, ועטותי בני ישראל: And he ſent young men of the children of Iſrael. (Exod. XXIV. 5.) Thoſe two they confirmed, but that one they rejected. In one they found written, תשע היא She was nine: but in the two was written אחת עשרה היא She was eleven: thoſe two they confirmed, and that one they rejected.

I do much ſuſpect, that theſe three books, laid up in the Court, anſwered to the threefold Congregation of the Jews, namely in Judea, Babylon, and Egypt, whence theſe copies might be particularly taken. For however that Nation was ſcattered abroad almoſt throughout the whole World, yet by number and companies ſcarcely to be numbred, it more plentifully encreaſed in theſe three Countries, than any where elſe: In Judea by thoſe that returned from Babylon, in Babylon by thoſe that returned not; and in Egypt by the Temple of Onias. The two Copies that agreed, I judge, to be out of Judea and Babylon, that that differed to be out of Egypt: and this laſt I ſuſpect by this, that the word ועטותי Zaatuti ſmells of the ſeventy Interpreters whom the Jews of Egypt might be judged by the very ſake of the place to favour more, than any elſewhere. r For it is aſſerted by the Jewiſh Writers, that ועטותי was one of thoſe changes, which the Septuagint brought into the ſacred Text.

r Maſſechith Sopherim, cap. 1 art. 8.

II. It is therefore very probable that the Keri and Chethib was compacted from the comparing of the two Copies of the greateſt authority, that is, the Jewiſh and the Babylonian: which when they differed from one another in ſo many places in certain little daſhes of writing, but little or nothing at all as to the ſenſe, by very ſound counſil they provided, that both ſhould be reſerved, ſo that both Copies might have their worth preſerved, and the ſacred Text its purity and fulneſs, whilſt not one jot, nor one tittle of it periſhed.

VERS. XXI.

s Sanhedr. cap. 11. hal 1.

THAT is, ye have received it by Tradition, אם שמעו אמרו להם s If they have heard, that is, learned by tradition, they ſpeak to them. מפי השמועה למדו They learned by hearing, that is, by Tradition, a ſaying very frequent in Maimonides.

Ὃτι ἐρρέθη τοῖς ἀρχαίοις. That it was ſaid by them of old time.

That is, It is an old Tradition. For the particular paſſages of the Law, which are here cited by our Saviour, are not produced as the bare words of Moſes, but as cloathed in the Gloſſes of the Scribes; which moſt plainly appears above the reſt, verſ. 43. and ſufficiently in this firſt allegation; where thoſe words, Whoſoever ſhall kill ſhall be guilty of the judgment, do hold out the falſe paint of Tradition, and as we obſerve in the following verſes, ſuch as miſrepreſents the Law, and makes it of none effect. If it be asked, why Chriſt makes mention of thoſe of old time? It may be anſwered, that the memory of the antienter Fathers of the Traditions was venerable among the people. Reverend was the name חסידים ראשונים of the firſt good men, and חכמים ראשונים the firſt wiſe men. Therefore Chriſt choſe to confute their Doctrines and Gloſſes, that he might more clearly prove the vanity of Traditions, when he reproved their moſt famous men. But the ſenſe, which we have produced, is plain, and without any difficulty; as if he ſhould ſay, It is an old Tradition, which hath obtained for many ages.

VERS. XXII.

Ἐγὼ δὲ λέγω ὑμῖν. But I ſay unto you.

ואני אומר: But I ſay, the words of one that refutes, or determines a queſtion, very frequently to be met with in the Hebrew Writers. To this you may lay that of Eſaiah, Chap. II. verſ. 3, And he will teach us of his ways, &c. When Kimchi writes thus המורה הואמלך המשיח This Teacher is King Meſſias. And that of Zacharias, Chap. XI. verſ. 8. Where this great ſhepherd deſtroys three evil ſhepherds, namely the Phariſee, and the Saducee, and the Eſſene.

Πᾶς ὁ ὀργιζόμενος τῷ ἀδελφῷ αὐτοῦ εἰκῇ, &c. That whoſoever is angry with his brother without a cauſe, &c.

First let us treat of the Words, and then of the Sentences.

With his Brother] The Jewiſh Schools do thus diſtinguiſh between a Brother and a Neighbour; that a Brother ſignifies an Iſraelite by nation and blood; a Neighbour an Iſraelite in religion and worſhip, that is, a Proſelyte. The Author of Aruch in the word בן בריתא A Son of the Covenant writes thus, The Sons of the Covenant, theſe are Iſrael. And when the Scripture ſaith, If any ones Ox gore the Ox of his Neighbour, it excludes all the Heathen, in that it ſaith, of his Neighbour. Maimonides writes thus; [t] It is all one to kill an Iſraelite, and a Canaanite Servant: for both the puniſhment is death, But an Iſraelite, who ſhall kill גר תושב A ſtranger inhabitant, ſhall not be puniſhed with death, becauſe it is ſaid, Whoſoever ſhall proudly riſe up againſt his Neighbour to kill him (Ex. XXI. 14.) And it is needleſs to ſay, he ſhall not be puniſhed with death for killing a Heathen. Where this is to be noted, that Heathens and ſtranger Inhabitants, who were not admitted to perfect and compleat Proſelytiſm, were not qualified with the title of Neighbour, nor with any privileges.

But under the Goſpel, where there is no diſtinction of Nations, or Tribes, Brother is taken in the ſame latitude, as among the Jewes, both Brother and Neighbour was; that is, for all profeſſing the Goſpel, and is contradiſtinguiſhed to the Heathen. 1 Cor. V. 11. If any one, who is called a Brother. And Mat. XVIII. 15. If thy Brother ſin againſt thee &c. ver. 17. If he hear not the Church, let him be a Heathen.

But Neighbour is extended to all, even ſuch as are ſtrangers to our religion. Luk. X. 29, 30, &c.

He ſhall be guilty] חייב or מחויב words ſignifying guilt or debt, to be met with a thouſand times in the Talmudiſts. Eſ. XXIV. v. 23. They ſhall be gathered together as Captives are gathered into priſon. Where R. Solomon ſpeaks thus, מחויבי גהינום לגהינום Ἔνοχοι γεέννης εἰς γέενναν, Guilty of Hell unto Hell: which agrees with the laſt clauſe of this verſe.

Of the Councel] τῷ συνεδρίῳ, of the Sanhedrin: that is, of the Judgment, or Tribunal of the Magiſtrate. For that κρίσει, Judgment, in the clauſe before is to be referred to the Judgment of God, will appear by what follows.

Raka, Ῥακᾶ.] A word uſed by one that deſpiſeth another in the higheſt ſcorn: very uſual in the Hebrew Writers, and very common in the mouth of the Nation.

[a] Bab. Bitrat. fol. 32. 2.

Εἰς τὴν Γέενναν τοῦ πυρός, Into Hell fire.] The Jews do very uſually expreſs Hell, or the place of the damned by the word גהינום Gehinnom, which might be ſhewn in infinite examples; The manner of ſpeech being taken from the vally of Hinnom, a place infamous for foul Idolatry committed there, for the howlings of Infants, roaſted to Molech, filth carried out thither, and for a fire that always was burning, and ſo moſt fit to repreſent the horror of Hell.

[b] There are three doors of Gehenna; one in the Wilderneſs, as it is written, They went down, and all that belonged to them alive into Hell, (Num. XVI. 33.) Another in the Sea, as it is written, Out of the belly of Hell have I called, thou haſt heard my voice, (Jon. II. 2.) The Third in Jeruſalem, as it is written, Thus ſaith the Lord, whoſe fire is in Sion, and his furnace in Jeruſalem, (Eſai. XXXI. 9.) *The Tradition of the School of R. The Chaldee Paraphraſt upon Eſai. ch. XXXIII. ver. 14. גהינום יקידות עלם Gehenna, eternal fire, &c. Γέενναν πυρὸς αἰωνίου, the Gehenna of eternal fire.

We come now to the ſentences and ſenſe of the Verſe. A threefold puniſhment is adjudged to a threefold wickedneſs. Judgment to him that is angry חנם that is, without cauſe.

cauſe. Judgment alſo, and that by the Sanhedrin, that calls Raka. Judgment of Hell to him that calleth Mωρέ, Fool.

That which is here produced of the threefold Sanhedrin among the Jewes pleaſes, me not, becauſe, paſſing over other reaſons, mention of the Sanhedrin is made only in the middle clauſe.

How the Judgment in the firſt clauſe is to be diſtinguiſhed from the Judgment of the Sanhedrin in the ſecond, will very eaſily appear from this Gloſs and Commentary of the Talmudiſts, Of not killing. c He is a manſlayer, Whoſoever ſhall ſtrike his Neighbour with a ſtone or iron, or thruſt him into the water or fire, whence he cannot come out, ſo that he die, he is guilty. But if he ſhall thruſt another into the water or fire, whence he might come out, if he dy, he is guiltleſs. A man ſets a dog or ſerpent on another, he is guiltleſs. See alſo the Babylonian Gemara there. d Whoſoever ſhall ſlay his Neighbour with his own hand, ſtriking him with his ſword, or with a ſtone, ſo that he kills him; or ſhall ſtrangle, or burn him, ſo that he die, in any manner whatſoever killing him in his own perſon; behold, ſuch an one is to be put to death by the Sanhedrin. But he, that hires another by a reward, to kill his neighbour, or who ſends his ſervants, and they kill him, or he that thruſts him violently upon a Lion, or upon ſome other beaſt, and the beaſt kill him, or he that kills himſelf, כל אחד מאילו שופך דמים Every one of theſe is a ſhedder of blood, and the iniquity of manſlaughter is in his hand, and he is lyable to death לשמים by hand of God, but he is not to be puniſhed with death by the Sanhedrin.

Behold a double manſlayer! Behold a double judgment! Now let the words of our Saviour be applyed to this Gloſs of the antients upon the Law of Murder. Do ye hear, ſaith he what is ſaid by the ancients, Whoſoever ſhall kill, after what manner ſoever a man ſhall kill, whether by the hand of one that he hath hired, or by his Servants, or by ſetting a beaſt on him, he is guilty of the Judgment of God, though not of the Judgment of the Sanhedrin: and whoſoever ſhall kill his Neighbour by himſelf, none other interpoſing, this man is lyable to the Judgment of the Sanhedrin: but I ſay unto you, that whoſoever is raſhly angry with his Brother, this man is lyable to the Judgment of God, and whoſoever ſhall ſay to his Brother, Raka, he is lyable to the Sanhedrin.

Theſe words of our Saviour perhaps we ſhall more truly underſtand by comparing ſome more phraſes and doctrines very uſual in the Jewiſh Schools. Such as theſe פטור מדיני אדם וחייב בדיני שמים e Abſolved from the Judgment of men, but guilty in the Judgment of Heaven, that is, of God. מיתה ב"ד ומיתה בידי שמים Death by the Sanhedrin, and death by the hand of Heaven.

And in a word, כרת Cutting off, ſpeaks vengance by the hand of God. They are very much deceived, who underſtand כרת & כריתת Cutting off, of which there is very frequent mention in the holy Bible, concerning the cutting off from the publick aſſembly by Eccleſiaſtical cenſure, when as it means nothing elſe, than cutting off by divine Vengeance. There is nothing more uſual and common among the Hebrew Canoniſts, than to adjudge very many tranſgreſſions to cutting off, in that worn phraſe, חייב על זדונו כרת or אם מזיך חייב כרת If he ſhall do this out of preſumption he is guilty of cutting off, but if he ſhall do it out of ignorance, he is bound to a ſacrifice for ſin. When they adjudge a thing or a guilty perſon to cutting off, they deliver and leave him to the Judgment of God, nevertheleſs a cenſure and puniſhment from the Sanhedrin ſometimes is added, and ſometimes not. Which might be illuſtrated by infinite examples, but we are affraid of being tedious. Let theſe two be enough on both ſides.

I. Of mere delivering over to the judgment of God, without any puniſhment inflicted by the Sanhedrin, thoſe words ſpeak, which were lately cited, He is abſolved from the judgment of men, but lyable to the judgment of Heaven.

II. Of the Judgment of God and of the Sanhedrin joyned together, theſe words in the ſame place ſpeak. If he that is made guilty by the Sanhedrin be bound to make reſtitution, Heaven, (or God) doth not pardon him until he pay it. But he that bears the puniſhment layd on him by the Sanhedrin, is abſolved from cutting off. f All perſons guilty of cutting off, when they are beaten, are abſolved from their cutting off: as it is ſaid, And thy Brother become vile in thy ſight. When he ſhall be beaten, behold, he is thy brother.

f Bab. Mugil. fol. 7. 2.

Ἔνοχος εἰς γέενναν τοῦ πυρός, lyable or guilty even to the Hell fire. He had ſaid ἔνοχος guilty of Judgment, and συνεδρίῳ, of the Councel, before; but now he ſaith, εἰς γέενναν unto Hell, and that in a higher Emphaſis; as if he ſhould have ſaid, Whoſoever ſhall ſay to his brother, Mωρέ, Fool, ſhall be guilty of Judgment, even unto the Judgment of Hell.

But what was there more grievous in the word Fool, than in the word Raka? Let King Solomon be the Intepreter, who every where by a Fool underſtands a Wicked and Reprobate perſon, fooliſhneſs being oppoſed to ſpiritual wiſdome. Raka denotes indeed moroſity, and lightneſs of manners and life: but Fool judgeth bitterly of the ſpiritual and eternal ſtate, and decreeth a man to certain deſtruction: Let the judgings and cenſures of the Scribes and Phariſees concerning the common people ſerve us inſtead of a Lexicon. They did not only only ſuffer themſelves to be ſtiled חכמים Wiſemen, but alſo arrogated it to themſelves as their merit, and due. But what do they ſay of the common people? This people, that knoweth not the Law, is curſed, Joh. VII. 49.

You have a form of ſpeaking, not much unlike this which is now under our hands. g He that calls his Neigbour, Servant, let him be in excommunication. The Gloſs is, They therefore excommunicate him, becauſe he vilified an Iſraelite: him therefore they vilifie in like manner. ממור סיפג את הארבעים If he call him Baſtard, let him be puniſhed with forty ſtripes. רשע יורד עמו לחיו If Wicked man, let it deſcend with him into his life: that is, according to the Gloſs, Into miſery and penury.

g Bab. Kiddu-ſhin, fol. 28. 1. Cherubb. fol. 50. 1. and elſe-where.

After this manner therefore our Saviour ſuits a different puniſhment to different ſins by a moſt juſt parity, and a very equal compenſation: To unjuſt anger, the juſt anger and judgment of God; to publick reproach a publick Tryal; and Hell fire to the cenſure that adjudgeth another thither.

VERS. XXIII.

Ὅτι ὁ ἀδελφός σου ἔχει τι κατὰ σοῦ, &c. That thy Brother hath ought againſt thee, &c.

THE Emphaſis is chiefly in the particle τι. For that which the Jews reſtrained only to pecuniary damages, Chriſt extends to all offences againſt our Brother.

h He that offers an Oblation, not reſtoring that which he had unjuſtly taken away, does not do that which is his duty. And again, i He that ſteals any thing from his Neighbour, yea, though it be but a farthing, and ſwears falſly, is bound to reſtitution meeting the wronged party half way. See alſo Baal Turim upon Levit. Ch. VI. k An oblation is not offered for a ſin, unleſs that which is (wrongfully) taken away be firſt reſtored, either to the owner, or the Prieſt. In like manner, He that ſwears falſely, either of the Pruta (ſmall mony) or what the Pruta is worth, is bound to enquire after the owner, even as far as the Iſlands in the Sea, and to make reſtitution.

h Bava Kamà cap. 9. hal. 12.
i Hal. 5.
k Maimon in Gezala, cap. 8.
l Cap. 7.

Obſerve, how proviſion is here made for pecuniary damages only, and bare reſtitution, which might be done without a charitable mind, and a brotherly heart. But Chriſt urgeth charity, reconciliation of mind, and a pure deſire of reunion with our offended brother; and that not only in mony matters, but in any other, and for what ever cauſe, wherein our Neighbour complains, that he is grieved.

VERS. XXIV.

Ἄφες ἐκεῖ τὸ δῶρόν σου ἔμπροσθεν τοῦ θυσιαστηρίου. Leave there thy gift before the Altar.

THIS buſineſs was altogether unuſual in gifts offered at the Altar in ſuch a cauſe. We read indeed of the drink offering delayed after the ſacrifice was offered. m For the Wiſe men ſay, that a man is not held in his ſin, when the drink offering is put off by ſome delay, becauſe one may offer his ſacrifice to day, but his drink offering twenty days hence. We read alſo, that the oblation of a ſacrifice preſented even at the Altar, in ſome caſes hath not only been delayed, but the ſacrifice it ſelf hath been rejected: that is, if in that inſtant diſcovery was made in ſacrificing the beaſt either of a blemiſh, or of ſomewhat elſe, whereby it became an illegal ſacrifice: or if ſome uncleanneſs, or other cauſe appeared in the Offerer; whereby he was rendred unfit for the preſent to offer a gift. Of which things cauſing the oblation of the ſacrifice already preſented at the Altar to be deferred, the Hebrew Lawyers ſpeak much. But among thoſe things, we do not meet at all with this, whereof our Saviour is here ſpeaking: ſo that he ſeems to enjoyn ſome new matter, and not new alone, but ſeemingly impoſſible. For the offended Brother might perhaps be abſent in the furtheſt parts of the land of Iſrael, ſo that he could not be ſpoke with, and his pardon asked in very many days after; and what ſhall become of the beaſt in the mean time, which is left at the Altar? It is a wonder indeed, that our Saviour, treating of the worſhip at the Altar, ſhould preſcribe ſuch a duty, which was both unuſual (in ſuch a caſe,) and next to impoſſible. But it is anſwered:

m Toſophta ad Corbanoth, cap. 5.

I. It was a cuſtome and a law among the Jewes, that the ſacrifices of particular men, ſhould not preſently, as ſoon as they were due, be brought to the Altar, but that they ſhould be reſerved to the Feaſt next following, whatſoever that were, whether the Paſſover, or Pentecoſt, or Tabernacles, to be then offered. Teeming women, women that have the Gonorrhea, and men that have the Gonorrhea, reſerve their pigeons, until they go up to the feaſt. o The Oblations which were devoted before the Feaſt, ſhall be offered at the Feaſt: for it is ſaid, Theſe things ſhall ye do in their Solemnities, &c. But now all the Iſraelites were preſent at the Feaſts, and any Brother, againſt whom one had ſinned, was not then far off from the Altar. Unto which time, and cuſtome of the Nation, it is equal to think Chriſt alluded.

o Hieroſ. Roſh haſhanah, fol. 56. 2.

II. He does silently chastise the curiosity used in deferring of a sacrifice brought about lesser matters, when this, that was greater, was unregarded. And he teacheth, that God is worshipped in vain without true charity to our brother. The same also in effect do the p Gemarists confess.

p Bab. Joma, fol. 87. 1.

VERS. XXV.

Ἕως ὅτε εἶ ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ μετ' αὐτοῦ. Whilst thou art in the way with him.

THAT is, while thou goest with him to the Magistrate, ἐπ' ἄρχοντα, to the Magistrate, Luke XII. 58. Where there is a clear distinction between ἄρχοντα, the Magistrate, and κριτὴν, the Judg: so that by ἄρχοντα, Magistrate, or Ruler, one may understand the Judges in the lower Sanhedrins, by κριτὴν, Judg, the Judges in the highest. That allusion is here made to contentions about mony matters, sufficiently appears from the following words, vers. 26. Thou shalt by no means come out of prison till thou hast paid the uttermost farthing. q Now it was the business of the Bench that consisted of three men, to judg of such matters.

The words therefore of the verse have this sense. Does your Neighbour accuse you of some dammage, or of mony that is due to him? And are ye now going in the way to the Bench of Three, to commence the Suit? compound with your Adversary, lest he compel you to some higher Tribunal, where your danger will be greater. r For if the Lender say to the Debtor, let us go, that judgment may be had of our case from the chief Sanhedrin, they force the Debtor to go up thence with him. In like manner, If any accuse another of some thing taken away from him, or of some dammage done him, and he that is the accuser will have the higher Sanhedrin to judg of the Suite, they force the Debtor to go up thence with him. And so it is done in all other things of that nature.

r Maimon in Sanhedr. cap. 6.

Before, Christ had argued from piety, that men should seek to be reconciled, now he argues from prudence, and an honest care of a mans self.

Καὶ ὁ κριτής σε παραδῷ τῷ ὑπηρέτῃ. And the Judg deliver thee to the Officer.

A word answering to לשוטר or לסרדיוט or למנגנא An Executioner, a Whipper, among the Rabbins. שופטים ושוטרים תתן לך בכל שעריך Judges and Offices shalt thou make thee in all thy gates, Deut. XVI. 18. שוטרים s are Vergers and scourge bearers (Executioners) who stand before the Judges. These go through the lanes and streets, and Inns, and take care about weights and measures: and scourge those that do amiss. But all their business is by the order of the Judges. Whosoever they see doing evil, they bring before the Judges, &c. And אדם יוצא לשוק יהי וכו' t Whosoever goes out into the street, let him reckon concerning himself, as if he were already delivered over to the Officer. That is, as the Gloss hath it, Contentions and contentious men will there be met with, Gentiles and Israelites: so that let him reckon concerning himself, as though he were already delivered over to the Officer, ready to lead him away before the Judges. The Gloss upon Bab. Joma writes thus, מנגנא u is the Executioner of the Sanhedrin, whose office is to whip.

Κοδράντην. Farthing.

ACCORDING to the Jerusalem Talmud it is קרדיונמס Kordiontes, according to the Babylonian קונטריק Kontrik. For thus they write:

שני איסרין פונדיון :	x Two Assars make a Pondion.
שני מסומסין איסר :	Two Semisses make an Assar.
שני קרדיונטס מסומס :	Two farthings a Semissis.

x Kitzur Kiddushin, fol. 58. 4.

פונדיונין שני איסרין :	y A Pondion is in value two Assars.
איסר שני מסומסין :	An Assar is two Semisses.
מסמס שני קונטריקין :	A Semissis is two Farthings.

y Bab. Kiddush. cap. 1. And Aschaschis, ibid. fol. 625. 2.

That which is here said by the Jerusalem Talmud, שתי פרוטות קרדיונטס Two Prutahs make a Farthing, is the very same thing that is said, Mark XII. 42. Λεπτὰ δύο, ὅ ἐστι κοδράντης, Two mites which make a farthing. A Prutah was the very least piece among coines. So Maimonides, אין פחות משוה פרוטה ממון z That which is not worth a Prutah, z Gezelah, c. 7.

is not to be reckoned among riches. Hence are those numberless passages in the Talmudic Pandects, relating to the Prutah. a He that steals less than a Prutah, is not bound to pay five fold. b No land is bought for a price less than a Prutah, that is, given in earnest.

b Id. in Mechirah. cap. 1, &c.

You have the value of these Coins in the same Maimonides. c Selaa, saith he, is in value four pence; a peny six Meahs. Now a Meah in the days of Moses our Master, was called a Gerah: It contains two Pondions: A Pondion two Assars: and a Prutah is the eighth part of an Assar. The weight of a Meah, which is also called a Gerah, is sixteen barly-corns. And the weight of an Assar is four barly-corns. And the weight of a Prutah is half a barly-corn.

c In Tract. Shekalim. cap. 1.

Luke hath ἔσχατον λεπτὸν, the last mite, Chap. XII. 59. that is, the last Prutah, which d was the eighth part of the Italian Assarius. Therefore Κοδράντης, a farthing, was so called, not that it was the fourth part of a peny, but the fourth part of an Assar, which how very small a part of a peny it was, we may observe by those things that are said by both Gemara's, in the places before cited.

d Kiddush. cap. 1. hal. 1.

Let this be noted by the way, מעה a Meah, which, as Maimonides before testifies, was anciently called a Gerah, was also commonly called זוז Zuz in the Talmudists. For as it is said here, שש מעה בסף דינר : Six Meahs of Silver make a Peny. So in Rambam, דינר ו' זוזים : e A Peny contains six Zuzim.

e In Ptah, capu. c. hal. 7.

The Prutah, as it was the least piece of money among the Jews, so it seems to have been a Coin meerly Jewish, not Roman. For although the Jews being subjects to the Romans used Roman money, and thence, as our Saviour argues, confessed their subjection to the Romans, yet they were permitted to use their own money, which appears by the common use of the shekels, and half shekels among them; with good reason therefore one may hold the Κοδράντης, the farthing was the least Roman Coin, and the Λεπτὸν, the Prutah the least Jewish. Whilst our Saviour mentions both, he is not unconstant to his own speech, but speaks more to the capacity of all.

VERS. XXVII.

Ἠκούσατε ὅτι ἐρρέθη τοῖς ἀρχαίοις, Οὐ μοιχεύσεις, Ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old time, Thou shalt not commit adultery.

HE citeth not the Command, or Text of Moses, as barely delivered by Moses, but as deformed by those of old time with such a Glos, as almost evacuated all the force of the Command; for they interpreted it of the act of adultery only, and that with a married woman. So the enumeration of the six hundred and thirteen precepts of the Law, at that Exod. XX. 14. Thou shalt not commit adultery, hath these words, This is the thirty fifth precept of the Law, namely, That that no man lye with another mans wife.

VERS. XXVIII.

Πᾶς ὁ βλέπων, γυναῖκα πρὸς τὸ ἐπιθυμῆσαι, &c. Whosoever looketh upon a woman to lust after her, &c.

HE f that looketh upon a womans heel is as if he looked upon her belly: and he that looks upon her belly is as if he laid with her. And yet, g It was Rabban Gamaliels custom להסתכל בנשים to look upon women. And in the other Talmud, h He that looks upon the little finger of a woman, is as if he looked upon her privy parts. And yet i Rabh Gidal, and R. Jochanan were wont to sit at the place of dipping, where the women were washed; and when they were admonished by some of the danger of lasciviousness, R. Jochanan answered, I am of the seed of Joseph, over whom an evil affection could not rule.

VERS. XXX.

Εἰ ἡ δεξιά σε χεὶρ σκανδαλίζει σε, ἔκκοψον αὐτήν. If thy right hand offend thee cut it off.

SEE here Rab. Niddah, fol. 13. quite through. Among other things R. Tarphon saith, Whosoever brings his hand to his modest parts, let his hand be cut off unto his navel. And a little after, It is better that his belly should be cleft in two, than that he should descend into the well of corruption. The discourse is of moving the hand to the privy member, that by the handling it, it might be known whether the party had the Gonorrhea, or no, and and yet they adjudg never ſo little handling it to cutting off the hand. Read the place if you have leiſure.

VERS. XXXI.

Ὃς ἂν ἀπολύσῃ τὴν γυναῖκα, δότω αὐτῇ ἀποστάσιον. Whoſoever putteth away his wife, let him give her a bill of Divorſement.

NOtice is to be taken how our Saviour paſſeth into theſe words, namely by uſing the particle δέ, But. Ἐρρέθη δέ, But it hath been ſaid. This particle hath this Emphaſis in this place, that it whiſpers a ſilent objection, which is anſwered in the following verſe. Chriſt had ſaid, Whoſoever looks upon a woman to luſt after her, hath committed adultery already. But the Jewiſh Lawyers ſaid, If any one ſees a woman, which he is delighted withal above his wife, let him diſmiſs his wife and marry her.

Among the Chapters of Talmudical Doctrine we meet with none, concerning which it is treated more largely, and more to a punctilio than of Divorces: and yet there the chief care is not ſo much of a juſt cauſe of it, as of the manner and form of doing it. To him that turns over the Book Gittim, as alſo indeed the whole Seder Naſhim, that part of the Talmud that treats of women) the diligence of the Maſters about this matter will appear ſuch, that they ſeem to have dwelt not without ſome complacency upon this article above all others.

God indeed granted to that Nation a Law concerning Divorces, Deut. XXIV. 1. permitted only for the hardneſs of their hearts, Mat. XIX. 8. In which permiſſion nevertheleſs they boaſt as though it were indulged them by more priviledg. When God had eſtabliſhed that fatal Law of puniſhing Adultery by death, Deut. XXII. for the terror of the people, and for their avoiding of that ſin; the ſame merciful God foreſeeing alſo how hard (occaſion being taken from this Law) the iſſue of this might be to the women, by reaſon of the roughneſs of the men, luſting perhaps after other women, and loathing their own wives, he more graciouſly provided againſt ſuch kind of wife-killing by a Law, mitigating the former, and allowed the putting away a wife in the ſame caſe, concerning which that fatal Law was given, namely in the caſe of Adultery. So that that Law of Divorce in the exhibition of it implied their hearts to be hard, and in the uſe of it they ſhewed them to be carnal. And yet hear them thus boaſting of that Law. k The Lord of Iſrael ſaith כי שנא שלח that he hateth putting away, (Mal. II. 16.) Through the whole Chapter, ſaith R. Chananiah in the name of R. Phinehas, he is called the Lord of Hoſts: but here of Iſrael, that it might appear that God ſubſcribed not his name to Divorces, but only among the Iſraelites. As if he ſhould ſay, To the Iſraelites I have granted the putting away of wives, to the Gentiles I have not granted it. R. Chaijah Rabbah ſaith, Divorces are not granted to the Nations of the World.

k Hieroſ. in Kidduſhin, fol. 58. 3.

Some of them interpreted this Law of Moſes, (as by right they ought to interpret it) of the caſe of Adultery only. l The School of Shammai ſaid, a wife is not to be divorced, unleſs for filthineſs, (that is, Adultery) only becauſe it is ſaid, כי מצא בה ערות Becauſe he hath found filthy nakedneſs in her, (that is, Adultery.)

l Gittin, cap 9. hal. ult.

m Rabh Papa ſaid, If he find not adultery in her, what then? Rabba anſwered, When the merciful God revealed concerning him that corrupted a maid, that it was not lawful for him to put her away in his whole life, (Deut. XXII. 29.) you are thence taught concerning the matter propounded, that it is not lawful to put her away, if he ſhall not find filthineſs in his wife.

m Gemara, Ib.

With the like honeſty have ſome commented upon thoſe words cited out of the Prophet כי שנא שלח For he hateth putting away. n R. Jochanan ſaith, The putting away of a wife is odious. Which others alſo have granted indeed of the firſt wife, but not of thoſe that a man took to himſelf over and above. For this is approved among them for a Canon, o Let no man put away his firſt wife, unleſs for adultery. And p R. Eliezer ſaith, for the divorcing of the firſt wife, even the Altar it ſelf ſheds tears. Which Gloſs they fetch from thence, where it is ſaid, Let no man deal treacherouſly towards the wife of his youth, Mal. II. 15.

p Gittin, in the place above.

The Jews uſed Polygamy, and the divorcing of their wives with one and the ſame licenſe; and this that they might have change, and all for the ſake of luſt. q It is lawful (ſay they) to have many wives together, even as many as you will: but our wiſe men have decreed that no man have above four wives. But they reſtrained this, not ſo much out of ſome principles of chaſtity, as that leaſt a man being burdened with many wives might not be able to afford them food and clothing, and due benevolence: for thus they comment concerning this bridle of Polygamy.

q Maimon. in אישות cap. 10, & 14.

For what cauſes they put away their wives, there is no need to enquire; for this they did for any cauſe of their own free will.

1. It is commanded to divorce a wife that is not of good behaviour, and who is not modeſt, as becomes a daughter of Iſrael. So they ſpeak in Maimonides, and Gittin, in the place above bove ſpecified. Where this alſo is added in the Gemariſts. R. Meir ſaith, As men have their pleaſures concerning their meat and their drink, ſo alſo concerning their wives. This man takes out a fly found in his cup, and yet will not drink: after ſuch a manner did Papus ben Judah carry himſelf: who, as often as he went forth, bolted the doers and ſhut in his wife. Another takes out a fly found in his cup, and drinks up his cup: that he doth, who ſees his wife talking freely with her neighbours and kinſfolks, and yet allows of it. And there is another, who, if he find a fly in his basket, eats it: and this is the part of an evil man, who ſees his wife going out, without a vail upon her head, and with a bare neck, and ſees her waſhing in the baths, where men are wont to waſh, and yet cares not for it; whereas he is bound by the Law to put her away.

II. r If any man hate his wife, let him put her away: excepting only that wife that he firſt married. In like manner R. Judah thus interprets that of the Prophet כי שנא שלח If he hate her, let him put her away. Which ſenſe ſome Verſions, dangerouſly enough, have followed. R. Solomon expreſſes the ſenſe of that place thus: It is commanded to put away ones wife, if ſhe obtain not favour in the eyes of her husband.

V. But not to relate all the things, for which they pronounce a wife to be divorſed (among which they produce ſome things, that modeſty allows not to be repeated) let it be enough to mention that of R. Akibah inſtead of all. t R. Akibah ſaid, If any man ſees a woman handſomer than his own wife, he may put her away, becauſe it is ſaid, If ſhe find not favour in his eyes.

Ἀποστάσιον, Bill of Divorce.

And βιβλίον Ἀποστασίου, A Bill of Divorce, Mat. XIX. 7. and in the Septuagint, Deut. XXIV. 1. Of which Beza thus; This bil may ſeem to be called Ἀποστάσιον (as much as, Departing away) not in reſpect of the wife put away, as of the husband departing away from his wife. Something hard and diametrically contrary to the Canonical doctrine of the Jewes. For thus they write, u It is written in the bill, Behold, thou art put away; Behold, thou art thruſt away, &c. But if he writes, I am not thy husband, or I am not thy ſpouſe, &c. it is not a juſt bill: for it is ſaid He ſhall put her away, not, He ſhall put himſelf away.

u Maimon. in Geruſhin, ca. 1.

This Bill is called by the Jews ספר כריתות A Bill of cutting off, and ספר תירוכין A Bill of expulſion, and גט An Inſtrument, and גט פוטורין An Inſtrument of diſmiſſion, and איגרת שבוקין Letters of forſaking, &c.

I. A Wife might not be put away, unleſs a bill of divorce were given. Therefore it is called (ſaith Baal Turimi) ספר כריתות A bill of cutting off, *becauſe there is nothing elſe, that cuts her off from the husband. III. a A bill of divorce was written in twelve lines, neither more, nor leſs. R. For four lines come between the book of Geneſis, and the book of Exodus: four between the book of Exodus, and the book of Leviticus; four between the book Leviticus, and the book Numbers. But the four between the book of Numbers and Deuteronomy are not reckoned, becauſe that book is only a repetition of the Law, &c.

A Bill of Divorce.

On the day of the week N. of the month of N. of the year of the Worlds Creation N. according to the computation, by which we are wont to reckon in the Province N. I N. the ſon of N. and by what name ſoever I am called, of the City N, with the greateſt conſent of my mind, and without any compulſion urging me, have put away, diſmiſſed, and expelled thee, thee I ſay,

But now I have dismissed thee, thee I say,* N. the daughter of N. by what name soever thou art called of the City N. So that thou art free, and in thine own power, to marry whosoever shall please thee, and let no man hinder thee, from this day forward even for ever. Thou art free therefore for any man. And let this be to thee a bill of rejection from me, Letters of Divorse, and a Scedule of expulsion, according to the Law of Moses and Israel, Reuben the son of Jacob witness.

Eliezer the son of Gilead witness.

d In Gittin, fol. 273. 2.

See also this form varied in some few words in Maimonides. d

V. This bill, being confirmed with the husbands seal, and the subscription of witnesses, was to be delivered into the hand of the wife, either by the husband himself, or by some other deputed by him for this office: or the wife might depute some body to receive it in her stead.

VI. It was not to be delivered to the wife, but in the presence of two, who might read the bill, both before it was given into the hand of the wife, and after: and when it was given, the husband, if present, said thus, Behold, this is a bill of Divorce to you.

VII. The wife thus dismissed might, if she pleased, bring this bill to the Sanhedrin, where it was enrolled among the Records, if she desired it, in memory of the thing. The dismissed person likewise might marry whom she would: if the husband had not put some stop in the bill, by some clause forbidding it.

VERS. XXXII.

Ὃς ἂν ἀπολύσῃ τὴν γυναῖκα αὐτοῦ, &c. Whosoever shall put away his wife, &c.

I. OUR Saviour does not abrogate Moses permission of Divorses, but tolerates it, yet keeping it within the Mosaic bounds, that is, in the case of adultery, condemning that liberty in the Jewish Canons, which allowed it for any cause.

II. Divorse was not commanded in the case of adultery, but permitted. Israelites were compelled sometimes even by Whipping, to put away their Wives, as appears in e Maimonides. But our Saviour, even in the case of adultery, does not impose a compulsion to divorse, but indulgeth a licence to do it.

e In Gerushin, cap. 2.

III. He that puts away his wife without the cause of Fornication, makes her commit adultery: that is, if she commits adultery: or, although she commit not adultery, in act, yet he is guilty of all the lustful motions of her that is put away, for he that lustfully desires is said to commit adultery, vers. 28.

VERS. XXXIII.

Ἐρρέθη τοῖς ἀρχαίοις, Οὐκ ἐπιορκήσεις, &c. It hath been said by them of old time, Thou shalt not forswear thy self, &c.

THE Law forbids perjury, Levit. XIX. 12. &c. To which the Fathers of the Traditions reduced the whole sin of swearing, little caring for a rash oath. In this Chapter of Oaths they doubly sinned.

I. That they were nothing at all solicitous about an Oath, so that what was sworn were not false. They do but little trouble themselves, What, How, How often, how rashly you swear, so that what you swear be true.

In the Talmudick Tract שבועות Shevuoth, and in like manner in Maimonides, oaths are distributed into these four ranks.

First, שבועת ביטוי A Promissory oath: when a man swore that he would do, or not do this or that, &c. And this was one of the שבועות שתים שהן ארבע twofold Oaths, which were also fourfold, that is, a negative, or affirmative Oath; and again, a negative, or affirmative Oath concerning something past, or a negative or affirmative oath concerning something to come: namely, when any one swears, that he hath done this or that, or not done it; or, that he will do this or that or that he will not do it. Whosoever therefore swears any of these four ways, and the thing is not, as he swears (for example, That he hath not cast a stone into the Sea, when he hath cast it: that he hath cast it, when he hath not: that he will not eat, and yet eats: that he will eat, and yet eateth not.): behold, this is a false oath, or perjury. f

g Jamud in Shevuoth, c. 3.

g Whosoever swears that he will not eat, and yet eats somethings, which are not sufficiently fit to be eaten, this man is not guilty.

Secondly,

Secondly, שבועת שוא A vain or a raſh oath. This alſo is fourfold, but not in the ſame manner as the former: 1. When any aſſerted that with an oath, which was contrary to moſt known truth: as, If he ſhould ſwear a man were a woman, a ſtone-pillar to be a pillar of gold, &c. or when any ſwore that was or was not, which was altogether impoſſible: as, that he ſaw a Camel flying in the air. 2. When one aſſerted that by an oath, concerning which there was no reaſon that any ſhould doubt. For example, that Heaven is Heaven, a ſtone is a ſtone, &c. 3. When a man ſwore that he would do that which was altogether impoſſible; namely, that he would not ſleep for three days and three nights: That he would taſt nothing for a full week, &c. 4. When any ſwore that he would abſtain from that which was commanded, as, that he would not wear Phylacteries, &c. Theſe very examples are brought in the places alledged.

Thirdly, שבועת פקדון An oath concerning ſomething left in truſt: Namely, when any ſwore concerning ſomething left in truſt with him, that it was ſtollen or broke, or loſt, and not embezzel'd by him, &c.

Fourthly, שבועת עדות A Teſtimonial Oath, before a Judg or Magiſtrate.

In three of theſe kinds of ſwearing care is only taken concerning the truth of the thing ſworn, not of the vanity of ſwearing.

They ſeemed indeed to make ſome proviſion againſt a vain and raſh oath: namely, 1. That he be beaten who ſo ſwears, and become curſed: which Maimonides hints in the twelfth Chapter of the Tract alledged: with whom the Jeruſalem Gemariſts do agree; h He that ſwears two is two, let him be beaten for his vain oath. 2. They alſo added terror to it from fearful examples, ſuch as that is in the very ſame place: בר" בילות היו בדרום There were twenty four aſſemblies in the South, and they were all deſtroyed for a vain oath. And in the ſame Tract, i a woman buried her Son for an oath, &c. yet they concluded vain oaths in ſo narrow a circle, that a man might ſwear an hundred thouſand times, and yet not come within the limits of the caution concerning vain ſwearing.

II. It was cuſtomary and uſual among them to ſwear by the Creatures, k If any ſwear by Heaven, by Earth, by the Sun, &c. although the mind of the ſwearer be under theſe words to ſwear by him who created them, yet this is not an Oath. Or if any ſwear by ſome of the Prophets, or by ſome of the Books of the Scripture, although the ſenſe of the ſwearer be to ſwear by him that ſent that Prophet, or that gave that Book, nevertheleſs this is not an Oath.

l If any adjure another by heaven or earth, he is not guilty.

m They ſwore by Heaven. השמים כן הוא By heaven ſo it is.

They ſwore by the Temple. n When Turtles and young Pigeons were ſometime ſold at Jeruſalem for a peny of gold, Rabban Simeon, Ben Gamaliel ſaid, המעון הזה By this Habitation (that is, by this Temple) I will not reſt this night, unleſs they be ſold for a peny of ſilver.

o R. Zechariah ben Ketſab ſaid, המעון הזה By this Temple, the hand of the woman departed not out of my hand. p R. Jochanan ſaid היכלא By the Temple it is in our hand, &c.

q Bava ben Buta ſwore by the Temple, in the end of the tract Cherithuth, and Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel in the beginning; והה מנהג בישראל And ſo was the cuſtom in Iſrael. Note this, ſo was the cuſtom.

VERS. XXXIV.

Μὴ ὀμόσαι ὅλως. Swear not at all.

IN the Tract Demai t are ſome rules preſcribed to a religious man: among others, That he be not too much בנדרים ובשחוק in ſwearing and laughing. Where the Gloſs of R. Solomon is this, פרוץ בנדרים means this, Be not much in oaths, although one ſhould ſwear concerning things that are true: for in much ſwearing it is impoſſible not to profane. Our Savi- our with good reaſon binds his followers with a ſtraiter bond, permitting no place at all for a voluntary and arbitrary oath. The ſenſe of theſe words goes in the middle way, between the Jew, who allowed ſome place for an arbitrary oath, and the Anabaptiſt who allows none for a neceſſary one.

VERS. XXXVIII.

[y]Ἠκούσατε ὅτι ἐρρέθη, [z]Ὀφθαλμὸν ἀντὶ ὀφθαλμοῦ, &c. Ye have heard that it hath been ſaid, An eye for an eye, &c.

THIS Law he alſo cites, as clothed in the Gloſs of the Scribes, and now received in the Jewiſh Schools. But they reſolved the Law not into a juſt retaliation, but into a pecuniary compenſation.

y Does any cut off the hand or foot of his neighbour? They value this according to the example of ſelling a ſervant; computing at what price he would be ſold before he was maimed, and for how much leſs, now he is maimed. And how much of the price is diminiſhed, ſo much is to be paid to the maimed perſon, as it is ſaid, An eye for an eye, &c. We have received by Tradition, that this is to be underſtood of pecuniary ſatisfaction. But whereas it is ſaid in the Law, If a man cauſe a blemiſh in his neighbour, the ſame ſhall be done to him (Lev. XXIV. 19.) It means not that he ſhould be maimed as he hath maimed another, but when he deſerveth maiming, he deſerveth to pay the damage to the perſon maimed. They ſeemed out of very great charity to ſoften that ſevere Law to themſelves, when nevertheleſs in the mean time little care was taken of lively charity, and of the forgiving an offence, an open door being ſtill left them to exaction and revenge, which will appear in what follows.

VERS. XXXIX.

[a]Ὅστις σε ῥαπίσει ἐπὶ τὴν δεξιὰν σου σιαγόνα. Whoſoever ſhall ſmite thee on the right cheek.

THAT the Doctrine of Chriſt may here more clearly ſhine out, let the Jewiſh Doctrine be ſet againſt it; to which he oppoſeth his.

[z] Bava Kama, cap. 8. hal. 6.

z Does any one give his neighbour a box on the ear? let him give him a ſhilling. R. Judah in the name of R. Joſi of Galilee ſaith, Let him give him a pound.

סטרו נותן לו מאתי זוז Does he give him a blow upon the cheek? Let him give him two hundred Zuzees: if with the other hand, let him give four hundred. Compare with this paſſage ver. 39. If any ſhall ſtrike thee on the right cheek, turn to him the other alſo.

צרם אונו וגו' Does he twitch him by the ear, or does he pull off his hair; or does he ſpit, ſo that his ſpittle falls upon him; or does he take away his coat, (Note this alſo, and compare ver. 40. with it, He that will take away thy coat, &c.) or does he uncover a womans head in publick? Let him give four hundred Zuzees.

They fetch the reaſon of ſo ſevere a mulct chiefly, from the ſhame done him, that is thus injured, and from the diſgrace of the thing it ſelf, and moreover from the dignity of an Iſraelite: which is declared at large by the Gemariſts upon the words cited, and by a Maimonides.

הכל לפי כבודו Thoſe mulcts (ſay they) are eſtabliſhed and inflicted according to the dignity of the perſon injured. But R. Akibah ſaid, Even the pooreſt Iſraelites are to be eſteemed, as though they were perſons of quality, diveſted of their eſtates; becauſe they are the Sons of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob.

Hence the entrance to our Saviours Doctrine lyes eaſie. 1. He cites the Law of retaliation, that by laying one againſt the other, Chriſtian charity and forgiveneſs might ſhine ſhine the clearer. 2. He mentions theſe particulars, which ſeemed to be the moſt unworthy, and not to be born by the high quality of a Jew, that he might the more preach up Evangelical humility, and patience, and ſelf-denial. But why was the law of retaliation given, if at laſt it is melted down into this? On the ſame reaſon, as the Law of death was given concerning Adultery. Namely, for terror, and to demonſtrate what the ſin was. Both were to be ſoftned by charity; this by forgiveneſs, that by a bill of divorce, or, if the husband ſo pleaſed, by forgiveneſs alſo.

VERS. XL.

Καὶ τῷ θέλοντί σοι κριθῆναι, καὶ τὸν χιτῶνά σου λαβεῖν, &c. And if any will ſue thee at the Law, and take away thy coat, &c.

Χιτῶνα, coat, that is, טלית Talith, So in the words of the Talmud alledged העביר טליתו He takes his Coat. Of this garment thus the Aruch, טלית הוא רדיך Talith is a cloak: And why is it called Talith? Becauſe it is above all the garments, that is, becauſe it is the outermoſt garment.

In this upper garment were woven in thoſe fringes, that were to put them in mind of the law, of which there is mention, Numb. XV. 38. Hence is that הזהיר בציצית זוכה לטלית נאה b He that takes care of his skirts, deſerves a good coat. Hereupon the diſgrace was encreaſed together with the wrong, when that was taken away, concerning which they did not a little boaſt, nay and in which they placed no ſmall religion: Mat. XXIII. 5. χιτῶν καὶ ἱμάτιον, An upper and an inward garment, to which טלית יחלוק anſwer. c If any give a poor man a penny to buy חלוק Ἱμάτιον, an inward garment, let him not buy טלית χιτῶνα, a coat, nor an upper garment משאיל לו חלוק וטלית d He lends him Ἱμάτιον καὶ χιτῶνα, An inner garment, and a Coat.

To the firſt, the firſt words of our Saviour, Μὴ ἀντιστῆναι τῷ πονηρῷ That ye reſiſt not evil, ſeem to relate: Do not ſo reſiſt, or riſe up againſt an injurious perſon, as to require the law of retaliation againſt him. The ſecond and fourth the words following ſeem to reſpect, viz. ὅστις σε ῥαπίσει, Whoſoever ſmiteth thee, ſo that it cauſe pain and ſhame: and thoſe words alſo, θέλοντι χιτῶνά σου λαβεῖν, him that will take away thy coat. To the laſt do theſe words under our hand refer, and to the ſecond certainly, if ſome intolerable kind of ſervice be propounded, which the famous Beza aſſerts.

The word הלוות very uſual among the Talmudiſts, whereby they denote accompanying him, that goes ſomewhere, out of honour and reſpect, reaches not the ſenſe of the word ἀγγαρεύειν, but is too ſoft and low for it. It is reckoned for a duty, to accompany a dead corps to the grave, and a Rabbine departing ſomewhere. Hence is that ſtory f Germani the Servant of R. Judah Naſi willing περιπέμψαι (מילווהו) to conduct R. Illa going away, met a mad dog, &c. The footſteps of this civility we meet with among the Chriſtians, Tit. III. 13. John Ep. III. ver. 6. Marks they were of reſpect, love and reverence: but that which was required by the Jewiſh Maſters out of arrogance, and a ſupercilious authority, was to be done to a Rabbine, as a Rabbine.

f Hieroſ. Sch. abb. 8. 3.

But ἀγγαρεύειν to compel to go a mile, ſounds harſher, and ſpeaks not ſo much an impulſe of duty, as a compulſion of violence: and the Talmudiſts retain that very word אנגריא Angaria, and do ſhew, by examples not a few, what it means. g It is reported of R. Eliazar ben Harſum, that his Father bequeathed him a thouſand Cities on the dry land, and a thouſand Ships on the Sea: but yet he every day carrying along with him a bottle of meal upon his ſhoulder, travayled from City to City, and from Country to Country to learn the Law. On a certain day his Servants met him, ועשו בו אנגריא & angariate, compel him. He ſaith to them, I beſeech, you diſmiſs me, that I may go and learn the Law. They ſay to him, by the life of R. Eliazar ben Harſum, we will not diſmiſs you, &c. Where the Gloſs is, אנגריאה שר העיר עבוד" Angariah is the ſervice of the Governor of the City; and he was here to ſerve himſelf (for he was Lord of the City) But they knew him not, but thought him to belong to one of thoſe his Cities: for it was incumbent on them to attend on their Maſter.

k Baba Metzia, cap. 6. hal. 3. We meet with mention alſo of Angariating cattle, או שנעשית אנגריא וכו' k An Aſs is hired for a hilly journey, but he that hireth him travayls in the Valley; although both be of the like diſtance, that is, ten miles, if the Aſs dyes, he who hireth him is guilty, &c. But if the Aſs were angariated, the Hirer ſaith to the Owner, Behold, Take your beaſt to your ſelf, &c. The Gloſs is, If he were angariated, that is, if they take him for ſome work of the King, &c.

Under an injury, for which ſome right and equity in law is pretended, ver. 40. 3. Under an injury, compulſion, or violence, patronized by the authority of a King, or of thoſe that are above us.

VERS. XLIV.

Μισήσεις τὸν ἐχθρόν σου. Thou ſhalt hate thine enemy.

HERE thoſe poyſonous Canons might be produced, whereby they are trained up in eternal hatred againſt the Gentiles, and againſt Iſraelites themſelves, who do not in every reſpect walk with them in the ſame traditions, and rites. Let this one example be inſtead of very many, which are to be met with every where.

l Maimon. in רוצח cap. 4. l The Heretical Iſraelites, that is, they of Iſrael, that worſhip Idols, or who tranſgreſs, to provoke God: alſo Epicurean Iſraelites, that is, Iſraelites, who deny the Law and the Prophets, are by precept to be ſlain, if any can ſlay them, and that openly; but if not openly, you may compaſs their death ſecretly, and by ſubtilty. And a little after (O! ye extreme charity of the Jews towards the Gentiles!) But as to the Gentiles, with whom we have no war, and likewiſe to the ſhepherds of ſmaller cattel, and others of that ſort, they do not ſo plot their death, but it is forbidden them to deliver them from death, if they are in danger of it. For inſtance, A Jew ſees one of them fallen into the Sea, let him by no means lift him out thence: for it is written, Thou ſhalt not riſe up againſt the blood of thy neighbour: but this is not thy neighbour.

m Ibid. cap. 13. And further, m An Iſraelite, who alone ſees another Iſraelite tranſgreſſing, and admoniſheth him, if he repents not, is bound to hate him.

VERS. XLVI.

Οὐχὶ καὶ οἱ τελῶναι τὸ αὐτὸ ποιοῦσι; Do not even the Publicans the ſame?

HOW odious the Publicans were to the Jewiſh Nation, eſpecially thoſe that were ſprung of that Nation, and how they reckoned them the very worſt of all mankind, appears many ways in the Evangeliſts; and the very ſame is their character in their own Writers.

n Maimon. in גזלה cap. 5. n It is not lawful to uſe the riches of ſuch men, of whom it is preſumed that they were thieves; and of whom it is preſumed, that all their wealth was gotten by rapine; and that all their buſineſs was the buſineſs of extortioners, ſuch as Publicans and robbers are; nor is their money to be mingled with thine, becauſe it is preſumed to have been gotten by rapine.

o Nedarim, cap. 3. hal. 4. o Publicans are joined with cut-throats and robbers. נודרין להרגין ולחרמין ילמוכסין They ſwear to cut-throats, to robbers, and to Publicans, (invading their goods) This is an offering, &c. He is known by his companion.

p Pah. Sanhedr. fol. 25. 2. p Among thoſe who were neither fit to judg, nor to give a teſtimony in judgment, are numbred הגבאין והמוכסין The Collectors of Taxes, and the Publicans.

They were marked with ſuch reproach, and that not without good reaſon, partly by reaſon of their rapine, partly that to the burthen laid upon the Nation they themſelves added another burthen.

q Maimon. in the place above. q When are Publicans to be reckoned for thieves? when he is a Gentile: or when of himſelf he takes that office upon him, or when being deputed by the King, he doth not exact the ſet ſumm, but exacts according to his own will. Therefore the father of R. Zeira is to be reputed for a rare perſon, r who, being a Publican for thirteen years, did not make the burthens of the taxes heavier, but rather eaſed them.

r Pah. Sanhedr. fol. 25. 2.

s When the King laid a Tax, to be exacted of the Jews, of each according to his Eſtate: theſe Publicans being deputed to proportion the thing, became reſpecters of perſons, burthening ſome, and indulging others, and ſo became Plunderers.

s Gaon in Aruch in כבס

By how much the more grievous the Heathen yoak was to the Jewiſh people, boaſting themſelves a free Nation, ſo much the more hateful to them was this kind of men; who though ſprung of Jewiſh bloud, yet rendred their yoke much more heavy by theſe rapines.

CHAP. VI.

VERS. I.

Προσέχετε τὴν ἐλεημοσύνην ὑμῶν μὴ ποιεῖν, &c. Take heed that ye do not your Alms, &c.

IT is queſtioned, whether Matthew writ Ἐλεημοσύνην, Alms, or Δικαιοσύνην, Righteouſneſs. I anſwer;

I. That our Saviour, certainly ſaid צדקה, Righteouſneſs (or in Syriac זדקתא) I make no doubt at all; but that that word could not be otherwiſe underſtood by the common people than of Alms, there is as little doubt to be made. For although the word צדקה according to the idiom of the old Teſtament, ſignifies nothing elſe than Righteouſneſs; yet now when our Saviour ſpoke thoſe words, it ſignified nothing ſo much as Alms.

II. Chriſt uſed alſo the ſame word זדקתא Righteouſneſs in the three verſes next following, and Matthew uſed the word Ἐλεημοσύνη Alms: but by what right, I beſeech you, ſhould he call it Δικαιοσύνην, Righteouſneſs, in the firſt verſe, and Ἐλεημοσύνην, Alms in the following, when Chriſt every where uſed one and the ſame word? Matthew might not change in Greek, where our Saviour had not changed in Syriac.

Therefore we muſt ſay, that the Lord Jeſus uſed the word צדקה or צדקתא in theſe four firſt verſes: but that ſpeaking in the dialect of common people he was underſtood by the common people to ſpeak of Alms.

Now they called Alms by the name of צדקה righteouſneſs, in that the Fathers of the Traditions taught, and the common people believed that Alms conferred very much to juſtification. Hear the Jewiſh Chair in this matter.

a For one farthing given to a poor man in Alms, a man is made partaker of the beatifical viſion, Where it renders theſe words אני בצדק אחזה פניך I ſhall behold thy face in righteouſneſs, after this manner, I ſhall behold thy face becauſe of Alms.

a Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 10. 1. & Midr. Tillin, upon Pſal XVII. 15.

One ſaith, b This mony goes for Alms, that my ſons may live, and that I may obtain the world to come.

b Bab. Roſh. haſhanah, fol. 4. 1.

c A mans Table now expiates by Alms, as heretofore the Altar did by Sacrifice.

c Id. Beracoth, fol. 55. 1.

d If you afford Alms out of your purſe, God will keep you from all dammage and harm.

d Hieroſ. P. ab, fol. 15. 2.

e Monobazes the King beſtowed his goods liberally upon the poor, and had theſe words ſpoke to him by his kinſmen and friends, your anceſtors encreaſed both their own riches and thoſe that were left them by their fathers, but you waſt both your own and thoſe of your Anceſtors. To whom he anſwered, my Fathers layd up their Wealth on earth; I lay up mine in heaven; as it is written, Truth ſhall floriſh out of the Earth, but Righteouſneſs ſhall look down from Heaven. My fathers laid up treaſures, that bear no fruit, but I lay up ſuch as bear fruit: as it is ſaid, It ſhall be well with the juſt, for they ſhall eat the fruit of their works. My Fathers treaſured up, where power was in their hands: but I where it is not; as it is ſaid, Juſtice and Judgment is the habitation of his throne. My Fathers heaped up for others; I for my ſelf, as it is ſaid, And this ſhall be to thee for Righteouſneſs. They ſcraped together for this world; I for the World to come; as it is ſaid; Righteouſneſs ſhall deliver from death. Theſe things are alſo recited in the f Babylonian Talmud.

f Bava Bathra, fol. 11. 1.

You ſee plainly in what ſenſe he underſtands Righteouſneſs, namely, in the ſenſe of Alms: and that ſenſe, not ſo much framed in his own imagination, as in that of the whole Nation, and which the Royal Catechumen had imbibed from the Phariſees his Teachers.

Behold the juſtifying and ſaving virtue of Alms from the very work done, according to the doctrine of the Phariſaical chair. And hence the opinion of this efficacy of Alms ſo far prevailed with the deceived people, that they poynted out Alms by no other name (confined within one ſingle word) than צדקה Righteouſneſs. Perhaps thoſe words of our Saviour are ſpoken in deriſion of this doctrine; Yea, Give thoſe things, which ye have, in Alms, and behold all things ſhall be clean to you, Luke II. 41. With good reaſon indeed exhorting them to give Alms, but yet withall ſtriking at the Covetouſneſs of the Phariſees, and confuting their vain opinion of being clean by the waſhing of their hands, from their own opinion of the efficacy of Alms. As if he had ſaid; "ye aſſert, that Almes juſtifies and ſaves, and therefore ye call it by the "name of Righteouſneſs; why therefore do ye affect cleanneſs by the waſhing of hands, "and not rather by the performance of charity? See the praiſes of Alms, ſomewhat too high for it, g in the Talmud.

g Bab Bat. 1 Batha, fol. 8, 9, 10, 11. Chagig. fol. 5. 1.

h R. Jannai ſaw one giving mony openly to a poor man; to whom he ſaid, It is better you had not given at all, than ſo to have given.

Εἰ δὲ μήγε μισθὸν οὐκ ἔχετε. Otherwiſe ye have no reward.

He therefore ſeems the rather to ſpeak of a reward, becauſe they expected a reward for their almes doing without all doubt, and that as we ſaid, for the mere work done.

i R. Lazar was the Almoner of the Synagogue. One day going into his houſe he ſaid, what news? They anſwered, ſome came hither, and eat and drank, and made prayers for thee. Then, ſaith he, there is no good reward. Another time going into his houſe he ſaid, what news? It was anſwered, ſome others came and eat and drank, and railed upon you. Now, ſaith he, there will be a good reward.

VERS. II.

Μὴ σαλπίσῃς ἔμπροσθέν σου ὥσπερ οἱ ὑποκριταὶ ποιοῦσιν ἐν ταῖς συναγωγαῖς, καὶ ἐν ταῖς ῥύμαις Do not ſound a Trumpet before thee, as the Hypocrites do in the Synagogues, and in the Streets.

IT is juſt ſcruple, Whether this ſounding a trumpet be to be underſtood according to the latter, or in a borrowed ſenſe. I have not found, although I have ſought for it much and ſeriouſly, even the leaſt mention of a trumpet in Almſgiving. I would moſt willingly be taught this from the more Learned.

You may divide the ordinary Alms of the Jewes into three parts.

I. לתמחוי The Alms Diſh, They gave Alms to the publick diſh or basket, תמחוי Tamchui, (according to the definition of the Author of Aruch, and that out of Bava Bathra in the place lately cited,) was a certain Veſſel, in which bread and food was gathered, לעני עולם for the poor of the World, You may not improperly call it The Alms basket, he calls it קערה A Diſh. By the poor of the world are to be underſtood any beggers begging from door to door, yea even Heathen Beggers. Hence the Jeruſalem Talmud in the place above quoted, תמחוי לכל אדם The Alms Diſh was for every man. And the Aruch moreover נגבית בכל יום בג" וכו' This Alms was gathered daily by three men, and diſtributed by three. It was gathered of the Townſmen by Collectors within their doors; which appears by that caution; גבאי צדקה וכו' The Collectors of Alms may not ſeparate themſelves one from another, unleſs that one may go by himſelf to the gate, and another to the ſhop. That is, as the Gloſs explains it, They might not gather this Alms ſeparately and by themſelves, that no ſuſpition might ariſe, that they privily converted what was given, to their own uſe and benefit. This only was allowed them, when they went to the gate, one might betake himſelf to the gate, and another to a ſhop near it; to ask of the dwellers in both places: yet with this proviſo, that withall both were within ſight of one another. So that at each door it might be ſeen, that this Alms was received by the Collectors. And here was no probability at all of a Trumpet, when this Alms was of the loweſt degree, being to be beſtowed upon vagabond ſtrangers, and they very often Heathen.

II. לקופה The poors cheſt. They gave Alms alſo in the publick poors box: which was to be diſtributed to the poor only of that City. The Alms diſh is for the poor of the world, קופה לעניי אותה העיר But the Alms cheſt for the poor only of that City. This was collected of the Townſmen by two Parnaſin, of whom before, to whom alſo a third was added, for the diſtributing it. The Babylonian Gemariſts give a reaſon of the number, not unworthy to be marked: A Tradition of the Rabbins. The Alms cheſt is gathered by two, and diſtributed by three. It is gathered by two, שאין עושים שררות על ציבור פחות משנים Becauſe they do not conſtitute a ſuperior office in the Synagogue leſs than of two, ומתחלקת בג" כדיני ממונות And it is diſtributed by three, as Pecuniary judgments are tranſacted by three.

This

This Alms was collected in the Synagogue, on the Sabbath, (compare 1 Cor. XVI. 2.) and it was diſtributed to the poor, on the Sabbath Eve. Hence is that, קופה מערב שבת לערב שבת The Almes cheſt is from the Sabbath Eve to the Sabbath Eve; the Alms diſh every day.

Whether therefore, the Trumpet ſounded in the Synagogue, when Alms were done it again remains obſcure, ſince the Jewiſh Canoniſts do not openly mention it, while yet they treat of theſe Alms very largely. Indeed every Synagogue had its Trumpet. For,

1. They ſounded with the Trumpet in every City, in which was a Judiciary Bench, at the coming in of the new year. But this was not uſed, but after the deſtruction of the Temple. See k Roſh haſhanah. k Cap. 4. hal. 1.

2. They ſounded with the Trumpet, when any was excommunicated. Hence among the untenſils of a Judge is numbred l a Trumpet. For כלי דיינין the inſtruments of Judges, as appears there, were מכל רצועה שופרא סנדלא A Rod, A Whip, A Trumpet, and a Sandal. שופרא לשמתא ונידוי A Trumpet, ſaith the Gloſs, for Excommunication and Anathematizing: and a Sandal, for the taking off the ſhoe of the husbands brother. m And in the ſame place, mention is made of the excommunicating of Jeſus, four hundred trumpets being brought for that buſineſs. l Bab. Sanhedr. fol. 7. 2. m fol. 107. 2.

3. The Trumpet ſounded ſix times at the coming in of every Sabbath: that from thence by that ſign given all people ſhould ceaſe from ſervile works. Of this matter diſcourſe is had in the Babylonian Talmud n in the Tract of the Sabbath. n fol. 35. 2.

Thus there was a Trumpet in every Synagogue, but whether it were uſed while Alms were done, I ſtill enquire. That comes into my mind גבאי צדקה ביט"ו וכו' o The Collectors of Alms do not proclaim on a feaſt day, as they proclaim on a common day: but collect it privately, and put it up in their boſom. But wether this Proclamation did publiſh what was giving by every one, or did admoniſh of not giving any thing, but what might rightly be given, let the more learned Judge by looking upon the place. o Kitroſ. Demai, fol. 23. 2.

III. They gave Alms alſo out of the field, and that was eſpecially fourfold. 1. The Corner of the field not reaped. 2. Sheaves left in the field, either by forgetfulneſs, or voluntarily. 3. The Gleaning of the Vintage; of which ſee Levit. XIX. 9, 10. Deut. XXIV. 19. And 4. מעשר עני The Poors Tenth; of which the Talmudiſts largely in the Tracts, Peah, Demai, and Maaſaroth. To the gathering of theſe the poor were called, בג" אובעיות ביום בשחר ובחצות ובמנחה p By three manifeſtations in the day, namely in the morning, and at noon, and at Minchah, (or, the Evening) That is, the Owner of the field openly ſhewed himſelf three times in the day, for this end, that then the poor ſhould come and gather. In the morning, for the ſake of nurſes, becauſe in the mean time while their young children ſlept, they might the more freely go forth for this purpoſe: at noon, for the ſake of children, who alſo at that time were prepared to gather: at Mincha, for the ſake of old men. So the Jeruſalem Gemariſts, and the Gloſſers upon the Babylonian Talmud. p Peah, cap. 4. hal. 5.

Theſe were the ordinary Alms of the Jewiſh people: in the doing which, ſeeing as yet I cannot find ſo much as the leaſt ſound of a trumpet in their Writers, I gueſs that either our Saviour here ſpoke Metaphorically, or, if there were any trumpet uſed, that it was uſed in peculiar and extraordinary Alms.

The Jews did very highly approve of Alms done ſecretly; hence לשכת חשאי The Treaſury of the ſilent was of famed memory in the Temple; whither q ſome very religious men brought their Alms in ſilence and privacy, when the poor children of good men were maintained. And hence is that Proverb, גדול העושה צדקה בסתר יותר ממשה רבינו He that doth Alms in ſecret, is greater than our Maſter Moſes him ſelf. And yet they laboured under ſuch an itch to make their Alms publick, leſt they ſhould not be ſeen by men; that they did them not without a trumpet, or which was as good as a trumpet, with a proud affectation of making them known: that they might the more be pointed at with the finger, and that it might be ſaid of them, Theſe are the men. q Aruch in חשש r Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 9. 2.

VERS. V.

Φιλοῦσιν δὲ ταῖς συναγωγαῖς καὶ ἐν ταῖς γωνίαις τῶν πλατειῶν ἑστῶτες προσεύχεσθαι. They love to pray, standing in the Synagogues, and in the corners of the streets.

x Bab Berac. fol. 26. 2.

I. THEY prayed standing, Luke XVIII. 11, 13. Mark XI. 25. x It is written, And Abraham rose early in the morning at the place, where he had stood before the Lord. ואין עמידה אלא תפלה But to Stand was nothing else, than to Pray, as it is said, ויעמד פנחס ויפלל And Phinehas stood and judged.

y Hieros. f. 20. 1. z Maimon. in Deah, cap. 5. a In Tephillah, cap. 5.

y One entreth into the Synagogue. ומצאן עומדין לתפלה And found them standing in Prayer. z Let a Scholar of the Wise men look downwards, כשהוא עומד לתפלה When he stands Praying. And to name no more, the same Maimonides a asserts these things are required in Prayer, That he that prayeth, stand, that he turn his face towards Jerusalem, that he cover his head, and that he fix his eyes downwards.

b Tanchum, fol. 35. 1.

II. They loved to pray in the Synagogues. b He goes to the Synagogue to pray. Why do they recite their Phylacteries in the Synagogue, when they are not bound to do it? R Josi saith, They do not recite them in the Synagogue for that end, that so the whole office of the Phylacteries may be performed, but to persevere in Prayer. For this recitation was to be said over again, when they came home. c c Piske in Berac. cap 1. art. 6 d In Berac. fol. 69 3.

Rabbena Asher hath these words. d When any returns home in the evening from the field, let him not say, I will go into my house, but first let him betake himself to the Synagogue: and if he can read, let him read something; if he can recite the Traditions, let him recite them. And then let him say over the Philacteries, and Pray.

But, that we be not too tedious, Even from this very opinion, they were wont to betake themselves to the Synagogues, because they were perswaded, the Prayers of the Synagogue were certainly heard.

e In Tephillah, cap. 11. f Taanith, cap. 2. hal. 1. & 2.

III. They prayed in the streets. So Maimonides, e They prayed in the streets in the feasts and publick Fasts. f What are the rites of the Fasts? They brought out the Ark into the streets of the City, and sprinkled ashes upon the Ark, and upon the Head of the President of the Sanhedrin, and the Vice-President; and every one put ashes upon his own head. One of the Elders make this exhortation; It is not said, O Brethren, of the Ninivites, that God saw their sackcloth, or their fastings, but that he saw their works, &c. They stand praying, and they set some fit Elder before the Ark, and he prays four and twenty prayers before them.

But doth our Saviour condemn all Prayers in the Synagogue? By no means. For he himself prayed in and with the Synagogue. Nor did he barely reprove those publick Prayers in the streets, made by the whole multitude in those great Solemnities, but Prayers every where both in the Synagogues, and the streets, that were made privately, but yet publickly also, and in the sight of all, that thereby he that prayed might get some name and reputation from those that saw him.

I. While publick Prayers were uttered in the Synagogue, it was customary also for those that hunted after vain glory, to mutter private Prayers, and such as were different from those of the Synagogue, whereby the eyes of all might be the more fixed upon him that prayed.

g Hieros. Berac. fol. 83.

g Hath not a man prayed his morning Prayers? When he goes into the Synagogue does he find them praying the Additionary Prayer? If he is sure he shall begin and end, so that he may answer Amen after the Angel of the Church, let him say his Prayers.

h Hieros. in the place above.

II. They prayed also by themselves in the streets. h R. Jochanan said, I saw R. Jannai standing and praying in the streets of Tsippor, and going four cubits, and then praying the Additionary Prayer.

Two things especially acted their hypocrisie here.

1. That so much provision is made concerning reciting the Phylacteries, and the Prayers added (that it might be done within the just time) that whersoever a man had been, when the set time was come, he presently betakes himself to prayers: A Workman, or he that is upon the top of a Tree, he that rides on an Ass must immediately come down, and say his prayers, &c. These are the very instances that the Canonists give, which with more of them you may find in the Tract i Beracoth. Hence therefore those vainglorious hypocrites got an occasion of boasting themselves. For the hour of the Phylacterical Prayers being come, their care and endeavour was, to be taken in the streets: whereby, the Canonical hour compelling them to their Prayers in that place, they might be the more seen by all persons, and that the ordinary people might admire and applaud both their Zeal and Religion. To which hypocritical pride they often added this also, that they used very long pauses, both before they began their Prayers, and after they had done

done them: ſo that very uſually for three hours together they were ſeen in a Praying habit and poſture. See the Babylonian Talmud. k So that the Canoniſts played the mad men with ſome reaſon, when they allowed the ſpace from the riſing of the morning to the third hour of the day for the Phylacterical Prayers, becauſe thoſe three-hour praying Men ſcarcely diſpatched them within leſs ſpace, pauſing one hour before they began Prayer, and as much after they were ended.

k Beracoth, fol. 30. 2. & 32. 2.

2. They addicted themſelves to Ejaculations, Prayers, and Bleſſings, upon the ſight almoſt of any thing, meeting them either in the ſtreets or in the way. When one ſaw a place, wherein ſome miracle was done for Iſrael: a place, from whence Idolatry was rooted out: or a place, where an Idol now was, a ſhort Prayer was to be uſed. When any ſaw a Blackamoor, a Dwarf, a crooked, a maimed perſon, &c. they were to Bleſs. Let him that ſees a fair tree, or a beautiful face bleſs thus, Bleſſed be He, who created the beauty of the creature, &c.

VERS. VII.

SEE the Civil Battology (vain repetitions) of the Heathen in their ſupplications. *m Let the Parricide be dragged: We beſeech thee, Auguſtus, let the Parricide be dragged. This is the thing we aſk, let the Parricide be dragged. Hear us, Ceſar. Let the falſe Accuſers be condemned to the Lion. Hear us, Ceſar. Let the falſe accuſers be condemned to the Lion. Thoſe words ſavour of vain repetition in prayer, 1 King. XVIII. 26. The Prieſts of Baal called upon the name of Baal from morning to noon, ſaying, O Baal, hear us.

After the ſame manner almoſt, as the Heathen mixed Βαττολογίας, vain repetitions, in their prayers, did the Jews in their Συνωνυμίας, uſing divers words importing the ſame thing: not repeating indeed the ſame things, as they, in the ſame words, but ſpeaking the ſame thing in varied phraſes; which appears ſufficiently to him that reads their Liturgies through, as well the more antient, as thoſe of a later date. And certainly the ſin is equally the ſame in uſing different words for the ſame thing, as in a vain repetition of the ſame words; if ſo be, there were the ſame deceit and hypocriſie in both; in words only multiplied, but the heart abſent.

And in this matter the Jew ſinned little leſs than the Heathen. For this was an Axiom with them, כל המרבה בתפלה נענה o Every one that multiplies prayer is heard. Chriſt therefore does not ſo much condemn the bare ſaying over again the ſame petitions, either in the ſame words, or in words of the ſame import, (for he himſelf ſpake the ſame things thrice, when he prayed in the garden) as a falſe opinion, as if there were ſome power, or zeal, or piety in ſuch kind of repetitions; and that they would be ſooner heard, and more prevail with God. While he ſtrikes the Heathen, he ſtrikes the Jews alſo, who laboured under the ſame frenzy: but there is mention only of the Heathen, partly, becauſe this favoured rather of Heathen blindneſs, than of the profeſſion of true Religion, which the Jews boaſted of; partly, and eſpecially, that he might not condemn the publick prayers of the Jews without cauſe, in which they ſinned not at all by uſing Synonymous expreſſions, if it were done out of a pious and ſincere heart.

VERS. IX.

Οὕτως οὖν προσεύχεσθε ὑμεῖς, Πάτερ ἡμῶν, &c. After this manner therefore pray ye, Our Father, &c.

SOME things, which ſeem more difficult about this divine form of Prayer, will perhaps paſs into a ſofter ſenſe, if certain things very uſual in the Jewiſh Church and Nation, be obſerved, to which the Apoſtles could not but have regard, when they clearly acknowledged here the higheſt conformity with them. For that it was cuſtomary with our Saviour for the moſt part to conform himſelf to the Church and Nation, both in Religious and Civil matters, ſo they were lawful, moſt evidently appears alſo in this form of prayer. Let theſe things therefore be obſerved:

I. That the ſtated prayers of the Jews, daily to be ſaid at that time, when Chriſt preſcribed this form to his Diſciples, were eighteen in number, or in a quantity equalling it. Of this number of their prayers the Gemariſts of both Talmuds treat at large p. Whom conſult.

p Hieroſ. Taanith, fol. 65. 3. hab. Beracoth, fol. 28. 2.

Whether they were reduced to the preciſe number of eighteen, in the order that they afterwards appeared in, while Chriſt was upon earth, ſome ſcruple ariſeth from ſome things things, which are ſaid by the Babylonian Talmudiſts in the place alledged: but it might be plainly proved, if there were need, that little or indeed nothing at all wanted of the quantity and bulk of ſuch a number. תנו רבנן שמעון הפקולי הסדיר יח" ברכות לפני רג" וגו' The Rabbins have a tradition, ſay they, that Simeon Pekoli reduced into order the eighteen prayers according to their courſe, before Rabban Gamaliel in Jafne. Rabban Gamaliel ſaid to the wiſe men, Is there any that knows to compoſe a prayer againſt the Sadducees? Samuel the little ſtood forth, and conſtituted one, &c. That Rabban Gamaliel, which is here ſpoke of, was Paul's Maſter. For although Rabban Gamaliel (who was commonly ſtiled Jafnenſis of Jafne) was the Nephew of Paul's Maſter, Gamaliel, and this thing is mentioned to be done in Jafne, yet Paul's Maſter alſo lived in Jafne, and that this was he, of whom is the ſtory before us, ſufficiently appears hence, becauſe his buſineſs is with Samuel the Little, who certainly died before the deſtruction of the City.

Under Gamaliel the Elder therefore were thoſe daily prayers reduced firſt into that order, wherein they were received by the following ages. Which however it was done after the death of our Saviour, in regard of their reducing into order, yet ſo many there were in daily uſe at that time when he converſed on earth. Now he condemned not thoſe prayers altogether, nor eſteemed them of no account; yea, on the contrary, he joined himſelf to the publick Liturgy in the Synagogues, and in the Temple: and when he delivereth this form to his Diſciples, he extinguiſheth not other forms.

II. When all could not readily repeat by heart thoſe numerous prayers, they were reduced into a brief Summary, in which the marrow of them all was comprized; and that proviſion was made for the memory, that they ſhould have a ſhort Epitome of thoſe prayers, whom the weakneſs of their memory, or ſometime the unavoidable neceſſity of buſineſs, permitted not to repeat a longer prayer, or to be at leiſure to do it. This Summary they called מעין a Fountain. Rabban Gamaliel ſaith, Let every one pray the eighteen prayers every day. R. Joſhua ſaith, יתפלל מעין יח' Let him pray the מעין the Summary of thoſe eighteen. But R. Akibah ſaith, אם תפלתו שגורה בפיו מתפלל יח" ואם לוא מעין יח" If Prayer be free in his mouth, let him pray the eighteen; but if not, let him pray the Summary of thoſe eighteen q. That our Saviour comprized the ſum of all prayers in this form, is known to all Chriſtians; and it is confeſſed, that ſuch is the perfection of this form, that it is the Epitome of all things to be prayed for, as the Decalogue is the Epitome of all things to be practiced.

q Bab. Beracoth, in the place above.

III. It was very uſual with the Doctors of the Jews,

1. To compoſe forms of ſhort prayers, and to deliver them to their Scholars (which is aſſerted alſo of John, Luk. XI. 1.) whereof you will find ſome examples, and they not a few, in the Babylonian Gemara, in the Tract Beracoth, and elſewhere. Not that by thoſe forms they baniſhed or deſtroyed the ſet and accuſtomed prayers of the Nation; but to ſuperadd their own to them, and to ſuit them to proper and ſpecial occaſions.

2. To the ſtated prayers, and others framed by themſelves, it was very uſual to add ſome ſhort prayer over and above, which one may not amiſs call the concluding prayer. Take theſe Examples of theſe prayers: ר' א' בתר דמסיים צלותיה אמר הכי R. Eliezar, when he had finiſhed his prayers, was wont to ſay thus, Let it be thy good pleaſure, O Lord, that love and brotherhood dwell in our portion, &c. R. Jochanan when he had finiſhed his prayers was wont to ſay thus, Let it be thy good pleaſure, O Lord, to take notice of our reproach, and to look upon our miſeries, &c. In like manner,

1. Our Saviour, while he delivers this form to his Diſciples, he does not weaken the ſet forms of the Church; nor does he forbid his Diſciples not to uſe private prayers: but he delivers this moſt exact Summary of all Prayers, to be added over and above to our prayers, his moſt perfect to our moſt imperfect.

2. The Apoſtles, ſufficiently accuſtomed to the manners of the Nation, could not judg otherwiſe of this form. In interpreting very many phraſes and hiſtories of the New Teſtament, it is not ſo much worth, what we think of them from notions of our own feigned upon I know not what grounds, as in what ſenſe theſe things were underſtood by the hearers and lookers on, according to the uſual cuſtom, and vulgar dialect of the Nation. Some enquire by what authority we do ſubjoyn or ſuperadd the Lords prayer to ours, and fain arguments to the contrary, out of their own brain. But I ask, whether it was poſſible, that the Apoſtles and Diſciples, who from their very Cradles had known and ſeen ſuch forms inſtituted for common uſe, and added moreover to the ſet-prayers and others, ſhould judg otherwiſe of this form given by our Lord; which bore ſo great conformity with thoſe, and with the moſt received rite and cuſtom of the Nation?

IV. That Church held it for a juſt Canon, and that indeed no diſcommendable one neither לעולם לישתף אניש נפשי בחדי ציבורא r He that prays ought always, when he prays, to joyn with the Church. Which is not ſtrictly to be underſtood only of his preſence in the Synagogue, (that is elſewhere, and otherwiſe commanded many times over) but whereſoever in the world he be placed, yea when he is moſt alone, that he ſay his prayers in the plural number:

number: for thus the Gloſs explains it, אל יתפלל חק" בלשון יחיד אלא בלשון רבים Let none pray the ſhort prayer (that is, one different from the ſet prayers) in the ſingular number, but in the plural. In which number our Saviour teacheth us alſo to pray in this form; and that upon very good reaſon, when in whatſoever ſolitude, or diſtance we are, yet we ought to acknowledg our ſelves joyned with the Church, and to pray for her happineſs as well as for our own.

Πάτερ ἡμῶν, ὁ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς. Our Father, which art in Heaven:

I. This Epithete of God was very well known among the Jews, and very uſual with them.

: אבינו שבשמים s Our Father which art in Heaven, deal ſo with us, as thou haſt promiſed by the Prophets. And in another place, this is thrice recited, t Whom have we, whereon to relye, על אבינו שבשמים beſides our Father which is in Heaven? u Bleſſed are ye, O Iſraelites; who cleanſeth you? your Father, who is in Heaven. x Ye gave not to your Father, who is in Heaven, but to me the Prieſt.

s Maimon. in Tephilloth. t Sotah, cap. 9. hal. 15. u Joma, cap. 8. hal. 9. x Hieroſ. Mazſeroth, fol. 50. 3.

II. But in what ſenſe did the Jews call God their Father in Heaven, when they were altogether ignorant of the Doctrine and myſtery of Adoption, beſides that Adoption, whereby God had adopted them for a peculiar people? I anſwer, for that very cauſe they were taught by God himſelf, ſo to call him, Exod IV. 22. Deut. XXXII. 6, &c. Nor was there any among them, who not only might not do this, but alſo who ought not to do it. While the Heathen ſaid to his Idol, Thou art my Father, Jer. II. 27. the Iſraelite was bound to ſay, Our Father which art in Heaven, Eſ. LXIII. 16. & LXIV. 8.

III. When Chriſt uſeth this manner of ſpeech ſo very well known to the Nation, does he not uſe it in a ſenſe that was known to the Nation alſo? Let them anſwer, who would have the Lords Prayer to be prayed and ſaid by none, but by thoſe who are indeed Believers, and who have partook of true adoption. In what ſenſe was our Saviour, when he ſpake theſe words, underſtood of the Hearers? They were throughly inſtructed from their Cradles to call God the Father in Heaven: they neither hear Chriſt changing the Phraſe, nor curtailing any thing from the latitude of the known and uſed ſenſe. Therefore let them tell me, Did not Peter, John, and the reſt of the Apoſtles think, that it was as lawful for all Chriſtians to ſay to God, Our Father, which art in Heaven, as it was lawful for all Jews? They called God Father, becauſe he had called them into the profeſſion of him, becauſe he took care of them, and inſtructed them, &c. And what I beſeech you, hinders, but all Chriſtians, obtaining the ſame priviledges, may honour God with the ſame compellation? There is nothing in the words of Chriſt, that hinders, and there is ſomewhat in the very phraſe that permits it.

VERS. X.

VERS. XIII.

Ῥῦσαι ἡμᾶς ἀπὸ τοῦ πονηροῦ. Deliver us from Evil.

a Berac. f. 16. 2. a Rabbi (Judah) was wont thus to pray, let it be thy good pleasure, to deliver us from impudent men, and impudence, from an evil man, and from an evil chance, from an evil affection, from an evil companion, from an evil neighbour, from Satan the destroyer, from a hard judgment, and from a hard adversary, &c.

Ὅτι σοῦ ἐστιν ἡ βασιλεία, &c. For thine is the Kingdom, &c.

I. In the publick Service in the Temple, the commemoration of the Kingdom of God was the Response, instead of which the people answered Amen, when the Priests ended their prayers. For תני לא היו עונין אמן בבית המקדש The Tradition is, that they answered not Amen in the house of the Sanctuary. What said they then? ברוך שם כבוד מלכותו לעולם ועד Blessed be the Name of the Glory of his Kingdom for ever. b Hence in the Tract Joma (where the Rubrick of the day of Expiation is) after various prayers recited, which on that day the High Priest makes, is added, And the people answered, Blessed be the Name of the Glory of his Kingdom for ever and ever. See the c places of that Tract noted in the margent. There a short prayer of the High Priest is mentioned, in which he thus concludes, Be ye clean before Jehovah; and these words are added, But the Priests, and people standing in the Court, when they heard, שם המפורש the Name Jehovah pronounced out in its syllables, adoring, and falling prostrate upon their face, they said, ברוך וכו' Blessed be the Name of the Glory of his Kingdom for ever and ever. See also the Tract d Taanith, where a reason is given of this doxology in the Gloss there.

b Hieros. Berac. fol. 13. 3.

d Bab. Taanith, fol. 16. 2.

II. This also they pronounced softly, and in a gentle whisper, while they were reciting the Phylacteries. e It is said of the men of Jericho, that כורכין את שמע They folded up the Schmah. It is disputed what this means, And R. Judah saith, that they made some small pause, after the reciting of this period, Hear O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord: but they said not, Blessed be the Name of the Glory of his Kingdom for ever and ever. But by what reason do we say so? R. Simeon ben Levi explains the mystery, who saith, Our father Jacob called his sons and said, Gather your selves together, and I will declare unto you. It was in his mind to reveal to them the end of days, and the Holy Spirit departed from him: he said therefore, Perhaps there is something prophane in my bed (which God forbid) as it was to Abraham, from whom proceeded Ismael, and to Isaac, from whom proceeded Esau. His sons said unto him, Hear, Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord; as in thy heart, there is but one, so in our hearts, there is but one. At that time our father Jacob began, and said, בשכם"לו Blessed be the Name of the Glory of his Kingdom for ever and ever. The Rabbins said, What shall we do? Shall we say this Doxology? Our Master Moses said it not. Shall we not say it? Our Father Jacob said it. Therefore it was appointed to say it softly, &c.

e Bab. Pesachin, fol. 56. 1.

You see how very publick the use of this Doxology was, and how very private too. Being a Response it was pronounced in the Temple by all with a loud voice; being an ejaculation it was spoken in the Phylacterical prayers by every single man in a very low voice. And you see how great an agreement it hath with the Conclusion of the Lords prayer, For thine is the Kingdom, &c.

III. As they answered, Amen, not at all in the publick prayers in the Temple, so they seldom joyned it to the end of their private prayers. In the Synagogue indeed the people answered Amen to the prayers made by the Minister: and also, at home, when the Master of the family blessed, or prayed: but seldom, or indeed never any one praying privately joyned this to the end of his prayers.

And now, to apply those things which have been said, to the matter under our hands, consider the following things.

1. That this prayer was twice delivered by our Saviour: first, in this Sermon in the Mount, when he was not asked; and afterwards, when he was asked, almost half a year after, Luke XI.

2. That this Conclusion is added in St. Matthew, For thine is the Kingdom, &c. But in St. Luke it is not. In St. Matthew is added moreover the word Amen, but in St. Luke it is wanting. Upon the whole matter therefore we infer,

I. That Christ, in exhibiting this form of prayer, followed a very usual rite and custom of the Nation.

II. That the Disciples also, receiving this form delivered to them, could not but receive it according to the manner and sense of the Nation, usual in such cases: since he introduced no exception at all from that general rule and custom.

III. That

III. That he ſcarcely could ſignifie his mind, that this prayer ſhould be univerſally and conſtantly uſed, by any marks or ſigns more clear, than thoſe which he made uſe of. For,

Firſt, He commanded all without any exception, or diſtinction, After this manner pray ye; And, When ye pray, ſay, Our Father, &c.

Secondly, As, according to the ordinary cuſtom of the Nation. Forms of prayer, delivered by the Maſters to their Scholars, were to be uſed, and were uſed, by them all indifferently, and without diſtinction of perſons; ſo alſo He neither ſuggeſted any thing concerning this his prayer, either beſides the common cuſtom, or contrary to it.

Thirdly, The Form it ſelf carries along with it certain characters both of its publick and private, and conſtant uſe. It may certainly with good reaſon be aſked, why, ſince Chriſt had delivered this prayer in ſuch plain words in his Sermon upon the Mount, this command moreover being added, After this manner pray ye, it was deſired again, that he would teach them to pray? What had they forgotten that prayer that was given them there? Were they ignorant, that it was given them for a form of prayer, and ſo to be uſed? But this ſeems rather the cauſe, why they deſired a ſecond time a form of prayer, namely, becauſe they might reckon that firſt for a publick form of prayer, ſince this might eaſily be evinced, both by the addition of the Concluſion ſo like the publick Reſponſe in the Temple, and eſpecially by the addition of Amen uſed only in publick Aſſemblies: therefore they beſeech him again, that he would teach them to pray privately; and he repeats the ſame form, but omits the Concluſion, and Amen, which ſavoured of publick uſe. Therefore you have in the Concluſion a ſign of the publick uſe, by the agreement of it to the Reſponſe in the Temple, and of the private, by the agreement of it to the ejaculation in the Phylacterical prayers. A ſign of the publick uſe was in the addition of Amen; a ſign of the private uſe was in the abſence of it: a ſign of both in the conformity of the whole to the cuſtom of the Nation. Chriſt taught his Diſciples to pray, as John had taught his, Luke XI. 1. John taught his, as the Maſters among the Jews had theirs, by yeilding them a form to be uſed by all theirs daily, verbatim, and in terms.

Σὺ δὲ νηστεύων ἄλειψαί σου τὴν κεφαλὴν, &c. But thou when thou faſteſt, anoint thy head, &c.

FOR thoſe that faſted neither anointed themſelves, nor waſhed. k 'On the day of 'expiation it was forbidden to eat, to drink, to waſh, to anoint themſelves, to put 'on their Sandals, to lye with their wives. But the King, and the Bride may waſh their 'faces, and a midwife may put on her Sandals. See the l Babylonian Gemara here. See alſo the Babylonian Talmud in the Tract m Taanith, concerning other faſts, and the faſts of private men.

They were wont to anoint their bodies and heads upon a threefold reaſon.

I. לתענוג 'For finer dreſs. n Anointing is permitted to be uſed on the Sabbath, whe- 'ther it be for ornament, or not for ornament. On the day of expiation both are for- 'bidden. On the ninth day of the month Ab, and in the publick faſts, anointing for 'dreſs is forbid, anointing not for dreſs is allowed.

II. סיכה שלא לתענוג They anointed themſelves often, not for exceſs, or bravery, or delight, but for the healing of ſome diſeaſe, or for the health of the body. חושש את ראשו או שעלו בו חטטין סך שמן: o He that is troubled with the head ach, or on whom ſcabs ariſe, let him anoint himſelf with oyl.

p 'A Tradition of the Rabbins. It is forbidden (in Faſts) to waſh a part of the body, 'as well as the whole body. But if it be defiled with dirt or dung, let him waſh accor- 'ding to the cuſtom, and let him not be troubled. It is alſo forbidden to anoint a part of 'the body, as well as the whole body: but if a man be ſick, or if a ſcab ariſe on his head, 'let him anoint himſelf according to the cuſtom, &c.

III. They uſed ſometimes a ſuperſtitious anointing of the head, and nothing differing from Magical anointing. והוא שהוא לוחש נותן שמן על גבי ראשו q He that mutters, let him put oyl upon his head, and mutter. This muttering is to be underſtood concerning the manner of ſaying a charm upon the wound, or ſome place of the body, that feels pain; לוחש על המכה Muttering over the wound, of which mention is made in the Tract r Sanhedrin. Mention alſo is made in the Tract s Schabbath now alledged, that ſome uſed this inchanting muttering in the Name of Jeſus. One being ſick, a certain perſon came to him, and muttered upon him in the Name of Jeſus of Pandira, and he was healed. And a little after, *R. But how infinitely better is it to joyn the pious prayers of the Elders of the Church to the anointing of the ſick?

VERS. XXII.

Ἐὰν ὁ ὀφθαλμός σου ἁπλοῦς ᾖ. If thine eye be ſingle.

VERS. XXIII.

Ἐὰν ὁ ὀφθαλμός σου πονηρὸς ᾖ. If thine eye be evil.

THAT the buſineſs here is about a covetous, or a not covetous mind, may be gathered,

I. From the context on either hand: for ver. 20, & 21. the diſcourſe is concerning treaſures either earthly or heavenly, and ver. 24. concerning ſerving either God, or Mammon.

II. From a very uſual manner of ſpeech of the Nation. For a good eye to the Jews is the ſame with a bountiful mind, and an evil eye is the ſame with a covetous mind. t This is the meaſure of the Truma, (or, of the oblation yielded to the Prieſts) עין יפה א' מארבעים A good eye yieldeth one out of forty: that is, the fortieth part. *The School of Shammai ſaith, one out of thirty. Hence covetouſneſs is called ἐπιθυμία τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν, the luſt of the eyes, 1 Joh. II. 16. Therefore our Saviour ſhews here, with how great darkneſs the mind is clouded and dimmed by covetouſneſs, and too much care of worldly things.

Ὡς ἐξουσίαν ἔχων, καὶ οὐκ ὡς οἱ γραμματεῖς. As one having authority, and not as the Scribes.

The Scribes borrowed credit to their doctrine from Traditions, and the Fathers of them: and no Sermon of any Scribe had any authority, or value without תנו רבנין The Rabbins have a Tradition, or חכמים אומרים The Wiſe men ſay, or ſome Traditional Oracle of that nature. Hillel the great taught truly, and as the tradition was concerning a certain thing, p But, although he diſcourſed of that matter all day long, לא קבלו ממנו They received not his doctrin, until he ſaid at laſt, ſo I heard from Shemaia and Abtalion.

p Hieroſ. Peſahim, fol. 33. 1.

CHAP. VIII.

VERS. II.

Δύνασαί με καθαρίσαι. Thou canſt make me clean.

THE doctrine in the law concerning Leproſy paints out very well the doctrine of ſin.

I. It teacheth that no creature is ſo unclean by a touch, as man. Yea, it may with good reaſon be asked, whether any creature, while it lived, was unclean to the touch, beſide man. That is often repeated in the Talmudiſts, That he that takes a worm in his hand, all the Waters of Jordan cannot waſh him from his uncleanneſs, (that is, while the worm is as yet in his hand, or the Worm being caſt away, not until the time appointed for for ſuch purification be expired) But whether it is to be underſtood of a living or dead worm, it is doubted not without cauſe, ſince the Law, treating of this matter, ſpeaketh only of thoſe things that dyed of themſelves. See Levit. XI. ver. 31. Whoſoever ſhall touch them, when they be dead, &c. and ver. 32. Upon whatſoever any of them, when they are dead, ſhall fall, &c. But whether he ſpeaks of a living worm, or a dead, uncleanneſs followed by the touch of it for that day only: For, he ſhall be unclean (ſaith the Law) until the Evening: but the carkas of a man being touched, a weeks uncleanneſs followed. See Num. XIX.

II. Among all the uncleanneſſes of men, Leproſie was the greateſt, in as much as other uncleanneſſes ſeparated the unclean perſon, or rendred him unclean, for a day, or a week, or a month, but the leproſy perhaps for ever.

III. When the Leper was purified, the leproſy was not healed: but the poiſon of the diſeaſe being evaporated, and the danger of the contagion gone, the Leper was reſtored to the publick congregation. Gehazi the Servant of Eliſha was adjudged to perpetual leproſy; and yet he was cleanſed, and converſed with the King, 2 King. VIII. 5. cleanſed, not healed. Thus under Juſtification, and ſanctification, there remain ſtill the ſeeds and filth of ſin.

IV. He that was full of the leproſy, was pronounced clean; he that was otherwiſe, was not. Levit. XIII. 12. If the leproſie ſhall cover the whole body from head to foot, thou ſhalt pronounce him clean, &c. A law certainly to be wondred at! Is he not clean, till the whole body be infected and covered with the leproſy? Nor ſhalt thou, O ſinner, be made clean without the like condition. Either acknowledg thy ſelf all over leprous, or thou ſhall not be cleanſed.

VERS. III.

Ἥψατο αὐτοῦ ὁ Ἰησοῦς. Jeſus touched him.

IT was indeed a wonder, that, when the leproſie was a creeping infection, the Prieſt, when he judged of it, was not hurt with the infection. It cannot be paſſed over without obſervation, that Aaron, being bound under the ſame guilt with Miriam, bore not the ſame puniſhment: for ſhe was touched with leproſie, he not: Num. XII. And alſo that Uzziah ſhould be confuted concerning his incroaching upon the Prieſthood no other way, then by the plague of leproſie. In him God would magnifie the Prieſthood, that was to judg of the leproſie; and he would ſhew the other was no Prieſt by his being toucht with the leproſie. It can ſcarcely be denied indeed, that the Prieſts ſometimes might be toucht with that plague, but certainly they catched not the contagion, while they were doing their office in judging of it. This is a noble doctrine of our high Prieſt, the Judge and Phiſician of our leproſie, while he remains wholly untouched by it. How much does he ſurpaſs that miracle of the Levitical Prieſthood! They were not touched by the contagion, when they touched the leprous perſon; He by his touch heals him that hath the infection.

VERS. IV.

Ὕπαγε, σεαυτὸν δεῖξον τῷ ἱερεῖ, &c. Go, ſhew thy ſelf to the Prieſt, &c.

I. OUR Saviour would not have the extraordinary manner, whereby he was healed, diſcovered to the Prieſt, that he might pay the ordinary duty of his cleanſing. And ſurely it deſerves no ſlight conſideration, that he ſends him to the Prieſt. However now the Prieſthood was too too degenerate both from its inſtitution, and its office, yet he would reſerve to it its priviledges, while he would reſerve the Prieſthood its ſelf. Corruption indeed defiles a divine inſtitution, but extinguiſhes it not.

II. Thoſe things, which at that time were to be done in cleanſing of the leproſie, according to the Rubric were theſe. Let him bring three beaſts: that is, a ſacrifice for ſin, [חטאת] a ſacrifice for tranſgreſſion [אשם] and a burnt offering. But a poor man brought a ſacrifice for ſin of birds, and a burnt offering of birds. He ſtands by the ſacrifice for tranſgreſſion, and laies both his hands upon it, and ſlays it: and two Prieſts receive the blood, the one in a veſſel, the other in his hand. He who receives the blood in his hand, goes to the Leper in the chamber of the Lepers (this was in the corner of the Court of the Women looking North-weſt) He placeth him in the gate of Nicanor (the Eaſt gate of the Court of Iſrael) he ſtretcheth forth his head within the Court, and puts blood upon the loweſt part of his ear: He ſtretcheth out his hand alſo within the Court, and he puts blood upon his thumb, and his foot, and he puts blood alſo upon his great toe, &c. And the other adds oyl to the ſame members in the ſame place, &c. The reaſon, why with his his neck held out he ſo thruſt forth his head and ears into the Court, you may learn from the Gloſſer. The gate of Nicanor, ſaith he, was between the Court of the Women and the Court of Iſrael: but now it was not lawful for any to enter into the Court of Iſrael, for whom there was not a perfect expiation. And on the contrary it was not lawful to carry the blood of the ſacrifice for tranſgreſſion out of the Court. Hence was that invention, that the Leper that was to be cleanſed ſhould ſtand without the Court, and yet his ears, his thumbs and his toes, to which the blood was to be applyed, were within the Court. We omit ſaying more, it is enough to have produced theſe things whence it may be obſerved what things they were, that our Saviour ſent back this healed perſon to do.

The cure was done in Galilee, and thence he is ſent away to Jeruſalem, ſilence and ſacrifice are enjoyned him. Ὅρα μηδενὶ εἴπῃς, &c. See, thou tell no man, &c. ἀλλ' ὕπαγε σεαυτὸν δεῖξον, &c. And offer the gift, &c. And why all theſe things?

Firſt, Chriſt makes trial of the obedience, and gratitude of him that was cured, laying upon him the charge of a ſacrifice, and the labour of a journy.

Secondly, He would have him reſtored to the communion of the Church (from which his leproſy had ſeparated him) after the wonted, and inſtituted manner. He provides that he himſelf give no ſcandal, and the perſon healed make no Schiſm: and however both his words and geſtures ſufficiently argue that he believed in Chriſt, yet Chriſt will by no means draw him from the communion of the Church, but reſtore him to it. Hence is that command of his to him, See thou tell no man, but offer a gift for a teſtimony to them: that is, "Do not boaſt the extraordinary manner of thy heal-"ing, think not thy ſelf freed from the bond of the Law, in caſe of a leper, becauſe "of it; thruſt not thy ſelf into the communion of the Church, before the rites of ad-"miſſion be duly performed: but however you have no buſineſs with the Prieſt in re-"ference to the purification and cleanſing, go to the Prieſt nevertheleſs, and offer the "gift that is due, for a teſtimony, that you are again reſtored into communion with "them. This caution of our Saviour hath the ſame tendency with that, Mat. XVII. 27. That we be not an offence to them, &c.

VERS. VI.

Βέβληται. Lyeth.

מוטל: Layd forth. Thus מת מוטל A dead man layd forth in order to his being carryed out. The power and dominion of the diſeaſe is ſo expreſſed. The weak perſon lyeth ſo, that he is moved only by others, he cannot move himſelf; but is as it were next door to carrying out. So ver. 14. of Peters Mother-in-Law, ὃς βέβληται καὶ πυρέσσει, was layd, and ſick of a fever,

VERS. XII.

Ἐκβληθήσονται εἰς τὸ σκότος τὸ ἐξώτερον. Shall be caſt out into outer darkneſs.

HEAR, O Jew, thy moſt ſad, but certainly moſt juſt, Judgment concerning thy eternal blindneſs and perdition. For whatſoever Τὸ σκότος τὸ ἐξώτερον, Outer darkneſs, ſignifies, whether the darkneſs of the Heathen (for to the Jewes the Heathen were οἱ ἔξω, Thoſe that are without) or that darkneſs beyond that, Eſ. IX. 1. or both; our Saviour clearly intimates the Jews were thither to be baniſhed, but that they were to be recalled again, he intimates not any where: if ſo be by υἱὸς βασιλείας, children of the Kingdome, they be to be underſtood: which who is there, that denyes?

VERS. XVI.

Ὀψίας δὲ γενομένης. When the Even was come.

MARK adds, Ὅτε ἤδη ὁ ἥλιος, When the ſun was now ſet, and the Sabbath was now gone.

I. The Sabbath was ended by the Jews at the Supper, or the Feaſt. In which they uſed a candle (as they did upon the entrance of the Sabbath) and wine, and ſpices; and the form of bleſſing over a cup of wine, and then over the candle, and then over the ſpices. Does the Sabbath end, when he is now in the middle of his Feaſt? He puts an end to his eating, waſhes his hands, and over a cup of wine he gives thanks for his food, and afterwards over that cup he uſeth the form of prayer in the ſeparation of the Sabbath from from a common day: If he be now drinking, when the Sabbath goes out, he ceaſeth from drinking, and recites the form of ſeparation, and then returns to his drinking. a a Maimon. Schab. cap. 29.

II. The proper limits of the Sabbath were from Sunſet to Sunſet. This is ſufficiently intimated by St. Mark, when he ſaith, that Ὀψὲ δὲ ἐγένετο ὁ ἥλιος, When the Sun was now ſet, they brought the ſick to be healed; which they held unlawful to do, while the Sun was yet going down, and the Sabbath yet preſent.

The Talmudic Canons give a caution of ſome works, that they be not begun on the day before the Sabbath, if they may not be ended and finiſhed מבעוד יום While it is yet day: that is, (as they explain it) עם השמש While the ſun is not yet ſet. b המדליק צריך להדליק מבעוד יום He that lights a (Sabbath) candle, let him light it, while it is yet day, before Sun-ſet. c On the Sabbath Eve it is permitted to work, until Sun-ſet. d The entrance of the Sabbath was at ſun-ſet, and ſo was the end of it.

III. After the ſetting of Sun, a certain ſpace was called בין השמשות Bin Haſhmaſhuth: concerning which theſe things are diſputed; e What is בין השמשות R. Tanchuma ſaith, It is like a drop of blood, put upon the very edge of a ſword, which divides its ſelf every where. What is בין השמשות It is from that time, when the Sun ſets, whilſt one may walk half a mile. R. Joſi ſaith, בה׳ is like a wink of the eye, &c. בין השמשות properly ſignifies, Between the Suns: and the manner of ſpeech ſeems to be drawn thence, that there are ſaid to be two שקיעות Sunſets. Concerning which read the Gloſſer upon f Maimonides. Where thus alſo Maimonides himſelf. From the time that the Sun ſets, till the three middle ſtars appear, it is called בין שמשות Between the Suns: and it is a doubt whether that time be part of the day or of the night. However they every where judge of it להחמיר to render the office heavy. Therefore between that time they do not light the Sabbatical candle: and whoſoever ſhall do any ſervile work on the Sabbath Eve, and in the going out of the Sabbath, is bound to offer a ſacrifice for ſin. So alſo the Jeruſalem Talmudiſts in the place laſt cited. Does one Star appear? Certainly as yet it is day. Do two? It is doubted, whether it be day. Do three? It is night without doubt. And after a line. On the Sabbath Eve, if any work after one ſtar ſeen, he is clear: if after two, he is bound to a ſacrifice for a tranſgreſſion; if after three, he is bound to a ſacrifice for ſin. Likewiſe in the going out of the Sabbath, if he do any work after one ſtar is ſeen, he is bound to a ſacrifice for ſin; if after two, to a ſacrifice for tranſgreſſion: if after three, he is clear.

f In Schab. cap. 5.

Hence you may ſee, at what time they brought perſons here to Chriſt to be healed, namely in the going out of the Sabbath; if ſo be, they took care of the Canonical hour of the Nation, which is not to be doubted of.

VERS. XVII.

Αὐτὸς τὰς ἀσθενείας ἡμῶν ἔλαβε. Himſelf took our infirmities.

DIVERS g names of the Meſſias are produced by the Talmudiſts; among others חיוורא דבי רבי שמו: The Rabbins ſay, His name is, The Leper of the houſe of Rabbi: as it is ſaid, Certainly he bare our infirmities, &c. And a little after, Rabh ſaith, If Meſſias be among the living, Rabbenu Haccodeſh is He. The Gloſs is, If Meſſias be of them, that are now alive, certainly our holy Rabbi is he, as being one that carries infirmities, &c. R. Judah, whom they called the Holy, underwent very many ſickneſſes (of whom, and of his ſickneſſes you have the ſtory in the Talmud, h Thirteen years Rabbi laboured under the pain of the teeth, &c.) Becauſe of which, there were ſome, who were pleaſed to account him for the Meſſias; becauſe, according to the Prophets, Meſſias ſhould be A man of Sorrows: and yet they look for him coming in pomp.

h Hieroſ. Kilaim, fol. 32. 1.

This allegation of Matthew may ſeem ſome what unſuitable, and different from the ſenſe of the Prophet. For Eſay ſpeaks of the Meſſias carrying our infirmities in himſelf, but Matthew ſpeaks concerning him healing them in others: Eſay of the diſeaſes of the Soul, (ſee 1 Pet. II. 24.) Matthew of the diſeaſes of the body. But in this ſenſe both agree very well, that Chriſts buſineſs was with our infirmities and ſorrows, and he was able to manage that buſineſs: his part was to carry and bear them, and in him was ſtrength and power to carry and bear them. In this ſenſe therefore is Matthew to be underſtood; He healed the Demoniacs, and all diſeaſed perſons with his word, that that of Eſay might be fulfilled, He it is, who is able to bear and carry our ſorrows and ſickneſſes. And ſo, whether you apply the words to the diſeaſes of the mind, or the body, a plain ſenſe by an equal eaſineſs does ariſe. The ſenſe of Eſaiah reacheth indeed further; namely, That Meſſias himſelf ſhall be a man of ſorrows, &c. but not excluding that which we have mentioned, which Matthew very fitly retains, as excellently well ſuiting with his caſe.

VERS. XXVIII.

Εἰς τὴν χώραν τῶν Γεργεσηνῶν. Into the Country of the Gergeſens.

IN Mark and Luke it is τῶν Γαδαρηνῶν, of the Gadarens, both very properly: for it was the City Gadara, whence the Country had its name: there was alſo Gergaſa, a City or a Town within that Country: which, whether it bare its name from the ancient Canaanite ſtock of the Gergaſities, or from the word גרגשתא Garguſhta, which ſignifies Clay or Dirt we leave to the more learned to diſcuſs. Lutetia a word of ſuch a nature may be brought for an Example.

VERS. XXVIII.

Δύο δαιμονιζόμενοι ἐκ τῶν μνημείων ἐρχόμενοι, &c. Two poſſeſſed with Devils coming out of the Tombs, &c.

i Hieroſ. Trumoth, fol. 40. 2. i THESE are the ſigns of a שוטה Mad man: He goes out in the night, and lodges among the Sepulchres, and teareth his garments, and tramples upon whatſoever is given him. R. Honna ſaith, But is he only mad in whom all theſe ſigns are? I ſay, Not. He that goes out in the night, קניטריכום is, Chondriacus, Hypondriacal. He that lodgeth anights among the Tombs מקטר לשדים burns incenſe to Devils. He that tears his garments בוליקוס is Melancholic, And he that tramples under his feet whatſoever is given him is קוּרדיקוס Cardiacus, troubled in mind. And a little after פעמים שוטה פעמים חלום One while he is mad, another while he is well: while he is mad, he is to be eſteemed for a mad man in reſpect of all his actions: while he is well, he is to be eſteemed for one that is his own man in all reſpects. See what we ſay, at Ch. XVII. ver. 15.

VERS. XXX.

Ἀγέλη χοίρων πολλῶν βοσκομένη. An heard of many ſwine feeding.

WERE theſe Gadarens Jews or Heathens?

k Hieroſ. Shekalim, fol. 47. 3. I. It was a matter of infamy for a Jew to keep ſwine. k R. Jonah had a very red face; which a certain woman ſeeing ſaid thus, סבא סבא Seignior, Seignior, either you are a Winebibber, or a Uſurer, or a keeper of hogs.

l Maimon. in Nizke Mammon. cap. 5. m Bava Kama, cap. 7. hal. 7. II. It was forbidden by the Canon. l The Wiſe men forbad to keep hogs any where, and a dog, unleſs he were chained. Hogs, upon a twofold account. 1. By reaſon of the hurt and dammage that they would bring to other mens feilds. Generally m the keeping of ſmaller cattle was forbid in the Land of Iſrael, (among which you may very well reckon hogs even in the firſt place.) And the reaſon is given by the Gemariſts, That they break not into other mens grounds. 2. The feeding of hogs is more particularly forbidden for their uncleanneſs. For אסור לעשות סחורה בכל דבריס טמאים It is forbidden to trade in any thing that is unclean. n n Gloſſ. in Kama, in the place above. o Maimon. in the place before. III. Yea, it was forbid under a curſe. The oWiſe men ſay, Curſed is he that keeps dogs and ſwine, becauſe from them ariſeth much harm.

p Bab. Kama, fol. 82. 2. p Let no man keep hogs any where. The Rabbins deliver, When the Aſmonean family were in hoſtility among themſelves, Hyrcanus was beſeiged within Jeruſalem, and Ariſtobulus was without. The beſieged ſent mony in a box let down by a rope, and they which were without, bought with it the daily ſacrifices, which were drawn up by thoſe that were within. Among the beſeigers there was one, ſkilled in the Greek learning, who ſaid, As long as they thus perform the ſervice of the Temple, they will not be delivered into your hands. The next day therefore they let down their mony, and theſe ſent them back a hog. When the hog was drawing up and came to the middle of the Wall, he fixed his hoofs to the Wall, and the Land of Iſrael was ſhaken, &c. From that time they ſaid, Curſed be he who keeps hogs, and curſed be he who teacheth his ſon the Wiſdom of the Greeks. This Story is cited in q Menacoth. q fol. 64. 2.

r Bab. Taanith, fol. 21. 2. Therefore you will wonder, and not without cauſe, at that which is related in their Talmud. r They ſaid ſometimes to Rabh Judah, There is a plague among the Swine. He therefore appoynted a faſt. What? Is a Jew concerned for a plague among ſwine? But the reaſon is added, For Rabh Judah thought, that a ſtroak laid upon one kind of cattle, would invade all.

You may not therefore improperly gueſs, that theſe hogs belonged not to the Jews, but to the Heathen dwelling among the Gadaren Jews; for ſuch a mixture was very uſual in the Cities and Countries of the land of Iſrael. Which we obſerve elſewhere of the Town Suſitha or Hippo, but ſome ſmall diſtance from Gadara.

Or

Or if you grant that they were Jews, their manners will make that opinion probable, as being perſons, whoſe higheſt Law the purſe and profit was wont to be. Since Brawn, and Swines fleſh were of ſo great account with the Romans and other Heathens, there is no reaſon to believe that a Jew was held ſo ſtraightly by his Canons, as to value them before his own profit, when there was hope of gain.

CHAP. IX.

VERS. IX.

Εἶδεν ἄνθρωπον καθήμενον ἐπὶ τὸ τελώνιον, Ματθαῖον λεγόμενον. He ſaw a man ſitting at the receit of cuſtom, called Matthew.

FIVE Diſciples of Chriſt are mentioned by the Talmudiſts, among whom Matthew ſeems to be named. a The Rabbins deliver, There were five Diſciples of Jeſus, מתאי נקאי נצר ובוני ותודה Mathai, Nakai, Nezer, & Boni, & Thodah. Theſe they relate were led out, and killed. See the place. Perhaps five are only mentioned by them, becauſe five of the Diſciples were chiefly employed among the Jews in Judea: namely, Matthew, who wrote his Goſpel there, Peter, James, John, and Judas. a T. B. Sanh. fol. 43. 1.

Matthew ſeems to have ſet in the Cuſtom-houſe of Capernaum near the Sea, to gather ſome certain tole or rate of thoſe that ſailed over. See Mark, Ch. II. 13, 14.

b He that produceth paper (on the Sabbath) in which a Publicans note is writ, and he that produceth a Publicans note, is guilty. The Gloſs is, When any pays tribute to the Lord of the River, or when he excuſes him his tribute, he certifies the Publican, by a note, or ſome Bill of free commerce, that he hath remitted him his duty: and it was cuſtomary, in it to write two Letters greater than ours. See alſo the Gemara there. b Schabb. cap. 8. hal. 2.

VERS. XIV.

Ἡμεῖς, καὶ οἱ Φαρισαῖοι νηστεύομεν πολλά. We, and the Phariſees faſt oft.

MOnſters, rather than ſtories are related of the Phariſees faſts.

I. It is known to all from Luk. XVIII. 12. that they were wont to faſt twice every week. The riſe of which cuſtom you may fetch from this Tradition. c Ezra decreed ten decrees. He appointed the publick reading of the Law the ſecond and fifth days of the week: and again on the Sabbath at the Mincha, (or, Evening-ſervice) he inſtituted the Seſſion of the Judges in Cities, on the ſecond and fifth days of the week, &c. Of this matter diſcourſe is had elſewhere. f If you ask the reaſon, why the decree was made concerning the ſecond, and fifth days, &c. We muſt anſwer, ſaith the Gloſs, from that which is ſaid in Midras concerning Moſes: namely, that he went up into the Mount to receive the ſecond Tables on the fifth day of the week, and came down, God being now appeaſed, the ſecond day. When therefore that aſcent and deſcent was a time of grace, they ſo determined of the ſecond and fifth day. And therefore they were wont to faſt alſo on the ſecond and fifth day. c Bab. Bava Kama, fol. 82. 1. f Hieroſ. in Megil. fol. 75. 1.

II. It was not ſeldom that they enjoyned themſelves faſts, for this end, to have lucky dreams; or to attain the interpretation of ſome dream, or to turn away the ill import of a dream. Hence was that expreſſion very uſual, תענית חלום A Faſt for a Dream; and it was a common Proverb,: יפה תענית לחלום כאש לנעורת A Faſt is as fit for a Dream, as fire is for flax. For this cauſe it was allowed to faſt on the Sabbath, which otherwiſe was forbidden. See the Babylonian Talmud, in the Tract g Schabbath: where alſo we meet with the ſtory of R. Joſhua Bar Rabh Idai, who on the Sabbath was ſplendidly received by R. Iſhai, but would not eat, becauſe he was בתענית חלום under a faſt for a Dream. g Fol. 11. 1.

III. They faſted often to obtain their deſires. h R Joſi faſted eighty faſts, and R. Simeon Ben Lachiſh three hundred, for this end, that they might ſee R Chajah Rubbah. And often to avert threatning evils. Of which Faſts the Tract Taanith does largely treat. Let one example be enough inſtead of many; and that is of R. Zadok, who for forty years, that is, from the time when the gates of the Temple opened of their own accord, (a ſign of the deſtruction coming) did ſo mortifie himſelf with faſtings, that he was commonly called חלשא Chalſha, that is, The Weak. And when the City was now deſtroyed, and he ſaw it was in vain to faſt any longer, he uſed the Phyſicians of Titus to reſtore his health, which through too much abſtinence had been waſted. h Hieroſ. Kiddu. fol. 32. 2.

בני חופה The ſons of the Bride chamber, an ordinary phraſe: there is no need to relate their mirth in the time of the Nuptials: I will relate that only, and it is enough, which is ſpoke by the Gloſſer, נהגו לשבר וכוכית בנישואין i They were wont to break glaſs Veſſels in Weddings. And that for this reaſon, that they might by this action ſet bounds to their mirth, leſt they ſhould run out into too much exceſs. The Gemara produceth one or two ſtories there. Mar the ſon of Rabbena made wedding feaſts for his ſon, and invited the Rabbins: and when he ſaw, that their mirth exceeded its bounds אייתי כסא דמוקרא He brought forth a glaſs cup, worth four hundred Zuzees, and brake it before them; whereupon they became ſad. The like ſtory is alſo related of Rabh Iſhai. And the reaſon of this action is given, שאסור לאדם שימלא שחוק פיו בעהו"ז Becauſe it is forbidden a man, to fill his mouth with laughter in this World.

i In Bab. Berac. fol. 31. 1.

חופה, or the days of the Bride-chamber, to the ſons of the Bride-chamber, that is, to the friends and acquaintance, were ſeven: hence there is frequent mention of the ſeven days of the Marriage feaſt, but to the Bride the days of the Bride-chamber were thirty. It is forbidden to eat, drink, waſh, or anoint ones ſelf on the day of Expiation: והמלך וכלה ירחצו פניהם k But it is allowed a King, and a Bride to waſh their faces. For the Bride is to be made handſom, ſaith the Gloſs upon the place, that ſhe may be lovely to her husband. וכל "ל יום וכו' And all the thirty days of her bride-chamber ſhe is called The Bride.

k In Joma, cap. 8. hal. 1.

It is worth meditation, how the Diſciples, when Chriſt was with them, ſuffered no perſecution at all; but when he was abſent, all manner of perſecution overtook them.

VERS. XVIII.

Ἰδοὺ, ἄρχων. Behold, a Ruler.

Diſtinction l is made between חזן הכנסת The Biſhop of the Congregation, and ראש הכנסת The Head of the Congregation. For while the diſcourſe is there of the High Prieſt, reading a certain portion of the Law on the day of expiation, agreeable to the day, Thus it is ſaid, חזן הכנסת נוטל ספר תורה ונותנו לראש הכנסת The Biſhop of the Synagogue takes the book of the Law, and gives it ἀρχισυναγώγῳ, to the Ruler of the Synagogue. Where the Gloſs thus, בית הכנסת The Synagogue was in the Mount of the Temple, near the Court (which is worthy to be marked.) חזן הכנסת שמש The Chazan, or Biſhop, or Overſeer, of the Synagogue, is the Miniſter: and the Ruler of the Synagogue is he, by whoſe command the affairs of the Synagogue are appointed; namely, who ſhall read the Prophet, who ſhall recite the Phylacteries, who ſhall paſs before the Ark.

l In Joma, cap. 7. hal. 1.

Of this order and function was Jairus, in the Synagogue of Capernaum: So that the word Ἄρχων, Ruler, being underſtood in this ſenſe, admits of little obſcurity, although εἷς, One, or τὶς, a certain, be not there: he ſpeaking theſe words, Behold, the Ruler of that Synagogue, &c.

VERS. XX.

Αἱμορροοῦσα. Diſeaſed with an iſſue of blood.

זבה Zeba, in Talmudick Language. The Talmudick Tract זבין may ſerve for a Commentary here.

These things were acted in the ſtreets of Capernaum: for there Matthew lived, and there Jairus alſo: and in his paſſage from the houſe of the one to the houſe of the other, this diſeaſed Woman met him. Weigh the ſtory well, and you will eaſily judge, what is to be thought of that ſtory, concerning the ſtatues of this Woman, and Chriſt, ſet up at Paneas, or Ceſarea Philippi: of which m Euſebius ſpeaks.

VERS. XXIII.

Ἰδὼν τοὺς αὐλητάς. Seeing the Minſtrels.

Dion Caſſius n concerning the funeral of Auguſtus. Ὁ μὲν δὴ Τιβέριος, καὶ ὁ Δρῦσος ὁ υἱὸς αὐτοῦ, φαιὰν τὴν ἀγοραῖον τρόπον πεποιημένην εἶχον. Καὶ τῷ μὲν λιβανωτὸς οὐ παρῆν. τοῖς δὲ αὐλητῇ οὐκ ἐχρήσαντο. Tiberius, and Druſus his ſon, ſacrificed frankinſence themſelves; but they uſed not a Minſtrel.

n Lib. 56.

אפילו עני וכו' o Even the poorest among the Israelites (his wife being dead) will afford her not less, than two pipes, and one woman to make lamentation. o Chetubb. cap. 4. hal. 6.

חלילים לכלה או למת : p He that hireth an Ass's keeper, or a Wagoner, to bring pipes, either for a Bride, or for a dead person: that is, either for a wedding, or a funeral. p Bava Metzia, cap 6. hal. 1.

q The husband is bound to bury his dead wife, and to make lamentations and mournings for her, according to the custom of all Countries. And also the very poorest among the Israelites, will afford her not less, than two pipes, and one lamenting woman: but if he be rich, let all things be done according to his quality. q Maimon. in אישות c. 14.

r If an Idolater brings pipes on the Sabbath, (to the house where any one is dead) an Israelite shall not lament at those pipes. r Schab. cap. 23. hal 4.

This multitude was got together on a sudden: Neighbours for civility sake, Minstrels perhaps for the sake of gain; both the more officious in this business, as we may guess, by how much the Parents of the deceased Maid were of more eminent quality. She died, when Christ together with Jairus was going forward to the house (Mark V. 35.) and yet, behold what a solemn meeting and concourse there was to lament her. There were two things, which in such cases afforded an occasion to much company to assemble themselves to the house of mourning.

First, Some, as it is very probable, resorted thither to eat and drink: for at such a time some banqueting was used. s A Tradition. They drink ten cups in the house of mourning: two before meat, five while they are eating, and three after meat. And a little after: When Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel died, they added three more. But when the Sanhedrin saw, that hence they became drunk, they made a decree against this. s Hieros. Bezacoth, fol. 6. 1.

Secondly, Others came to perform their duty of charity, and neighbourhood: for they accounted it the highest instance of respect, to lament the dead, to prepare things for the burial, to take care of the funeral, to put themselves under the Bier, and to contribute other things needful for that solemnity with all diligence. Hence they appropriated גמילות חסדים The rendring, (or bestowing) of mercies to this Duty, in a peculiar sense, above all other demonstrations of charity. מית חר מנן ולא אתנמל חסד t One of the Disciples of the Wise men died, and Mercy was not yeilded him: that is, No care was taken of his funeral. But a certain Publican died, ובטילה כל מדינתא מיגמליה חסד And the whole City left off work, to yeild him Mercy. t Hieros. Sanhedr. fol. 23 3.

Mourning for the dead is distinguished by the Jewish Schools into אנינות Aninuth, and אבלות Ebluth. אנינות was on the day of the funeral only, or until the Corps was carried out; and then began אבלות and lasted for thirty days. Of these mournings take these few passages. u He that hath his dead laid out before him, and it is not in his power to bury him, useth not אנינות Aninuth, that kind of mourning. For example: If any dye in prison, and the Magistrate, or Governour of the place, permits not his burial, he that is near of kin to him, is not bound to that mourning, which is called אנינות, &c. And the reason is given a little after; namely, because he, who hath his dead laid out before him, or upon whom the care of his burial lays, is forbidden to eat flesh, to drink Wine, to eat with others, to eat in the same house, (under which Prohibition thou, Jairus, now art) and he was free from reciting his Phylacteries, and from prayer, and from all such like precepts of the Law. מיד חל עליו אבלות משיצא מפתח ביתו But when the funeral is carried out of the door of the house, then presently begins the mourning called אבלות From thence he is free from the foregoing prohibitions, and now is subject to others. Hence u Hieros. Beracoth, fol. 18. 1.

1. בפיית המטה The bending down of the beds, of which the Talmudists speak very much. From what time, say they, are the beds bended? From that time, the dead body is carried out of the gate of the Court of the house; or, as R. Josua, From that time, as גולל the Grave stone is stopped up. (For so it is commonly rendred, but the Glos some where, the Cover, or, the uppermost board, of the Bier.) What this Bending of the beds should mean, you may observe from those things which are spoken in the Tract Beracoth. x Whence is the bending of the beds? R. Crispa, in the name of R. Jochanan, saith, From thence because it is said, וישבו אתו לארץ And they sat with him to the Earth (Job II. 13.) It is not said, Upon the Earth, but לארץ To the Earth: it denotes a thing not far from the Earth. Hence it is that they sat upon beds bended down. x Hieros. Berac. fol. 6. 1.

2 אבל כל ל' ימים אסור לעשו מלאכה He that laments, all the thirty days is forbid to do his work; and so his sons, and his daughters, and servants, and maids, and cattel, &c. y y Massechet Semach cap. 5.

These things concerned him, to whom the dead person did belong His friends and neighbours did their parts also, both in mourning, and in care of the funeral, employing themselves in that affair by an officious diligence, both out of duty and friendship. כל הרואה מת ואינו מלוהו Whosoever sees a dead corps, say they, and does not accommodate, (or, accompany) him to his burial, is guilty of that, which is said, He that mocketh the poor, reproacheth his Maker, &c. But now, say they, no man is so poor, as the dead man, z &c. z Bab. Berac. in the place above.

VERS.

VERS. XXIV.

Οὐκ ἀπέθανε τὸ κοράσιον, ἀλλὰ καθεύδει. The Maid is not dead, but ſleepeth.

IT was very ordinary among them to expreſs the death of any one by the word דמך which properly ſignifies to to ſleep. כד דמך When N. ſlept, that is, when he died, a phraſe to be met with hundreds of times in the Talmudiſts. And this whole company would ſay דמכת בת יאיר The Daughter of Jairus ſleeps, that is, ſhe is dead. Therefore it is worthy conſidering, What form of ſpeech Chriſt here uſed. The Syriac hath לא מיתת אלא דמכא She is not dead, but aſleep.

VERS. XXXIII.

Οὐδέποτε ἐφάνη οὕτως ἐν τῷ Ἰσραήλ. It was never ſo ſeen in Iſrael.

THESE words ſeem to refer not to that peculiar miracle only, that was then done, but to all his miracles. Conſider how many were done in that one day, yea in the afternoon. Chriſt dines at Capernaum with Matthew: having dined, the importunity of Jairus calls him away: going with Jairus, the Woman with the iſſue of blood meets him, and is healed: coming to Jairus his houſe he raiſeth his dead daughter: returning to his own houſe (for he had a dwelling at Capernaum) two blind men meet him in the ſtreets, cry out Meſſias after him, follow him home, and they are cured. As they were going out of the houſe, a dumb Demoniac enters, and is healed. The multitude therefore could not but cry out with very good reaſon, Never had any ſuch thing appeared in Iſrael.

VERS. I.

Καὶ προσκαλεσάμενος τοὺς δώδεκα μαθητάς. And when he had called to him the twelve Diſciples.

CONcerning the number of twelve, correſponding to the Tribes of Iſrael, See Luke XXII. 30. Rev. XXI. 12, 14. Theſe were called the Twelve Apoſtles, שלוחי, or שליחי in Talmudick Language, under which title Moſes and Aaron are marked by the Chaldee Paraphraſt, Jer. II. 1. A word that does not barely ſpeak a Meſſenger, but ſuch a Meſſenger as repreſents the Perſon of him that ſends him. For שלוחו של אדם כמותו a The Apoſtle of any one is as he himſelf, from whom he is deputed. See the fortieth verſe of this Chapter. If you read over the Tract of Maimonides here, intitled שלוחין ושותפין Meſſengers, and Companions, perhaps you will not repent your labour.

a Bab. Ditrac. fol. 34. 2.

For theſe ends were theſe twelve choſen, as the Evangeliſts relate.

I. That they might be with him, eye-witneſſes of his Works, and Students of his Doctrine. For they did not preſently betake themſelves to Preach, from the time they were firſt admitted Diſciples, no, nor from the time they were firſt choſen; but they ſat a long while at the feet of their Maſter, and imbibed from his mouth that Doctrine which they were to Preach.

II. That they might be his Prophets, both to Preach, and to do Miracles. Thence it comes to paſs, that the gift of Miracles, which of a long time had ceaſed, is now reſtored to them.

The ſeven Shepherds, and eight principal men, Mich. V. 5. are the Diſciples of the Meſſias, according to Kimchi.

Ἐξουσίαν πνευμάτων ἀκαθάρτων. Power of unclean ſpirits.

That is, Over, or, Upon unclean ſpirits: which therefore are called רוחות טומאה Unclean ſpirits, that by a clearer Antitheſis they might be oppoſed to רוח הקדש The Holy Spirit, the Spirit of Purity.

More particularly רוח הטומאה The unclean ſpirit, Zech. XIII. 2. And Πνεύματα ἀκάθαρτα, Unclean ſpirits, Revel. XVI. 13, 14. are Diabolical ſpirits in falſe Prophets, deceiving Pythons.

By a more particular name yet, according to the Talmudiſts concerning this buſineſs: b There ſhall not be with thee, דורש אל המתים A Necromancer, (Deut. XVIII. 11.) He is דורש אל המתים A Necromancer, who mortifies himſelf with hunger, and goes and lodges a nights among the burying places for that end, that רוח טומאה the unclean ſpirit may dwell upon him. When R. Akibah read that verſe he wept. Does the unclean ſpirit, ſaith he, come upon him that faſts for that very end, that the unclean ſpirit may come upon him? Much more would the Holy Spirit come upon him that faſts for that end, that the Holy Spirit might come upon him. But what ſhall I do? When our ſins have brought that on us, which is ſaid, Your ſins ſeparate between you, and your God. Where the Gloſs thus; שתשרה רוח טומאה עליו That the unclean ſpirit dwell upon him: that is, that the Demon of the Burial-place may love him, and may help him in his inchantments. b Bab. Sanhedr. fol. 65. 2.

When I conſider with my ſelf that numberleſs number of Demoniacs, which the Evangeliſts mention, the like to which no Hiſtory affords, and the Old Teſtament produceth hardly one or two examples; I cannot but ſuſpect theſe two things eſpecially for the cauſe of it.

Firſt, That the Jewiſh people, now arriving to the very top of impiety, now alſo arrived to the very top of thoſe curſes, which are recited, Levit. XXVI. and Deut. XXVIII.

Secondly, That the Nation beyond meaſure addicted to Magical arts, did even affect Devils, and invited them to dwell with them.

VERS. II.

Σίμων. Simon.

סימון Simon, is a name very uſual among the Talmudiſts for שמעון Simeon. By which name our Apoſtle is alſo called, Act. XV. 14.

Let theſe words be taken notice of. סימון מר"ר א' בעא ר' c R. Eliezer enquired of R. Simon concerning a certain thing, but he anſwered him not. He enquired of R. Joſhua ben Levi, and he anſwered. R. Eliezer was enraged, that ר' שמעון R. Simeon anſwered him not. c Hieroſ. Schab. fol. 11. 2.

Πέτρος. Peter.

Chriſt changed the names of three Diſciples, with whom he held more inward familiarity; Simon, James, and John. Simon was called by him Peter, or Petroſus, that is, referring to a Rock, becauſe he ſhould contribute not only very much aſſiſtance to the Church that was to be built on a Rock, but the very firſt aſſiſtance, when, the keies being committed to him, he opened the door of faith to Cornelius, and ſo firſt let in the Goſpel among the Gentiles. Of which matter afterwards.

Ἀνδρέας. Andrew.

This alſo was no ſtrange Name among the Talmudiſts. אנדריי בר חננא d Andrew bar Chinna. d Hieroſ. Megill. cap. 4.

VERS. III.

Βαρθολομαῖος. Bartholomew.

COmpare the order, wherein the Diſciples are called, Joh. I. with the order, wherein they are for the moſt part reckoned, and you will find Bartholomew falling in at the ſame place with Nathaniel: ſo that one may think he was the ſame with him: called Nathaniel by his own name, and Bartholomew by his fathers בר תלמי that is, The ſon of Talmai. For the Greek Interpreters render Talmai Θολμὶ Tolmi, 2 Sam. XIII. 37. And Θολομαῖος, Tholomæus occurs in e Joſephus. e Antiq. lib. 20. cap. 1.

Ἀλφαίου

Ἀλφαίῳ. Of Alpheus.

The Name חלפי occurs alſo in the Talmudiſts: a word that may admit a double pronuntiation; namely either to ſound Alphai, or Cleophi. Hence that Alpheus, who was the Father of four Apoſtles, is alſo called Cleopas, Luke XXIV. which ſufficiently appears from hence, that ſhe who is called Mary, the Mother of James the leſs, and Joſes, Mark XV. 40. by John is called, Mary the wife of Cleopas, Joh. XIX. 25.

f Maſſech Derech Arets, c. 1 g Hieroſ. Kilaim. fol. 27 2. & Schabb. fol. 5. 2. See Juchaſin, fol. 105. 2. h Lib. 5. cap. 19 תראי Thaddai was a name known alſo to the Talmudiſts. יוסי תראי ר" f R. Joſe the ſon of Thaddeus. אלעזר בן תראי g Eliezer ben Thaddeus. It is a warping of the name Judas, that this Apoſtle might be the better diſtinguiſhed from Iſcariot. He was called Lebbeus, I ſuppoſe, from the Town Lebba, a Sea coaſt Town of Galilee: of which Pliny ſpeaks; h The Promontory Carmel, and in the Mountain a Town of the ſame name, heretofore called Ecbatana. Near by, Getta Lebba, &c.

VERS. IV.

Σίμων ὁ Καναναίτης. Simon the Cananite.

IN Luke, it is Zelotes. See who are called Ζηλωταί, Zelots, in Joſephus. Of whoſe Sect, if you ſhould ſay this Simon was before his Converſion, perhaps you would do him no more wrong, than you would do his brother Matthew, when you ſhould ſay that he was a Publican.

i Bab. Nedarim, fol 55. 2.

It may be enquired, whether this name was given him, while he was alive, or not till after his death. If while he was alive, one may not improperly derive it from סקורטיא Skortja, which is written alſo אסקורטיא i Iskortja. Where, while the diſcourſe is of a man vowing that he would not uſe this or that garment, we are taught theſe things, He that tyes himſelf by a vow of not uſing garments, may uſe ſackcloth, vailing cloth, hair cloth, &c. but he may not uſe פונדא ופסקיא ואסקורטיא וגו" Of which words the Gloſs writes thus; Theſe are garments, ſome of leather, and ſome of a certain kind of clothing. The Gemara aſketh, What is אסקורטיא Iſkortja? Bar bar Channah anſwered ביתונא דצלא A Tanners garment. The Gloſs is, A leathern Apron that Tanners put on over their cloths. So that Judas Iſcariot may perhaps ſignifie as much as Judas with the Apron. But now in ſuch Aprons they had purſes ſown, in which they were wont to carry their mony, as you may ſee in Aruch, in the words אפונדה & תרמיל which we ſhall alſo obſerve preſently. And hence it may be Judas had that title of the purſe bearer, as he was called Judas with the apron.

Or what if he uſed the art of a Tanner, before he was choſe into Diſcipleſhip? Certainly we read of one Simon a Tanner, Act. IX. 43. and that this Judas was the ſon of Simon, Joh. XIII. 26.

k Bab. Btrac. fol. 8. 1.

But if he were not branded with this title till after his death, I ſhould ſuppoſe it derived from אסכרא Iſcara. Which word what it ſignifies let the Gemariſts ſpeak: k Nine hundred and three kinds of death were created in the World, as it is ſaid, ולמות תוצאות (and the iſſues of death, Pſal. LXVIII. 20.) The word תוצאות Iſſues arithmetically ariſeth to that number. Among all thoſe kinds, אסכרא Iſcara is the roughеſt death, נשיקה is the eaſieſt. Where the Gloſs is, אסכרא אסטראנגולמנט בלוצו Iſcara in the mother Tongue is Strangulament. By Learned Men for the moſt part it is rendred Angina, The Quinſie. The Gemara ſets out the roughneſs of it by this ſimile אסכרא דמיא כחיורא וכו' l The Iſcara is like to branches of thorns in a fleece of Wool, which if a man ſhake violently behind, it is impoſſible but the wool will be pulled off by them. It is thus defined in the Gloſs, מתחיל במעים וגומר בגרון The Iſcara begins in the bowels, and ends in the throat. See the Gemara there.

When Judas therefore periſhed by a moſt miſerable ſtrangling, being ſtrangled by the Devil, (which we obſerve in its place) no wonder, if this infamous death be branded upon his Name, to be commonly ſtiled Judas Iſcariot, or that Judas, that periſhed מאסכרא by ſtrangling.

Ὁ καὶ παραδοὺς αὐτόν. Who also betrayed him.

Let that of Maimonides be obſerved: m It is forbidden, to betray an Iſraelite into the hands of the Heathen, either as to his perſon, or as to his goods, &c. And whoſoever ſhall betray an Iſraelite, ſhall have no part in the world to come. Peter ſpake agreeably to the opinion of the Nation, when he ſaid concerning Judas, He went unto his place, Act. I. 25. And ſo doth Baal Turim concerning Balaam; Balaam went to his place, Numb. XXIV. 25. that is, ſaith he, וזך לגהנום He went down to Hell. m In חובר ומזויל cap. 8.

VERS. V.

Εἰς πόλιν Σαμαρειτῶν μὴ εἰσέλθητε. Into any City of the Samaritans enter ye not.

OUR Saviour would have the Jews priviledges reſerved to them, until they alienated and loſt them by their own perverſneſs and ſins. Nor does he grant the preaching of the Goſpel to the Gentiles, or Samaritans, before it was offered to the Jewiſh Nation. The Samaritans vaunted themſelves ſons of the Patriach Jacob, Joh. IV. 12. (which indeed was not altogether diſtant from the truth,) they embraced alſo the law of Moſes, and being taught thence, expected the Meſſias, as well as the Jews; nevertheleſs Chriſt acknowledges them for his ſheep, no more than the Heathen themſelves.

I. Very many among them were ſprung indeed of the ſeed of Jacob, though now become Renegades and Apoſtates from the Jewiſh Faith and Nation, and hating them more than if they were Heathens, and more than they would do Heathens. Which alſo among other things may perhaps be obſerved in their very language. For read the Samaritan verſion of the Pentateuch, and if I miſtake not, you will obſerve, that the Samaritans, when, by reaſon of the neerneſs of the places, and the alliance of the Nations, they could not but uſe of the language of the Jews, yet uſed ſuch a variation and change of the Dialect, as if they ſcorned to ſpeak the ſame words that they did, and make the ſame language not the ſame.

II. In like manner they received the Moſaic law, but for the moſt part in ſo different a writing of the words, that they ſeem plainly to have propounded this to themſelves, that retaining indeed the law of Moſes, they would hold it under as much difference, from the Moſaic Text of the Jews, as ever they could, ſo that they kept ſomething to the ſenſe. n R. Eliezer ben R. Simeon ſaid, I ſaid to the Scribes of the Samaritans, Ye have falſified your Law, without any manner of profit accruing to you thereby. For ye have writ it in your Law, אצל אלוני מורה שכם Near the Oaken Groves of Moreh, which is Sichem, &c. (the word שכם is added.) Let the Samaritan text at Deut. XI. 30. be looked upon. n Hieroſ. Sotah, fol. 21. 3. & Bab. Sotah, fol. 33. 2.

III. However they pretended to ſtudy the religion of Moſes, yet in truth there was little or no difference between them and Idolaters, when they knew not what they worſhipped; which our Saviour objects againſt them, Joh. IV. 22. and had not only revolted, as Apoſtates, from the true religion of Moſes, but ſet themſelves againſt it with the greateſt hatred. Hence the Jewiſh Nation held them for Heathens, or for a people more execrable than the Heathens themſelves. A certain Rabbin thus reproaches their idolatry. o R. Iſmael ben R. Joſi went to Neapolis (that is, Sichem) the Samaritans came to him: to whom he ſpake thus, I ſee, that you adore not this Mountain, but the Idols which are under it: for it is written, Jacob hid the ſtrange Gods under the wood, which is neer Sichem. o Hieroſ. Avodah Zarah, fol. 44. 4.

p It is diſputed, whether a Cuthite ought to be reckoned for a Heathen? which is aſſerted by Rabbi, denyed by Simeon, but the concluſion indeed is ſufficiently for the Affirmative. p Hieroſ. Shekal. fol. 46. 2.

IV. The Metroprolis of the Samaritans laboured under a ſecond Apoſtacy, being brought to it by the deceit and witchcraft of Simon Magus, after the receiving of the Goſpel from the mouth of our Saviour himſelf. Compare Act. VIII. ver. 9. with Joh. IV. ver. 41.

From all theſe particulars, and with good reaſon for the thing it ſelf, and to preſerve the priviledges of the Jews ſafe, and that they might not otherwiſe prove an offence to that nation, the Samaritans are made parallel to the Heathen, and as diſtant as they, from partaking of the Goſpel.

VERS. IX.

Εἰς τὰς ζώνας ὑμῶν, &c. In your purses, &c.

THESE things which are forbidden the Disciples by our Saviour, were the ordinary provision of travailers; to which the more Religious added also the Book of the Law.

q Jevamoth, cap. 16 hal. ult. q Some Levites travailed to Zoar, the City of Palm trees: and when one of them fell sick by the way, they brought him to an Inn. Coming back they enquired of the Hostess concerning their companion. He is dead, said shee, and I have buried him. And a little after, הוציאה להם מקלו ותרמילו וספר תורה שהיה בידו: She brought forth to them his staff, and his purse, and the book of the Law, which was in his hand. So the Babylonian Mishnah: but the Jerusalem adds also shoes: and instead of that, which, in the Mishnah, is תרטילו His purse, in the Gemara is אפונדתו which was an inner garment with pockets to hold mony, and necessaries.

r Berac. cap. 9. hal. That also is worthy mention, r Let no man enter into the Mount of the Temple. לא במקלו ולא במנעלו ולא בפונדתו ולא באבק שעל רגליו with his staff, nor with his shoes, nor with his purse, nor with dust on his feet. Which words are thus rendred by the Gemara, Let no man enter into the mount of the Temple, neither with his staff in his hand, nor with his shoes upon his feet, nor with mony bound up in his linnen, nor with a purse hanging on his back. s Bab. Berac. fol 62. 2. לאחריו ופונדתו מופשלת Where the Gloss thus, פונדתו אויר חלול שנותנין בו מעות פונדא Ponditho is a hollow girdle (or, a hollow belt) in which they put up their mony. See the Aruch in אפונדה Aponda, and פונדה Ponda.

VERS. X.

Μὴ πήραν εἰς ὁδόν. Nor scrip for your journey.

THE Syriac Version reads ולא תרמלא No purse. The word תרמיל & תודמיל is very frequent in the Talmudists. t Rambam in Keilim, cap. 16. hal. 4. תורמיל t is a leather pouch, which shepherds hang about their necks, in which they put their Victuals. u Ibid. u R. Solomon saith almost the same thing, but that he appropriates it not to shepherds. The Aruch also in effect the same.

x Bab. Scabb. fol. 31. 1. x A Proselyte is brought in thus speaking, If an Israelite approaching to the holy things shall dye, how much more a stranger שבא במקלו ותרמילו Who comes with his staff and his pouch.

Μηδὲ δύο χιτῶνας. Nor two Coats.

A single Coat bespake a meaner condition, a double a more plentiful. Hence is that councel of the Baptist, Luk. III. 11. He that hath two coats, let him impart to him that hath none. It is disputed by the Babylonian Talmudists, y How far it is lawful to wash garments בחולו של מועד on the common days of a festival Week, and the conclusion is, It is lawful for him שאין לו אלא חליק אחד that hath one coat only, to wash it.

y Taanith, fol. fol. 29. 2. & Mood Katon, fol. 18. 1.

Μηδὲ ὑποδήματα. Neither Shoes.

That Shoes are here to be understood, and not Sandals, appears from Mark VI. 9. And that there was a difference between these sufficiently appears from these very places. The contrary to which I read in Beza not without wonder: But then from this place, saith he, as also from Acts XII. 8. it appears, that the Evangelists put no difference between ὑποδήματα shoes, and σανδάλια Sandals, as Erasmus hath rightly observed.

z Jevamoth, cap. 12. hal. 1. Let the Jewish Schools be heard in this matter. z The pulling off of the shoe (of the husbands brother, Deut. XXV. 9. is right: and of the Sandal, if it hath a heel, is right; but if not, it is not right.

a Hieros. ibi, fol 12. 1. a R. Josi saith, I went to Nisibin, and I saw there a certain Elder, and I said to him, Are you well acquainted with R. Judah ben Betyra? And he answered, I am a Mony-changer in my City; And he came to my table very often. I said, did you ever see him putting off the shoe? What did he put off, shoe, or sandal? He answered, O Rabbi, Are there Sandals among us? Whence therefore, say I, did R. Meir say, אין חולצין במנעל They do not put off the shoe. Rabbi Ba. Rabh Judah say, in the name of Rabh, If Elias should come, and should say, They pull off the shoe of the Husbands brother, let them hearken to him; if he should say, They pull off the sandal, let them not hearken to him. And yet for the most part the custom is to pull off the sandal. And custom prevails against Tradition. See more there, and in the Babylonian Tract b Jevamoth.

Shoes

Shoes were of more delicate uſe, Sandals were more ordinary, and more for ſervice, מנעל של עור רך A ſhoe was of ſofter leather, סנדל של עיר קשה A ſandal of harder, [c] &c. There were Sandals alſo, whoſe ſole, or lower part, was of wood, the upper of leather, and theſe were faſtened together by nayls. [d] There were ſome ſandals alſo made of ruſhes, or of the bark of palm-trees, [e] &c. Another difference alſo, between ſhoes and Sandals, is illuſtrated by a notable ſtory, in the tract Sabbath, in the place juſt now cited. In a certain time of perſecution, when ſome were hidden in a cave, they ſaid among themſelves; He that will enter, let him enter; for he will look about him before he enters that the enemies ſee him not: but let none go out: for perhaps the enemies will be near, whom he ſees not, when he goes out; and ſo all will be diſcovered. One of them, by chance, put on his ſandals the wrong way: for ſandals were open both ways, ſo that one might put in his foot either before or behind: but he putting on his, the wrong way, his footſtep, when he went out, ſeemed as if he went in; and ſo, their hiding place was diſcovered to the enemies, &c.

[c] Gloſs in Jevam. Bab. fol. 121. 1.

Mony therefore, in the girdle, and proviſion in the ſcrip, were forbidden the Diſciples by Chriſt, Firſt, that they might not be careful for temporal things, but reſign themſelves, wholly to the care of Chriſt. Secondly, they ought to live of the Goſpel, which he hints, in the laſt clauſe of this verſe, The workman is worthy of his hire.

That therefore, which he had ſaid before, Freely ye have received, freely give, forbad them to preach the Goſpel for gain: but he forbad not to take food, cloathing, and other neceſſaries, for the the preaching of the Goſpel..

Two coats, and ſhoes are forbidden them, that they might not at all affect pride or worldly pomp, or to make themſelves fine, but rather, that their habit and guiſe might beſpeak the greateſt humility.

VERS. XI.

Τίς ἐν αὐτῇ ἄξιος. Who, in it, is worthy?

In the Talmudick language מי וכדה Who deſerves.

VERS. XIV.

Ἐκτινάξατε τὸν κονιορτὸν τῶν ποδῶν. Shake off the duſt of your feet.

THE Schools of the Scribes taught, That the duſt of Heathen land defiled by the touch. [f] The duſt of Syria defiles, as well as the duſt of other Heathen Countries. [g] A Traditioner writer ſaith, They bring not herbs into the land of Iſrael, out of a Heathen land: But our Rabbins have permitted it. מאי ביניהו What difference is there between theſe? R. Jeremiah ſaith, חוששין לגושיהן איכא בניהו The care of their duſt is among them. The Gloſs is, They take care, leſt together with the herbs ſomething of the duſt of the Heathen land be brought, which defiles in the tent, and defiles the purity of the land of Iſrael.

[g] Bab. Sanhedr. fol. 12. 1.

[h] By reaſon of ſix doubts, they burn the Truma: The doubt of a field, in which heretofore might be a Sepulchre; The doubt of duſt brought from a Heathen land, &c. Where the Gloſs is this, Becauſe it may be doubted, of all the duſt of a Heathen land, whether it were not from the ſepulchre of the dead.

[h] Id. Schabb. fol. 15. 2.

[i] Rabbi ſaw a certain prieſt ſtanding in a part of the City Aco, which part was without the bounds of the land of Iſrael; He ſaid to him, is not that Heathen land, concerning which they have determined, that it is as unclean as a burying place. See Pisk. Toſaph. [k]

[i] Gloſs in Sanhedr. fol. 5. 2.
[k] In Sanhedr. cap. 1. artic. 30.

Therefore that Rite of ſhaking the duſt off the feet commanded the diſciples, ſpeaks thus much; "Whereſoever a City of Iſrael ſhall not receive you; when ye depart, by "ſhaking off the duſt from your feet, ſhew that ye eſteem that City, however a City "of Iſrael, for a Heathen, prophane, impure City, and as ſuch abhor it.

VERS. XVII.

Ἐν ταῖς συναγωγαῖς αὐτῶν μαστιγώσουσιν ὑμᾶς. They ſhall ſcourge you in their Synagogues.

BEZA, here, as he does, very often, when he cannot explain a place, ſuſpects it. For thus he writes, When I neither find Synagogues elſewhere, to have their names from houſes of Judgment, as the Hebrews ſpeak; nor that civil puniſhments were taken in Synagogues, I ſuſpect this place. But without any cauſe, for,

I. In every Synagogue, there was a Civil Triumvirate, that is, three Magiſtrates, who judged of matters in conteſt, ariſing within that Synagogue; which we have noted before.

II. מכות בשלשה Scourging was by that Beneh of Three. So that fivefold scourging of St. Paul (2 Cor. XI. 24.) was in the Synagogue, that is, בבר" של שלשה By that Bench of Three Magistrates, such as was in every Synagogue.

It is something obscure that is said Προσέχετε δὲ ἀπὸ τῶν ἀνθρώπων. But beware of men. Of whom else should they beware? But perhaps the word. Ἄνθρωποι, Men, may occur in that sense, as אנשי Men, in these forms of speech, אנשי כנסת הגדולה & אנשי בירת דין: that is, The Men of the great Assembly, and, The Men of the House of Judgment, &c. But we will not contend about it.

VERS. XXIII.

Οὐ μὴ τελέσητε τὰς πόλεις τοῦ Ἰσραήλ, &c. Ye shall not have gone over the Cities of Israel, &c.

YE shall not have travailed through the Cities of Israel, preaching the Gospel, before the Son of man is revealed, by his Resurrection, Rom. I. 4. Lay to this, Acts III. 19, 20. Repent ye therefore and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, ὅπως ἂν ἔλθωσι. That the times of refreshment may come (for ye expect refreshment and consolation, under the Messias.) And he may send Jesus Christ first preached to you. And ver. 26. To you first, God raising up his son, sent him to bless you, &c. The Epoche of the Messias is stated from the resurrection of Christ.

VERS. XXV.

Βεελζεβούλ. Beelzebub.

See Chapter XII. Verse 24.

VERS. XXVII.

Ὃ εἰς τὸ οὖς ἀκούετε. What ye hear in the ear.

WE have observed before, that allusion is here made to the manner of the Schools, where the Doctor whispered out of the Chair, into the ear of the Interpreter, and he, with a loud voice, repeated to the whole School, that which was spoken in the ear.

m Bab. Sanhedr. fol. 7. 2.

m They said to Judah bar Nachmani מתורגמניה דריש לקיש the interpreter of Resh Lachish קום עליה באמוראי do you Stand for his Expositor. The Gloss is, To tell out the Exposition to the Synagogue. מה שילחש לך which he shall whisper to you. We cannot here but repeat that which we produced before, החכם לוחש לו לשון עברית The Doctor whispered him in the ear, in Hebrew. And we cannot but suspect that that custom in the Church of Corinth, which the Apostle reproves, of speaking in the Synagogue in an unknown tongue, were some footsteps of this Custom.

n Bab. Joma, fol. 82. 2.

We read of whispering in the ear, done in another sense, namely to a certain woman with child, which longed for the perfumed flesh; n Therefore Rabbi said זילו לחושו לה Go whisper her, that it is the day of expiation לחושו לה ואילחישא They whispered to her, and she was whispered: that is, she was satisfied and at quiet.

Κηρύξατε ἐπὶ τῶν δωμάτων. Preach ye upon the house tops.

o Bab. Schabb. fol. 35. 2.

Perhaps allusion is made to that Custom, o when the Minister of the Synagogue, on the Sabbath Eve, sounded with a trumpet, six times, upon the roof of an exceeding high house, that thence, all might have notice of the coming in of the Sabbath. The first sound was, that they should cease from their works in the fields: The second, that they should cease from theirs in the City: The third, that they should light the Sabbath Candle, &c.

VERS. XXXIV.

Μὴ νομίσητε, ὅτι ἦλθον βαλεῖν εἰρήνην, &c. Think not that I am come to send peace, &c.

ALthough these words may be understood truly of the differences between believers and unbelievers, by reason of the Gospel, which all Interpreters observe; yet, they do properly and primarily point out, as it were with the finger those horrid slaughters ters and civil wars of the Jews among themſelves, which no Age ever ſaw, nor Story heard.

p R. Eliezar ſaith, The days of the Meſſias are forty years, as it is ſaid, Forty years was I provoked by this generation. And again, q R. Judah ſaith, In that generation, when the Son of David ſhall come, the Schools ſhall be Harlots, Galilee ſhall be laid waſt, Gablan ſhall be deſtroyed, and the Inhabitants of the Earth (the Gloſs is, the Sanhedrin) ſhall wander from City to City, and ſhall not obtain pity, the wiſdom of the Scribes ſhall ſtink, and they that fear to ſin ſhall be deſpiſed, and the faces of that generation ſhall be like the faces of Dogs, and Truth ſhall fail, &c. Run over the Hiſtory of theſe forty years, from the death of Chriſt, to the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, (as they are vulgarly computed,) and you will wonder to obſerve the Nation conſpiring to its own deſtruction, and rejoycing in the ſlaughters and ſpoils of one another, beyond all Example, and even to a Miracle. This Phrenſie certainly was ſent upon them from Heaven. And firſt, They are deſervedly become mad, who trode the Wiſdom of God, as much as they could, under their feet. And ſecondly, The blood of the Prophets and of Chriſt, bringing the good tidings of Peace, could not be Expiated, by a leſs Vengeance. 'Tell me, O Jew, whence is that Rage of your Nation, towards the deſtruction of one another, and thoſe Monſters of Madneſs beyond all Examples? Does the Nation rave for nothing, unto their own Ruine? Acknowledge the Divine Vengeance, in thy Madneſs, more than that which befel thee from Men. He that reckons up the differences, contentions and broyls of the Nation, after the diſſention betwixt the Phariſees and the Sadducees, will meet with no leſs between the Scholars of Shammai and Hillel, which encreaſed to that degree, that at laſt, it came to ſlaughter and blood.

r The Scholars of Shammai and Hillel came to the chamber of Chananiah ben Ezekiah ben Garon, to viſit him: That was a woful day, like the day wherein the golden Calf was made. The Scholars of Shammai ſtood below, and ſlew ſome of the Scholars of Hillel. The tradition is, that ſix of them went up, and the reſt ſtood there preſent with ſwords and ſpears.

r Hieroſ. in Schabb. fol. 3. 3.

It paſſed into a common Proverb, That Elias the Tiſhbite himſelf could not decide the Controverſies between the Scholars of Hillel and the Scholars of Shammai. They dream they were determined by a voice from Heaven, but certainly the quarels and bitterneſſes were not at all decided.

s Before the Bath Kol (in Jabneh) went forth, it was lawful equally to embrace, either the Decrees of the School of Hillel, or thoſe of the School of Shammai. At laſt the Bath Kol came forth, and ſpake thus; The words, both of the one party and the other, are the words of the living God, but the certain deciſion of the matter is according to the Decrees of the School of Hillel. And from thenceforth whoſoever ſhall tranſgreſs the Decrees of the School of Hillel, is guilty of death.

s Hieroſ. Beracoth, fol. 3. 2.

And thus the Controverſie was decided, but the hatreds and ſpites were not ſo ended. t I obſerve in the Jeruſalem Gemariſts, the word שמותי Shamothi, uſed for a Scholar of Shammai: which I almoſt ſuſpect, (from the affinity of the word שמתא Shammatha, which ſignifies Anathema) to be a word framed, by the Scholars of Hillel, in hate, ignominy and reproach of thoſe of Shammai. And when I read more than once of R. Tarphons being in danger by robbers, becauſe in ſome things he followed the Cuſtom and Manner of the School of Shammai, I cannot but ſuſpect ſnares were dayly laid by one another, and hoſtile Treacheries continually watching to do each other miſchief.

t See Trumoth. fol. 43. 3. Succah, 53. 1. Jom. Tobh. fol. 60. 3. &c.

u R. Tarphon ſaith, As I was travelling on the way, I went aſide, to recite the Phylacteries, according to the Rite of the School of Shammai, I was in danger of thieves. They ſay to him, and deſervedly too, becauſe thou haſt tranſgreſſed the words of the School of Hillel. This is wanting in the Jeruſalem Miſhnah.

u Bab. Beracoth, cap. 1. hal. 3.

x R. Tarphon went down to eat figs of his own, according to the School of Shammai. The enemies ſaw him, and kick'd againſt him: When he ſaw himſelf in danger, By your life, ſaith he, carry word unto the houſe of Tarphon, that Grave cloaths be made ready for him.

x Hieroſ. Shevith, fol. 35. 2.

Thus, as if they were ſtruck with a Phrenſie, from Heaven, the Doctors of the Nation rage one againſt another, and from their very Schools and Chairs flow not ſo much Doctrines, as Animoſities, Jarrings, Slaughters and Butcheries. To theſe may be added thoſe fearful Outrages, Spoils, Murders, Devaſtations of Robbers, Cut-throats, Zealots, and amazing Cruelties, beyond all Example. And if theſe things do not ſavour of the Divine wrath and vengeance, what ever did?

VERS. III.

Σὺ εἶ ὁ ἐρχόμενος, ἢ ἕτερον προσδοκῶμεν. Art thou He that ſhould come, or do we look for another?

THE Reaſon of the Meſſage of John to Chriſt is ſomething obſcure.

Firſt, That it was not, becauſe he knew not Chriſt, is without all Controverſie, when he had been fully inſtructed from Heaven concerning his perſon, when he was baptized, and when he had been again and again, moſt evidently atteſted before him, in thoſe words, This is the Lamb of God, &c.

Secondly, Nor was that Meſſage certainly, that the Diſciples of John might receive ſatisfaction about the perſon of Chriſt: for indeed, the Diſciples were moſt unworthy of ſuch a Maſter, if they ſhould not believe him, without further Argument, when he taught them concerning him.

Thirdly, John therefore ſeems, in this Matter, to reſpect his own impriſonment, and that his Queſtion, Art thou he which ſhould come? &c. tends to that. He had heard, that Miracles of all ſorts were done by him, that the blind received their ſight, the dead were raiſed, Devils were caſt out, &c. And why therefore, among all the reſt, is not John ſet at liberty? This Scruple, as it ſeems, ſtuck with the good man, why do all receive benefit and comfort from Chriſt, but only I? Perhaps, he laboured under that dim-ſightedneſs which the Diſciples of Chriſt and the whole Nation did, concerning his earthly Kingdom, Victories and Triumphs: from which, how diſtant, (alas!) was this, that his Fore-runner, and chief Miniſter ſhould lye in Chains? 'If thou art he, concerning whoſe 'Triumphing, the Prophets declare ſo much, why am I ſo long detained in priſon? Art 'thou he, or is another to be expected, from whom theſe things are to be looked for?

To Johns double Queſtion, Chriſt renders a double Solution.

Firſt, 'That I am He that ſhould come, theſe things which I do, bear witneſs, The blind receive their ſight, the lame walk, &c.

Secondly, 'As to the preſent caſe of John, who expects ſome body to come to deliver 'him out of bonds, and to free the people from the yoak of Men, Let him, ſaith he, ac-'quieſce in my Divine diſpenſation, and, Bleſſed is he whoſoever ſhall not be offended in me, 'however, all things are not according to his mind, which he hath expected to fall out, 'for his preſent and bodily advantage.

And the words of our Saviour, verſ. 11. ſeem to expreſs ſome ſecret reproof of this error in John, He that is leſs in the Kingdom of Heaven is greater than he. The vulgar Verſion renders well the word μικρότερος leſs, not leaſt: as if he ſhould ſay, "When 'ye went out, into the deſert, to John, ye neither looked for trifles, nor earthly pomp, '(neither a reed ſhaken with the wind, nor a man clothed in ſoft raiment) but ye looked in 'good earneſt, for a Prophet: and in that ye did very well, for he was the greateſt of 'Prophets, nay of Men, as to his Office, honoured in this, above all others, that he is 'the fore-runner of the Meſſias. Howbeit there are ſome, which indeed, in reſpect of 'Office, are much leſs than he, in the Kingdom of Heaven, or in the Common-wealth of 'Chriſt, who yet are greater than he in reſpect of the Knowledge of the ſtate and condi-'tion of his Kingdom. A compariſon certainly is not here made, either in reſpect of Office, or in reſpect of Dignity, or in reſpect of Holineſs, or in reſpect of Eternal Salvation: (For who, I pray, exceeded the Baptiſt, in all theſe, or in any of them) but in reſpect of clear and diſtinct knowledge, in judging of the Nature and Quality of the Kingdom of Heaven.

Let the auſterity of Johns life, and the very frequent Faſts which he enjoyned his Diſciples, be well conſidered, and what our Saviour ſaith of both, and you will eaſily believe, that John alſo according to the univerſal conceit of the Nation, expected temporal Redemption by the Meſſias, not ſo clearly diſtinguiſhing, concerning the Nature of the Kingdom, and Redemption of Chriſt. And you will the more eaſily give credit to this, when you ſhall have obſerved, how the Diſciples of Chriſt themſelves, that converſed a long time with him, were dim ſighted, likewiſe, in this very thing.

VERS. XII.

Ἡ βασιλεία τῶν οὐρανῶν βιάζεται. The Kingdom of Heaven ſuffereth violence.

AND theſe words alſo make for the praiſe of John. That he was a very eminent Prophet, and of no ordinary Miſſion or Authority, theſe things evince; That from his Preaching, the Kingdom of Heaven took its beginning, and it was ſo crouded into, by infinite multitudes, as if they would take, and ſeiſe upon the Kingdom by violence. The divine warmth of the people in betaking themſelves thither, by ſuch numberleſs crouds, and with ſo exceeding a zeal, ſufficiently argued the Divine worth both of the Teacher, and of his Doctrine.

VERS. XIV.

Εἰ θέλετε δέξασθαι, αὐτός ἐστιν Ἠλίας. If ye will receive it, This is Elias.

אין תקבלו If ye will receive it. The words hint ſome ſuſpicion, that they would not receive his Doctrine; which the obſtinate expectation of that Nation unto this very day, that Elias is perſonally to come, witneſſeth alſo. Upon what grounds ſome Chriſtians are of the ſame opinion, let themſelves look to it. See the Notes on Chap. XVII. verſ. 10.

VERS. XXI.

Ἐν Τύρῳ καὶ Σιδῶνι. In Tyre and Sidon.

HE compares the Cities of the Jews, with the Cities of the Canaanites, who were of a curſed original; but yet theſe Cities, of a curſed ſeed and name, if they had been partakers of the Miracles done among you, had not hardned themſelves to that degree of madneſs and obſtinacy, as you have done; but had turned from their Heatheniſm and Canaanitiſm, unto the Knowledge of the Goſpel; or at leaſt had betook themſelves to ſuch a repentance as would have prevented vengeance. So the repentance of the Ninivites, however it were not to ſalvation, yet, it was ſuch as preſerved them, and freed their City from the wrath and ſcourge that hung over them. The moſt horrid ſtiffneſs of the Jews is here intimated, of all impious men the moſt impious, of all curſed wretches the moſt curſed.

VERS. XXII.

VERS. I.

Ἐν ἐκείνῳ τῷ καιρῷ ἐπορεύθη ὁ Ἰησοῦς τοῖς Σάββασι διὰ τῶν σπορίμων. At that time Jesus went, on the Sabbath day through the corn.

THE time is determined by Luke in these words, Ἐν σαββάτῳ δευτεροπρώτῳ, that is, on the Sabbath from the second-first.

I. Provision was made by the divine Law, that the sheaf of first fruits should be offered, on the second day of the Passover week, Levit. XXIII. 10, 11. ממחרת שבת יניפנו הכהן On the morrow after the Sabbath, the Priest shall shake (or, wave) it. Not on the morrow after the ordinary Sabbath of the week, but the morrow after the first day of the Passover week, which was a Sabbatic day, Exod. XII. 16. Levit. XXIII. 7. Hence the Seventy ἐπαύριον τῆς πρώτης, The morrow of the first day; the Chaldee, בתר יומא אבט After the Holy day. The Rabbins Solomon and Menachen, ממחרת יום טוב הראשון של פסח On the morrow, after the first day of the Passover feast: of which mention had been made, in the verses foregoing.

II. But now, from that second day of the Passover Solemnity, wherein the sheaf was offered, were numbred seven weeks to Pentecost. For, the day of the Sheaf; and the day of Pentecost did mutually respect each other. For on this second day of the Passover, the Offering of the Sheaf was supplicatory, and by way of prayer, beseeching a blessing upon the new corn, and leave to eat it, and to put in the sickle into the standing corn. Now the offering of the first fruit loaves on the day of Pentecost, (Levit. XXIII. 15, 16, 17.) did respect the giving of thanks for the finishing, and inning of barly harvest. Therefore, in regard of this relation, these two Solemnities were linked together, that both might respect the harvest; that, the harvest beginning; this, the harvest ended; this depended on that, and was numbred seven weeks after it. Therefore the computation of the time coming between could not but carry with it the memory of that second day of the Passover week; and hence Pentecost is called the Feast of weeks, Deut. XVI. 10. The true calculation of the time between could not otherwise be retained, as to Sabbaths, than by numbring thus, this is Σάββατον δευτεροπρῶτον, The first Sabbath after the second day of the Passover. This is δευτεροδεύτερον, The second Sabbath after that second day: And so of the rest. In the a Jerusalem Talmud, the word שבת פרוטוגמיא The Sabbath Πρωτογαμίας, Of the first marriage, is a composition not very unlike.

a Hieros. Demai, fol. 24. 1.

When they numbred by days, , and not by weeks, the calculation began on the day of the Sheaf. b A great number of certain Scholars died, between the Passover and Pentecost, by reason of mutual respect not given to one another. There is a place, where it is said, that they died fifteen days before Pentecost, that is, thirty three days after the Sheaf.

b Juchasin, 36. 1.

At the end of the Midras of Samuel, which I have, it is thus concluded, This work was finished the three and thirtieth day after the Sheaf.

III. Therefore, by this word, Δευτεροπρώτῳ, The second-first added by St. Luke, is shewn, First, That this first Sabbath was after the second day of the Passover: and so, according to the Order of the Evangelic History, either that very Sabbath, wherein the paralytic man was healed at the pool of Bethesda, John V. or the Sabbath next after it. Secondly, That these ears of corn pluckt by the disciples, were of barley: How far (alas!) from those dainties, wherewith the Jews are wont to junket, not out of custom only, but out of Religion also! Hear their Gloss, savouring of the kitchin and the dish, upon that of the Prophet Esaiah, Chap. LVIII. 13. Thou shalt call the Sabbath a delight. It is forbidden, say they, to fast on the Sabbath, but on the contrary, men are bound to delight themselves with meat and drink. For we must live more delicately on the Sabbath than on other days: and he is highly to be commended who provides the most delicious junkets against that day. We must eat thrice on the Sabbath, and all men are to be admonished of it. And even the poor themselves who live on Alms, let them eat thrice on the Sabbath. For he that feasts thrice on the Sabbath shall be delivered from the calamities of the Messias, from the judgement of Hell, and from the war of Gog and Magog. c Whose God is their Belly, Philip. III. 19.

IV. But was the standing corn ripe, at the feast of the Passover? I answer,

1. The seeds-time of Barley was presently after the middle of the month Marhesvan, that is, about the beginning of our November. d He heard that the seed sown, at the first rain,

rain, was deſtroyed by hail: he went and ſowed at the ſecond rain, &c. and when the ſeed of all others periſhed with the hail, his ſeed periſhed not. Upon which words the Gloſs writes thus, The firſt rain was the ſeventeenth day of the Month Marheſhvan: The ſecond rain the three and twentieth day of the ſame Month; and the third was in the beginning of the month Chiſleu; when therefore the rain came down, that, which was ſown at the firſt rain was now become ſomewhat ſtiff, and ſo, it was broken by the hail; but that which was ſown at the ſecond rain, by reaſon of its tenderneſs, was not broken, &c. Therefore the Barly was ſown at the coming in of the winter, and growing by the mildneſs of the weather, in winter, when the Paſſover came in, it became ripe: So that from that time (the Sheaf being then offered) Barley harveſt took its beginning.

2. But if, when the juſt time of the Paſſover was come, the Barley were not ripe, the intercalary Month was added to that year, and they waited until it ripened. For, for three things they intercalated the year, for the Equinox, for the new corn, and for the fruit of the trees. For the Elders of the Sanhedrin do compute and obſerve, if the Vernal Equinox will fall out on the ſixteenth day of the Month Niſan, or beyond that, then they intercalate that year, and they make that Niſan the ſecond Adar: So that the Paſſover might happen at the time of new corn: Or if they obſerve that there is no new corn, and that the trees ſprouted not, when they were wont to ſprout, then they intercalate the year, &c.

e Maimon. in Kiddush Hachodeſh. cap. IV.

You have an example of this thing. f Rabban Gamaliel to the Elders of the great Sanhedrin, our Brethren in Judea and Galilee, &c. Health. Be it known unto you, that ſince the Lambs are too young, and the doves are not fledged, and there is no young corn, we have thought good to add thirty days to this year, &c.

Οἱ δὲ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ ἐπείνασαν. And his diſciples were an hungred.

The Cuſtom of the Nation, as yet, had held them faſting, which ſuffered none, unleſs he were ſick, to taſt any thing on the Sabbath, before the morning Prayers of the Synagogue were done. And on common days alſo, and that in the afternoon proviſion was made by the Canons. g That none returning home from his work in the evening, either eat, or drink, or ſleep, before he had ſaid his prayers in the Synagogue.

VERS. II.

Ποιοῦσιν ὃ οὐκ ἔξεστι ποιεῖν ἐν Σαββάτῳ. They do that, which is not lawful to do on the Sabbath day.

THEY do not contend about the thing it ſelf, becauſe it was lawful, Deut. XXIII. 25. but about the thing done on the Sabbath. Concerning which the Fathers of the Traditions write thus. קוצר גרוגרת חייב ותולש תולדות קוצר h He that reaps on the Sabbath, though never ſo little, is guilty. And to pluck the ears of corn is a kind of reaping, and whoſoever plucks any thing from the ſpringing of his own fruit is guilty, under the name of a Reaper. But under what guilt were they held? he had ſaid this before, at the beginning of Chap. VII. in theſe words, The works, whereby a man is guilty of ſtoning and cutting off, if he do them preſumptuouſly: but if ignorantly, he is bound to bring a ſacrifice for ſin, מהן אבות ומהן תולדות Are either primitive or derivative. Of primitive, or of the general kinds of works, are nine and thirty reckoned, To i plow, to ſow, to reap, to gather the Sheaves, to threſh, to ſift, to grind, to bake, &c. to ſhear ſheep, to dy wool, &c. תולדות The derivative works, or the particulars of thoſe generals are ſuch as are of the ſame rank and likeneſs with them. For example, digging is of the ſame kind with plowing; chopping of herbs is of the ſame rank with grinding: and plucking the ears of corn is of the ſame nature with reaping. Our Saviour therefore, pleaded the Cauſe of the Diſciples, ſo much the more eagerly, becauſe now their lives were in danger: for the Canons of the Scribes adjudged them to ſtoning, for what they had done, if ſo be it could be proved that they had done it preſumptouſly. From hence therefore, he begins their defence, that this was done by the Diſciples, out of neceſſity, hunger compelling them, not out of any contempt of the Laws.

VERS. III.

Δαβὶδ καὶ οἱ μετ' αὐτοῦ. David, and thoſe that were with him.

FOR thoſe words of Ahimelech are to be underſtood comparatively, Wherefore art thou alone, and no man with thee? that is, comparatively to that noble train wherewith thou waſt wont to go attended, and which becomes the Captain General of Iſrael. David came to Nob, not as one that fled, but as one that come to enquire at the Oracle, concerning the event of War, unto which he pretended to come by the Kings command. Diſſembling therefore that he haſtned to the war, or to expedite ſome warlike deſign, he diſſembles likewiſe, that he ſent his Army to a certain place, and that he had turned aſide thither to worſhip God, and to enquire of the event; that he had brought but a very few of his moſt truſty ſervants along with him, for whom being an hungred he asketh a few loaves.

Ὅτι ἐπείνασαν. When they were an hungred.

Here hearken to Kimchi producing the opinion of the Antients concerning this ſtory, in theſe words: Our Rabbins of bleſſed memory ſay, that he gave him the Shew bread, &c. The interpretation alſo of the clauſe. ואפ כי היום יקדש בכלי Yea though it were ſanctified this day in the veſſel, is this; It is a ſmall thing to ſay that it is lawful for us to eat theſe loaves taken from before the Lord, when we are hungry; for it would be lawful to eat this very loaf which is now ſet on, which is alſo ſanctified in the veſſel, (for the Table ſanctifieth) it would be lawful to eat even this when another loaf is not preſent with you to give us, and we are ſo hunger bitten. And a little after, There is nothing which may hinder taking care of Life, beſide Idolatry, Adultery and Murder.

Theſe words do excellently agree with the force of our Saviours Argument, but with the genuine ſenſe of that Clauſe, methinks, they do not well agree. I ſhould, under correction, render it otherwiſe, only prefacing this before hand, That it is no improbable conjecture that David came to Nob either on the Sabbath it ſelf, or when the Sabbath was but newly gone. k For the ſhewbread was not to be eaten unleſs for one day and one night, that is, on the Sabbath and the going out of the Sabbath; David therefore came thither in the going out of the Sabbath. And now I render Davids words thus, Women have been kept from us theſe three days, (ſo that there is no uncleaneſs with us from the touch of a menſtruous woman) and the veſſels of the young men were holy, even in the common way (that is, while we travelled in the common manner and journey) therefore much more are they holy, as to their veſſels, this (Sabbath) day. And to this ſenſe perhaps does that come. דאג נעצר לפני יהוה But there was there one of the Servants of Saul detained that day before the Lord. The reverence of the Sabbath had brought him to worſhip and as yet had detained him there.

VERS. VIII.

Κύριός ἐστι καὶ τοῦ Σαββάτου ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου. For the Son of man is Lord alſo of the Sabbath.

I. HE oppoſed this very Argument againſt their cavils, before the Sanhedrin, Joh. V. When he was ſummoned into the Court, concerning his healing the paralytic man, on this very Sabbath, or on the Sabbath next before; he ſhews his dominion over the Sabbath, from this very thing, that he the Son was inveſted and honoured with the ſame Authority, Power and Dignity, in reſpect of the Adminiſtration of the New Teſtament, as the Father was, in regard of the Old.

II. The care of the Sabbath lay upon the firſt Adam under a double Law, according to his double condition. 1. Before his fall, under the law of Nature written in his heart: under which he had kept the Sabbath, if he had remained innocent. And here it is not unworthy to be obſerved, that although the ſeventh day was not come before his fall, yet the inſtitution of the Sabbath is mentioned before the hiſtory of his fall. 2. After his fall, under a poſitive law. For when he had finn'd on the ſixth day, and the ſeventh came, he was not now bound under the bare Law of Nature, to celebrate it, but according as the condition of Adam was changed, and as the condition of the Sabbath was not a little changed alſo, a new and poſitive Law concerning the keeping the Sabbath was ſuperinduced upon him. It will not be unpleaſant to produce a few paſſages from the Jewiſh Maſters, of that firſt Sabbath.

n Circumciſion ſaith R. Judah and the Sabbath, were before the Law. But how much backward before the Law? Hear Baal Turim: o The Iſraelites were redeemed, ſaith he, out of Egypt, becauſe they obſerved Circumciſion and the Sabbath day. Yea and further backwards ſtill: p The inheritance of Jacob is promiſed to thoſe that ſanctifie the Sabbath, becauſe he ſanctified the Sabbath himſelf. Yea and more backwards yet, even to the beginning of the world. q The firſt Pſalm in the world was when Adams ſin was forgiven: and when the Sabbath entred, he opened his mouth and uttered the Pſalm of the Sabbath. So alſo the Targum upon the title of Pſalm XCII. The Pſalm, or Song, which Adam compoſed concerning the Sabbath day. Upon which Pſalm, among other things thus Midras Tillin: What did God create the firſt day? Heaven and Earth. What the ſecond? The Firmament, &c. What the ſeventh? The Sabbath. And ſince God had not created the Sabbath for ſervile works, for which he had created the other days of the week, therefore it is not ſaid of that, as of the other days, And the evening was, and the morning was the ſeventh day. And a little after; Adam was created on the Eve of the Sabbath: the Sabbath entred when he had now ſinned, and was his Advocate with God, &c.

III. Since therefore the Sabbath was ſo inſtituted after the fall, and that by a Law and Condition, which had a regard to Chriſt now promiſed, and to the fall of man, the Sabbath could not but come under the power and dominion of the ſon of Man, that is, of the promiſed ſeed, to be ordered and diſpoſed by him as he thought good, and as he ſhould make proviſion, for his own honour and the benefit of Man.

VERS. X.

Ἔξεστι τοῖς Σάββασι θεραπεύειν; Is it lawful to heal on the Sabbath days?

THESE are not ſo much the words of Enquirers, as Denyers. For theſe were their diciſions, in that Caſe, s Let not thoſe that are in health uſe phyſic on the Sabbath day, Let not him, that labours under a pain in his loyns anoynt the place affected with oyl and vineger: but with oyl he may, ſo it be not oyl of Roſes, &c. He that hath the tooth ach, let him not ſwallow vineger to ſpit it out again, but he may ſwallow it, ſo he ſwallow it down. He that hath a ſoar throat, let him not gargle it with oyl: but he may ſwallow down the oyl, whence, if he receive a cure, it is well. Let no man chew Maſtich, or rub his teeth with ſpice for a cure; but if he do this, to make his mouth ſweet, it is allowed. They do not put wine into a ſore eye. They do not apply fomentations or oyls to the place affected, &c. All which things, however they were not applicable to the cure wrought by Chriſt, (with a word only) yet they afforded them an occaſion of cavilling; who indeed were ſworn together, thus to quarrel him; that Canon affording them a further pretence, t This certainly obtains, that whatſoever was poſſible to be done on the Sabbath Eve, driveth not away the Sabbath. To which ſenſe he ſpeaks, Luke, XIII. 14.

This prohibition tends the ſame way, as his preaching by Parables did, Mat. XIII. 13. I ſpeak to them by parables, becauſe ſeeing they ſee not. He would not be known by them, who would not know him.

VERS. XX.

Κάλαμον συντετριμμένον οὐ κατάξει. A bruiſed reed ſhall he not break.

THESE words are to be applied, as appears by thoſe that went before, to our Saviours ſilent tranſaction of his own affairs, without hunting after applauſe, the noiſe of boaſting, or the loud reports of fame. He ſhall not make ſo great a noiſe as is made from the breaking of a reed now already bruiſed, and half broken, or from the hiſſing of ſmoking flax only, when water is thrown upon it. How far different is the Meſſias thus deſcribed from the Meſſias of the expectation of the Jews! And yet it appears ſufficiently that Eſaiah, from whom theſe words are taken, ſpake of the Meſſias, and the Jews confeſs it.

Ἕως ἂν ἐκβάλῃ εἰς νῖκος τὸ κρίσιν. Till he ſend forth judgment unto victory.

The Hebrew and LXX in Eſaiah, read it thus, He ſhall bring forth judgment unto truth. The words in both places mean thus much, That Chriſt ſhould make no ſound in the world, or noiſe of pomp, or applauſe, or ſtate, but ſhould manage his affairs in humility, ſilence, poverty and patience, both while he himſelf was on earth, and by his Apoſtles, after his Aſcenſion, labouring under contempt, poverty and perſecution; but at laſt he ſhould bring forth judgment to victory, that is, that he ſhould break forth and ſhew himſelf a judg, avenger and conqueror againſt that moſt wicked Nation of the Jews, from whom both he and his ſuffered ſuch things; and then alſo he ſent forth judgment unto truth, and aſſerted himſelf the true Meſſias, and the Son of God, before the eyes of all; and confirmed the truth of the Goſpel, by avenging his cauſe upon his enemies, in a manner ſo conſpicuous and ſo dreadful. And hence it is that that ſending forth and execution of judgment againſt that Nation, is almoſt always called in the New Teſtament, his coming in Glory. When Chriſt and his Kingdom had ſo long lain hid under the vail of humility, and the cloud of perſecution; at laſt he brake forth a revenger, and cut off that perſecuting Nation, and ſhewed himſelf a conqueror, before the eyes of all, both Jews and Gentiles. Let it be obſerved in the Text before us, how after the mention of that judgment and victory, (againſt the Jews) preſently follows, And in his Name ſhall the Gentiles truſt.

VERS. XXIV.

Ἐν τῷ Βεελζεβὺλ ἄρχοντι τῶν Δαιμονίων. By Beelzebub, the Prince of the Devils.

FOR the ſearching out the ſenſe of this horrid blaſphemy, theſe things are worthy obſerving:

I. Among the Jews, it was held, in a manner, for a matter of Religion, to reproach Idols, and to give them odious names.

a Hieroſ. Avodah Zarah, fol. 43. 3.

a R. Akibah ſaith, Idolatry pollutes, as a menſtruous woman pollutes: as it is ſaid, Thou ſhalt caſt away the (Idol) as ſomething that is menſtruous, and thou ſhalt ſay to it, Get thee hence, (Eſai. XXX. 22.) R. Lazar ſaith, Thou ſhalt ſay to it, Get thee hence: That which they call the face of b God, let them call the face of a dog. That which they call עין כום the fountain of a cup, let them call עין קוץ the fountain of Toil, (or of Flailes) that which they call גדיית fortune, let them call גליא a ſtink, &c. That Town which ſometimes was called Bethel, was afterwards called Bethaven. See alſo the Tract c Schabbath, where theſe ſame words are.

כל ליצנותא אסירא חוץ מליצנותא דעו"ג d All jeering is forbidden, except the jeering of Idolatry. This alſo is repeated in the Tract e Megillah. Where this is added, It is lawful for a Jew to ſay to a Cuthite תיו" אנחיתה בשין" שקליה לעו" Take you Idol, and put it under your buttocks.

II. Among the ignominious names beſtowed upon Idols, the general and common one was זבול Zebul, dung, or, a dunghil. f Even to them who have ſtretched out their hands, בזבול in a dunghill, (that is, in an Idol-Temple, or in Idolatry) there is hope. Thou canſt not bring them (into the Church) becauſe they have ſtretched forth their hands בזבול In a dunghill. But yet you cannot reject them, becauſe they have repented. And a little after, רואה אותם מובלין לעו"ז וגו' He that ſees them dunging, (that is, ſacrificing) to an Idol, let him ſay, Curſed be he that ſacrifices to a ſtrange God. f Hieroſ. Beza, fol. 12. 2.

Let them therefore, who dare form this word in Matthew, into Beelzelub. I am ſo far from doubting, that the Phariſees pronounced the word Beelzebul, and that Matthew ſo wrote it, that I doubt not but the ſenſe fails, if it be writ otherwiſe.

III. Very many names of evil ſpirits or devils occur in the Talmudiſts, which it is needleſs here to mention. Among all the devils, they eſteemed that devil the worſt, the fouleſt, and as it were the Prince of the reſt, who ruled over the Idols, and by whom Oracles and Miracles were given forth, among the Heathens and Idolaters. And they were of this opinion for this reaſon, becauſe they held Idolatry above all other things chiefly wicked and abominable, and to be the Prince and head of evil. This Demon they called בעל זבול Baal-zebul, not ſo much by a proper name, as by one more general and common; as much as to ſay, the Lord of Idolatry: the worſt devil, and the worſt thing: and they called him the Prince of devils, becauſe Idolatry is the Prince (or chief) of wickedneſs.

g We meet with a ſtory, where mention is made of רבהון דרוחיא The Prince of ſpirits. Whether it be in this ſenſe, let the Reader conſult and judg. Alſo in the h Aruch we meet with theſe words, שירא אשמרון רבהון דרוחתא The Demon Aſmodeus, the Prince of ſpirits. g Hieroſ. Peah. fol. 21. 2. h Ex Rabboth.

IV. The Talmudiſts being taught by theſe their Fathers, do give out (horribly blaſpheming) That Jeſus of Nazareth our Lord was a Magician, a broacher of ſtrange and wicked worſhip, and one that did Miracles by the power of the Devil, to beget his worſhip the greater belief and honour.

i Ben סטרא Satda brought Magick out of Egypt, by cuttings, which he had made in his fleſh. By בן סטרא Ben Satda they underſtand Jeſus of Nazareth, as we have ſaid before; whom they diſhonour by that name, that they might by one word, and in one breath, reproach him and his Mother together. For סטרא Satda, or, Stada ſounds as much as an Adulterous wife, which the Gemara ſhews after a few lines, סטת דא מבעלה She went aſide from her husband. k They feign that Jeſus travelled with Joſhua ben Perachiah into Egypt, when the ſaid Joſhua fled from the anger and ſword of Janneus the King; (which we have mentioned at the ſecond Chapter) and that he brought thence Magical witchcrafts with him; but under the cutting of his fleſh, that he might not be taken by the Egyptian Magicians, who ſtrictly examined all that went out of that land, that none ſhould tranſport their Magick Art into another land. And in that place they add theſe horrid words, ישו כשף והסית והריח את ישראל Jeſus practiſed Magick, and deceived, and drove Iſrael to Idolatry. Thoſe whelps bark, as they were taught by theſe dogs. i Bab. Schab. fol. 104. 2. k Sanhedr. fol. 107. 2.

To this therefore does this blaſphemy of the Phariſees come; as if they ſhould ſay, He caſts out Devils indeed, but he doth this by the help of the Devil, the Lord of Idols, that dwells in him; by him that is the worſt of all Devils, who favours him and helps him, becauſe it is his ambition to drive the people from the worſhip of the true God to ſtrange worſhip.

VERS. XXV.

Εἰδὼς δὲ ὁ Ἰησοῦς τὰς ἐνθυμήσεις αὐτῶν. But Jeſus knowing their thoughts.

BEhold, O Phariſee, a ſign of the true Meſſias, for a ſign you would have. He ſmells out a wicked man.

l It is written of Meſſias, The Spirit of the Lord ſhall reſt upon him, והריחו ביראת ה" and ſhall make him ſmell in the fear of the Lord. Rabba ſaid, He ſhall ſmell and judg, as it is ſaid, He ſhall not judg by the ſight of his eyes, &c. Ben Cozba reigned two years and a half, and ſaid to the Rabbins, I am the Meſſias: They ſaid to him, It is written of Meſſias that he ſhall ſmell and judg. (The Gloſs is, He ſhall ſmell of the Man, and ſhall judg and know whether he be guilty.) Let us ſee whether thou canſt ſmell and judg. And when they ſaw that he could not ſmell and judg they ſlew him. l Bab. Sanhedr. fol. 93. 2.

VERS. XXVII.

Οἱ υἱοὶ ὑμῶν ἐν τίνι ἐκβάλλουσι. By whom do your children caſt them out?

BY your Children, Chriſt ſeems to underſtand ſome diſciples of the Phariſees; that is, ſome of the Jews, who uſing Exorciſms, ſeemed to caſt out Devils, ſuch as they,

aſſ:

Act. XIX. 13. and yet they ſaid not to them, Ye caſt out Devils by Beelzebul. It is worthy marking, that Chriſt preſently ſaith, If I by the Spirit of God caſt out Devils, then the Kingdom of God is come among you. For what elſe does this ſpeak, than that Chriſt was the firſt who ſhould caſt out Devils? (which was an undoubted ſign to them that the Kingdom of Heaven was now come.) But that which was performed by them by Exorciſms, was not ſo much a caſting out of Devils, as a deluſion of the people; ſince Satan would not caſt out Satan, but by compact with himſelf, and with his company, he ſeemed to be caſt out, that he might the more deceive.

The ſenſe therefore of Chriſts words comes to this, That your Diſciples caſt out Devils, ye attribute not to Beelzebul, no, nor to Magick; but ye applaud the work when it is done by them: They therefore may in this matter be your judges, that you pronounce theſe words of my actions out of the rankneſs and venom of your minds.

m Bab. Joma, fol. 57. 1.

m In the Gloſs mention is made of a Devil caſt out by a Jew at Rome.

VERS. XXXII.

Οὐκ ἀφεθήσεται αὐτῷ οὔτε ἐν τούτῳ τῷ αἰῶνι, οὔτε ἐν τῷ μέλλοντι. It ſhall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, nor in that which is to come.

THEY that endeavour hence to prove the remiſſion of ſome ſins after death, ſeem little to underſtand to what Chriſt had reſpect, when he ſpake theſe words. Weigh well this common and moſt known doctrine of the Jewiſh Schools, and judg.

n Hieroſ. Sanhedr. fol. 37. 3. & Bab. Joma, fol. 86. 1.

n He that tranſgreſſes an affirmative precept, if he preſently repent, is not moved, until the Lord pardon him. And of ſuch, it is ſaid, Be ye converted, O backſliding Children, and I will heal your backſlidings. He that tranſgreſſes a Negative precept and repents, his repentance ſuſpends judgment, and the day of expiation expiates him, as it is ſaid, This day ſhall all your uncleanneſſes be expiated to you. He that tranſgreſſes to cutting off, (by the ſtroke of God) or to death by the Sanhedrin, and repents, repentance and the day of expiation do ſuſpend judgment, and the ſtrokes that are laid upon him wipe off ſin, as it is ſaid, And I will viſit their tranſgreſſion with a rod, and their iniquity with ſcourges: But he by whom the Name of God is profaned, (or blaſphemed) repentance is of no avail to him, to ſuſpend judgment, nor the day of expiation to expiate it, nor ſcourges (or corrections inflicted) to wipe it off, but all ſuſpend judgment, and death wipes it off. Thus the Babylonian Gemara writes: but the Jeruſalem thus, Repentance and the day of expiation expiate as to the third part, and corrections, as to the third part, and death wipes it off: as it is ſaid, And your iniquities ſhall not be expiated to you until ye die. הא למתו שמיחא ממרקין Behold we learn that death wipes off. Note this, which Chriſt contradicts, concerning Blaſphemy againſt the Holy Ghoſt, It ſhall not be forgiven, ſaith he, neither in this world, nor in the world to come; that is, neither before death, nor as you dream, by death.

Ἐν τῷ αἰῶνι μέλλοντι. In the world to come.

I. Some phraſes were received into common uſe, by which in common ſpeech they oppoſed the Hereſie of the Sadducees, who denied Immortality. Of that ſort were עולם הבא Αἰὼν ὁ μέλλων, The world to come. גן עדן Παράδεισος, Paradiſe. גהנום Γέεννα, Hell, &c.

o Bab. Beracoth, fol. 54. 1.

o At the end of all the prayers in the Temple, (as we obſerved before) they ſaid עד עולם for ever. But when the Hereticks brake in and ſaid, There was no Age but one, it was appointed to be ſaid מן העולם ועד העולם For ever and ever.

VERS.

VERS. XXXIX.

Γενεὰ πονηρὰ καὶ μοιχαλὶς σημεῖον ἐπιζητεῖ, &c. An evil and adulterous generation ſeeketh after a ſign.

I. THEIR Schools alſo confeſſed, that ſigns and miracles were not to be expected but by a fit generation.

u The Elders being once aſſembled at Jericho, the Bath Kol went forth, and ſaid, There is one among you who is fit to have the Holy Ghoſt dwell upon him, אלא שאין הדור כדיו But that (this) generation is not fit. They fix their eyes upon Hillel the Elder. The Elders being aſſembled again in Ὑπερῷῳ, an upper room, in Jabneh, Bath Kol came forth and ſaid, There is one among you who is fit to have the Holy Spirit dwell upon him, אלא שאין הדור כדיו But that the Generation is not fit. They caſt their eyes upon Samuel the Little. u Hieroſ. Sotah; fol. 22. 2.

II. That generation by which, and in which the Lord of Life was Crucified, lay, and that deſervedly, under an ill report, for their great wickedneſs above all other, from the beginning of the world until that day. Whence that of the Prophet, Who ſhall declare his generation? Eſai. LIII. 2. that is, his generation, (viz. that generation in which he ſhould live) ſhould proceed to that degree of impiety and wickedneſs, that it ſhould ſurpaſs all expreſſion and hiſtory. We have obſerved before how the Talmudiſts themſelves confeſs, that that Generation in which the Meſſias ſhould come, ſhould exceed all other Ages, in all kinds of amazing wickedneſs.

III. That Nation and Generation might be called Adulterous literally, for what elſe I beſeech you was their irreligious Polygamy than continual Adultery? And what elſe was their ordinary practiſe of divorcing their wives, no leſs irreligious according to every mans fooliſh or naughty will?

VERS. XXXIX.

Εἰ μὴ τὸ σημεῖον Ἰωνᾶ τοῦ προφήτου. But the ſign of Jonah the Prophet.

HERE and elſwhere, while he gives them the ſign of Jonah, he does not barely ſpeak of the Miracle done upon him, which was to be equalled in the Son of Man, but girds them with a ſilent check; inſtructing them thus much, that the Gentiles were to be converted by him, after his return out of the bowels of the earth, as Heathen Niniveh was converted, after Jonah was reſtored out of the belly of the Whale. Than which doctrine ſcarce any thing bit that Nation more ſharply:

VERS. XL.

Ἔσται ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ τῆς γῆς τρεῖς ἡμέρας καὶ τρεῖς νύκτας. The Son of Man ſhall be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth.

I. THE Jewiſh Writers extend that memorable ſtation of the unmoving Sun at Joſhua's Prayer, to ſix and thirty hours; for ſo Kimchi upon that place, According to more exact interpretation, The Sun and Moon ſtood ſtill for ſix and thirty hours: For when the fight was on the Eve of the Sabbath, Joſhua feared leſt the Iſraelites might break the Sabbath; therefore he ſpread abroad his hands, that the Sun might ſtand ſtill on the ſixth day, according to the meaſure of the day of the Sabbath, and the Moon, according to the meaſure of the night of the Sabbath, and of the going out of the Sabbath, which amounts to ſix and thirty hours.

II. If you number the hours that paſſed from our Saviours giving up the Ghoſt upon the Croſs to his Reſurrection, you ſhall find almoſt the ſame number of hours; and yet that ſpace is called by him three days and three nights, when as two nights only came between and only one compleat day. Nevertheleſs, while he ſpeaks theſe words, he is not without the conſent both of the Jewiſh Schools, and their computation. Weigh well that which is diſputed in the Tract x Schabbath, concerning the uncleanneſs of a woman for three days; where many things are diſcuſſed by the Gemariſts, concerning the computation of this ſpace of three days. Among other things theſe words occur, R. Iſmael ſaith, פעמים שהם ד' עונות y Sometimes it contains four עונות Onoth, ſometimes five, ſometimes ſix. z But how much is the ſpace of עונה an Onah? R. Jochanan ſaith, Either a day or a night. And ſo alſo the Jeruſalem Talmud; a R. Akiba fixed a day for an Onah, and a night for an Onah: But the Tradition is, That R. Eliazar ben Azariah ſaid, יום ולילה עונה וכו' a Day and a night make an Onah, and a part of an Onah is as the whole. And a little after, ר' ישמעאל עבד מקצת עונה ככולה R. Iſmael computed a part of the Onah for the whole. x Cap. 9. Hal. 3. y Bab. fol 86. 1. z Bab Avod. Zar. fol 5. 1. a Schabb. fol. 12. 1.

It

It is not eaſie to tranſlate the word עונה Onah into good Latin: For to ſome it is the ſame with the half of a natural day; to ſome it is all one with Νυχθήμερον, a whole natural day. According to the firſt ſenſe, we may obſerve from the words of R. Iſmael, that ſometimes four עונות Onoth, or Halves of a natural day may be accounted for three days: And that they alſo are ſo numbred that one part or the other of thoſe halves may be accounted for an whole. Compare the latter ſenſe with the words of our Saviour which are now before us. A day and a night (ſaith the Tradition) make an Onah, and a part of an Onah is as the whole. Therefore Chriſt may truly be ſaid to have been in his Grave three Onath, or Τρεῖς Νυχθήμερον, Three natural days, (when yet the greateſt part of the firſt day was wanting, and the night altogether, and the greateſt part by far of the third day alſo) the conſent of the Schools and Dialect of the Nation agreeing thereunto. For, The leaſt part of the Onah concluded the whole. So that according to this Idiom, that diminutive part of the third day upon which Chriſt aroſe may be computed for the whole day, and the night following it.

VERS. XLV.

Οὕτως ἔσται καὶ τῇ γενεᾷ ταύτῃ τῇ πονηρᾷ. So ſhall it be to this evil Generation.

THESE words foretel a dreadful Apoſtaſie in that Nation and Generation.

I. It is ſomething difficult ſo to ſuit all things in the Parable aforegoing, that they may agree with one another: 1. You can hardly underſtand it of unclean ſpirits caſt out of men by Chriſt, when through the whole Evangelick Hiſtory, there is not the leaſt ſhadow of probability that any Devil caſt out by him did return again into him out of whom he had been caſt. 2. Therefore our Saviour ſeems to allude to the caſting out of Devils by Exorciſms: which art, as the Jews were well inſtructed in, ſo in practiſing it, there was need of dextrous deceits and colluſions. 3. For it is ſcarcely credible that the Devil in truth finds leſs reſt in dry places than in wet: But it is credible that thoſe Diabolical Artiſts have found out ſuch kind of figments, for the honour and fame of their Art. For, 4. It would be ridiculous to think that they could by their Exorciſms caſt out a Devil out of a man into whom he had been ſent by God. They might indeed by a Compact with the Devil procure ſome lucid intervals to the poſſeſſed, ſo that the inhabiting Demon might deal gently with him for ſome time, and not diſturb the man: But the Demoniacal heats came back again at laſt, and the former outrages returned. Therefore here there was need of deceits well put together, that ſo proviſion might the better be made for the honour of the Exorciſtical Art; as that the Devil being ſent away into dry and waſt places, could not find any reſt, that he could not, that he would not always wander about here and there alone by himſelf without reſt; that he therefore returned into his old manſion which he had formerly found ſo well fitted and prepared for him, &c.

Therefore theſe words ſeem to have been ſpoken by our Saviour according to the capacity of the common people, or rather according to the deceit put upon them, more than according to the reality or truth of the thing it ſelf; taking a parable from ſomething commonly believed and entertained, that he might expreſs the thing which he propounded more plainly and familiarly.

II. But however it was, whether thoſe things were true indeed, or only believed and conceived ſo, by a moſt apt and open compariſon is ſhewn, that the Devil was firſt caſt out of the Jewiſh Nation by the Goſpel, and then ſeeking for a ſeat and reſt among the Gentiles, and not finding it, the Goſpel every where vexing him, came back into the Jewiſh Nation again, fixed his ſeat there, and poſſeſſed it much more than he had done before. The truth of this thing appears in that fearful Apoſtaſie of an infinite multitude of Jews who received the Goſpel, and moſt wickedly revolted from it afterwards; concerning which the New Teſtament ſpeaks in abundance of places.

CHAP. XIII.

VERS. II.

Ὥστε αὐτὸν καθῆσθαι, καὶ πᾶς ὁ ὄχλος εἰστήκει. So that he ſate, and the whole multitude ſtood.

SO was the manner of the nation, that the Maſters, when they read their lectures, ſate, and the Scholars ſtood. Which Honorary cuſtom continued to the death of Gamaliel the Elder, and then ſo far ceaſed, that the Scholars ſate, when their Maſters ſate. Hence is that paſſage: a From that time that old Rabban Gamaliel died, the Honor of the Law periſhed, and purity and Phariſaiſm died. Where the Gloſs, from Megillah writes thus, Before his death, health was in the world, and they learned the Law ſtanding; but when he was dead, ſickneſs came down into the world, and they were compelled to learn the Law, ſitting.

a Sotah, cap 9. hal. 15.

VERS. III.

Ἐν παραβολαῖς. In Parables.

I. NO Scheme of Jewiſh Retoric was more familiarly uſed, than that of parables: which perhaps, creeping in from thence, among the Heathen, ended in Fables. It is ſaid, in the place of the Talmud juſt now cited, משמת רמ"י ביטלו משלים משלים From the time that R. Meri died, thoſe that ſpake in Parables ceaſed: not that that Figure of Rhetoric periſhed in the Nation from that time, but becauſe he ſurpaſſed all others in theſe flowers; as the Gloſs there, from the Tract Sanhedrin, ſpeaks תלתא שמעתא ותלתא אגדתא ותלתא משלי A third part (of his diſcourſes or ſermons) was Tradition; a third part, Allegory; and a third part Parable. The Jewiſh books abound every where with theſe Figures, the Nation enclining, by a kind of Natural Genius, to this kind of Rhetoric. One might not amiſs call their Religion, Parabolical, folded up within the Coverings of Ceremonies, and their Oratory in their Sermons was like to it. But it is a wonder indeed, that they who were ſo given to, and delighted in Parables, and ſo dextrous in unfolding them, ſhould ſtick in the outward Shell of Ceremonies, and ſhould not have fetched out the Parabolical, and ſpiritual ſenſe of them; neither ſhould be able to fetch them out.

II. Our Saviour, (who always and every where ſpake with the vulgar) uſeth the ſame kind of ſpeech, and very often the ſame preface as they did in their Parables. למה הדבר דומה Τίνι ὡμοίωθη, &c. To what is it likened, &c. But in him thus ſpeaking, one may both acknowledg the divine Juſtice, who ſpeaks darkly to them that deſpiſe the light; and his divine Wiſdom likewiſe, who ſo ſpeaks to them that ſee, and yet ſee not, that they may ſee the ſhell, and not ſee the Kernel.

VERS. IV.

Ἃ μὲν ἔπεσε παρὰ τὴν ὁδόν, &c. Some fell by the way ſide, &c.

COcerning the husbandry of the Jews, and their manner of ſowing, we meet with various paſſages, in the Tracts Peah, Demai, Kilaim, Sheviith: We ſhall only touch upon thoſe things which the words of the Text under our hands, do readily remind us of.

There were ways and paths as well common as more private, along the ſown fields, ſee Chap. XII. 1. hence, in the tract b Peah, where they diſpute what thoſe things are, which divide a field, ſo that it owes a double corner to the poor, thus it is determined, Theſe things divide a River, an Aqueduct, a private way, a common way, a common path, and a private path, &c. See the place and the Gloſs.

VERS. V.

c In Hieroſ. Kilaim, fol. 27. 1.

c DIſcourſe is had concerning ſome laws of the Kilaim, (or, of the ſeeds of different kinds) and of the ſeventh year; where among other things we meet with theſe words: R. Simeon ben Lachiſh ſaith, That he is freed (from thoſe Laws) who ſows his ſeed by the Sea, טרשים עג" סלעים עג" פטרה עג" Upon rocks, Shelves, and rocky places. Theſe words are ſpoken according to the reaſon and nature of the land of Iſrael, which was very rocky, and yet thoſe places that were ſo, were not altogether unfit for tillage.

VERS. VII.

Ἄλλα ἃ ἔπεσεν ἐπὶ τὰς ἀκάνθας. Others fell among thorns.

HERE the diſtinction comes into my mind, of שדה לבן a white field, that is, which is all ſowen; and of שדה אילן a woody field, that is, in which trees and buſhes grow here and there: Concerning which, ſee the Tract d Sheviith. So there is very frequent mention, in the Talmudiſts, of מלבנות Beds, in fields and vineyards, ערוגות which ſpeaks the ſame thing. f And of קרחה בשדה Baldneſs in a field: that is, when ſome places are left not ſowen, and ſome places, lying between are. g

VERS. VIII.

Ἓν δὲ καρπὸν, ὃ μὲν ἑκατὸν, &c. And brought forth fruit, ſome an hundred, &c.

THESE words are ſpoken according to the fruitfulneſs of the land of Iſrael; concerning which the Talmudiſts ſpeak much, and hyperbolically enough: which nevertheleſs they confeſs to be turned long ſince, into miſerable barrenneſs; but are dimſighted as to the true cauſe of it.

h Hieroſ. Peah. fol. 20. 1, 2.

h They treat of this matter, and various ſtories are produced, which you may ſee: we will only mention theſe two.

R. Jochanan ſaid, The worſt fruit which we eat, in our youth, excelled the beſt which we now eat in our old age: for in his days the World was changed.

R. Chaijah bar Ba ſaid סאה ארבלית The Arbelite buſhel formerly yelded a buſhel of flower, a buſhel of meal, a buſhel of bran, and a buſhel of courſe bran, and a buſhel of courſer bran yet, and a buſhel of the courſeſt bran alſo: but now, one buſhel ſcarcely comes from one buſhel.

VERS. XIII.

Βλέποντες οὐ βλέπωσι, &c. They ſeeing ſee not.

HERE you may obſerve this people to have been given up to a reprobate mind, and a ſpirit of deep ſleep, now a great while before the death of Chriſt; Which being obſerved, the ſenſe of the Apoſtle will more eaſily appear, Rom. XI. where theſe very words are repeated. If you there ſtate aright the rejection of that people, you will underſtand more clearly the Apoſtle, concerning their Call, which is there handled. Phariſaiſm and the ſotiſhneſs of traditions had now a good while ago thrown them into blindneſs, ſtupidity, and hardneſs of heart; and that for ſome Ages, before Chriſt was born: but when the Goſpel came, the Lord had his gleanings among them, and there were ſome that beleived, and unto whom the participation of the promiſes was granted: concerning them the Apoſtle ſpeaks in that Chapter: See ver. 5. Ἐν τῷ νῦν καιρῷ λεῖμμα κατ' ἐκλογὴν, &c. At this preſent time there is a remnant according to election, &c. which we have obſerved before, at Chap. III. ver. 7.

i Kilaim, cap. 1, hal. 1.

זונין Zunin, in Talmudic language החטים והשעורין אינן כלאים זה בזה i Wheat and Zunin are not ſeeds of different kinds. Where the Gloſs is this זונין is a kind of Wheat, which is changed in the earth, both as to its form, and to its nature. By the beſt Lexicographers, it is rendred Zizania, in Latine.

So

So that, that field in this Parable, was ſown by the Lord with good wheat, by the Enemie with bad and degenerate wheat; but all of it was ſowen with wheat, one, or the other. Theſe words do not ſo barely mean good and bad men, as good and bad Chriſtians; both diſtinguiſhed from other men, (namely, from Heathens) as wheat is diſtinguiſhed from other ſeeds: but they are diſtinguiſhed alſo among themſelves, as good wheat is diſtinguiſhed from that which is degenerate. So Chap. XXV. All thoſe ten women expecting the Bridegroom are Vigins, but are diſtinguiſhed into Wiſe and fooliſh.

VERS. XXXII.

Ὃ μικρότερον μὲν ἐστι πάντων τῶν σπερμάτων, &c. Which indeed is the leaſt of all ſeeds, &c.

HENCE it is paſſed into a common proverb, כזרע חרדל According to the quantity of a grain of muſtard: and כטיפת חרדל According to the quantity of a little drop of muſtard, very frequently uſed by the Rabbins, when they would expreſs the ſmalleſt thing, or the moſt diminutive quantity.

h There was a ſtalk of muſtard in Sichin, from which ſprang out three boughs: of which, one was broke off; and covered the tent of a potter, and produced three Cabes of muſtard. R. Simeon ben Calapha ſaid, A ſtalk of muſtard was in my field, into which I was wont to climb, as men are wont to climb into a fig tree.

Εἰς ἀλεύρου σάτα τρία. In three (ſata) meaſures of meal.

THAT is, In an Epha of meal. Exod XVI. 36. Now an Omer is the tenth part of an Epha. The Chaldee reads, חד מן עסרא בחלת סאין The tenth part of three Sata. The LXX reads Δέκατον τῶν τριῶν μέτρων, The tenth part of three Meaſures. And Ruth, II. 17. It was as an Epha of Barly. Where the Targum reads, כחלת סאין סעורין As it were three Sata of Barly.

VERS. LII.

Ἐκβάλλει ἐκ τοῦ θησαυροῦ αὐτοῦ καινὰ καὶ παλαιά. Bringeth forth out of his Treaſury, things new and old.

THESE words are ſpoken according to the dialect of the Schools, where the Queſtion was not ſeldom ſtarted, What wine, What corn, or fruits were to be uſed in the Holy things, and in ſome Rites; new or more old, namely of the preſent year, or the years paſt, [חדש או ישן] But now, a thrifty man provident of his own affairs, was ſtored both with the one and the other, prepared for either, which ſhould be required. So it becomes a Scribe of the Goſpel, to have all things in readineſs, to bring forth according to the condition and nature of the thing, of the place, and of the hearers. Do ye underſtand all theſe things, ſaith Chriſt, both the things which I have ſaid, and why I have ſaid them? So, a Scribe of the Goſpel ought to bring forth, &c.

VERS. II.

Οὗτός ἐστιν Ἰωάννης, &c. This is John, &c.

WAS not Herod, of the Sadducean faith? For that which is said by Matthew, Beware of the leaven of the Phariſees and Saducees, Chap. XVI. 6. is rendred by Mark, Beware of the leven of the Phariſees and of the leaven of Herod. Chap. VIII. 15. that is, Of their doctrine.

If therefore Herod embraced the doctrine of the Sadducees, his words, This is John the Baptiſt, he is riſen from the dead, ſeem to be extorted from his conſcience, pricked with the ſting of horror and guilt, as though the image and ghoſt of the Baptiſt, but newly butchered by him, were before his eyes: So that his mind is under horror, and forgetting his Sadduciſm, groaning, and trembling he acknowledgeth the Reſurrection of the dead, whether he will or no,

Or let it be ſuppoſed, that with the Phariſees he owned the Reſurrection of the dead; yet certainly it was unuſual for them, that confeſſed it, to dream of the reſurrection of one, that was but newly dead: they expected there ſhould be a reſurrection of the dead hereafter; but this, which Herod ſpeaks, beleives, and ſuſpects, is a great way diſtant from that doctrin, and ſeems indeed to have proceeded from a conſcience touched from above.

Γενεσίων δὲ ἀγομένων τοῦ Ἡρῴδου. And when Herods birth day was kept.

Ὠρχήσατο ἡ θυγάτηρ, &c. The daugter of Herodias danced.

Not ſo much out of lightneſs, as according to the cuſtom of the Nation, namely, to expreſs joy and to celebrate the day. The Jews were wont, in their public and more than ordinary rejoycings, and alſo in ſome of their holy feſtivals, to expreſs their cheerfulneſs by leaping and dancing. Omitting the examples which occur in the Holy Bible, it is reported by the Fathers of the Traditions, that the chief part of the Mirth in the feaſt of Tabernacles conſiſted in ſuch kind of dancing: The chief men, the aged, and the moſt religious dancing in the Court of the women, and by how much the more vehemently they did it, ſo much the more commendable it was. d The geſture therefore or motion of the girle that danced took not ſo much with Herod, as her mind and affection: namely, becauſe hereby ſhe ſhewed honour towards his Birth day, and love and reſpect towards him, and joy for his life and health: from whom indeed Herod had little deſerved ſuch things, ſince he had deprived her father Philip of his wife, and defiled her Mother with unlawful wedlock, and continual inceſt.

VERS. XX.

Ἀπεκεφάλισε τὸν Ἰωάννην. He beheaded John.

Joſephus relate, That John was impriſoned by Herod in Macherus, Ὑποψίᾳ τῇ Ἡρώδου δεσμῷ εἰς τὸν Μαχαιροῦντα πεμφθείς. g Through the Suſpition of Herod he was ſent priſoner to Macherus. Now h Macherus was the utmoſt bounds of Perea. i And Perea was within Herods Juriſdiction. But now if John lay priſoner there, when the Decree went out againſt his life, the Executioner muſt have gone a long journey, and which could ſcarcely be performed in two days from Tiberias, where the Tyrants Court was, to execute that bloody Command. So that that horrid diſh, the head of the venerable Prophet, could not be preſented to the Maid but ſome days after the celebration of his Birth day.

g Antiq. lib 18. cap. 7.
h Id. de B. II. lib. 3. cap. 4.
i Id. de Bell. lib. 2. cap. 9.

The time of his beheading we find out by thoſe words of the Evangeliſt John, But now the Paſsover was nigh, by reaſoning after this manner: It may be concluded without all controverſie, that the Diſciples, as ſoon as they heard of the death of their Maſter, and buried him, betook themſelfs to Chriſt, relating his ſlaughter, and giving him caution, by that Example, to take care of his own ſafty. He hearing of it paſſeth over into the deſert of Bethſaida, and there he miraculouſly feeds five thouſand men, when the Paſsover was now at hand, as John relates, mentioning that ſtory with the reſt of the Evangeliſts. Therefore we ſuppoſe the beheading of the Baptiſt was a little before the Paſsover, when he had now been in durance half a year, as he had freely preached by the ſpace of half a year before his impriſoment.

VERS. XIII.

Ἀνεχώρησεν ἐκεῖθεν ἐν πλοίῳ εἰς ἔρημον τόπον, &c. He departed thence by ſhip into a deſert place, &c.

THAT is from l Capernaum into the deſert of Bethſaida, which is rendred by m John, Ἀπῆλθεν πέραν τῆς θαλάσσης, He went over the Sea. Which is to be underſtood properly, namely, from Galilee into Perea. The Chorographical Maps have placed Bethſaida in Galilee, on the ſame coaſt on which Capernaum is alſo; ſo alſo Commentators feign to themſelves a Bay of the Sea only coming between theſe two Cities, which was our opinion once alſo with them: But at laſt we learned of Joſephus that Bethſaida was ἐν τῇ ἄνω Γαυλανιτικῇ, in the upper Gaulanitis, (which we obſerve elſwhere) on the Eaſt-coaſt of the Sea of Genneſaret in Perea.

m John, VI. 1.

Ἠκολούθησαν αὐτῷ πεζῇ. They followed him on foot.

From hence Interpreters argue, that Capernaum and Bethſaida lay not on different ſhores of the Sea, but on the ſame; for how elſe, ſay they, could the multitude follow him afoot? Very well, ſay I, paſſing Jordan near Tiberias, whoſe ſituation I have elſwhere ſhewn to be at the efflux of Jordan out of the Sea of Galilee. They followed him a foot, ἀπὸ τῶν πόλεων, From the Cities, ſaith our Evangeliſt: Now there were Cities of ſome note very near Capernaum, Tarichea on one ſide, Tiberias on the other. Let it be granted, that the multitude travelled out of theſe Cities after Chriſt; the way by which they went a foot was at the Bridg of Jordan in Chammath; that place was diſtant a mile, or ſomething leſs from Tiberias, and from Capernaum three miles, or thereabouts. Paſſing Jordan they went along by the coaſt of Magdala, and after that through the Country of Hippo: now Magdala was diſtant one mile from Jordan, Hippo two; and after Hippo was Bethſaida, at the Eaſt-ſhore of the Sea; and after Bethſaida was a Bay of the Sea thruſting out it ſelf ſomewhat into the land, and from thence was the deſert of Bethſaida. When therefore therefore they returned back from thence, he commands his Diſciples to get into a ſhip, and to go to Bethſaida, while he ſent the multitude away, whence he would afterwards follow them on foot, and would ſail with them thence to Capernaum.

VERS. XVII.

Δύο ἰχθύας. Two fiſhes.

WHAT kind of fiſh they were, we do not determine. That they were brought hither by a boy to be ſold, together with the five loaves, we may gather from John, Chap. VI. 9. The Talmudiſts diſcourſe very much of מליח Salt-fiſh. I render the word Salt-fiſh upon the credit of the Aruch: he citing this Tradition out of n Beracoth, הביאו לפניו מליח Do they ſet before him firſt ſomething ſalt, and with it a morſel? He bleſſeth over the ſalt-meat, and omits (the bleſſing) over the morſel, becauſe the morſel is, as it were an Appendix to it. מליח The Salt-meat, ſaith he, is to be underſtood of fiſh, as the Tradition teacheth, That he that vows abſtinence from ſalt things, is reſtrained from nothing but from ſalt-fiſh. Whither theſe were ſalt-fiſh, it were a ridiculous matter to attempt to determine; but if they were, the manner of bleſſing which Chriſt uſed, is worthy to be compared with that which the Tradition now alledged commands.

VERS. XX.

Καὶ ἔφαγον πάντες, καὶ ἐχορτάσθησαν. And they all did eat and were filled.

SO סעורה eating, or a repaſt after food, is defined by the Talmudiſts, namely, When they eat their fill. o Rabh ſaith, כל סעורה שאין בה מלח אינה סעורה All eating, where ſalt is not, is not eating. The Aruch citing theſe words, for מלח ſalt, reads מליח ſomething ſeaſoned, and adds, It is no eating, becauſe they are not filled.

VERS. XXII.

Καὶ εὐθέως ἠνάγκασε τοὺς μαθητὰς, &c. And immediately he compelled his diſciples, &c.

THE reaſon of this compulſion is given by p St. John, namely, becauſe the people, ſeeing the miracle, were ambitious to make him a King: perhaps that the Diſciples might not conſpire to do the ſame, who as yet dreamed too much of the Temporal and Earthly Kingdom of the Meſſias.

VERS. XXV.

THAT is, after Cock-crowing: The Jews acknowledg only three Watches of the night; for this with them was the third, אשמורת שליש הא של לילה, The Watch is the third part of the night. Thus the Gloſs upon the place now cited. See alſo the Hebrew Commentators upon Judg. VII. 19. Not that they divided not the night into four parts, but that they eſteemed the fourth part, or the Watch, not ſo much for the night as for the morning. So Mark XIII. 35. that ſpace after Cock-crowing is called πρωΐ, the Morning. See alſo Exod. XIV. 24. There were therefore, in truth, four Watches of the night, but only three of deep night. VERS. II.

Παραβαίνει τὴν παράδοσιν τῶν πρεσβυτέρων. Why do they tranſgreſs the Tradition of the Elders?

HOW great a value they ſet upon their Traditions, even above the Word of God, appears ſufficiently from this very place, ver. 6. out of infinite examples, which we meet with in their Writings, we will produce one place only, חביבים דברי סופרים מדברי תורה a The words of the Scribes are lovely, above the words of the Law; for the words of the Law are weighty and light, but the words of the Scribes are all weighty. a Hieroſ. Berac. fol. 3. 2.

He that ſhall ſay, There are no Phylacteries, tranſgreſſing the words of the Law, is not guilty; but he that ſhall ſay, there are five Totaphoth, adding to the words of the Scribes, he is guilty.

חמורים דברי קונים מדברי נביאים: The words Πρεσβυτέρων, of the Elders, are weightier than the words of the Prophets.

A Prophet and Πρεσβύτερος, an Elder, to what are they likened? To a King ſending two of his ſervants into a Province; of one he writes thus, Unleſs he ſhew you my Seal, believe him not: Of the other thus, Although he ſhews you not my Seal, yet believe him. Thus it is written of the Prophet, He ſhall ſhew thee a ſign or a miracle; but of the Elders thus, According to the Law which they ſhall teach thee, &c. But enough of Blaſphemies.

Οὐ γὰρ νίπτονται τὰς χεῖρας αὐτῶν, &c. For they waſh not their hands, &c.

b The undervaluing of the waſhing of hands is ſaid to be among thoſe things for which the Sanhedrin Excommunicates: and therefore that R. Eliazar ben Hazar was Excommunicated by it, שפקפק בנטילת ידים Becauſe he undervalued the waſhing of hands; and that when he was dead, by the command of the Sanhedrin, a great ſtone was laid upon his Bier. Whence you may learn, ſay they, that the Sanhedrin ſtones the very Coffin of every Excommunicate perſon that dies in his Excommunication. b In Bab Bitrac. fol. 46. 2.

It would require a juſt volume, and not a ſhort Commentary, or a running Pen, to lay open this myſtery of Phariſaiſm; concerning waſhing of hands, and to diſcover it in all its niceties, let us gather theſe few paſſages out of infinite numbers.

I. נטילת ידים וטבילתן מדברי סופרים c The waſhing of hands and the plunging of them is appointed by the words of the Scribes. But, by whom, and when, it is doubted. Some aſcribe the inſtitution of this Rite to Hillel and Shammai, others carry it back to Ages before them. d Hillel and Shammai decreed concerning the waſhing of hands. R. Joſi ben Rabbi Bon, in the name of R. Levi, ſaith, That Tradition was given before, but they had forgotten it: theſe ſecond ſtand forth and appoint according to the mind of the former. c Maimon. in Mikvaoth, cap. 11. d Hieroſ. Schab. fol. 3. 4.

II. e Although it was permitted to eat unclean meats, and to drink unclean drinks; yet the ancient Religious eat their common food in cleanneſs, and took care to avoid uncleanneſs all their days, and they were called Phariſees. And this is a matter of the higheſt ſanctity, and the way of the higheſt Religion, namely, that a man ſeparate himſelf, and go aſide from the vulgar, and that he neither touch them, nor eat, nor drink with them: for ſuch ſeparation conduceth to the purity of the body from evil works, &c. Hence that definition of a Phariſee which we have produced before, פרושין אוכלין חולין בטהרה The Phariſees eat their common food in cleanneſs: and the Phariſaical Ladder of Heaven, f Whoſoever hath his ſeat in the land of Iſrael, and eateth his common food in cleanneſs, and ſpeaks the holy language, and recites his Phylacteries morning and evening, let him be confident that he ſhall obtain the life of the world to come. e Maimon. in טומאת אוכלין f Hieroſ. in the place above.

III. Here that diſtinction is to be obſerved between מאכלות אסורות forbidden meats, and אוכלין טמאין unclean meats. Of both Maimonides writ a proper Tract. Forbidden meats, ſuch as Fat, Blood, Creatures unlawful to be eaten, Levit. II. were by no means to be eaten: but Meats unclean in themſelves were lawful indeed to be eaten, but contracted ſome uncleanneſs elſwhere; it was lawful to eat them, and it was not lawful; or, to ſpeak as the thing indeed is, they might eat them by the Law of God, but by the Canons of Phariſaiſm, they might not,

IV. The diſtinction alſo between טמא unclean, and פסול profane, or polluted, is to be obſerved. Rambam, in his Preface to Toharoth, declares it.

פסול ענינו שלא יטמא זולתו Profane or polluted denotes this, that it does not pollute another beſide it ſelf. For every thing which uncleanneſs invades, ſo that it becomes unclean, but renders not another thing unclean, is called פסול profane. And hence it is ſaid, of every one that that eats unclean meats, or drinks unclean drinks, נפסלה גוייתו That his body is polluted: but he pollutes not another. Note that, the body of the eater is polluted by unclean meats. To which you may add that which follows in the ſame Maimonides in the place before alledged. Separation from the common people, &c. conduces to the purity of the body from evil works; the purity of the body conduceth to the ſanctity of the ſoul from evil affections: the ſanctity of the ſoul conduces unto likeneſs to God, as it is ſaid, And ye ſhall be ſanctified, and ye ſhall be holy, becauſe I the Lord that ſanctifie you, am holy. Hence you may more clearly perceive the force of Chriſts confutation, which we have, ver. 17, 18, 19, 20.

V. They thought that clean food was polluted by unclean hands, and that the hands were polluted by unclean meats. You would wonder at this Tradition g. Unclean meats and unclean drinks do not defile a man, if he touch them not, but if he touch them with his hands, then his hands become unclean: if he handle them with both hands, both hands are defiled; if he touch them with one hand only, one hand only is defiled.

g Rambam in the place before.

VI. This care therefore laid upon the Phariſee Sect, that meats ſhould be ſet on free, as much as might be, from all uncleanneſs: but eſpecially ſince they could not always be ſecure of this, that they might be ſecure that the meats were not rendred unclean by their hands. Hence were the waſhings of them, not only when they knew them to be unclean, but alſo when they knew it not.

Rambam in the Preface to the Tract ידים of hands, hath theſe words, If the hands are unclean by any uncleanneſs, which renders them unclean; or, if it be hid from a man, and he knows not that he is polluted; yet he is bound to waſh his hands in order to eating his common food, &c.

VII. To theſe moſt rigid Canons they added alſo Bugbears and Ghoſts to affright them. מילתא דשיבתא הוה: h It was a buſineſs of Shibta. Where the Gloſs is, Shibta was one of the Demons who hurt them that waſh not their hands before meat. The Aruch writes thus, Shibta is an evil ſpirit which ſits upon mens hands in the night: and if any touch his food with unwaſhen hands, that ſpirit ſits upon that food, and there is danger from it.

h Bab. Tzanith, fol 20. 2.

Let theſe things ſuffice as we paſs along, it would be infinite to purſue all that is ſaid of this rite and ſuperſtition. Of the quantity of water ſufficient for this waſhing, of the waſhing of the hands, and of the plunging of them, of the firſt and ſecond water, of the manner of waſhing, of the time, of the order when the number of thoſe that ſat down to meat exceeded five, or did not exceed, and other ſuch like niceties; read, if you have leiſure, and if the toyl and nauſeouſneſs of it do not offend you, the Talmudick Tract ידים of hands, Maimonides upon the Tract מקואות Lavers, and i Bab. Beracoth, and this Article indeed is inſerted through the whole volume entitled טהרות cleanneſs. Let this diſcourſe be ended with this Canon, k For a cake, and for the waſhing of hands, let a man walk as far as four miles.

Δῶρον, ὃ ἐὰν ὠφεληθῇς ἐμοῦ ὠφεληθῇς, &c. It is a gift, by whatſoever thou mighteſt be profited by me, &c.

I. BEſide the Law alledged by Chriſt, Honour thy father and thy mother, &c. they acknowledg this alſo for Law, בן מאביל אביו ומשקה מלביש וכו' l A ſon is bound to provide his father meat and drink, to cloth him, to cover him, to lead him in and out, to waſh his face, hands, and feet. Yea, that goes higher, m A ſon is bound to nouriſh his father, yea to beg for him. Therefore it is no wonder if theſe things which are ſpoken by our Saviour, are not found verbatim in the Jewiſh Pandect; for they are not ſo much alledged by him, to ſhew that it was their direct deſign to baniſh away all reverence and love towards parents, as to ſhew how wicked their Traditions were, and into what ungodly conſequences they oftentimes fell. They denied not directly the nouriſhing of their parents, nay, they commanded it, they exhorted to it; but conſequently by this Tradition they made all void. They taught openly indeed that a father was to be made no account of in compariſon of a Rabbin that taught them the Law n; but they by no means openly aſſerted that parents were to be neglected, yet openly enough they did, by conſequence drawn from this fooliſh and impious Tradition.

II. One might readily comment upon this clauſe, Δῶρον, It is a gift (or, as Mark Κορβᾶν, It is Corban) by whatſoever thou mayſt be profited by me, if he have read the Talmudick Tracts Nedarim and Nazir, where the diſcourſe is of Vows and Oaths; and the phraſe, which is before us, ſpeaks a vow or a form of ſwearing.

I. Vows were diſtinguiſhed into two ranks, נדרי הקדש Vows of conſecration, and נדרי איסור Vows of obligation, or, of prohibition, A vow of conſecration was, when any thing was devoted to holy uſes, namely, to the uſe of the Altar or the Temple: as when a man by a vow, would dedicate this or that for ſacrifice, or to buy wood, ſalt, wine, &c.

for the Altar: or לברק דבירת For the reparation of the Temple, &c. נדר איסור A vow of obligation or prohibition was, when a man bound himſelf, by a vow, from this or that thing, which was lawful in it ſelf, As that he would not eat, that he would not put on, that he would not do this or that, &c.

2. This went for a noted Axiom among them כל כינוי נדרים כנדרים o All Epithites of vows are as the vows themſelves. They added certain ſhort forms, by which they ſignified a vow, and which carried with it the force of a vow, as if the thing were ſpoken out in a larger periphraſis, as for Examples, p If one ſhould ſay to his neighbour קונם קונה קונם Konem, Konah, Kones, Behold, theſe are Epithites of a thing devoted unto ſacred uſes.

p Ibid. Hal. 2.

The word קונם Konem, Rambam thus explains כהקדש יהא עלי q Let it be upon me as a thing devoted. So alſo R. Niſſim, r Konem, Koneh, are words of devoting.

q In Hab. Bar. fol. 51. 1.

r In Nedarim, cap. 1.

We produced before at Chap. V. ver. 33. ſome forms of Oaths, which were only Aſſertive; theſe under our hands are Votive alſo. In the place from Beracoth, juſt now alledged, one ſaith, קונם היין שאני טועם שהיין קשה לבני מעים Let the wine be Konem, which I ſhall taſt, for wine is hard to the bowels: that is, let the wine which I taſte be as devoted wine; as though he had ſaid, I vow that I will not taſt wine. To which others anſwered, Is not old wine good for the bowels? Then he held his peace.

III. But above all ſuch like forms of vowing the word קרבן Κορβᾶν, Corban was plaineſt of all, which openly ſpeaks a thing devoted and dedicated to ſacred uſe. And the Reader of thoſe Tracts which we have mentioned ſhall obſerve theſe forms frequently to occur, קונם שאני נהנה לך, and קרבן שאני נהנה לך Let it be Konem, whereby I am profitable to thee, and, let it be Corban whereby I am profitable to thee. Which words ſound the very ſame thing, unleſs I am very much miſtaken, with the words before us, Let it be Κορβᾶν, Corban, or, Δῶρον, a gift, by whatſoever thou maiſt be profited by me.

Which words, that they may be more clearly underſtood, and that the plain and full ſenſe of the place may be diſcovered, let theſe things be conſidered.

Firſt, That the word Δῶρον is rather to be rendred, Let it be a gift, than, It is a gift. For Konem and Corban, as we have noted, ſignified not היה כהקדש It is as ſomething devoted, but יהא כהקדש Let it be as ſomething devoted. And he of whom we had mention before, who ſaid קונם היין שאני טועם meant not, The wine which I ſhall taſt, is as ſomething devoted, but, Let whatſoever wine I ſhall taſt, be as ſomething devoted: that is, To me let all wine be devoted, and not to be taſted.

Secondly, This form of ſpeech קרבן שאני נהנה לך Δῶρον, ὃ ἐὰν ἐξ ἐμοῦ ὠφεληθῇς, A gift by whatſoever thou maiſt be profited by me, does neither argue that he who thus ſpake, devoted his goods to ſacred uſes, nor obliged him (according to the Doctrine of the Scribes) to devote them; but only reſtrain'd him by an obligation from that thing, for the denying of which he uſed ſuch a form; that is, from helping him by his goods, to whom he thus ſpake. He might help others with his wealth, but him he might not.

Thirdly, The words are brought in, as though they were pronounced with indignation; as if when the needy Father required food from his Son, he ſhould anſwer in anger and with contempt, Let it be as a thing devoted, whatſoever of mine may profit thee. But now, things that were devoted were not to be laid out upon common uſes.

Fourthly, Chriſt not only cites the Law, Honour thy Father and Mother, but adds this alſo, Ὁ κακολογῶν πατέρα ἢ μητέρα, He that curſeth Father or Mother. But now there was no κακολογία, curſing here at all; if the Son ſpoke truly and modeſtly, and as the thing was; namely, that all his Eſtate was devoted before.

Fifthly, Therefore although theſe words ſhould have been ſpoken by the Son irreverently, wrathfully and inhumanely towards his Father, yet ſuch was the folly together with the impiety of the Traditional Doctrine in this caſe, which pronounced the Son ſo obliged by theſe his words, that it was lawful by no means to ſuccour his needy Father. He was not at all bound by theſe words to dedicate his Eſtate to ſacred uſes, but not to help his Father he was inviolably bound. O excellent Doctrine and Charity!

Sixthly, The words of the verſe, therefore may thus be rendred, without any addition put between, which many Interpreters do: Whoſoever ſhall ſay to his Father or Mother, Let it be a (devoted) gift in whatſoever thou maiſt be helped by me: then let him not honour his Father and Mother at all.

VERS. XI.

Κοινοῖ τὸν Ἄνθρωπον. Defileth the man.

OR, maketh him common, ſo the word פוסל ſeems to be rendred in the Phariſaic Idiotiſm, as I may ſo ſpeak; becauſe they eſteemed defiled men for common and vulgar men: on the contrary, a religious man among them is יחיד A ſingular man. In Act. X. 14.

X. 14. Κοινὸν ἢ ἀκάθαρτον, Common or unclean, ſeem to ſpeak the ſame thing with פסול או טמא among the Talmudiſts.

VERS. XX.

Ἀνίπτοις Χερσί. With unwaſhen hands.

HE ſaith not, with unclean hands, but unwaſhen; becauſe as we ſaid before, they were bound to waſh, although they were not conſcious that their hands were unclean. In Mark it is Κοιναῖς χερσὶ. With common, or, defiled hands, Mark VII. 2. Which ſeem to be called by the Talmudiſts, Impure hands, meerly becauſe not waſhed. Judg from that which is ſaid in the Tract Challah: s A cake is owing out of that dough which they knead with the juice of fruits. ונאכלת בידים מסובאות And it is eaten with unclean hands.

VERS. XXII.

Γυνὴ Χαναναία. A woman of Canaan.

IN Mark it is, Ἑλληνὶς Συροφοινισσα τῷ γένει, A Greek woman, a Syrophenician by Nation? Chap. VII. 26.

I. Χαναναία, of Canaan. It is worthy obſerving, that the Holy Bible, reckoning up שבעה אומות The ſeven Nations which were to be deſtroyed by the Iſraelites, names the Perizzites, who were not at all recited among the Sons of Canaan, Gen. X. and the Canaanites as a particular Nation, when all the ſeven indeed were Canaanites. See Deut. VII. 1. Joſh. IX. 1. & XI. 3. Judg. III. 5, &c.

The reaſon of the latter, (with which our buſineſs is) is to be fetched thence, that Canaan himſelf inhabited a peculiar part of that (Northern) Country, with his firſt born Sons, Sidon and Heth, and thence the name of Canaanites was put upon that particular progeny, diſtinguiſhed from all his other Sons; and that Country was peculiarly called by the name of Canaan, diſtinctly from all the reſt of the land of Canaan. Hence Jabin the King of Hazor is called the King of Canaan, Judg. IV. 2. and the Kings of Tyre and Sidon, if I miſtake not, are called the Kings of the Hittites, 1 King. X. 29.

II. Ἑλληνὶς Συροφοινισσα, A Greek woman, a Syrophenician. Although Judea, and almoſt the whole World, had now a long while ſtooped under the yoak of the Romans, yet the memory of the Syro-grecian Kingdom, and the name of the Nation, was not yet vaniſhed. And that is worthy to be noted, בגולה אין מונין אלא למלכי יונים t In the captivity they compute the years only from the Kingdom of the Greeks. They ſaid before, u That the Romans for a hundred and fourſcore years ruled over the Jews before the deſtruction of the Temple; and yet they do not compute the times to that deſtruction, by the years of the Romans, but by the years of the Greeks. Let the Jews themſelves well conſider this, and the Chriſtians with them, who reckon the Roman for the fourth Monarchy in Daniel.

u Fol. 8. 2.

Therefore that woman that is here ſpoken of, to reduce all into a ſhort concluſion, was a Syro-grecian by Nation, a Phenician in reſpect of her habitation, and from thence called a woman of Canaan.

VERS. XXVI.

Τοῖς Κυναρίοις. To the Dogs.

BY this Title the Jews out of ſpite and contempt diſgraced the Gentiles, whoſe firſt care it was to hate, to mock, and to curſe all beſide themſelves. אומות עולם נמשלו ככלבים x The Nations of the world, (that is the Heathen) are likened to dogs; from the common ſpeech of the Nation, rather than from his own ſenſe, our Saviour uſes this expreſſion, to whom the Gentiles were not ſo hateful, and whoſe cuſtom was to ſpeak with the vulgar.

x Midr. Tillin. fol. 6. 3.

This ignominious Name like a ſtone caſt at the Heathen, at length fell upon their own heads; and that by the hand and juſtice of God directing it: for although they out of pride and contempt fixed that diſgraceful name upon the Gentiles, according to their very juſt deſert, the Holy Spirit recoiled it upon themſelves. VERS. XXXVI.

Εὐχαριστήσας ἔκλασε. He gave thanks and brake.

SEE y here the Tract Beracoth, where it is diſcourſed of the manner of giving thanks, when many eat together. שלשה שאכלו חייבי לזמן Three who eat together ought to give thanks together: that is, one gave thanks for the reſt (as the Gloſs writes) in the plural number, ſaying, Let us give thanks. So when there were ten, or an hundred, or a thouſand, or more, one gave thanks for all, and they anſwered after him Amen, or ſome words which he had recited. z

VERS. III.

Διακρίνειν τὸ σημεῖα τῶν καιρῶν ὑ δυνάσθε; Can ye not diſcern the ſigns of the Times?

THE Jews were very curious in obſerving the ſeaſons of the Heavens, and the temper of the Air.

a In the going out of the laſt day of the Feaſt of Tabernacles all obſerved the riſing of the ſmoak. If the ſmoak bended northward, the poor rejoyced, but the rich were troubled; becauſe there would be much rain the following year, and the fruits would be corrupted: if it bended Southward, the poor grieved, and the rich rejoyced; for then there would be fewer rains that year, and the fruit would be ſound: if Eaſtward, all rejoyced: if Weſtward, all were troubled. The Gloſs is, They obſerved this the laſt day of the Feaſt of Tabernacles, becauſe the day before the decree of their Judgment concerning the rains of that year was ſigned, as the Tradition is, In the Feaſt of Tabernacles they Judged concerning the rains.

b R. Acha ſaith, If any wiſe man had been in Zippor when the firſt rain fell, he might foretell the moiſtneſs of the year by the very ſmell of the duſt, &c.

b Hieroſ. Taanith, fol. 65 2.

But they were dimſighted at the ſigns of times, that is, at thoſe eminent ſigns which plainly pointed, as with the finger and by a viſible mark, that now thoſe times that were ſo much foretold and expected, even the days of the Meſſias, were at hand. As if he had ſaid, 'Can ye not diſtinguiſh, that the times of the Meſſias are come, by thoſe 'ſigns which plainly declare it? Do ye not obſerve Daniels weeks now expiring? Are 'ye not under a yoak, the ſhaking off of which ye have neither any hope at all, nor ex-'pectation to do? Do ye not ſee how the Nation is ſunk into all manner of wicked-'neſs? Are not Miracles done by me, ſuch as were neither ſeen nor heard before? 'Do ye not conſider an infinite multitude flowing in, even to a miracle, to the 'profeſſion of the Goſpel: and that the minds of all men are raiſed into a preſent ex-'pectation of the Meſſias? Strange blindneſs, voluntary, and yet ſent upon you from Heaven: your ſin and your puniſhment too! They ſee all things which may demon-ſtrate and declare a Meſſias; but they will not ſee.

VERS. VI.

Προσέχετε ἀπὸ τῆ ζύμης τῶν Φαρισαίων, &c. Beware of the leaven of the Phariſees, &c.

THERE were two things eſpecially, which ſeem to have driven the diſciples into a miſtaken interpretation of theſe words, ſo that they underſtood them of leaven properly ſo called.

I. That they had more ſeldom heard Leaven uſed for Doctrine. The Metaphorical uſe of it indeed was frequent among them in an ill ſenſe, namely, for evil affections, and the naughtineſs of the heart; but the uſe of it was more rare, if any at all, for evil doctrine.

Thus one prays: c Lord of Ages, it is revealed and known before thy face, that we would do thy will; but do thou ſubdue that which hinders: שאור שבעיסה ושעבוד מלכיות Namely, the leaven which is in the lump and the tyranny of (Heathen) Kingdoms. Where the Gloſs is thus, The leaven which is in the lump are evil affections, which leaven us in our hearts.

c Bab. Berac. fol. 17. 1.

כורש החמין: d Cyrus was leavened, that is, grew worſe. Sometimes it is uſed in a better ſenſe; the e Rabbins ſay, Bleſſed is that Judg who leaveneth his Judgment. But this d Id. Roſh Haſhanah, f. 3. 2.

e Kimchi in Eſai. cap. I. 17.

this is not to be underſtood concerning doctrine, but concerning deliberation in Judgment.

II. Becauſe very exact care was taken by the Phariſaical Canons, what leaven was to be uſed and what not: Diſputations occur here and there, whether Heathen leaven is to be uſed, and whether Cuthite leaven? f &c. With which caution the Diſciples thought that Chriſt armed them, when he ſpake concerning the leaven of the Phariſees: but withall they ſuſpected ſome ſilent reproof for not bringing bread along with them.

f See Hitroſ. Zebabb. fol. 3. 3, &c.

VERS. XIII.

Τίνα με λέγουσιν οἱ ἄνθρωποι εἶναι, τὸν υἱὸν τοῦ ἀνθρώπου; Whom do men ſay, that I, the ſon of man, am?

I. THAT phraſe or title, The ſon of man, which Chriſt very often gives himſelf, denotes not only his humanity, nor his humility, (for ſee that paſſage, Joh. V. 27. He hath given him Authority of executing Judgment, becauſe he is the Son of Man) but it beſpeaks the ſeed promiſed to Adam, the ſecond Adam: and it carried with it a ſilent confutation of a double ignorance and error among the Jews. 1. They knew not what to reſolve upon, concerning the original of the Meſſias, and how he ſhould riſe, whether he ſhould be of the living, as we noted before, the manner of his riſe being unknown to them; or whether, of the dead. This phraſe unties this knot and teaches openly that he, being a ſeed promiſed to the firſt man, ſhould ariſe and be born from the ſeed of the woman. 2. They dreamed of the earthly victories of the Meſſias, and of nations to be ſubdued by him, but this title, The Son of man, recalls their minds to the firſt promiſe, where the victory of the promiſed ſeed is the bruiſing of the Serpents head, not the ſubduing of Kingdoms by ſome warlike and earthly triumph.

II. When therefore the opinion of the Jews concerning the perſon of the Meſſias, what he ſhould be, was uncertain and wavering; Chriſt asketh, not ſo much whether they acknowledged him the Meſſias; as acknowledging the Meſſias, what kind of perſon they conceived him to be. The Apoſtles and the other Diſciples, whom he had gathered, and were very many, acknowledged him the Meſſias: yea thoſe blind men Chap. IX. ver. 27. had confeſſed this alſo: therefore that Queſtion had been needleſs, as to them, Do they think me to be the Meſſias? But that was needful, What do they conceive of me, the Meſſias? and to this the Anſwer of Peter has regard, Thou art Chriſt, the Son of the living God; as if he ſhould ſay, We knew well enough a good while ago that thou art the Meſſias; but as to the Queſtion, What kind of perſon thou art, I ſay, Thou art the Son of the living God. See what we note at Chap. XVII. ver. 54.

Therefore the word Τίνα, Whom, aſks not ſo much concerning the perſon, as concerning the quality of the perſon. In which ſenſe alſo is the word מי Who, in thoſe words, 1 Sam. XVII. 55. בן מי זה not, The Son of whom, but the Son of what kind of man, is this youth?

VERS. XIV.

Ἕτεροι δὲ Ἱερεμίαν. But others Jeremias,

THE reaſon why they name Jeremy only of all the Prophets, we give at Chap. XXVII. ver. 9. You obſerve, that recourſes is here made to the memory of the dead, from whom the Meſſias ſhould ſpring, rather than from the living: among other things perhaps this reaſon might perſwade them ſo to do, that that piety could not in thoſe days be expected in any one living as had ſhined out in thoſe deceaſed perſons (one of the Babylonian Gemariſts ſuſpects that Daniel raiſed from the dead, ſhould be the Meſſias.) And this perhaps perſwaded them further, becauſe they thought that the Kingdom of the Meſſias ſhould ariſe after the Reſurrection: and they, that were of this opinion, might be led to think, that the Meſſias himſelf was ſome eminent perſon among the Saints departed, and that he riſing again ſhould bring others with him.

VERS. XVII.

Σὰρξ καὶ αἷμα. Fleſh and Blood.

THE Jewiſh Writers uſe this form of ſpeech infinite times, and by it oppoſe men to God.

g If they were about to lead me לפני מלך בשר ודם Before a King of fleſh and blood, &c. but they are leading me before the King of Kings.

h A King of fleſh and blood forms his picture in a table, &c. the Holy bleſſed one, his, &c. This Phraſe occurrs five times in that one column. i The Holy Bleſſed God doth not,

g Bab. Btrac. fol. 28. 2. h Tanchum, fol. 12. 4. i Id. fol. 18. 3.

not, as fleſh and blood doth, &c. Fleſh and blood wound with one thing and heal with another: but the Holy Bleſſed one wounds and heals with one and the ſame thing. Joſeph was ſold for his dreams, and he was promoted by dreams.

VERS. XVIII.

Σὺ εἶ Πέτρος, &c. Thou art Peter, &c.

I. THERE is nothing, either in the Dialect of the Nation, or in reaſon, forbids us to think, that our Saviour uſed this very ſame Greek word; ſince ſuch Grecizings, were not unuſual in that Nation. But be it granted, (which is aſſerted more without controverſie) that he uſed the Syriac word; yet I deny, that he uſed that very word כיפא Cepha, which he did preſently after: but he pronounced it Cephas, after the Greek manner; or he ſpoke it כיפאי Cephai, in the adjective ſenſe, according to the Syriac, formation. For how, I pray, could he be underſtood by the Diſciples, or by Peter himſelf, if in both places he had retained the ſame word אנת כיפא Thou art a Rock, ועל כיפא And upon this Rock I will build my Church? It is readily anſwered, by the Papiſts, That Peter was the Rock. But let them tell me, why Matthew uſed not the ſame word in Greek, if our Saviour uſed the ſame word in Syriac. If he had intimated, that the Church ſhould be built upon Peter, it had been plainer, and more agreeable to the vulgar Idiom, to have ſaid, Thou art Peter, and upon thee I will build my Church.

II. The words concerning the Rock, upon which the Church was to be built, are evidently taken out of Eſay; Chap. XXVIII. 16. Which, the New Teſtament being interpreter in very many places, do moſt plainly ſpeak Chriſt. When therefore Peter, the firſt of all the Diſciples (from the very firſt beginning of the preaching of the Goſpel) had pronounced moſt clearly of the perſon of Chriſt, and had declared the Myſtery of the Incarnation, and confeſſed the Deity of Chriſt, the minds of the Diſciples are with good reaſon called back to thoſe words of Eſay, that they might learn to acknowledg, who that Stone was, that was ſet in Sion for a foundation never to be ſhaken; and whence it came to paſs, that that foundation remained ſo unſhaken; namely thence; that he was not a Creature, but God himſelf, the Son of God.

III. Thence therefore Peter took his ſurname, not that he ſhould be argued to be that Rock; but becauſe he was ſo much to be employed in building a Church upon a Rock; whether it were that Church, that was to be gathered out of the Jews, of which he was the chief Miniſter, or that of the Gentiles (concerning which the diſcourſe here is principally of) unto which he made the firſt entrance by the Goſpel.

VERS. XIX.

Καὶ δώσω σοι τὰς κλεῖς τ βασιλείας τῶν οὐρανῶν. And I will give thee the Kyes of the Kingdom of Heaven.

THAT is, Thou ſhalt firſt open the door of Faith to the Gentiles. He had ſaid, that he would build his Church to endure for ever, againſt which the gates of Hell ſhould not prevail, which had prevailed againſt the Jewiſh Church: and to thee, O Peter, ſaith he, I will give the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, that thou mayſt open a door for the bringing in the Goſpel to that Church. Which was performed by Peter in that remarkable ſtory concerning Cornelius, Act. X. And I make no doubt, that thoſe words of Peter reſpect theſe words of Chriſt, Act. XV. 7. Ἀφ' ἡμερῶν ἀρχαίων ὁ Θεὸς ἐν ἡμῖν ἐξελέξατο, διὰ τοῦ στόματός μου ἀκοῦσαι τὰ ἔθνη τὸν λόγον τοῦ Εὐαγγελίου, καὶ πιστεῦσαι. A good while ago God made choice among us, that the Gentiles ſhould hear the word of the Goſpel by my mouth, and believe.

Καὶ ὃ ἐὰν δήσῃς ὅπι τ γῆς, &c. And whatſoever thou ſhalt bind on earth, &c.
Καὶ ὃ ἐὰν λύσῃς ὅπι τ γῆς, &c. And whatſoever thou ſhalt looſe on earth, &c.

I. We believe the Keys were committed to Peter alone, but the power of binding and looſing to the other Apoſtles alſo, Ch. XVIII. 18.

II. It is neceſſary to ſuppoſe, that Chriſt here ſpake according to the Common people, or he could not be underſtood, without a particular Commentary, which is no where to be found.

III. But now To bind and looſe, a very uſual Phraſe, in the Jewiſh Schools, was ſpoken of things, not of perſons; which is here alſo to be obſerved in the Articles, Ὃ & Ὅσα, What, and Whatſoever, Chap. XVIII.

To theſe may be added, if need were, the frequent, (ſhall I ſay?) or infinite uſe of the phraſes, אסור ומותר Bound and Looſed, which we meet with thouſands of times over. But from theſe allegations the Reader ſees abundantly enough both the frequency, and the common uſe of this phraſe, and the ſenſe of it alſo; namely, firſt, that it is uſed in Doctrine, and in Judgments, concerning things allowed or not allowed in the Law. Secondly, that to bind is the ſame with, to forbid, or to declare forbidden. To think that Chriſt when he uſed the common phraſe, was not underſtood by his hearers, in the common and vulgar ſenſe, ſhall I call it a matter of laughter or of madneſs?

To this therefore do theſe words amount: When the time was come wherein the Moſaic Law, as to ſome part of it, was to be aboliſhed, and left off, and as to another part of it was to be continued and to laſt for ever, he granted Peter here, and to the reſt of the Apoſtles, Chap. XVIII. v. 18. a power to aboliſh or confirm what they thought good, and as they thought good; being taught this, and led by the Holy Spirit; as if he ſhould ſay, Whatſoever ye ſhall bind in the law of Moſes, that is, forbid; it ſhall be forbidden, the Divine Authority confirming it; and whatſoever ye ſhall looſe, that is, permit, or ſhall teach, that it is permitted and lawful, ſhall be lawful and permitted.

Hence they Bound, that is forbad, Circumciſion to the Believers; eating of things offered to Idols, of things ſtrangled, and of blood for a time, to the Gentiles, and that which they bound on earth was confirmed in Heaven. They looſed, that is, allowed Purification to Paul, and to four other Brethren, for the ſhunning of ſcandal, Act. XXI. 24. and in a word, by theſe words of Chriſt it was committed to them, the Holy Spirit directing, that they ſhould make Decrees concerning Religion, as to the uſe or rejection of Moſaic Rites and Judgments, and that either for a time, or for ever.

Let the words be applied by way of Paraphraſe to the matter that was tranſacted at preſent with Peter. I am about to build a Gentile Church, ſaith Chriſt, and to thee, O Peter, do I give the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, that thou maiſt firſt open the door of faith to them; but if thou askeſt by what Rule that Church is to be governed, when the Moſaic Rule may ſeem ſo improper for it, thou ſhalt be ſo guided by the Holy Spirit, that whatſoever of the Law of Moſes thou ſhalt forbid them, ſhall be forbidden; whatſoever thou granteſt them ſhall be granted, and that under a ſanction made in Heaven.

Hence in that inſtant when he ſhould uſe his Keys, that is, when he was now ready to open the Gate of the Goſpel to the Gentiles, Act. X. he was taught from Heaven, that the conſorting of the Jew with the Gentile, which before had been bound, was now looſed; and the eating of any Creature convenient for food was now looſed, which before had been bound; and he in like manner looſes both theſe.

Thoſe words of our Saviour, Joh. XX. 23. Whoſe ſins ye remit, they are remitted to them, for the moſt part are forced to the ſame ſenſe with theſe before us; when they carry quite another ſenſe. Here the buſineſs is of Doctrine only, not of Perſons; there of Perſons, not of Doctrine: Here of things lawful or unlawful in Religion to be determined by the Apoſtles, there of perſons obſtinate or not obſtinate, to be puniſhed by them, or not to be puniſhed.

As to Doctrine the Apoſtles were doubly inſtructed, 1. So long ſitting at the feet of their Maſter, they had imbibed the Evangelical Doctrine. 2. The Holy Spirit directing them, they were to determine concerning the Legal Doctrine and practice; being compleatly inſtructed and enabled in both, by the Holy Spirit deſcending upon them. As to the Perſons, they were endowed with a peculiar gift, ſo that the ſame ſpirit directing them, if they would retain and puniſh the ſins of any, a power was delivered into their hands of delivering to Satan, of puniſhing with diſeaſes, plagues, yea death it ſelf; which Peter did to Ananias and Saphira; Paul to Elymas, Hymeneus and Philetus, &c.

VERS. II.

Καὶ μετεμορφώθη. And was Transfigured.

WHEN Christ was Baptized, being now ready to enter upon his Evangelical Priesthood, he is sealed by a heavenly voice, for the High Priest, and is anointed with the Holy Spirit, as the High Priests were wont to be with holy oyl.

In his Transfiguration he is sealed for the High Priest: for mark, 1. How two of the greatest Prophets, Moses and Elias resort to him. 2. How to those words, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased, (which also were heard from Heaven at his Baptism) is added that Clause, Hear ye him; which compare with the words of Moses, concerning a Prophet to be raised up by God, Deut. XVIII. 19. Whosoever shall not hearken to my words which I shall put into his mouth, &c. 3. How the Heavenly voice went out of the Cloud that overshadowed them, when at his Baptism no such Cloud appeared. Here that is worthy observing, which some Jews note, and reason dictates, namely, That the Cloud of Glory, the Conductor of Israel departed at the death of Moses; for while he lived, that Cloud was the peoples guide in the Wilderness; but when he was dead, the Ark of the Covenant led them. Therefore as that Cloud departed at the death of Moses, that Great Prophet; so such a Cloud was now present at the Sealing of the Greatest Prophet. 4. Christ here shines with such a brightness, nay with a greater than Moses and Elias now glorified; and this both for the honour of his Person, and for the honour of his Doctrine; both which surpassed by infinite degrees the Persons and the Doctrines of both of them. When you recollect the face of Christ transfigured, shining with so great luster when he talked with Moses and Elias, acknowledg the Brightness of the Gospel above the cloudy obscurity of the Law and of the Prophets.

VERS. IV.

Ποιήσωμεν ὧδε τρεῖς σκηνὰς, &c. Let us make here three Tabernacles, &c.

THE Transfiguration of Christ was by night. Compare Luk. IX. 37. The form of his face and garments is changed, while he prays, and Moses and Elias came and discourse with him concerning his death, (it is uncertain how long) while as yet the Disciples that were present, were over-charged with sleep. When they awaked, O what a Spectacle had they! being afraid they observe and contemplate, they discover the Prophets; whom now departing Peter would detain, and being loth that so noble a Scene should be dispersed, made this Proposition, Let us make here three Tabernacles,&c. Whence he should know them to be Prophets, it is in vain to seek, because it is no where to be found; but being known, he was loth they should depart thence, being ravished with the sweetness of such society, however astonished at the terrour of the Glory; and hence those words which when he spake, he is said by Luke, Not to know what he said; and by Mark, Not to know what he should say; which are rather to be understood of the misapplication of his words, than of the sense of the words. He knew well enough that he said these words, and he knew as well for what reason he said them, but yet he knew not what he said, that is, he was much mistaken when he spake these words, while he believed that Christ, Moses and Elias would abide and dwell there together in Earthly Tabernacles.

VERS. V.

Ἔτι αὐτοῦ λαλοῦντος, ἰδοὺ νεφέλη, &c. While he yet spake, behold a cloud, &c.

MOses and Elias now turning their backs, and going out of the Scene, Peter speaks his words; and as he speaks them, when the Prophets were now gone, Behold a Cloud, &c. they had foretold Christ of his death, (such is the cry of the Law and of the Prophets, that Christ should suffer, Luk. XXIV. 44.) He Preaches his Deity to his Disciples, and the Heavenly voice seals him for the true Messias. See 2 Pet. I. 16, 17.

VERS.

VERS. X.

Τί οὖν οἱ Γραμματεῖς λέγουσιν, ὅτι Ἠλίαν δεῖ ἐλθεῖν πρῶτον; Why therefore say the Scribes, that Elias must first come?

I. IT would be an infinite task to produce all the passages out of the Jewish Writings, which one might, concerning the expected coming of Elias: We will mention a few things, ἐν παρόδῳ, in passing, which sufficiently speak out that vain expectation, and the ends also of his expected coming.

1. Let David Kimchi first be heard, upon those words of Malachi, Behold, I send you Elias the Prophet: God, saith he, shall restore the soul of Elias, which ascended of old, into Heaven, into a created body, like to his former body: for his first body returned to Earth, when he went up to Heaven, each Element to its own Element. But when God shall bring him to life, in the body, he shall send him to Israel, before the day of Judgment, which is the Great and Terrible day of the Lord: and he shall admonish both the fathers and the children together, to turn to God, and they that turn shall be delivered from the day of Judgment, &c. Consider whether the Eye of the Disciples looks, in the Question under our hands. Christ had commanded, in the verse before, Tell the Vision (of the Transfiguration) to no man, until the Son of man be risen from the dead. But now, although they understood not what the Resurrection from the dead meant, (which Mark intimates,) yet they roundly retort, Why therefore, say the Scribes, that Elias shall first come? That is, before there be a Resurrection and a day of Judgment: for as yet, they were altogether ignorant that Christ should rise. They believed with the whole Nation, that there should be a Resurrection, at the coming of the Messias.

2. Let Aben Ezra be heard in the second place. We find, saith he, that Elias lived in the days of Ahaziah the son of Ahab: we find also, that Joram the son of Ahab, and Jehoshaphat enquired of Elisha the Prophet; and there, it is written, This is Elisha the son of Shaphat, אשר יצק Who poured water upon the hands of Elijah. And this is a sign that Elias was first gone up into Heaven in a whirlwind: because it is not said, יוצק Who poureth water, but, Who poured. Moreover, Elisha departed not from Elijah, from the time that he first waited upon him, until Elias went up. And yet we find that after the death of Jehoshaphat, in the days of Ahaziah his son, It was written, And a letter came to him from Elijah the Prophet. And this proves, that he then writ and sent it; for, if it had been written before his Ascension, it would be said, A letter was found, or, brought to him, which Elias had left behind him. And it is without controversie, that he was seen in the days of our Holy Wise Men. God, of his Mercy hasten his Prophesie, and the times of his coming. So he, upon Mal. IV.

3. The Talmudists do suppose Elias keeping the Sabbath, in Mount Carmel. a Let not the Truma, saith one, of which it is doubted, whither it be clean or unclean, be burnt; lest Elias, keeping the Sabbath, in Mount Carmel, come and testifie of it on the Sabbath, that it is clean. a Hieros. Pesach. fol. 30. 2.

4. The Talmudical books abound with these and the like trifles. b If a man finds any thing that is lost, he is bound to declare it, by a publick outcry; but if the owners come not to ask for it, let him lay it up by him until Elias shall come. And, c If any find a Bill of Contract between his Country men, and knows not what it means, let him lay it up, until Elias shall come. b Maimon. in Gezelah, c. 13. c Bava Metzia, cap. 1. Hal. ult. &c.

5. That we be not tedious, it shall be enough to produce a few passages out of d Tract. Erubhin: Where, upon this subject, If any say, Behold I am a Nazarite, on the day wherein the Son of David comes, it is permitted to drink wine on the Sabbaths and feast days, it is disputed what day of the week Messias shall come and on what day Elias: where, among other things, these words occur, לא אתא אליהו מאתמול Elias came not yesterday: that is, the same day wherein he comes, he shall appear in publick; and shall not lie hid to day, coming yesterday. The Gloss, thus: If thou say'st, perhaps he shall come on the Eve of the Sabbath, and shall preach the Gospel, (יבשר) on the Sabbath: you may answer with that Text, Behold I send you Elias the Prophet, before the day of the Lord come; you may argue, that he shall preach on that very day in which he shall come. d Fol. 43. 2.

מובטח להן לישראל וגו' The Israelites are certain that Elias shall come, neither on the Sabbath Eves, nor on the Eves of the feast days. מפני טורח By reason of labour. And again, לא אתי אליהו בשבת Elias cometh not on the Sabbath day. Thus speak the Scholars of Hillel, e We are sure Elias will not come on the Sabbath, nor on a feast day. The Glossers give the Reason, Not on the Sabbath Eves, or the Eves of the feast days, by reason of labour; that is, by reason of the preparation for the Sabbath; namely, lest they should leave the necessaries for the Sabbath unfinished, to go to meet him: nor on the Sabbaths, by reason of labour in the Banquets; that they omit not those feastings and eat- e Hieros. Pesach. fol. 30. 2.

ings which were esteemed so necessary to the Sabbath, whilst they went out to meet Elias.

Let these three Observations, out of the Glossers upon the page cited, serve for a conclusion.

1. לפני ביאת בן דוד יבא אליהו לבשר Before the coming of the Son of David, Elias shall come to preach of him.

2. לא אתי משיח בחד בשבא Messias cometh not on the first day of the Sabbath, because Elias shall not come on the Sabbath. Whence it appears that Elias is expected the day before the Messias appeared.

3. הלא משיח בן יוסף יש לו לבא תחילה Is not Messias ben Joseph to come first?

II. We meet with numberless Stories in the Talmudists, concerning the apparitions of Elias: according to that which was said before by Aben Ezra, It is without controversie, that Elias was seen in the days of our wise men. There is no need of Examples, when it may not be so much doubted who of these wise men saw Elias, as who saw him not. For my part, I cannot esteem all those stories for mere Fables; but in very many of them I cannot but suspect Witchcrafts, and the appearances of Ghosts, which we also said before concerning the Bath Kol. For thus the Devil craftily deluded this Nation, willing to be deceived; and even the capacity of observing that the coming of the Messias was now past, was obliterated, when here and there, in this age and in the t'other his Forerunner Elias appeared, as if he intended hence to let them know, that he was yet to come.

VERS. II.

Καὶ ἀποκαταστήσει πάντα. And he shall restore all things.

f Bab. Kiddushin, fol 71. 1. Kimchi, in Zach. Chap. IX. g Tanchum, in Exod. I. &c.

THE Jews feign many things which Elias shall restore יטהר הממורים f He shall purifie the Bastards and restore them to the Congregation. He shall render to Israel the pot of Manna, the Viol of Holy oyl, the Viol of water; and there are some who say, the Rod of Aaron. g Which things, alas! how far distant are they from those which are spoken concerning the Office of Elias.

Ἀποκαταστήσει, He shall restore, or, make up, not into the former state, but into a better. There were Χρόνοι ἀποκαταστάσεως πάντων, Times of restitution of all things, determined by God, Acts III. 21. wherein all things were to be framed into a Gospel state and a state worthy of the Messias: A Church was to be founded, and the Doctrine of the Gospel dispersed, the hearts of the Fathers, the Jews to be united to the Sons, the Gentiles; and the hearts of the Sons, the Gentiles to the Fathers, the Jews: which work was begun by the Baptist, and finished by Christ and the Apostles. Which term, of the Restitution of all these, expiring, the Common-wealth of the Jews expired also, and the gifts of Revelation and Miracles, granted for this purpose, and so necessary to it, failed. However therefore ye have crucified Christ, saith Peter, in that place of the Acts now cited; yet God shall still send you Jesus Christ in the preaching of the Gospel, to fulfil these things. Him indeed, as to his person, the Heavens do contain, and shall contain, until all these things be perfected; Expect not therefore, with the erring Nation, his personal presence always on Earth: but he shall make up and constitute all things by us his Ministers, until the Terms determined and prefixed for the perfecting of this Restitution, shall come.

VERS. XV.

Σεληνιάζεται. He is Lunatick.

LUke IX. 39. Πνεῦμα λαμβάνει αὐτόν. A spirit taketh him, Mark IX. 17. Ἔχει πνεῦμα ἄλαλον, Hath a dumb spirit.

I. He that is skilled in the Talmudick Writings will here remember what things are said concerning חרש ושוטה A deaf and mad man, concerning whom there is so much mention in their Writings.

h Truma, cap. 1. Hal. 1. i Cholin, cap. 1. Hal. 1.

h There are five who do not pay the Trumah, but, if they do, their Trumah is no Trumah: חרש ושוטה The deaf and dumb, the lunatick, &c. i Any one is fit to sacrifice a Beast, except חרש ושוטה קטן A dumb and deaf, a lunatick and a child: and very many passages of this nature, &c. I have rendred חרש deaf and dumb, according to the sense of the Masters, who in the place first cited, do thus interpret the word, חרש concerning which the wise men speak, is he who neither heareth, nor speaketh. See there the Jerusalem Gemara, where, among other things, this occurs not unworthy our noting, That all the sons of R. Jochanan ben Gudgoda were חרשין deaf and dumb.

II. It

II. It was very usual to the Jews to attribute some of the more grievous diseases to evil spirits, specially those, wherein either the body was distorted, or the mind disturbed and tossed with a phrensie.

: מי שהיה רוח רעה מבעתתו אותו ואמר כשהתחיל בו החולי k If any one vexed with an evil Spirit shall say, when their disease did first invade him, write a Bill of Divorce for my wife, &c. k Maimon. in Gerushin, cap. 2.

: מי שאחזו קורדיקום l If any, whom Kordicus vexeth, say, Write a Bill of Divorce for my wife, &c. Kordicus, say the Glossers, is a Demon, which rules over those that drink too much new Wine. מאי קורדיקום What is Kordicus? Samuel saith, When new Wine out of the press hath caught any one. m Rambam, upon the place, hath these words, Kordicus is a disease generated from the repletion of the Vessels of the Brain, whereby the understanding is confounded, and it is a kind of Falling-sickness. Behold the same, a Demon and a disease! to which the Gemarists applied Exorcisms and a Diet. See n Bab. Gittin. l Gittin, cap. 7 Hal. 1. m Gemar. Bab. which see. n Fol. 67. 2.

o Shibta is an evil Spirit, who taking hold on the necks of infants, dries up and contracts their nerves. o Arach, in Shibta.

p He that drinks up double cups שרים ניזוק ע"י Is punished by the Devil. p Bab. Berac. fol. 51. 2.

From this Vulgar opinion of the Nation, namely, That Devils are the Authors of such kind of diseases, one Evangelist brings in the Father of this child, saying of him Σεληνιάζεται, He is lunatick, another, Ἔχει πνεῦμα, He hath a spirit. He had been dumb and deaf from his birth, to that misery was added a phrensie, or, a Lycanthropy, (which kind of disease it was not unusual with the Nation to attribute to the Devil) and here, in truth a Devil was present.

VERS. XVII.

Ὦ γενεὰ ἄπιστος καὶ διεστραμμένη, &c. O faithless and perverse generation, &c.

THE edge of these words is levelled especially against the Scribes, (See Mark IX. 14.) and yet the Disciples escaped not altogether untouched. Christ and his three prime Disciples being absent, this child is brought to the rest, to be healed: they cannot heal him, partly, because the Devil was really in him, partly, because this evil had adhered to him from his very birth. Upon this the Scribes insult and scoff at them and their Master. A faithless and perverse generation, which is neither overcome by Miracles, when they are done, and vilifie, when they are not done! The faith of the Disciples, (vers. 20.) wavered by the plain difficulty of the thing, which seemed impossible to be overcome, when so many evils were digested into one, deafness, dumbness, phrensie and possession of the Devil; and all these from the cradle.

VERS. XX.

Πίστιν ὡς κόκκον σινάπεως, &c. Faith as a grain of mustard seed, &c.

: כורע חרדל or, כטיפת חרדל As a seed of Mustard, or, As a drop of Mustard, in Talmudick Language. See Chap. XIII. vers. 23.

Ἐρεῖτε τῷ ὄρει τούτῳ, &c. Ye shall say to this mountain, &c.

See what we note, at Chap. XXI. vers. 21.

VERS. XXI.

Τοῦτο τὸ γένος οὐκ ἐκπορεύεται, εἰ μὴ ἐν προσευχῇ καὶ νηστείᾳ. This kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting.

IT is not much unlike this, which is said, : מפני רוח רעה יחיד רשאי לסגף את עצמו q By reason of an evil spirit a singular (or religious) man may afflict himself (with fastings.) q Bab. Taanith, fol. 22. 2.

VERS. XXIV.

Οἱ τὰ δίδραχμα λαμβάνοντες. They that receive the (Didrachma) tribute-money.

TWO things perswade me, that this is to be understood of the Half Shekel to be yearly paid into the Treasury of the Temple.

1. The

1. The word it ſelf whereby this tribute is called, Δίδραχμα. Concerning this, thus Joſephus writes, φόρον ἦ τοῖς ὅπῃ δύνατ' εἶεν Ἰουδαίοις ἐπέβαλε δύο δραχμὰς, ἕκαστον καλύσας ἀνὰ πᾶν ἑτῶς εἰς τὸ Καπετώλιον φέρειν, ὥσπερ πρότερον εἰς τὸν ἐν Ἱεροσολύμοις νεὼν συντέλειν. * He laid a tax upon all the Jews whereſoever they were, namely, two Drachmes; commanding every one of what ever age to bring it into the Capitol, as before they had paid it into the Temple at Jeruſalem. And Dion Caſſius of the ſame thus, ἧς ἀπ' ἐκείνου Δίδραχμον ἐπάχθη, &c. r He commanded all to bring the Didrachm yearly to Jupiter Capitolinus.

* De bell. lib. 7. cap. 27.

r Lib. 66.

The Seventy Interpreters indeed upon Exod. XXX. 13. render it Ἥμισυ τοῦ Διδράχμου, Half a didrachm, but adding this moreover, Ὃ ἔστιν κατὰ τὸ δίδραχμον τὸ ἅγιον, Which is according to the holy didrachm. Be it ſo, the whole Shekel was Δίδραχμον ἅγιον, The holy didrachm: then let the half ſhekel be, Δίδραχμον δημόσιον, The common didrachm. However the thing is, he that paid the half Shekel, in the vulgar dialect, was called, He that paid the Shekels, and that which is here ſaid by Matthew, Δίδραχμα λαμβάνοντες, They that receive the Didrachm, the Talmudiſts expreſs, חובעין שקלים or, גבין They that demand or collect the Shekels. The Targumiſts render that place Exod. XXX. פלגות סלעא The half of the Shekel; the reaſon of which ſee, if you pleaſe, in * Maimonides. The Shekel, ſaith he, concerning which the Law ſpeaks, did weigh three hundred and twenty grains of barley: but the wiſe men, ſometime, added to that weight, and made it to be of the ſame value with the money סלע Selah, under the ſecond Temple, that is, three hundred eighty four midling grains of barley. See the place and the Gloſs.

* Shekal. cap. 1.

2. The anſwer of Chriſt ſufficiently argues, that the diſcourſe is concerning this Tax, when he ſaith, He is the ſon of that King, for whoſe uſe that Tribute was demanded: for, from thence were bought the dayly and additional ſacrifices, and their drink offerings, the ſheaf, the two loaves, (Levit. XXIII. 17.) the Shew bread, all the ſacrifices of the Congregation, the red Cow, the ſcape Goat, and the crimſon Tongue, which was between his horns, s &c.

s Shekal. cap. 4 Hal 1. 2.

But here this Objection occurs, which is not ſo eaſie to anſwer. t The time of the payment of the half Shekel was about the feaſt of the Paſsover; but now that time was far gone, and the feaſt of Tabernacles at hand. It may be anſwered, 1. That Matthew, who recites this Story, obſerved not the courſe and order of time, which was not unuſual with him, as being he among all the Evangeliſts, that moſt disjoynts the times of the Stories. But let it be granted, that the order of the Hiſtory in him, is right and proper here; It is anſwered, 2. Either Chriſt was ſcarcely preſent at the Paſsover laſt paſt, or, if he were preſent, by reaſon of the danger he was in, by the ſnares of the Jews, he could not perform this payment, in that manner, as it ought to have been. Conſider thoſe words, which John ſpeaks of the Paſsover laſt paſt, Chap. VI. 4. The Paſsover, a feaſt of the Jews was near; and Chap. VII. 1. After theſe things, Jeſus walked in Galilee, for he would not walk any more in Judea, becauſe the Jews ſought to kill him. 3. It was not unuſual to defer the payment of the half Shekels of this year to the year following, by reaſon of ſome urgent neceſſity. Hence it was when they ſat, to collect and receive this Tribute, the Collectors had before them two cheſts placed, in one of which they put the Tax of the preſent year, in the other, of the year paſt. u

b See Shekal. cap. 2. & Maimon. Ibid.

But it may be objected, Why did the Collectors of Capernaum, require the payment, at that time, when, according to Cuſtom, they began not to demand it, before the fifteenth day of the month Adar? I anſwer, 1. It is certain, there were in every City money changers (שולחנין) to collect it, and being collected to carry it to Jeruſalem. Hence is that, in the Tract cited, The fifteenth day of the month Adar, the Collectors ſit in the Cities, (to demand the half Shekel) and the five and twentieth, they ſit in the Temple. 2. The uncertain abode of Chriſt at Capernaum gave theſe Collectors no unjuſt cauſe of demanding this due, whenſoever they had him there preſent; at this time eſpecially, when the feaſt of Tabernacles was near, and they about to go to Jeruſalem, to render an account perhaps of their Collection.

But if any liſt to underſtand this, of the Tax paid the Romans, we do not contend. And then the words of thoſe that collected the Tribute, Does not your Maſter pay the Didrachm, ſeem to ſound to this effect, Is your Maſter of the Sect of Judas of Galilee?

VERS. I.

Τίς ἄρα μείζων ἐστὶν ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ τῶν οὐρανῶν; Who is the greateſt in the Kingdom of Heaven?

IT cannot be paſſed over without obſervation, that the ambitious diſpute of the Diſciples, concerning Primacy, for the moſt part, followed the mention of the death of Chriſt and his Reſurrection. See this Story in Mark IX. 31, 32, 33. And Luke IX. 44, 45, 46. He ſaid to his Diſciples, Lay up theſe diſcourſes in your ears: for the time is coming that the Son of man is delivered into the hands of Men. But they knew not that ſaying, &c. and there aroſe a conteſt between them, who among them ſhould be greateſt. Alſo Matth. XX. 18, 19, 20. He ſaid to them, Behold we go up to Jeruſalem, and the Son of man ſhall be betrayed unto the Chief Prieſts, &c. Then came to him the Mother of Zebedees children, with her ſons, ſaying, Grant that theſe my two ſons may ſit, one on thy right hand, &c. And, Luke XXII. 22, 23, 24. The Son of man indeed goeth, as it is determined, &c. and there aroſe a Contention among them, who of them ſhould ſeem to be the greater.

The dream of the earthly Kingdom of the Meſſias did ſo poſſeſs their minds, (for they had ſuck'd in this Doctrine with their firſt milk) that the mention of the moſt vile death of the Meſſias, repeated over and over again, did not at all drive it thence. The image of earthly pomp was fixed at the bottom of their hearts, and there it ſtuck, nor by any words of Chriſt could it as yet be rooted out; no not, when they ſaw the death of Chriſt, when together with that they ſaw his Reſurrection: for then they alſo aſked, Wilt thou, at this time, reſtore the Kingdom to Iſrael? Acts I. 6.

However, after Chriſt had oftentimes foretold his death and reſurrection, it always follows, in the Evangeliſts, that they underſtood not what was ſpoken; yet, the opinion formed in their minds, by their Doctors, That the Reſurrection ſhould go before the Kingdom of the Meſſias, ſupplied them with ſuch an interpretation of this matter, that they loſt not an ace of the opinion of a future Earthly Kingdom.

VERS. VI.

Συμφέρει αὐτῷ, ἵνα κρεμασθῇ μύλος ὀνικὸς, &c. It were better for him that a mill-ſtone were hanged about his neck, &c.

Συμφέρει αὐτῷ. טוב לו It is good for him, in Talmudick Language.

Μύλος ὀνικὸς ſeems to be ſaid in diſtinction from thoſe very ſmall Mills wherewith they were wont to grind the ſpices that were either to be applied to the wound of Circumciſion, or to be added to the delights of the Sabbath. Hence the Gloſs of R. Solomon upon Jer. XXV. 10. The ſound of Mills and the light of the candle: the ſound of Mills, ſaith he, wherewith ſpices were ground and bruiſed, for the healing of Circumciſion.

That Chriſt here ſpeaks of a kind of death, perhaps, no where, certainly never uſed among the Jews; he does it, either to aggravate the thing, or in alluſion to drowning in the dead Sea, in which one cannot be drowned without ſome weight hung to him: and in which to drown any thing, by a common manner of ſpeech, implied, to devote to rejection, hatred and execration; which we have obſerved elſwhere.

VERS. X.

Ἄγγελοι αὐτῶν ἐν οὐρανοῖς διὰ παντὸς βλέπουσι, &c. Their Angels in Heaven do always behold, &c.

THIS one may very well expound by laying to it that which is ſaid, Heb. I. 14. The Angels are Miniſtring Spirits, ſent to miniſter for them who ſhall be heirs of the ſalvation to come: As if he ſhould ſay, See that ye do not deſpiſe one of theſe little ones, who have been received with their believing parents into the Goſpel Church: for I ſay unto you, that after that manner as the Angels miniſter to adult Believers, they miniſter to them alſo.

VERS. XII.

Ἐαν πλανηθῇ ἓν, ἀφεὶς ἐννενηκονταεννέα, &c. If he loſe one, does he not leave the ninety and nine, &c.

A Very common form of ſpeech. a In diſtributing ſome grapes and dates to the poor, although ninety nine ſay, Scatter them; and only one, Divide them: They hearken to him, becauſe he ſpeaks according to the Tradition. b If ninety nine die by an evil eye, (that is, by bewitching) and but one by the hand of Heaven: that is, by the ſtroke of God, &c. If ninety nine die by reaſon of cold; but one, by the hand of God, &c.

VERS. XV.

Ἔλεγξον αὐτὸν μεταξὺ σου καὶ αὐτοῦ μόνου. Tell him his fault between thee and him alone.

THE reaſon of the precept is founded in that charitable Law, Levit. XIX. 17. Thou ſhalt not hate thy brother in thy heart: but thou ſhalt ſurely reprove him, and ſhalt not ſuffer ſin in him.

Here the Talmudiſts ſpeak not amiſs. c The Rabbins deliver, Thou ſhalt not hate thy brother in thy heart. Perhaps, he does not beat him, he does not pull off his hair, he does not curſe him: the Text ſaith, In thy Heart, ſpeaking of hatred in the heart. But whence is it proved, that he that ſees his brother doing ſome foul action, is bound to reprove him? Becauſe it is ſaid, הוכיח תוכיח In reproving thou ſhalt reprove. He reproves ולא קיבל But he heareth not; Whence is it proved, he is bound to a ſecond reproof? The Text ſaith, In reproving thou ſhalt reprove. And a little after, How long muſt we reprove? Rabh ſaith, Even to blows: that is, until he that is reproved ſtrikes him that reproves him. Samuel ſaith, Until he is angry. See alſo d Maimonides.

VERS. XVI.

Παραλαβε μετα σου ἔτι ἕναν, δύο, &c. Take with thee one or two more, &c.

THE Hebrew Lawyers require the ſame thing of him that ſins againſt his brother. e Samuel ſaith, Whoſoever ſins againſt his brother he muſt ſay to him, I have ſinned againſt thee. If he hear, it is well. If not, let him bring others, and let him appeaſe him before them. If perhaps he die, let him appeaſe him at his ſepulchre, and ſay, I have ſinned againſt thee, &c.

But our Saviour here requires a higher charity, namely, from him who is the offended party. In like manner, f The great Sanhedrin admoniſhed a City lapſed to Idols, by two Diſciples of the Wiſe men. If they repented, well: if not, all Iſrael waged war againſt it. In like manner alſo, The Jealous husband warned his wife, before two witneſſes, Do not talk with N. &c.

VERS. XVII.

Εἰπὲ τῇ Ἐκκλησίᾳ. Tell the Church.

THAT which was incumbent upon him, againſt whom the ſin was committed, was this; That he ſhould deliver his ſoul by reproving his brother, and by not ſuffering ſin in him. This was the reaſon that he had need of witneſſes: for what elſe could they teſtifie? They could not teſtifie, that the brother had ſinned againſt him that reproved him; for this perhaps they were altogether ignorant of: but they might teſtifie this, that he againſt whom the ſin was committed, uſed due reproof, and omitted nothing which was commanded by the Law, in that caſe, whereby he might admoniſh his brother, and, if poſſible, bring him back into the right way. The witneſſes alſo added their friendly admonition: whom if the offender hearkned not unto, Let it be told the Church.

We do not here enter upon that long diſpute concerning the ſenſe of the word Church, in this place. However you take it, certainly the buſineſs here is not ſo much concerning the cenſure of the perſon ſinning, as concerning the vindication of the perſon reproving; that it might be known to all, that he diſcharged his duty, and freed his ſoul.

It was very cuſtomary among the Jews to note thoſe that were obſtinate in this or that crime, after publick admonition given them, in the Synagogue, and to ſet a mark of infamy upon them.

כולן צריכין הכרזה בבית דין g All theſe have need of public admonition in the Conſiſtory. The buſineſs there is about ſome Shepherds, Collectors and Publicans; and it is declared, how uncapable they are giving Evidence in any Judiciary matter, but not before public admonition is gone out againſt them in the Conſiſtory. g Bab. Sanhedr. fol. 26. 2.

h If any denie to feed his children, they reprove him they ſhame him, they urge him: if he ſtill refuſe, they make proclamation againſt him in the Synagogue, ſaying, N. is a cruel man and will not nouriſh his children: more cruel than the unclean birds themſelves, for they feed their young ones, &c. h Maimon. in אישורי cap. 12.

i A provoking wife who ſaith, I will create vexation to my Husband, becauſe he hath done thus or thus to me, or, becauſe he hath miſcalled me, or becauſe he hath chid me, &c. The Conſiſtory by Meſſengers ſend theſe words to her, Be it known unto you, if you perſiſt in your perverſneſs although your dowry be an hundred pounds you have loſt it all. ואחר כך מכריזין עליה בבתי כנסיות ובבתי מדרשות And moreover they ſet forth a public proclamation againſt her in the Synagogues, and in the divinity-Schools, every day, for four Sabbaths. i Id. ibid. cap. 14.

Ἔστω σοι ὥσπερ ὁ Ἐθνικὸς, καὶ ὁ Τελώνης. Let him be to thee as an Heathen and a Publican.

He ſaith, Ἔστω σοι, Let him be to thee. Not Ἔστω τῇ Ἐκκλησίᾳ, Let him be to the Church; becauſe the diſcourſe is of peculiar and private ſcandal againſt a ſingle man; who after three admonitions given, and they to no purpoſe, is freed from the Law of brotherly obligation; and he, who being admoniſhed does not repent, is not to be eſteemed ſo much for a brother to him, as for a Heathen, &c.

I. Chriſt does not here preſcribe concerning every offender, according to the full latitude of that Law, Levit. XIX. 17. but of him that particularly offends againſt his brother; and he does particularly teach what is to be done to that brother.

II. Although he, againſt whom the offence is committed, had a juſt cauſe why he ſhould be looſed from the obligation of the Office of a brother towards him, who neither would make ſatisfaction for the wrong done, nor be admoniſhed of it; yet to others in the Church, there is not the ſame reaſon.

III. The words plainly mean this, If after a threefold and juſt reproof, he that ſinned againſt thee ſtill remains untractable, and neither will give thee ſatisfaction for the injury, nor, being admoniſhed, doth repent; thou haſt delivered thine own ſoul, and art free from brotherly offices towards him, juſt as the Jews reckon themſelves freed from friendly offices towards Heathens and Publicans. That of Maimonides is not much different: k A Jew that apoſtatizes, or breaks the Sabbath preſumptuouſly, is altogether like a Heathen. k In Geruſhin, cap. 3.

1. They reckoned not Heathens for brethren or neighbours. l If any ones Ox ſhall gore his neighbours Ox. His neighbours, not a Heathens: when he ſaith, neighbours, he excludes Heathens. A Quotation which we produced before. l Aruch in בן בריר

2. They reputed Publicans to be by no means within Religious ſociety חבר שנעשה גבאי דוחין אותו מחבורתו m A religious man, who becomes a Publican, is to be driven out of the Society of Religion. m Hieroſ. Demai, fol. 23. 1.

3. Hence they are, neither with Heathens nor with Publicans: concerning which thing they often quarrel our Saviour. Hence that of the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. V. With ſuch a one no, not to eat, is the ſame with what is ſpoke here, Let him be to thee as a Heathen, &c.

n It is forbidden a Jew to be alone with a Heathen, to travel with an Heathen, &c.

4. They denyed alſo brotherly offices to Heathens and Publicans. o It is forbidden to bring home any thing of a Heathens that is loſt. p It is lawful for Publicans to ſwear, that is an Oblation, which is not: that you are of the Kings retinue, when you are not, &c. that is, Publicans may deceive and that by Oath. n Maimon in רוצח cap. 12. o Maimon Geſelah, cap. 11. p Nedarim, cap. 3. hal. 4.

VERS. XVIII.

Ὅσα ἐὰν δήσητε ὧδε ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, &c. Whatſoever ye ſhall bind on earth, &c.

THESE words depend upon the former, he had been ſpeaking concerning being looſed from the office of a brother, in a particular caſe: now he ſpeaks of the Authority and Power of the Apoſtles of looſing and binding any thing, whatſoever ſeemed them good, being guided in all things by the Holy Ghoſt. We have explained the ſenſe of this Phraſe, at Chap. XVI. and he gives the ſame Authority in reſpect of this, to all the Apoſtles here, as he did to Peter there; who were all to be partakers of the ſame Spirit and of the ſame Gifts.

This

This power was built upon that noble and moſt ſelf-ſufficient Foundation, Joh. XVI. 13. The Spirit of Truth ſhall lead you into all Truth. There lies an Emphaſis in thoſe words, Into all truth. I deny that any one, any where, at any time was led, or to be led into all Truth, from the Aſcenſion of Chriſt, unto the worlds end, beſide the Apoſtles. Every holy man, certainly, is led into all truth neceſſary to him for ſalvation: but the Apoſtles were led into all truth neceſſary, both for themſelves and the whole Church; becauſe they were to deliver a rule of Faith and Manners to the whole Church throughout all Ages. Hence, whatſoever they ſhould confirm in the Law, was to be confirmed; whatſoever they ſhould aboliſh was to aboliſhed; ſince they were endowed, as to all things, with a Spirit of Infalibillity, guiding them by the hand into all truth.

VERS. XIX.

Ὅτι ἐὰν δύο ὑμῶν συμφωνήσωσιν ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, &c. That if two of you ſhall agree upon earth, &c.

AND theſe words do cloſely agree with thoſe that went before: There, the ſpeech was concerning the Apoſtles determination, in all things, reſpecting men; Here, concerning their Grace and Power of obtaining things from God.

I. Δύο ὑμῶν, Two of you. Hence Peter and John act joyntly together among the Jews, Acts, II. & III. &c. and they act joyntly among the Samaritans, Acts, VIII 14. and Paul and Barnabas among the Gentiles, Acts XIII. 2. This bond being broke by Barnabas the ſpirit is doubled, as it were upon Paul.

II. Συμφωνήσωσι, Agree together. That is, to obtain ſomething from God, which appears alſo from the following words, Ὅτου ἐὰν αἰτήσωνται, Touching any thing that they ſhall aſk: ſuppoſe, concerning conferring the Spirit by the impoſition of hands, of doing this or that Miracle, &c.

VERS. XX.

Οὗ γάρ εἰσι δύο ἢ τρεῖς συνηγμένοι εἰς τὸ ἐμὸν ὄνομα, ἐκεῖ εἰμι ἐν τῷ μέσῳ αὐτῶν. For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there I am in the midſt of them.

THE like do the Rabbins ſpeak of two or three ſitting in Judgment, that שכינה The divine preſence is in the midſt of them.

VERS. XXI.

Ἄφησω αὐτῷ; ἕως ἑπτάκις; Shall I forgive him? until ſeven times?

THIS Queſtion of Peter reſpects the words of our Saviour, Ver. 15. How far ſhall I forgive my brother, before I proceed to the Extremity? What? Seven times? he thought that he had meaſured out by theſe words a large Charity, being in a manner, double to that which was preſcribed by the Schools. q He that is wronged, ſay they, is forbidden to be difficult to pardon, for that is not the manner of the ſeed of Iſrael. But when the offender implores him once and again, and it appears he repents of his deed, let him pardon him: and whoſoever is moſt ready to pardon is moſt praiſe worthy: It is well; but there lies a ſnake under it, r For, ſay they, they pardon a man once that ſins againſt another; Secondly, they pardon him; Thirdly, they pardon him; Fourthly, they do not pardon him, &c.

VERS. I.

Ἦλθεν εἰς τὰ ὅρια τῆς Ἰουδαίας πέραν τοῦ Ἰορδάνου. He came unto the coasts of Judea beyond Jordan.

IF it were barely said Ὅρια τῆς Ἰουδαίας πέραν τοῦ Ἰορδάνου, The Coasts of Judea beyond Jordan, by the Coasts of Judea one might understand the bounds of the Jews beyond Jordan. Nor does such a construction want its parallel in Josephus; for, Hyrcanus saith he, built a fortification, the name of which was Tyre, μεταξὺ τῆς τε Ἀραβίας καὶ τῆς Ἰουδαίας πέραν τοῦ Ἰορδάνου, οὐ πόρρω τῆς Ἐσεβωνίτιδος. Between Arabia and Judea, beyond Jordan not far from Esebonitis. a But see Mark here, Chap. X. 1. relating the same storie with this our Evangelist: Ἔρχεται εἰς τὰ ὅρια τῆς Ἰουδαίας διὰ τοῦ πέραν Ἰορδάνου. He came, saith he, into the coasts of Judea, taking a journey from Galilee along the Country beyond Jordan.

VERS. III.

Εἰ ἔξεστιν ἀνθρώπῳ ἀπολῦσαι τὴν γυναῖκα αὐτοῦ κατὰ πᾶσαν αἰτίαν; Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife for every cause?

OF the causes, ridiculous (shall I call them?) or wicked, for which they put away their wives, we have spoke at Chap. V. ver. 31. We will produce only one example here, רב כי מקלע לדרשיש מברייו מאן הויא ליומא When Rabh went to Darsis, (whither, as the Gloss saith, he often went,) he made a public proclamation, What woman will have me for a day? Rabh Nachman, when he went to Sacnezib, made a public proclamation, What woman will have me for a day? The Gloss is, Is there any woman who will be my wife, while I tarry in this place?

The Question here propounded by the Pharisees was disputed in the Schools, and they divided into parties concerning it, as we have noted before. For the School of Shammai permitted not divorces, but only in the case of Adultery; the School of Hillel otherwise. b b See Hitrof. Sotah, fol. 15. 2.

VERS. VIII.

Ὅτι Μωσῆς πρὸς τὴν σκληροκαρδίαν ὑμῶν ἐπέτρεψεν, &c. Because Moses for the hardness of your hearts, suffered, &c.

INterpreters ordinarily understand this of the unkindness of men towards their wives; and that not illy: but at first sight Σκληροκαρδία, Hardness of heart, for the most part in Scripture, denotes rather obduration against God than against men. Examples occur every where. Nor does this sense want its fitness in this place: not to exclude the other, but to be joyned with it here.

I. That God delivered that rebellious people, for the hardness of their hearts to spiritual fornication, that is, to Idolatry, sufficiently appears out of sacred Story, and particularly from these words of the first Martyr Stephen, Acts, VII. 42. Ἔστρεψε δὲ ὁ Θεὸς, καὶ παρέδωκεν αὐτοὺς λατρεύειν τῇ στρατιᾷ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, &c. God turned and gave them up to worship the host of heaven, &c. And they seem not less given up to carnal fornication, if you observe the horrid records of their Adulteries in the holy Scripture and their not less horrid allowances of divorces and polygamies in the books of the Talmudists: so that the Particle Πρὸς, carries with it a very proper sense if you interpret it To, according to its most usual signification, Moses to the hardness of your hearts added this that he permitted divorces: something that savours of punishment in it self, however you esteem it for a priviledge.

II. But you may interpret it more clearly and aptly of the Inhumanity of husbands towards their wives: but this is to be understoo . also under restriction: for Moses permitted not divorces because simply and generally men were severe and unkind towards their wives: for then why should he restrain divorces to the cause of Adultery? but because from their fierceness and cruelty towards their wives they might take hold of and seek occasions from that Law, which punished Adultery with death, to prosecute their wiveswith all manner of severity, to oppress them, to kill them.

Let us ſearch into the Divine Laws in caſe of Adultery, a little more largely.

1. There was a Law made upon the ſuſpicion of Adultery, that the wife ſhould undergo a trial by the bitter waters, Numb. 5. but it is diſputed by the Jewiſh Schools rightly and upon good ground, whether the husband was bound in this caſe by duty to proſecute his wife to extremity, or whether it were lawful for him to connive at and pardon her, if he would. And there are ſome who ſay, חובה that is, he was bound by duty, and there are others who ſay, רשות That it was left to his pleaſure c.

c See Hieroſ. Sotah as before.

2. There was a Law of death made in caſe of the diſcovery of Adultery, Deut. XXII. 21, 22, 23. If a man ſhall be found lying with a married woman, both ſhall die, &c. not that this Law was not in force, unleſs they were taken in the very act; but the word ימצא ſhall be found, is oppoſed to ſuſpicion, and means the ſame as if it were ſaid, When it ſhall be found that a man hath lain, &c.

3. A Law of Divorce alſo was given in caſe of Adultery diſcovered, Deut. XXIV. for in that caſe only, and when it is diſcovered, it plainly appears from our Saviours Gloſs, and from the conceſſion of ſome Rabbins alſo, that Divorces took place: For, ſay they, in the place laſt cited, Does a man find ſomething foul in his wife? he cannot put her away, שלא מצא בה ערות : becauſe he hath not found foul nakedneſs in her, that is, Adultery.

But now how does the Law of death and that of Divorce conſiſt together? It is anſwered, They do not ſo conſiſt together, that both retain their force, but the former was partly taken off by the latter, and partly not. The Divine Wiſdom knew that inhumane husbands would uſe that law of death unto all manner of cruelty towards their wives; for how ready was it for a wicked and unkind husband to lay ſnares even for his innocent wife, if he were weary of her, to oppreſs her under that law of death? And if ſhe were taken under guilt how cruelly and inſolently would he triumph over her, poor woman, both to the diſgrace of wedlock, and to the ſcandal of Religion. Therefore the moſt prudent, and withal merciful Law-giver, made proviſion that the woman, if ſhe were guilty, might not go without her puniſhment, and if ſhe were not guilty, might go without danger; and that the wicked husband that was impatient of wedlock, might not ſatiate his cruelty. That which is ſaid by one, does not pleaſe me, That there was no place for divorce where Matrimony was broke off by capital puniſhment; for there was place for Divorce for that end, that there might not be place for capital puniſhment. That Law indeed of death held the Adulterer in a ſnare, and exacted capital puniſhment upon him, and ſo the Law made ſufficient proviſion for terrour; but it conſulted more gently for the woman, the weaker veſſel; leſt the cruelty of her husband might unmercifully triumph over her.

Therefore in the ſuſpicion of Adultery, and the thing not diſcovered, the husband might, if he would, try his wife by the bitter waters; or if he would, he might connive at her. In caſe of the diſcovery of Adultery, the husband might put away his wife, but he ſcarce might put her to death; becauſe the Law of Divorce was given for that very end, that proviſion might be made for the woman againſt the hard heartedneſs of her husband.

Let this ſtory ſerve for a Concluſion, d Shemaiah and Abtalion compelled Carchemith a Libertine woman-ſervant to drink the Bitter waters. The husband of this woman could not put her away by the Law of Moſes, becauſe ſhe was not found guilty of diſcovered Adultery. He might put her away by the Traditional Law, which permitted Divorces without the caſe of Adultery, he might not if he had pleaſed, have brought her to trial by the bitter waters; but it argued the hardneſs of his heart towards his wife, or burning jealouſie that he brought her. I do not remember that I have any where in the Jewiſh Pandect read any example of a wife puniſhed with death for Adultery. e There is mention of the daughter of a certain Prieſt committing fornication in her fathers houſe, that was burnt alive; but ſhe was not married.

VERS. XIII.

Τότε προσηνέχθησαν αὐτῷ παιδία. Then were little children brought unto him.

NOT for the healing of ſome diſeaſe, for if this had been the end propounded, why did the Diſciples keep them back above all others, or chide any for their acceſs? Nor can we believe that they were the children of unbelieving Jews, when it is ſcarcely probable that they deſpiſing the Doctrine and perſon of Chriſt would deſire his bleſſing. Some therefore of thoſe that believe brought their Infants to Chriſt, that he might take particular notice of them, and admit them into his Diſcipleſhip, and mark them for his by his bleſſing. Perhaps the Diſciples thought this an exceſs of officious Religion, or that they would be too troubleſome to their Maſter, and hence they oppoſed them; but Chriſt countenanceth the thing, and favours again that Doctrine which he had laid down, Chap. XVIII. namely, That the Infants of believers were as much Diſciples and partakers of the Kingdom of Heaven as their Parents.

VERS. XVIII.

Οὐ φονεύσεις, &c. Thou ſhalt not kill, &c.

IT is worthy marking how again and again in the New Teſtament, when mention is made of the whole Law, only the ſecond Table is exemplified, as in this place; ſo alſo Rom. XIII. 8, 9. and Jam. II. 8. 11, &c. Charity towards our neighbour is the top of Religion and a moſt undoubted ſign of love towards God.

VERS. XXI.

Πώλησόν σου τὰ ὑπάρχοντα, καὶ δὸς πτωχοῖς. Sell what thou haſt and give to the poor.

WHEN Chriſt calls it perfection, to ſell all and give to the poor, he ſpeaks according to the Idiom of the Nation, which thought ſo, and he tries this rich man boaſting of his exact performance of the Law, whether, when he pretended to aſpire to eternal life, he would aſpire to that perfection vvhich his Countrymen ſo praiſed. Not that hence he either devoted Chriſtians to voluntary poverty, or that he exhorted this man to reſt ultimately in a Phariſaical perfection; but lifting up his mind to the renouncing of vvorldly things, he provokes him to it by the very Doctrine of the Phariſees vvhich he profeſſed.

f For theſe things the meaſure is not ſtated; for the corner of the field (to be left for the poor) for the firſt-fruits for the appearance in the Temple (according to the Lavv, Exod. XXIII. 15, 17. where, what, or how great an oblation is to be brought is not appointed) for the ſhewing mercy, and for the ſtudy of the Law. The Caſuiſts diſcuſſing that point of ſhewing mercy do thus determine concerning it. A ſtated meaſure is not indeed preſcribed to the ſhewing of mercy, as to the affording poor men help with thy body, (that is, with thy bodily labour) but as to money there is a ſtated meaſure, namely, the fifth part of thy wealth; nor is any bound to give the poor above the fifth part of his eſtate לבר אם עשה כן במדת חסידות Unleſs he does it out of extraordinary devotion. See Rambam upon the place, and the Jeruſalem Gemara: where the example of R. Iſhbab is produced diſtributing all his goods to the poor. f Peah, Cap. 1. Hal. 1.

VERS. XXIV.

Κάμηλον διὰ τρυπήματος ῥαφίδος διελθεῖν, &c. A Camel to go through the eye of a needle, &c.

A Phraſe uſed in the Schools, intimating a thing very unuſual and very difficult There where the diſcourſe is concerning dreams, and their interpretation, theſe words are added, לא מחוו לאיניש לא דקלה דדהבא ולא פילא דעייל בקופא דמחטא ff They do not ſhew a man a Palm-tree of Gold, nor an Elephant going through the eye of a needle. The Gloſs is, A thing which he was not wont to ſee, nor concerning which he ever thought. ff Rab. Bereſ. fol. 55. 2.

In like manner, R. Sheſhith anſwered R. Amram, diſputing with him, and aſſerting ſomething that was incongruous, in theſe words, g Perhaps thou art one of thoſe of Pombeditha, who can make an Elephant paſs through the eye of a needle: that is, as the Aruch interprets it, Who ſpeak things that are impoſſible. g Bava Mezia, fol. 38. 2.

VERS. XXVIII.

Ὑμεῖς ἀκολουθήσαντές μοι ἐν τῇ παλιγγενεσίᾳ. Ye that have followed me in the Regeneration.

THAT the World is to be renewed at the coming of the Meſſias, and the Preaching of the Goſpel, the Scriptures aſſert, and the Jews believe; but in a groſſer ſenſe, which we obſerve at Chap. XXIV. Our Saviour therefore by the word Παλιγγενεσία, Regeneration, calls back the minds of the Diſciples to a right apprehenſion of the thing; implying that Renovation concerning which the Scripture ſpeaks, is not of the body, or ſubſtance of the world; but that it conſiſts in the renewing of the Manners, Doctrine, and a diſpenſation conducing thereunto: Men are to be renewed, regenerated, not the Fabrick of the World. This very thing he teaches Nicodemus, treating concerning the nature of the Kingdom of Heaven, Joh. II.

Ὅταν καθίσῃ ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐπὶ θρόνου δόξης αὐτοῦ, καθίσεσθε καὶ ὑμεῖς. When the Son of man ſhall ſit upon the Throne of his Glory, ye alſo ſhall ſit.

THESE words are fetched out of Daniel, Chap. VII. ver. 9, 10. כרסון רמיו which words, I wonder, ſhould be tranſlated by the Interpreters, Aben Ezra, R. Saadia, and others, as well Jews as Chriſtians, Thrones were caſt down. R. Solomon, the vulgar and others read it righter, Thrones were ſet up: where Lyranus thus, He ſaith, Thrones in the plural number, becauſe not only Chriſt ſhall judg, but the Apoſtles, and perfect men ſhall aſſiſt him in judgment, ſitting upon Thrones. The ſame way very many Interpreters bend the words under our hands, namely, that the Saints ſhall at the day of judgment ſit with Chriſt, and approve and applaud his judgment. But, 1. beſides that the Scene of the laſt Judgment painted out in the Scripture, does always repreſent as well the Saints as the wicked ſtanding before the Tribunal of Chriſt, Mat. XXV. 32. 2 Cor. V. 10. &c. we have mention here only of Twelve Thrones. And, 2. we have mention only of judging the Twelve Tribes of Iſrael. The ſenſe therefore of the place may very well be found out by weighing theſe things following.

I. That thoſe Thrones ſet up in Daniel, are not to be underſtood of the laſt Judgment of Chriſt, but of his judgment in his entrance upon his Evangelical Government, when he was made by his Father chief Ruler, King and Judg of all things: Pſal. II. 6. Mat. XXVIII. 18. Joh. V. 27. For obſerve the ſcope and ſeries of the Prophet, that after the four Monarchies, namely, the Babylonian, the Mede-Perſian, the Grecian, and the Syro-Grecian, which Monarchies had vexed the World and the Church by their Tyranny, were deſtroyed; the Kingdom of Chriſt ſhould riſe, &c. Thoſe words, The Kingdom of Heaven is at hand, that Judiciary Scene ſet up, Rev. IV. & V. and thoſe Thrones, Rev. XX. 1, &c. do interpret Daniel to this ſenſe.

II. The Throne of Glory, concerning which the words before us are, is to be underſtood of the Judgment of Chriſt to be brought upon the treacherous, rebellious, wicked Jewiſh people. We meet with very frequent mention of the coming of Chriſt in his Glory in this ſenſe, which we diſcourſed more largely of at Chap. XXIV.

III. That the ſitting of the Apoſtles upon Thrones with Chriſt is not to be underſtood of their Perſons, it is ſufficiently proved, becauſe Judas was now one of the number; but it is meant of their Doctrine; as if he had ſaid, When I ſhall bring judgment upon this moſt unjuſt Nation, then your Doctrine which you have Preached in my Name, ſhall judg and condemn them. See Rom. II. 16.

Hence it appears, That the Goſpel was Preached to all the twelve Tribes of Iſrael before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem.

VERS. I.

Ἐξῆλθεν ἅμα πρωῒ μισθώσασθαι ἐργάτας. Who went out early in the morning to hire labourers.

YOU have ſuch a Parable as this, but madly applied, in the Talmud; we will produce it here for ſake of ſome Phraſes. a To what was R. Bon bar Chaija like? למלך ששכר פועים To a King who hired many labourers; among which there was one hired who perform'd his work extraordinary well. What did the King? He took him aſide and walkt with him to and fro. לעיתותי ערב ὀψίας γενομένης, When even was come, thoſe labourers came, ליטול שכרן ἵνα λήψωνται τὸν μισθὸν αὐτῶν, that they might receive their hire, and he gave him a compleat hire with the reſt. והיו הפועלים מתרעמין Καὶ ἐγόγγυζον οἱ ἐργάται λέγοντες, And the labourers murmured, ſaying, אנו יגענו כל היום We have laboured hard all the day, and this man only two hours, yet he hath received as much wages as we: The King ſaith to them, He hath laboured more in thoſe two hours than you in the whole day. So R. Bon plied the Law more in eight and twenty years than another in a hundred years.

a Hieroſ. Btrac. fol. 5. 3.

Ἅμα πρωΐ. Early in the morning.

b The time of working is from Sun-riſing to the appearing of the Stars, and not from break of day: And this is prov'd (from the Chapter אמר להם הממונה the Preſident of the Prieſts ſaith to them) c where they ſay, 'Tis light all in the Eaſt, and men go out to hire labourers: whence it is argued that they do not begin their work before the Sun riſeth. It is alſo proved from the Tract Peſachin, where it is ſaid, that it is prohibited on the day of the Paſſover to do any ſervile work after the Sun is up; intimating this, that that was the time when labourers ſhould begin their work, &c.

Μισθώσασθαι ἐργάτας. To hire Labourers.

Read here, if you pleaſe, the Tract Bava Mezia, Chap. VII. which begins thus, שוכר את הפועלים He that hireth Labourers: and Maimonides שכירות a Tract intitled d Hiring.

d Chap. 9. & 11.

VERS. II.

Συμφωνήσας ἐκ δηναρίου τὴν ἡμέραν. Agreed for a penny a day.

A Penny of ſilver, which one of gold exceeded twenty four times; for דינר זהב הוא כ"ה דנרי כסף A penny of gold is worth five and twenty of ſilver e. The Canons of the Hebrews concerning hiring of labourers, diſtinguiſh as reaſon requires, between שכיר יום being hired by the day, and שכיר שעורין being hired (only) for ſome hours: which may be obſerv'd alſo in this Parable; for in the morning they are hired for all the day, and for a penny, but afterwards for certain hours; and have a part of a penny allotted them, in proportion to the time they wrought.

e Gloſſ. on Cherithuth. Chap. 2.

VERS. VIII.

Κάλεσον τοὺς ἐργάτας, &c. Call the Labourers.

FOR it is one of the Affirmative precepts of the Law, that a hired labourer ſhould have his wages paid him when they are due; as it is ſaid, You ſhall pay him his wages in his day; and if they be detain'd longer, it is a breach of a negative precept; as it is ſaid, The Sun ſhall not go down upon him f, &c.

f Maimon. שכירות Chap. 11.

VERS.

VERS. XIII.

Οὐχὶ δηναρίου συνεφώνησάς μοι. Didſt not thou agree with me for a penny?

IN hiring of labourers the cuſtom of the place moſt prevail'd; hence came that Axiom, לחוו היבי נהוגי בעיר Obſerve the cuſtom of the City f, ſpeaking of this very thing. There is alſo an example g, Thoſe of Tiberias that went up to Bethmeon to be hired for labourers, were hired according to the cuſtom of Bethmeon, &c. By the by alſo we may obſerve that which is ſaid by the Babylonians in the place laſt cited, ונחזי מהיכא קא אתו בנקוטאי that is, as the Gloſs renders it, Notice muſt be taken whether they come from ſeveral places; for at ſome places they go to work ſooner, and at ſome later.

f B b. Bava Mezia, fol. 83. 2.

g Hieroſ. Mezia, fol. 11. 2.

Hence two things may be clear'd in the Parable before us. 1. Why they are ſaid to be hired at ſuch different hours; namely therefore, becauſe they are ſuppoſed to have come together from ſeveral places. 2. Why there was no certain agreement made with thoſe that were hired at the third, ſixth, and ninth hour, as with thoſe that were hired early in the morning; but that he ſhould only ſay, Whatſoever is right I will give you: that is, ſuppoſing that they would ſubmit to the cuſtom of the place. But indeed when their wages were to be paid them, there is by the favour of the Lord of the vineyard, an equality made between thoſe that were hired for ſome hours, and thoſe that were hired for the whole day; and when theſe laſt murmured, they are anſwer'd from their own agreement, Συμφώνησάς μοι, You agree'd with me. Note here the Canon h, The maſter of the family ſaith to his ſervant, Go, hire me labourers for four pence; he goes and hires them for three pence; although their labour deſerves four pence, they ſhall not receive but three, שקיבלו על עצמן ויש להם תרעומת על שליח: becauſe they bound themſelves by agreement, and their complaint (γογγυσμὸς, murmuring, in the 11*th verſe*) is againſt the ſervant.

h Maimon. as before Chap. 9.

VERS. XXII.

Τὸ βάπτισμα ὃ ἐγὼ βαπτίζομαι. The baptiſm that I am baptized with.

THE phraſe that goes before this, concerning the cup, is taken from divers places of Scripture, where ſad and grievous things are compared to draughts of a bitter cup. You may think that כוס פורענות The cup of vengeance, of which there is mention in Bab. Beracoth i, means the ſame thing, but it is far otherwiſe; give me leave to quote it, though it be ſomewhat out of our bounds: Let them not talk, ſay they, over their cup of bleſſing, and let them not bleſs over their cup of vengeance. מאי כוס פורענות What is the cup of vengeance? The ſecond cup, ſaith R. Nachman bar Iſaac. Rabbena Aſher and Piske are more clear: הר" אש If he ſhall drink off two cups, let him not bleſs over the third. The Gloſs, He that drinks off double cups is puniſht by Devils. But to the matter before us.

i Fol. 51. 2.

So cruel a thing was the Baptiſm of the Jews, being a plunging of the whole body into water when it was never ſo much chilled with Ice and ſnow, that not without cauſe, partly by reaſon of the burying as I may call it, under water, and partly by reaſon of the cold, it us'd to ſignifie the moſt cruel kind of death. The Hieruſalem Talmudiſts relate, That in the days of Joſhua ben Levi, ſome endeavoured quite to take away the waſhings (טבילה Baptiſms) of women, becauſe the women of Galilee grew barren by reaſon of the coldneſs of the waters k, which we noted before at the ſixth verſe of the third Chapter.

CHAP. XXI.

VERS. II.

Ὄνον δεδεμένην καὶ πῶλον. An Aſs and her fold.

IN the Talmudiſts we have the like phraſe, חמור וגידור קטן An aſs and a little colt. In that Treatiſe Mezia, they ſpeak concerning an hired Aſs, and the terms that the hired is obliged to m. Among other things there, the Babylon Gemara hath theſe words, כל מעביר על דעת של בעל בירת נקרא גולן Whoſoever tranſgreſſes againſt the will of the owner is call'd a robber n. For inſtance, If any one hires an Aſs for a journey on the Plains, m Chap. 6. Halac. 3.

n Fol. 78. 1.

plains, and turns up to the mountains, &c. Hence this of our Saviour appears to be a miracle, not a robbery; that without any agreement or terms, this Aſs ſhould be led away; and that the Owner and thoſe that ſtood by, ſhould be ſatisfied with theſe bare words, The Lord hath need of him.

VERS. V.

Πραΰς καὶ ἐπιβεβηκὼς ὄνον. Meek and ſitting upon an Aſs.

THIS triumph of Chriſts compleats a double propheſie. 1. This propheſie of Zacharia here mentioned. 2. The taking to themſelves the Paſchal Lamb; for this was the very day on which it was to be taken, according to the command of the Law. Exod. XII. 3. In the tenth day of this month they ſhall take to them every man a lamb.

It ſcarce appears to the Talmudiſts how thoſe words of Daniel concerning the Meſſias, that he comes with the clouds of heaven, o are conſiſtent with theſe words of Zacharie, that he comes ſitting upon an aſs. p If, ſay they, the Iſraelites be good, then he ſhall come with the clouds of heaven; but if not good, then riding upon an Aſs. Thou art much miſtaken, O Jew: for he comes, in the clouds of heaven, as a Judg, and Revenger, becauſe you are evil, and very wicked, but ſitting upon an Aſs, not becauſe you are, but becauſe he is, good. אמר ליה שבור מלכא לשמואל King Sapores ſaid to Samuel, you ſay your Meſſias will come upon an Aſs, I will ſend him a brave horſe; He anſwers him, you have not a horſe with a hundred ſpots, as is his Aſs. q In the greateſt humility of the Meſſias they dream of grandure, even in his very Aſs.

VERS. VIII.

Κλάδους ἐστρώννυον ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ. Strowed branches in the way.

NOT that they ſtrowed garments and boughs juſt in the way under the feet of the aſs, to be trod on, (this perhaps might have thrown down the rider) but by the way ſide they made little tents and tabernacles of clothes and boughs, according to the cuſtom of the feaſt of Tabernacles. John alſo adds, that taking branches of palm trees (לולבין) in their hands they went forth to meet him. That book of Maimonides intituled סוכה ולולב Tabernacles and Palm branches will be an excellent comment on this place, and ſo will the Talmudic treatiſe, Succah. We will pick out theſe few things not unſuitable to the preſent ſtory. f Doth any one ſpread his garment on his tabernacle againſt the heat of the ſun? &c. it is abſurd; but if he ſpread his garment for comelineſs and ornament, it is approved. Again, t The boughs of Palm trees, of which the Law ſpeaks, u are the young growing ſprouts of Palms, before their leaves ſhoot out on all ſides, but when they are like ſmall ſtaves; and theſe are called לולב And a little after, It is a notable precept, to gather לולב young branches of Palms, and the boughs of myrtle, and willow, and to make them up into a ſmall bundle, and to carry them in their hands, &c.

VERS. IX.

Ὡσαννὰ τῷ υἱῷ Δαβίδ. Hoſannah to the Son of David.

SOME are are at a loſs why it is ſaid τῷ υἱῷ to the Son, and not ὦ υἱέ, O Son. Wherefore they fly to Caninius as to an Oracle; who tells us, that thoſe very bundles of boughs are called Hoſanna, and that theſe words, Hoſanna to the Son of David ſignifie no more than Boughs to the Son of David: w We will not deny that bundles are ſometimes ſo called; as ſeems in theſe clauſes, x לא לרוץ אינש לולבא בחושענא And לא ליגו אינש לולבא בהושענא where it is plain that a branch of Palm is called Lulab, and boughs of Mirtle and Willow bound together, are called הושענא Hoſanna: y But indeed if Hoſanna to the Son of David ſignifies Boughs to the Son of David; what do thoſe words mean, Hoſanna in the higheſt? The words therefore here ſung, import as much as if it were ſaid, We now ſing Hoſanna to the Meſſias.

In the Feaſt of Tabernacles the great Hallel, as they call it, uſed to be ſung, that is, the CXIII, CXIV, CXV, CXVI, CXVII, CXVIII. Pſalms. And while the words of the Pſalms were ſung, or ſaid, by one, the whole company uſed ſometimes to anſwer at certain clauſes, Halleluia. Sometimes the ſame clauſes that had been ſung, or ſaid, were again repeated by the company; ſometimes the bundles of boughs were brandiſhed or ſhaken; But when were the Bundles ſhaken? The Rubric of the Talmud ſaith, At that clauſe "הודו לה Give thanks unto the Lord, in the beginning (of Pſalm, CXVIII.

CXVIII.) and at the end הושיעה נא ה" ובאנא and at that clauſe, ſave now I beſeech thee O Lord (Pſalm CXVIII. 25.) as ſaith the School of Hillel. But the School of Shammai ſaith alſo, At that clauſe, הצליחה נא ה" O Lord I beſeech thee ſend now proſperity. R. Akibah ſaid, I ſaw R. Gamaliel, and R. Joſhuah, when all the company ſhook their bundles, they did not ſhake theirs, but only at that clauſe, ſave now I beſeech thee O Lord. z z Succah, cap. 3. halac. 9.

On every day of the feaſt they uſed once to goround the Altar with bundles in their hands, ſinging this, אנא ה' הושיעה נא ה' הצליחה נא Save now I beſeech thee O Lord; I beſeech thee O Lord ſend now proſperity. But on the ſeventh day of the feaſt, they went ſeven times round the Altar, &c. a The toſſing or ſhaking of the bundles was on the right hand, on the left hand, upwards and downwards. b a Maimon. on Succah, cap. 6. b Bab Succah, fol. 27. 2.

The reaſon of the bundles was this, becauſe it is written, Then let all the trees of the wood ſing, (Pſal. XCVI. 12.) And afterwards it is written, Give thanks unto the Lord becauſe he is good, (Pſal. CVI. 1.) And afterwards, Save us O Lord, O our God, &c. (Pſalm CVI. 47.) And the reaſon is myſtical; In the beginning of the year Iſrael and the nations of the world go forth to Judgment; and being ignorant who are to be cleared and who guilty; the holy and bleſſed God commanded Iſrael that they ſhould rejoyce with theſe bundles, as a man rejoyceth who goeth out of the preſence of his Judg, acquitted. Behold therefore what is written, Let the trees of the wood ſing, as if it were ſaid, Let them ſing with the trees of the wood, when they go out juſtified from the preſence of the Lord, &c. c c Rabbenu Aſher on Succah, fol. 66. 2, 3.

Theſe things being premiſed concerning the rites and cuſtoms of that Feaſt, we now return to our ſtory.

I. It is very much worth our obſervation, that the company receives Chriſt coming now to the Paſsover, with the Solemnity of the Feaſt of Tabernacles. For what hath this to do with the time of the Paſsover? If one ſearch into the reaſon of the thing more accurately, theſe things occur, Firſt, The mirth of that Feaſt above all others, concerning which there needs not much to be ſaid, ſince the very name of the Feaſt (for by way of emphaſis, it was called חג, that is, Feſtivity or, Mirth) ſufficiently proves it. Secondly, That propheſie of Zacharie, d which however it be not to be underſtood according to the letter; yet from thence may ſufficiently be gathered the ſingular Solemnity and Joy of that Feaſt above all others; and perhaps from that ſame propheſie, the occaſion of this preſent action was taken. For being willing to receive the Meſſias with all joyfulfulneſs, triumph, and affection of mind (for by calling him the Son of David, it is plain they took him for the Meſſias) they had no way to expreſs a more ardent zeal and joy at his coming, than by the ſolemn proceſſion of that Feaſt. They have the Meſſias before their eyes; they expect great things from him; and are therefore traſported with exceſs of joy at his coming.

d Chap. XIV. 16.

II. But whereas the great Hallel, according to the cuſtom, was not now ſung, by reaſon of the ſuddenneſs of the preſent action, the whole ſolemnity of that ſong was as it were ſwallowed up in the frequent crying out and ecchoing back of Hoſanna; as they uſed to do in the Temple while they went round the Altar. And one while they ſing Hoſanna to the ſon of David, another while, Hoſanna in the higheſt, as if they had ſaid, now we ſing Hoſanna to the Son of David, ſave us we beſeech thee, O thou (who dwelleſt) in the higheſt, ſave us by the Meſſias.

VERS. XII.

Ἐξέβαλε πάντας τοὺς πωλοῦντας καὶ ἀγοράζοντας ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ· He caſt out all them that ſold and bought in the Temple.

I. THERE was always a conſtant market in the Temple in that place, which was called חנויות the ſhops; where every day was ſold wine, ſalt, oyl and other requiſites to Sacrifices; As alſo Oxen and Sheep, in the ſpacious Court of the Gentiles.

II. The neerneſs of the Paſsover had made the market greater; for innummerable beaſts being requiſite to this ſolemnity, they were brought hither to be ſold. This brings to mind a ſtory of Bava ben Buta. e He coming one day into the Court, found it quite empty of beaſts. Let their houſes, ſaid he, be laid waſt, who have laid waſt the houſe of our God. He ſent for three thouſand of the Sheep of Kedar; and having examined whether they were without ſpot, brought them into the mountain of the houſe, that is, into the Court of the Gentiles.

e Hieroſ. Jom. tobh, fol. 61. 3.

Τὰς τραπέζας τῶν κολλυβιστῶν κατέστρεψε. Overthrew the tables of the mony changers.

Who thoſe mony changers were, may be learn'd very well from the Talmud and Maimonides in the treatiſe Shekalim.

f It is an Affirmative precept of the Law, that every Iſraelite ſhould give half a Shekel yearly; ev'n the poor who live by alms, are obliged to this; and muſt either beg the mony of others or ſell their clothes, to pay half a ſhekel, as it is ſaid, g The rich ſhall give no more, and the poor ſhall give no leſs. f Maim. Shekal. chap. 1. g Exod. XXX. 15.

h In the firſt day of the month Adar, they made a publick Proclamation concerning theſe ſhekels, that every one ſhould provide his half ſhekel, and be ready to pay it. Therefore on the fifteenth day of the ſame month, the Exchangers (השולחנין) ſat in every City, civilly requiring this mony: they receiv'd it of thoſe that gave it, and compelled thoſe that did not. On the five and twentieth day of the ſame month, they ſat in the Temple: and then compelled them to give; and from him that did not give, they forced a pledge, ev'n his very coat. h Id ibid. & Talm. Shekal. chap. 1.

i They ſat in the Cities, with two cheſts before them, in one of which they laid up the mony of the preſent year, and in the other the mony of the year paſt. They ſat in the Temple with thirteen cheſts before them; the firſt was for the mony of the preſent year; the ſecond, for the year paſt; the third, for the mony that was offered to buy Pigeons, &c. They called theſe cheſts שופרות Trumpets, becauſe like Trumpets, they had a narrow mouth, and a wide belly. i Idem. chap. 2.

k It is neceſſary that every one ſhould have half a ſhekel to pay for himſelf; Therefore when he comes to the Exchanger, to change a ſhekel for two half ſhekels, he is obliged to allow him ſome gain which is called קולבון (Κόλλυβος) Kolbon. And when two pay one ſhekel (between them) שנים חייבין בקולבון each of them is obliged to allow the ſame gain, or fee. k Idem. chap. 3.

And not much after, בכמה הוא שיעור הקולבון How much is that gain? At that time, when they paid pence, for the half ſhekel, a Kolbon (or the fee that was paid to the mony-changer) was half a Mea, that is, the twelfth part of a penny, and never leſs. But the Kolbons were not like the half ſhekel, but the Exchangers laid them by themſelves, till the holy Treaſury were paid out of them. You ſee what theſe mony-changers were, and whence they had their name. You ſee that Chriſt did not overturn the Cheſts, in which the holy mony was laid up, but the Tables, on which they traffiqued for this unholy gain.

VERS. XIX.

Οὐδὲν εὗρεν ἐν αὐτῇ, εἰ μὴ φύλλα μόνον. Found nothing thereon but leaves only.

THIS place is not a little obſcure, being compared with Mark, who ſeems to ſay, that therefore figs were not found on this tree, becauſe it was not yet the time of figs, ὁ γὰρ καιρὸς σύκων· why then did our Saviour expect figs, when he might certainly know that it was not yet the time of figs? And why, not finding them, did he curſe the tree, being innocent, and agreeable to its own nature? o Mark XI. 13.

I. We will firſt conſider the ſituation of this tree. Our Evangeliſt ſaith that it was in the way, ὁδὸν τῆς ὁδοῦ. This minds me of a diſtinction us'd very often by the Talmudiſts, between מופקר & שמור that is, between the fruits of trees of common right, which did not belong to any peculiar Maſter, but grew in woody places, or in common fields; and the fruits of trees which grew in Gardens, Orchyards or Fields, that had a proper owner. How much difference was made between theſe fruits by the Canoniſts, as to tything and as to eating, is in many places to be met with through the whole Claſſis, intitled זרעים Seeds. This fig-tree ſeems to have been of the former kind. תאנה מרבדית a wild fig-tree, בהבקר growing in a place or field not belonging to any one in particular, but common to all. So that our Saviour did not injure any particular perſon, when he caus'd this tree to wither; but it was ſuch a tree, that it could not be ſaid of it that it was Mine or Thine.

II. He found nothing thereon but leaves, becauſe the time of figs was not yet a great while. p

q Bab. Peſachin, fol. 52. 2. 1. q At what time in the ſeventh year do they forbear to lop their trees? The School of Shammai ſaith משיוציאו כל האילנות All trees from that time, they bring forth (leaves). The Gloſs, the beginning of leaves is in the days of Niſan.

r Jeruſ. Sheviith fol. 35. 4. 2. r Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel ſaith, from the putting forth of leaves, till there be green figs, is fifty days; from the green figs, till the buds fall off, fifty days; and from that time till the figs be ripe are fifty days. If therefore the firſt putting out of the leaves was in the month Niſan, and that was five months time before the figs came to be ripe, it is plain enough that the figs of that year coming on, were not expected by our Saviour, nor could be expected.

That we may purſue the matter ſomewhat home, and make it appear that the Text of Mark, as it is commonly read for the time of figs was not yet, is uncorrupted.

I. We muſt firſt obſerve what is ſaid about the intercalation of the year. They intercalate the year upon three accounts, For the green ear, for the fruit of the tree, and for Tekupha. s Maimonides is more large; t whom ſee. Now if you aſk, what means the intercalation for the fruit of the tree? The Gloſs anſwers, If the fruit be not ripened till Pentecoſt is paſt, they intercalate the year; becauſe Pentecoſt is the time of bringing the firſt fruits; and if at that time one ſhould not bring them along with him, when he comes to the feaſt, he would be oblig'd to make another journy. But now this is not to be underſtood of all trees, but of ſome only, which put forth their fruit about the time of the Paſſover, and have them ripe at the feaſt of Pentecoſt. For thus Maimonides in the place cited. If the Council ſees that there is not yet any green ear, and that the fruit of the trees which uſed to bud at the feaſt of the Paſſover, is not yet budded, (mark that, uſed to bud) moved by theſe two cauſes, they intercalate the year. Among theſe, the figtree can by no means be reckoned: For ſince, our Saviour being witneſs, u the putting forth of its leaves is a ſign that Summer is at hand, you could not expect any ripe figs; nay (according to the Talmudiſts,) not ſo much as the putting out of leaves, before the Paſſover. When it is before ſaid, that Pentecoſt was the time of bringing the firſt fruits, it muſt not be ſo underſtood, as if the firſt fruits of all trees were then to be brought; but that before Pentecoſt it was not lawful to bring any: for thus it is provided for by a plain Canon, The firſt-fruits are not to be brought before Pentecoſt. The inhabitants of Mount Zeboim brought theirs before Pentecoſt, but they did not receive them of them, becauſe it is ſaid in the Law, And the feaſt of harveſt, the firſt fruit of thy labours which thou haſt ſowen in thy field. w

II. There are ſeveral kinds of figs mentioned in the Talmudiſts, beſides theſe common ones; namely figs of a better ſort, which grew in gardens, and Paradices. 1. שיתין Shithin. Concerning which the Tract Demai x ונו' שברמאי שיתין הקלין that is, Among thoſe things which were accounted to deſerve leſſer care, and among thoſe things which were doubtful as to tything were שיתין Shithin: which the Gloſſer tells us were תאני מרבדיות Wild figs. 2. There is mention alſo in the ſame place of בנות שקמה which, as ſome will have it, was a fig mixt with a plane tree תאנה מורכבת בערמון: 3. But among all thoſe kinds of figs, they were memorable, which were called פרסאורת, and they yet more, which were called בנות שוח which, unleſs I miſtake, make to our purpoſe; not that they were more noble than the reſt, but their manner of bearing fruit was more unuſual. There is mention of theſe in Shiviith, y in theſe words בנות שוח שביעית שלהם וכו' We will render the words in the paraphraſe of the Gloſſers. בנות שוח are white figs, and פרסאות are alſo a kind of fig: the ſeventh yoar, (that is, the year of Releaſe) is to thoſe the ſecond (viz. of the ſeven years following) to theſe, the going out of the ſeventh. בנות שוה Put forth fruit every year, but it is ripe only every third year: ſo that on that tree every year one might ſee three ſorts of fruit, namely of the preſent year, of the paſt, and of the year before that. Thus the פרסאות bring forth ripe fruit in two years, &c.

y Chap. 5. hal. 1

Concerning בנות שוח thus the Jeruſalem Gemara. Do they bear fruit every year? Or once in three years? They bear fruit every year, but the fruit is not ripe till the third year. But how how may one know which is the fruit of each year? R. Jonah ſaith, by the threads that hang to them. The tradition of Samuel, makes little ſtrings hang to it, &c.

III. The fruit of very many trees hung upon them all the winter, by the mildneſs of the weather, if they were not gathered, or ſhaken off by the wind: nay they ripened in winter: Hence came thoſe cautions about tything. z The tree which puts forth its fruit before the beginning of the year of the world (that is, before the beginning of the month Tiſri, in which month the world was created) muſt be tythed for the year paſt: but if after the beginning of the world, then it muſt be tythed for the year coming on. R. Judan bar Philia anſwered before R. Jonah, Behold the tree Charob puts forth its fruit before the beginning of the world, and yet it is tythed for the year following. R. Jiſſa ſaith, If it puts forth a third part before the year of the world, it muſt be tythed for the year paſt; but if after, then for the year following. R. Zeira anſwers before R. Jiſſa, ſometimes Palm trees do not bring forth part of their fruit till after the beginning of the year of the world; and yet they muſt be tythed for the year before. Samuel bar Abba ſaith, If it puts forth the third part of its fruit before the fifteenth day of the month Shebat, It is to be tythed for the year paſt; if after the fifteenth day of the month Shebat; for the year to come. Hence that Axiom in Roſh haſhanah, a The firſt day of the month Shebat is the beginning of the year for trees, according to the School of Shammai, but according to that of Hillel, the fifteenth day.

z Jer. ſ. Shebieth, fol 39. 4.

a Chap. 1. hal. 1

However, fig-trees were not among thoſe trees that put forth their fruit after the beginning of Tiſri; for you have ſeen before out of the Talmudiſts, that they uſed to put forth their leaves in the month Niſan; and that their fruit uſed to be ripe in thrice fifty days after this. Yet perhaps it may be objected about them, what we meet with in the Jeruſalem Gemara, at the place before cited. One gathers figs, (ſay they) and knows not at what time they were put forth, (and thereby is at a loſs for what year to tythe them.) R. Jonah ſaith, let him reckon a hundred days backwards, and if the fifteenth day of the month Shebat falls within that number, then he may know when they were put forth. But this muſt be underſtood of figs of a particular ſort, which do not grow after the uſual manner; which is plain alſo from that which follows, For, they ſay to him, with you at Tiberias, there are Fig trees that bear fruit in one year: to which he anſwers, Behold, with you at Zippor, there are trees that bear fruit in two years. Concerning common fiſh-trees, their ordinary time of putting out green Figs was ſufficiently known; as alſo the year of tything them: but concerning thoſe trees of another ſort, which had ripe fruit only in two or three years, it is no wonder if they were at a loſs in both.

IV. Chriſt therefore came to the tree, ſeeking fruit on it, (although the ordinary time of figs was not yet), becauſe it was very probable that ſome fruit might be found there. Of the preſent year indeed, he neither expected, nor could expect any fruit, when it was ſo far from being the time of figs, καιρὸς σύκων, that it was almoſt five months off; and it may be doubted whether it had yet ſo much as any leaves of the preſent year. It was now the month Niſan, and that month was the time of the firſt putting out of leaves; ſo that, if the buds of the leaves had juſt peep'd forth, they were ſo tender, ſmall, and ſcarce worth the name of leaves (for it was but the eleventh day of the month) that to expect figs of the ſame year with thoſe leaves, had not been only in vain, but ridiculous. Thoſe words ſeem to denote ſomething peculiar, ἔχουσ φύλλα, having leaves; as if the other trees thereabout had been without leaves, or at leaſt, had not ſuch leaves as promiſed figs. Mark ſeems to give the reaſon why he came rather to that tree, than to any other, namely becauſe he ſaw leaves on it, and thereby hoped to find figs. For when he ſaw (ſaith he) a fig-tree afar off having leaves, he came, if haply he might find any thing thereon. From the leaves he had hopes of figs: theſe therefore certainly were not the leaves of the preſent ſpring, for thoſe were hardly ſo much as in being yet; but they were either the leaves of the year paſt, that had hung upon the tree all winter; or elſe this tree was of that kind which had figs and leaves together hanging on it for two or three years, before the fruit grew ripe. And I rather approve of this latter ſenſe, which both renders the matter it ſelf more clear, and better ſolves the difficulties that ariſe from the words of Mark. This tree, it ſeems, had leaves which promiſed fruit, and others had not ſo; whereas had they all been of the ſame kind, it is likely they would all have had leaves after the ſame manner. But when others had loſt all their leaves of the former year, by winds and the winter, and thoſe of the preſent year were not as yet come out, this kept its leaves, according to its nature and kind, both Summer and Winter. Mark therefore in that clauſe, which chiefly perplexes Interpreters, Οὐ γὰρ ἦν καιρὸς σύκων for the time of figs was not yet, doth not ſtrictly and only give the reaſon, why he found no figs; but gives the reaſon of the whole action, namely, why on that Mountain which abounded with fig-trees, he ſaw but one that had ſuch leaves, and being at a great diſtance when he ſaw it, he went to it, expecting figs only from it. The reaſon, ſaith he, was this, Becauſe it was not the uſual time of figs: for had it been ſo, he might have gathered figs from the trees about him; but ſince it was not, all his expectation was from this, which seemed to be of the kind of פרסאות or בנות שוח which never wanted leaves or figs. For to take an instance in the tree בנות שוח That tree, (suppose) bore figs such a Summer, which hung upon the boughs all the following winter; it bore others also next Summer; and those, together with the former, hung on the boughs all this Winter too: the third Summer it bore a third degree; and this Summer brought those of the first bearing, to ripeness; and so onwards continually; so that it was no time to be found without fruit of several years. It is less therefore to be wondered at, if that which promised so much fruitfulness by its looks, that one might have expected from it at least the fruit of two years, did so far deceive the hopes it had raised, as not to afford one Fig, if that, I say, should suffer a just punishment from our Lord, whom it had so much, in appearance, disappointed. An emblem of the punishment that was to be inflicted upon the Jews, for their spiritual barrenness and hypocrisie.

VERS. XXI.

Κἂν τῷ ὄρει τούτῳ εἴπητε, Ἄρθητι καὶ βλήθητι εἰς τὴν θάλασσαν γενήσεται. But if ye shall say unto this mountain, be thou removed and be thou cast into the Sea, it shall be done.

THIS is an hyperbolical way of speaking, taken from the common Language of the Schools of the Jews, and designed after a manner for their refutation. Such an Hyperbole concerning this very mountain, you have Zech. XIV. 4.

The Jews used to set out those Teachers among them that were more eminent for the profoundness of their Learning, or the splendor of their vertues, by such expressions as this, הוא עוקר הרים He is a rooter up, or (a remover) of mountains. b Rabh Joseph is Sinai, and Rabbah is a rooter up of mountains. The Glos, They called Rabh Joseph Sinai, because he was very skilful in clearing of difficulties; and Rabbah bar Nachmani, A rooter up of mountains, because he had a piercing judgment. c Rabba said, I am like Ben Azzai in the streets of Tiberias. The Glos, Like Ben Azzai who taught profoundly in the streets of Tiberias; nor was there in his days עוקר הרים Such another rooter up of mountains as he. d He saw Resh Lachish in the School, as if he were plucking up of mountains and grinding them one upon another.

Ἐλιθοβόλησε. Stoned.

THERE seems to be an allusion to the punishments and manners of Death in the Council. 1. Ἔδειραν which properly signifies the fleaing off of the skin, is not amiss rendred by Interpreters Beat; and the word seems to relate to whipping, where forty stripes save one, did miserably flea off the skin of the poor man. See what the word סופג properly means in that very usual phrase, expressing this whipping סופג אחת מארבעים Beaten with forty stripe. 2. Ἀπέκτειναν (Killed) signifies a death by the sword, as דרג doth in the Sanhedrin ר' מיתות נמסרו לבד סקילה שריפה דרג וחנק Four kinds of death are delivered to the Sanhedrin, stoning, burning, killing and strangling. f

VERS. XLIV.

VERS. XVI.

Μετὰ τῶν Ἡρῳδιανῶν. With the Herodians.

MANY things are conjectured concerning the Herodians. I make a judgment of them from that History which is produced by the Author Juchasin. i Speaking of Hillel and Shammai. Heretofore, saith he, Hillel and Menahem were (heads of the Council:) but Menahem withdrew into the family of Herod, together with eighty men bravely clad. These and such as these I suppose were called Herodians, who partly got into the Court, and partly were of the faction both of the Father and Son. With how great opposition of the generality of the Jewish people, Herod ascended and kept the Throne, we have observed before. There were some that obstinately resisted him; others, that as much defended him: to these was deservedly given the title of Herodians; as endeavoring with all their might to settle the Kingdom in his family; and they it seems were of the Sadducean Faith and Doctrine; and it is likely, had leavened Herod, who was now Tetrarch, with the same principles. For (as we noted before) the leaven of the Sadducees in Matthew, k is in Mark, l The leaven of Herod. And it was craftily contrived on both sides; that they might be a mutual establishment to one another, they to his Kingdom, and he to their Doctrine. When I read of Manaem, or Menahem, the foster brother of Herod the Terarch m, it readily brings to my mind the name and story before mentioned of Menahem, who carried over with him so many eminent persons to the Court of Herod.

When therefore the Rabbin ſaith that they have corrupted their Law (וזייפתם תורתכם) he doth not ſo much deny the purity of the Text, as reprove the vanity of the interpretation: as if he had ſaid, You interpret your Law falſly, when you do not infer the Reſurrection from thoſe words which ſpeak it ſo plainly.

Concerning the repeating of them, ſee both the Talmuds in Beracoth s. How the Jews did ſwear, touching their Phylacteries, ſee Maimonid. in Shevuoth t. And how God is brought in ſwearing by the Phylacteries. See Tanchum u.

Our Saviour does not ſo much condemn the bear wearing of them, as the doing it out of pride and hypocriſie. It is not unlikely that he wore them himſelf, according to the cuſtom of the Country; for the children of the Jews were to be brought up from their infancy in ſaying the Phylacteries; that is, as ſoon as they were capable of being Catechized w. The Scribes and Phariſees made theirs very broad and viſible, that they might obtain a proportional fame and eſteem for their devotion with the people; theſe things being looked upon as arguments of the ſtudy of the Law, and ſigns of devotion.

He that takes care to ſtick up Labels againſt the Poſts, ſhall obtain a glorious houſe; and he that takes care of the ציצית of making borders to his garment, ſhall obtain a good coat.

VERS. VII.

Καὶ καλεῖσθαι Ῥαββεί, Ῥαββεί. And to be called, Rabbi, Rabbi.

I. CConcerning the original of this title ſee * Aruch: The elder times which were more worthy, had no need of the title either of Rabban, or Rabbi, or Rabh, to adorn either the wiſe men of Babylon, or the wiſe men of the land of Iſrael: for behold Hillel comes up out of Babylon, and the title of Rabbi is not added to his name: and thus it was with thoſe who were noble among the Prophets: for he ſaith, Haggai the Prophet; (not Rabbi Haggai.) Ezra did not come up out of Babylon, &c. (not Rabbi Ezra) whom they did not honour with the titles of Rabbi, when they ſpoke their names. And we have heard that this had its beginning only in the Preſidents (of the Council) from Rabban Gamaliel the old man, and Rabban Simeon his Son, who periſhed in the deſtruction of the ſecond Temple; and from Rabban Jochanan ben Zaccai, who were all Preſidents. And the title alſo of Rabbi began from thoſe that were promoted (to be Elders) from that time; Rabbi Zadok and R. Eliezer ben Jacob: and the thing went forth from the Diſciples of Rabban Jochanan ben Zaccai, and onwards. Now the order, as all men uſe it, is this: Rabbi is greater than Rabh, and Rabban is greater than Rabbi; and he is greater who is called by his own (ſingle) name, than he who is called Rabban.

That this haughty title of Rabbi was not in uſe before the times of Hillel, ſufficiently appears from thence, that the Doctors before that were called by their plain names, and knew nothing of this title. Antigonus Socheus, Shemaiah and Abtalion, Gebihah ben Peſiſa, Cabba Sacua, Admon and Hanan, Hillel and Shammai, and many others, whoſe names we meet with in the Jewiſh Story. Yet you ſhall find theſe that were more ancient ſometimes officioatly honoured by the writers of their Nation with this title, which they themſelves were ſtrangers to. y They feign that King Jehoſhaphat thus called the learned men, When he ſaw, ſay they, a Diſciple of the wiſe men, he roſe up out of his Throne and embraced him, and kiſſed him, and called him אבי אבי רבי רבי מרי מרי O Father, Father, Rabbi, Rabbi, Lord, Lord. And z Joſhua ben Perachia is called Rabbi Joſhua. רבי אבי מורי are here rendred Rabbi in the eighth verſe: Father in the ninth: and Maſter in the tenth. II. Under a pretence of mighty devotion, but eſpecially under the goodly ſhew of long prayers, they ſo drew over the minds of devout perſons to them, eſpecially of women, and among them, of the richer widows, that by ſubtle attractives, they either drew out, or wreſted away their goods and eſtates. Nor did they want nets of counterfeit authority, when from the Chair they pronounced according to their pleaſures of the dowry and eſtate befalling a widow, and aſſumed to themſelves the power of determining concerning thoſe things. Of which matter as it is perplexed with infinite difficulties and quirks, you may read, if you have leiſure, the Treatiſes Jevamoth, Chetubboth, and Gittin.

VERS. XV.

Ποιῆσαι ἕνα προσήλυτον. To make one Proſelyte.

n Bab. Middah. fol. 13. 2. THE Talmudiſts truly ſpeak very ill of Proſelytes n. Our Rabbins teach, גרים והמשהקים הינוקות מעכבין את המשיח that Proſelytes and Sodomites hinder the coming of the Meſſias. גרים לישראל כספחת Proſelytes are as a ſcab to Iſrael. The Gloſs, For this reaſon that they were not skilled in the commandments, that they brought in revenge, and moreover, that the Iſraelites perchance might imitate their works, &c.

Yet in making of theſe they us'd their utmoſt endeavours, for the ſake of their own gain; that they might ſome way or other drain their purſes after they had drawn them in under the ſhew of Religion; or make ſome uſe or benefit to themſelves by them. The ſame covetouſneſs therefore under a vail of hypocriſie in devouring widows, which our Saviour had condemned in the former clauſe, he here alſo condemns in hunting after Proſelytes; which the Scribes and Phariſees were at all kind of pains to bring over to them. Not that they cared for Proſelytes (whom they accounted as a ſcab and plague) but that the more they could draw over to their Religion, the greater draught they ſhould have for gain, and the more purſes to fiſh in. Theſe therefore being ſo Proſelyted, they made doubly more the children of Hell than themſelves. For when they had drawn them into their net, having got their prey they were no further concern'd what became of them, ſo they got ſome benefit by them. They might periſh in ignorance, ſuperſtition, atheiſm, and all kind of wickedneſs, this was no matter of concern to the Scribes and Phariſees; only let them remain in Judaiſm, that they might Lord it over their Conſciences and Purſes.

VERS. XVI.

Ὃς δ' ἂν ὀμόσῃ ἐν τῷ χρυσῷ τοῦ ναοῦ, ὀφείλει, &c. Whoſoever ſhall ſwear by the gold of the Temple, he is a debtor.

THESE words agree in the ſame ſenſe with thoſe of the Corban, Chap. XV. 5. We muſt not underſtand the gold of the Temple here, of that gold which ſhined all about in the walls and cielings; but the gold here meant is that which was offered up in the Corban. It was a common thing with them, and eſteemed as nothing, to ſwear המעין הזה by the Temple, and המזבח by the Altar, which we have obſerved at the 31 verſ. of the 5*th Chap.* and therefore they thought themſelves not much obliged by it: But if they ſwore קרבן Corban, they ſuppoſed they were bound by an indiſpenſable tye. For example, if any one ſhould ſwear thus, By the Temple, or, By the Altar, my Money, my Cattel, my Good Goods ſhall not profit you: It was lawful nevertheleſs for the ſwearer if he pleas'd to ſuffer them to be profited by theſe: but if he ſhould ſwear thus, Korban, my gold is for the Temple, Korban, my Cattel are for the Altar, this could no ways be diſpenſed with.

Παρομοιάζετε τάφοις κεκονιαμένοις. Ye are like whited Sepulchres.

SEpulchres are diſtinguiſhed by the Maſters of the Jews into קבר תהום a deep Sepulchre, which cannot be known to be a Sepulchre, Μνημεῖον ἄδηλον, Graves that appear not w; and קבר מצוין a painted Sepulchre, ſuch as were all thoſe that were known to be ſeen. Κοσμεῖτε τὰ μνημεῖα τῶν δικαίων. Ye garniſh the Sepulchres of the Righteous.

בונין לו נפש על קברן g The Gloſſers are divided about the rendring of the word נפש. Some underſtand it of a kind of building, or pillar; ſome of the whiting or marking of a Sepulchre above ſpoken of; the place referred to, ſpeaks concerning the remains of the Didrachms paid for the redemption of the ſoul; and the queſtion is, if there be any thing of them due, or remaining from the man now dead, what ſhall be done with it; the anſwer is, "Let it be laid up till Elias come: but R. Nathan ſaith, בונין לו נפש על קברו "Let them raiſe ſome pillar (or building) upon his Sepulchre. Which that it was done for the ſake of adorning the Sepulchres, is proved from the words of the Jeruſalem Gemara upon the place h, אין עושין נפשות לצדיקים דבריהן הן וכרוהנן: Οὐ κοσμοῦσι μνημεῖα τῶν δικαίων, "They do not adorn the Sepulchres of the righteous, for their own ſayings are "their memorial. Theſe things being conſidered, the ſenſe of the words before us doth more clearly appear: Doth it deſerve ſo ſevere a curſe to adorn the Sepulchres of the Prophets and righteous men? But according to their own Doctrine, O ye Scribes and Phariſees, דבריהן הן זכרונן Their own Acts and Sayings is a ſufficient memorial for them. Why do ye not reſpect, follow and imitate theſe? But neglecting and trampling upon theſe, you perſwade your ſelves that you have performed piety enough to them if you beſtow ſome coſt in adorning their Sepulchres, whoſe words indeed you deſpiſe.

VERS. XXXV.

Ἕως τ αἵματος Ζαχαρίου υἱ Βαραχίου. Unto the blood of Zacharias Son of Barachias.

THAT the diſcourſe here is concerning Zacharias the ſon of Jehoiada k killed by King Joas, we make appear by theſe arguments. k 2 Chr. XXIV.

I. Becauſe no other Zacharias is ſaid to have been ſlain, before theſe words were ſpoken by Chriſt. Thoſe things that are ſpoke of Zacharias, the father of the Baptiſt, are dreams: and thoſe, of Zacharias one of the twelve Prophets, are not much better. The killing of our Zacariahs in the Temple, is related in expreſs words; and why, neglecting this, ſhould we ſeek for another, which in truth we ſhall no where find with any author of good credit?

II. The Jews obſerve that the death of this Zacharias, the ſon of Jehoiadah was made memorable by a ſignal character and revenge: Of the Martyrdom of the other Zacharias, they ſay nothing at all.

Here both the l Talmuds, R. Jochanan ſaid, Eighty thouſand Prieſts were killed for the blood of Zacharias. R. Judah asked R. Acha, whereabouts they killed Zacharias? Whether in the Court of the Women, or in the Court of Iſrael? He anſwered, neither in the Court of Iſrael, nor in the Court of the Women, but in the Court of the Prieſts. And that was not done to his blood, which uſeth to be done to the blood of a Ram, or a Kid; Concerning theſe it is written, And he ſhall pour out his blood, and cover it with duſt. But here it is written, m Her blood is in the midſt of her; ſhe ſet it upon the top of a rock, ſhe poured it not upon the ground. And why this? n That it might cauſe fury to come up to take vengeance. I have ſet her blood upon a rock that it ſhould not be covered. They committed ſeven wickedneſſes in that day. They killed a Prieſt, a Prophet, and a Judg: they ſhed the blood of an innocent man: they polluted the Court. And that day was the Sabbath day, and the day of Expiation, when therefore Nebuzaradan went up thither, he ſaw the blood bubbling; ſo he ſaid to them, what meaneth this? It is the blood, ſay they, of Calves, Lambs and Rams, which we have offered on the Altar. Bring then, ſaid he, Calves, Lambs and Rams, that I may try whether this be their blood. They brought them and ſlew them, and that blood ſtill bubbled, but their blood did not bubble. Diſcover the matter to me, ſaid he, or I will tear your fleſh with iron rakes. Then they ſaid to him, this was a Prieſt, a Prophet and a Judg, who foretold to Iſrael all theſe evils which we have ſuffered from you, and we roſe up againſt him, and ſlew him. But I, ſaith he, will appeaſe him. He brought the Rabbins, and ſlew them upon that blood, and yet it was not pacified; He brought the children out of the School, and ſlew them upon it, and yet it was not quiet. He brought the young Prieſts, and ſlew them upon it, and yet it was not quiet. So that he ſlew upon it ninety four thouſand, and yet it was not quiet. He drew near to it himſelf, and ſaid, O Zacharias, Zacharias! Thou haſt deſtroyed the beſt of thy people (that is, they have been killed for your ſake) would you have me deſtroy all? Then it was quiet, and did not bubble any more, &c.

m Ezech. XXIV. 7. n Verſ. 8.

The truth of this ſtory we leave to the relators: that which makes to our preſent purpoſe we obſerve. That it was very improbable, nay next to impoſſible, that thoſe that heard the words of Chriſt (concerning Zacharias ſlain between the Temple and the Altar) could underſtand it of any other, but of this; concerning whom, and whoſe blood, they had ſuch famous and ſignal memory; and of any other Zacharias ſlain in the Temple, there was a profound ſilence. In Joſephus indeed we meet with the mention of one Zacharias the ſon of Baruch, (which is the ſame thing with Barachias) killed in the Temple, not long long before the deſtruction of it: whom ſome conjecture to be prophetically marked out here by our Saviour: But this is ſomewhat hard, when Chriſt expreſly ſpeaks of time paſt (ἐφονεύσατε ye ſlew) and when by no art, nor arguments it can be proved that this Zacharias ought to be reckoned into the number of Prophets and Martyrs.

There are two things here that ſtick with Interpreters, ſo that they cannot ſo freely ſubſcribe to our Zacharias. 1. That he lived and dyed long before the firſt Temple was deſtroyed, when the example would have ſeemed more home and proper, to be taken under the ſecond Temple, and that now near expiring. 2. That he was plainly and notoriouſly the Son of Jehoiada, but this is called by Chriſt the Son of Barachias.

To which we, after others who have diſcourſed at large upon this matter, return only thus much.

I. That Chriſt plainly intended to bring examples out of the old Teſtament; and he brought two, which how much the further off they ſeemed to be from deriving any guilt to this generation, ſo much heavier the guilt is, if they do derive it. For a Jew would argue, what hath a Jew to do with the blood of Abel, killed almoſt two thouſand years before Abraham the father of the Jews, was born? And what hath this generation to do with the blood of Zacharias, which was expiated by cruel plagues and calamities many ages ſince? Nay, ſaith Chriſt, this generation hath arrived to that degree of impiety, wickedneſs and guilt, that even theſe remote examples of guilt, relate and are to be applied to it. And while you think that the blood of Abel, and the following Martyrs doth nothing concern you, and believe that the blood of Zacharias hath been long ago expiated with a ſignal puniſhment; I ſay unto you that the blood both of the one and the other, and of all the righteous men killed in the interval of time between them, ſhall be required of this generation. 1. Becauſe you kill him who is of more value than they all. 2. Becauſe by your wickedneſs you ſo much kindle the anger of God, that he is driven to cut off his old Church, namely the people that hath been of a long time in covenant with him. For when Chriſt ſaith, That on you may come all the righteous blood, &c. It is not ſo much to be underſtood of their perſonal guilt as to that blood, as of their guilt for the killing of Chriſt, in whoſe death, the guilt of the murder of all thoſe his types, and members, is in ſome meaſure included; and it is to be underſtood of the horrible deſtruction of that generation, than which, no former ages have ever ſeen any more woful or amazing, nor ſhall any future, before the funeral of the world it ſelf. As if all the guilt of the blood of righteous men that had been ſhed from the beginning of the world, had flowed together upon that generation.

II. To the ſecond, which has more difficulty, namely that Zacharias is here called the Son of Barachias, when he was the Son of Jehoiada, we will obſerve by the way, theſe two things out of the writings of the Jews; before we come to determine the thing it ſelf.

1. That that very Zacharias, of whom we ſpeak, is by the Chaldee Paraphraſt called the Son of Iddo. For thus ſaith he on Lament. Chap. III. verſ. 20. Is it fit that the daughters of Iſrael ſhould eat the fruit of their womb? &c. The rule of Juſtice anſwered, and ſaid, Is it alſo fit that they ſhould ſlay a Prieſt and Prophet in the Temple of the Lord, as ye ſlew Zacharias, the Son of Iddo, the High Prieſt and faithful Prophet in the houſe of the Sanctuary, on the day of expiation? &c.

2. In the place of Iſaiah, o concerning Zachariah the Son of Jebarichiah the Jews have theſe things. p It is written, I took unto me faithful witneſſes to record, Uriah the Prieſt, and Zachariah the Son of Barachiah o (ברכיהו writ without Jod prefixed) Eſa. VIII. 1. But what is the reaſon that Uriah is joyned with Zachariah? For Uriah was under the firſt Temple, Zachariah under the ſecond: but the Scripture joyneth the propheſie of Zachariah to the propheſie of Uriah. By Urias it is written, For your ſakes Sion ſhall be plowed as a field. By Zachariah it is written, As yet old men and ancient women ſhall ſit in the ſtreets of Jeruſalem. When the propheſie of Uriah is fulfilled, the propheſie of Zachariah ſhall alſo be fulfilled. To the ſame ſenſe alſo ſpeaks the Chaldee Paraphraſt upon the place. And I took unto me faithful witneſſes. The curſes which I foretold I would bring in the propheſie of Uriah the Prieſt, behold they are come to paſs; likewiſe all the bleſſings which I foretold I would bring, in the Propheſie of Zachariah the ſon of Jebarechiah, I will bring to paſs. See alſo there R. R. Jarchi & Kimchi.

From both theſe, we obſerve two things. 1. If Iddo did not ſignifie the ſame thing with Jehoiada, to the Jewiſh nation, why might not our Saviour have the ſame liberty to call Barachia the father of Zacharia, as the Chaldee Paraphraſt had to call him Iddo? 2. It is plain that the Jews looked upon thoſe words of Iſaiah as the words of God ſpeaking to Iſaiah, not of Iſaiah relating a matter of fact hiſtorically; which indeed they conjectur every truly, and exactly according to the printing of the firſt word וְאָעִידָה for the conjunction Vau being pointed with Ceva, it is a certain token that the Verb is to be rendred in the future Tenſe, not in the Preter; which alſo the interlineary verſion hath well obſerved, rendring it thus, Et teſtificari faciam mihi teſtes fideles, And I will make faithful witneſſes teſtifie to me.

For if it had been to be conſtrued in the Preter tenſe, it ſhould have been pointed by Camets, וְאַעִידָה Et teſtificari feci, And I cauſed to witneſs. Which being well obſerved, (as I confeſs it hath not been by me heretofore) the difficulty under our hand is reſolved, as I imagine very clearly: and I ſuppoſe that Zachariah the Son of Jebarachia in Iſaiah, is the very ſame with our Zachariah the Son of Jehoiadah; and that the ſenſe of Eſay comes to this; In that and the foregoing Chapter, there is a diſcourſe of the future deſtruction of Damaſcus, Samaria and Judea. q For a confirmation of the truth of this propheſie God makes uſe of a double teſtimony: Firſt, he commands the Prophet Iſaiah to write over and over again in a great volumn from the beginning to the end, Le maher ſhalal haſh baz: that is, To haſten the ſpoil he haſtned the prey: and this volumn ſhould be an undoubted Teſtimony to them that God would certainly bring on and haſten the forementioned ſpoyling and deſtruction. And moreover, ſaith God, I will raiſe up to my ſelf two faithful Martyrs (or Witneſſes) who ſhall teſtifie and ſeal the ſame thing with their words and with their blood, namely Uriah the Prieſt, who ſhall hereafter be crowned with Martyrdom for this very thing, Jer. XXVI. 20. 23. and Zachariah the Son of Barachia or Jehoiada who is lately already crowned. He, the firſt Martyr under the firſt Temple; this, the laſt. Hear thou Jew who taxeſt Matthew in this place, your own Authors aſſert, that Uriah the Prieſt is to be underſtood by that Uriah who was killed by Jehoiachim; and that truly: We alſo aſſert that Zechariah the Son of Jehoiadah is to be underſtood by Zachariah the Son of Jebarachiah; and that Matthew and Chriſt do not at all innovate in this name of Barachias, but did only pronounce the ſame things concerning the Father of the Martyr Zacharias, which God himſelf had pronounced before them by the Prophet Eſay.

q See Cap. VII. 2, 17, 18. &c. & Chap VIII. 4, 7, 8, &c.

It may be objected: But ſince our Saviour took examples from the old Teſtament, why did he not rather ſay, From the blood of Abel to the blood of Uriah the Prieſt? that is, from the beginning of the world, to the end of the firſt Temple? I anſwer.

1. The killing of Zacharias was more horrible, as he was more high in dignity, and as the place wherein he was killed, was more holy.

2. The conſent of the whole people was more univerſal to his death.

3. He was a more proper and apparent type of Chriſt.

4. The requiring of vengeance is mentioned only concerning Abel and Zachariah. r Behold the voice of thy brothers blood cryeth out to me. And s Let the Lord look upon it, and require it.

r Gen. IV. 10. s 2 Chron. XXIV. 22.

5. In this the death of Chriſt agrees exactly with the death of Zachariah: that, although the City and Nation of the Jews did not periſh till about forty years after the death of Chriſt; yet they gave themſelves their deaths wound, in wounding Chriſt. So it was alſo in the caſe of Zachariah; Hieruſalem and the people of the Jews ſtood indeed many years after the death of Zachariah, but from that time began to ſink, and draw towards ruine. Conſult the ſtory narrowly, and you will plainly find that all the affairs of the Jews began to decline, and grow worſe and worſe, from that time when blood touched blood t (the blood of the ſacrificer mingled with the blood of the ſacrifice) and when the people became contentious and rebellious againſt the Prieſt. u

VERS. I.

Ἐπιδεῖξαι αὐτῷ τὰς οἰκοδομὰς τοῦ ἱεροῦ. To shew him the buildings of the Temple.

z Bab Bava Bathra, fol. 4. 1. & Succah, fol. 51. 2.

HE that never saw the Temple of Herod, never saw a fine building. What was it built of? Rabba saith, of white and green marble. But some say, of white green and spotted marble. He made the laver to sink and to rise, (that is, the walls were built winding in and out, or indented, after the manner of waves) being thus fitted to receive the plaister which he intended to lay on, but the Rabbins said to him, O let it continue, for it is very beutiful to behold: for it is like the waves of the Sea, and Bava ben Buta made it so, &c. See there the story of Bava ben Buta and Herod consulting about the rebuilding of the Temple.

VERS. II.

* Taanith, c. 5.

THE Talmudic Chronicles bear witness also to this saying, * On the ninth day of the month Ab, the City of Jerusalem was plowed up, which Maimonides delivereth more at large. a On that ninth day of the month Ab, fatal for vengeance, the wicked Turnus Rufus, of the children of Edom, plowed up the Temple, and the places about it, that that saying might be fulfilled, Sion shall be plowed as a field. This Turnus Rufus of great fame and infamy among the Jewish writers, without doubt is the same with Terentius Rufus, of whom Josephus speaks, b Τερέντιος Ῥοῦφος ἄρχων ὑπὸ στρατιᾶς κατελέλειπτο. Terentius Rufus was left General of the army by Titus, with commission, as 'tis probable, and as the Jews suppose, to destroy the City and Temple. Concerning which matter, thus again Josephus in the place before quoted, c Κελεύει Καῖσαρ ἤδη τοῦ τε πόλιν ἅπασαν, καὶ τὸν νεὼν κατασκάπτειν. The Emperour commanded them to dig up the whole City, and the Temple. And a little after, Οὕτως ἐξωμάλισαν οἱ κατασκάπτοντες, &c. Thus those that digged it up laid all level, that it should never be inhabited, to be a witness to such as should come thither.

VERS. III.

Καὶ τί τὸ σημεῖον τῆς σῆς παρουσίας, καὶ τῆς συντελείας τοῦ αἰῶνος; And what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the World?

WHAT the Apostles intended by these words, is more clearly conceived by considering the opinion of that people concerning the times of the Messias. We will pick out this in a few words from Bab. Sanhedr. d d Fol. 92.

The Tradition of the School of Elias: The righteous whom the Holy Blessed God will raise up from the dead, shall not return again to their dust; as it is said, Whosoever shall be left in Sion and remain in Jerusalem, shall be called holy, every one being written in the book of life. As the Holy (God) liveth for ever, so they also shall live for ever. But if it be objected, what shall the righteous do in those years in which the Holy God will renew his world, as it is said, The Lord only shall be exalted in that day? The answer is, That God will give them wings, like an Eagle, and they shall swim (or float) upon the face of the waters. Where the Gloss saith thus, The righteous, whom the Lord shall raise from the dead in the days of the Messiah, when they are restored to life, shall not again return to their dust, neither in the dates of the Messiah, nor in the following age: but their flesh shall remain upon them, till they return and live עתיד לבוא To eternity. And in those years, when God shall renew his world, (or age) ויהיה עולם וה חרב אלפ שנים This world shall be wasted for a thousand years; where then shall those righteous men be in those years, when they shall not be buried in the earth? To this you may also lay that very common phrase, עולם הבא The worlds to come; whereby is signified the days of the Messiah: of which we spoke a little at the thirty second verse of the twelfth Chapter. e If he shall obtain (the favour) to see the world to come, that is, the exaltation of Israel, namely in the days of the Messiah. f The Holy blessed God saith to Israel, In this world you are afraid of trasgressions, but in the world to come, when there shall be no evil affection, affection, you ſhall be concerned only for the good which is laid up for you; as it is ſaid, After this the children of Iſrael ſhall return, and ſeek the Lord their God, and David their King, &c. g which clearly relate to the times of the Meſſiah. Again, h Saith the Holy Bleſſed God to Iſrael, In this world, becauſe my meſſengers (ſent to ſpy out the land) were fleſh and blood, I decreed that they ſhould not enter into the land: but in the world to come, I ſuddenly ſend to you my meſſenger, and he ſhall prepare the way before my face. i

2. Then ſhall follow the deſolation of this World. עולם וה חרב אלף שנים This World ſhall be waſted a thouſand years. Not that they imagined that a Chaos, or confuſion, of all things ſhould laſt the thouſand years, but that this World ſhould end and a new one be introduced in that thouſand years.

3. After which עתיד לבוא Eternity ſhould ſucceed.

From hence we eaſily underſtand the meaning of this queſtion of the Diſciples.

1. They know and own the preſent Meſſiah, and yet they aſk, what ſhall be the ſigns of his coming.

2 But they do not aſk the ſigns of his coming (as we believe of it) at the laſt day to judge both the quick and the dead; But

3. When he will come in the evidence and demonſtration of the Meſſiah, raiſing up the dead, and ending this World, and introducing a new, as they had been taught in their Schools concerning his coming.

VERS. VII.

Ἐγερθήσεται γὰρ ἔθνος ἐπὶ ἔθνος. Nation ſhall riſe againſt Nation.

BEſides the ſeditions of the Jews, made horridly bloody with their mutual ſlaughter, and other ſtorms of War in the Roman Empire from ſtrangers, the commotions of Otho and Vitellius are particularly memorable, and thoſe of Vitellius and Veſpaſian, whereby not only the whole Empire was ſhaken, and Totius orbis mutatione fortuna Imperii tranſiit (they are the words of Tacitus) the fortune of the Empire, changed with the change of the whole World, but in Rome it ſelf; being made the ſcene of battel, and the prey of the Soldiers, and the Capitol it ſelf being reduced to aſhes. Such throws the Empire ſuffered, now bringing forth, Veſpaſian to the Throne, the ſcourge and vengeance of God upon the Jews.

VERS. IX.

Τότε παραδώσουσιν ὑμᾶς εἰς θλῖψιν. Then they ſhall deliver you up to be afflicted.

TO this relate thoſe words of Peter, l The time is come that judgment muſt begin at the houſe of God, that is, the time foretold by our Saviour is now at hand, in which we are to be delivered up to perſecution, &c.. Theſe words denote that perſecution, which the Jews, now near their ruine, ſtirred up, almoſt every where, againſt the profeſſors of the Goſpel. They had indeed oppreſſed them hitherto on all ſides, as far as they could, with ſlanders, rapines, whippings, ſtripes, &c. which, theſe and ſuch like places teſtifie, 1 Theſ. II. 14, 15. Heb. X. 33, &c. But there was ſomething that put a rub in their way, that as yet they could not proceed to the utmoſt cuelty. m And now ye know what withholdeth, which I ſuppoſe is to be underſtood of Claudius, enraged at and curbing in the Jews. n Who being taken out of the way, and Nero, after his firſt five years, ſuffering all things to be turned topſide turvy, the Jews now breathing their laſt, (and Satan therefore breathing his laſt effects in them, becauſe their time was ſhort) they broke out into ſlaughter beyond meaſure, and into a moſt bloody perſecution: which I wonder is not ſet in the front of the ten perſecutions by Eccleſiaſtical writers. This is called by Peter (who himſelf alſo at laſt ſuffered in it) Πύρωσις πρὸς πειρασμόν. o A fiery trial by Chriſt, dictating the Epiſtles to the twelve Churches, θλῖψις ἡμερῶν δέκα. p Tribulation for ten days, and Ὥρα τοῦ πειρασμοῦ μέλλουσα ἔρχεσθαι ὅλης τῆς οἰκουμένης ὅλης. q The hour of temptation which ſhall come upon all the world (of Chriſtians.) And this is The revelation of that wicked one, r St. Paul ſpeaks of, now in lively, that is, in bloody colours openly declaring himſelf Antichriſt, the enemy of Chriſt. In that perſecution James ſuffered at Jeruſalem, Peter in Babylon, and Antipas at Pergamus, and others, as it is probable, in not a few other places. Hence, Rev. VI. 11, 12. VERS. XII.

Ψυγήσε῀ ἡ ἀγάπη τῶ῀ πολλῶν. The love of many ſhall wax cold.

THESE words relate to that horrid Apoſtaſie, which prevailed every where in the Jewiſh Churches that had received the Goſpel. See, 2 Theſ. II. 3, &c. Gal. III. 2. 2 Tim. I. 15. &c.

VERS. XIV.

Καὶ κηρυχθήσε῀ τοῦτο τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τῆ῀ βασιλείας ἐν ὅλῃ τῇ οἰκουμένῃ. And this Goſpel of the Kingdom ſhall be preached in all the world.

Jeruſalem was not to be deſtroyed, before the Goſpel was ſpread over all the World. God ſo ordering and deſigning it; that the World being firſt a Catechumen in the Doctrine of Chriſt, might have at length an eminent and undeniable teſtimony of Chriſt preſented to it; when all men, as many as ever heard the hiſtory of Chriſt, ſhould underſtand that dreadful wrath, and ſevere vengeance which was poured out upon that City and Nation, by which he was crucified.

VERS. XV.

Τὸ βδέλυγμα τῆ῀ ἐρημώσεως. The abomination of deſolation.

THESE words relate to that paſſage of Daniel, (Chap. IX. 27.) ועל כנף שקוצים משומם which I would render thus, In the middle of that week, (namely, the laſt of the ſeventy) he ſhall cauſe the ſacrifice and oblation to ceaſe, even until the wing (or army) of abominations ſhall make deſolate, &c. or, Even by the wing of abominations making deſolate. כנף is An army, Eſay VIII. 8. And in that ſenſe Luke rendred theſe words. [s] When you ſhall ſee Jeruſalem compaſſed about with an army, &c.

Ὁ ἀναγινώσκων νοείτω. Let him that readeth underſtand.

This is not ſpoken ſo much for the obſcurity as for the certainty of the Propheſie: as if he ſhould ſay, He that reads thoſe words in Daniel, let him mind well, that, when the army of the Prince which is to come, that army of abominations, ſhall compaſs round Jeruſalem with a ſiege, then moſt certain deſtruction hangs over it; (for, ſaith Daniel, The people of the Prince which is to come, ſhall deſtroy the City, &c. the ſanctuary, &c. verſ. 26. And the army of abominations ſhall make deſolate even until the conſummation, and that which is determined ſhall be poured out upon the deſolate.) Flatter not your ſelves therefore with vain hopes, either of future victory, or of the retreating of that army; but provide for your ſelves, and he that is in Judea let him fly to the Hills, and places of moſt difficult acceſs: not into the City. See how Luke clearly ſpeaks out this ſenſe, in the twentieth verſe of the one and twentieth Chapter.

VERS. XX.

Ἵνα μὴ χειμῶνι῀ ἡ φυγὴ ὑμῶν γένηται. That your flight be not in the Winter.

[t] Fol. 57. 2.

R. Tanchum obſerves a favour of God in the deſtruction of the firſt Temple, that it happened in the Summer, not in Winter. For thus he, [t] God vouchſafed a great favour to Iſrael, For they ought to have gone out of the land on the tenth day of the month Tebeth, as he ſaith, Son of Man, mark this day, for on this very day, &c. what then did the Lord Holy and Bleſſed? If they ſhall now go out in the Winter, ſaith he, they will all dye: therefore he prolonged the time to them, and carried them away in Summer.

VERS. XXII.

Κολοβωθήσονται αἱ ἡμέραι ἐκεῖναι Thoſe days ſhould be ſhortned.

GOD lengthned the time for the ſake of the elect, before the deſtruction of the City; and in the deſtruction, for their ſakes he ſhortned it: compare with theſe words before us, the 2 of Pet. III. 9. The Lord is not ſlack concerning his promiſe, &c. It was certainly very hard with the Elect, that were inhabitants of the City, who underwent all kind of miſery with the beſieged, where the Plague and Sword raged ſo violently, that there were not living enough to bury the dead; and the Famine was ſo great, that a Mother eat her Son, (perhaps the Wife of Doeg ben Joſeph, of whom ſee ſuch a ſtory in Bab. Joma. u) And it was alſo hard enough with thoſe Elect, who fled to the Mountains, being driven out of Houſe, living in the open Air, and wanting neceſſaries for Food: Their merciful God and Father therefore took care of them, ſhortning the time of their miſery, and cutting off the reprobates with a ſpeedier deſtruction; leaſt if their ſtroke had been longer continued, the Elect ſhould too far have partaken of their miſery. u Fol. 38. 2.

VERS. XXIV.

Δώσουσι σημεῖα μεγάλα καὶ τέρατα. Shall ſhow great ſigns and wonders.

IT is a diſputable caſe, whether the Jewiſh Nation were more mad with ſuperſtition in matters of Religion, or with ſuperſtition in curious Arts.

I. There was not a people upon Earth that ſtudied, or attributed more to dreams, than they. Hence

1. They often impoſed faſtings upon themſelves, to this end, that they might obtain happy dreams; or to get the interpretation of a dream; or to divert the ill omen of a dream: which we have obſerved at the fourteenth verſe of the ninth Chapter.

2. Hence their nice rules for handling of dreams: ſuch as theſe, and the like יצפה אדם לחלום טוב עד כב" שנה Let one obſerve a good dream two and twenty years, after the example of Joſeph: x If you go to bed merry, you ſhall have good dreams, &c. y x Beracoth. fol. 14. 1. y Schabb. fol. 30 2. in the Gloſs.

3. Hence many took upon them the publick profeſſion of interpreting dreams, and this was reckoned among the nobler Arts. A certain old man in Bab. Beracoth z relates this ſtory, There were four and twenty interpreters of dreams in Jeruſalem: and I, having dreamed a dream went to them all; every one gave a different interpretation, and yet they all came to paſs, &c. a You have R. Joſes ben Chelpatha, R. Iſmael ben R. Joſes, R. Lazar, and R. Akiba interpreting divers dreams, and many coming to them for interpretation of their dreams. Nay you ſee there, the Diſciples of R. Lazar, in his abſence, practiſing this art. See there alſo many ſtories about this buſineſs, which it would be too much here to tranſcribe. z Fol. 55. 2. a Jeruſal. Maaſar Sheni, fol 52 2. 3.

II. There were hardly any people in the whole World that more uſed or were more fond of Amulets, Charms, Mutterings, Exorciſms, and all kinds of Enchantments: We might here produce innumerable examples; a handful ſhall ſerve us out of the harveſt. ולא בקמיע מומן שאינו מן המומחה b Let not any one go abroad with his amulet on the Sabbath day, unleſs that amulet be preſcribed by an approved Phyſitian; (or, unleſs it be an approved amulet; See the Gemara.) III. So ſkilful were they in conjurings, enchantments and ſorceries, that they wrought σημεῖα μεγάλα, (great ſigns,) many villanies, and more wonders. We paſs by thoſe things which the ſacred ſtory relates of Simon Magus, Elymas, the ſons of Sceva, &c. and Joſephus, of others; We will only produce examples out of the Talmud, a few out of many.

You will wonder, in the entrance, at theſe two things, in order to the ſpeaking of their magical exploits; and thence you will conjecture at the very common practiſe of theſe evil arts among that people. 1. That the Senior who is choſen into the Council, ought to be ſkilled in the arts of Aſtrologers, Juglers, Diviners, Sorcerers, &c. that he may be able to Judge of thoſe who are guilty of the ſame. i 2. The Maſters tell us, that a certain chamber was built by a Magician in the Temple it ſelf. k The chamber of Happarva was built by a certain Magician, whoſe name was Parvah, by art Magick. l Four and twenty of the School Rabbi, intercalating the year at Lydda, were killed by an evil eye: that is, with ſorceries. m R. Joſhua outdoes a Magician in Magick, and drowns him in the Sea. In *Bab. It is related of abundance of Rabbies that they were מלומדים בנסים skilful in working miracles; thus Abba Chelchia, and r Chanin, and s R. Chanina ben Duſa; of which R. Chanina ben Duſa there is almoſt an infinite number of ſtories concerning the miracles he wrought, which ſavour enough and too much of Magick. *

And, that we may not be tedious in producing examples, what can we ſay of the faſting-Rabbies cauſing it to rain in effect when they pleaſed: of which there are abundaance of ſtories in Taanith. What can we ſay of the Bath kol very frequently applauding the Rabbins out of Heaven, of which we have ſpoke before? What can we ſay of the death or plagues foretold by the Rabbins to befal this or that man? Which came to paſs juſt according as they were foretold. I rather ſuſpect ſome Magick art in moſt of theſe, than fiction in all.

IV. Falſe Chriſts broke out, and appeared in publick with their witchcrafts, ſo much the frequenter and more impudent, as the City and people drew nearer to its ruine; becauſe the people believed the Meſſias ſhould be manifeſted before the deſtruction of the City; and each of them pretended to be the Meſſias by theſe ſigns. From the words of Iſaiah, t Before her pain came, ſhe was delivered of a man child, the Doctors concluded, That the Meſſias ſhould be manifeſted before the deſtruction of the City. Thus the Chaldee Paraphraſt upon the place, She ſhall be ſaved before her utmoſt extremity, and her King ſhall be revealed before her pains of child-birth. Mark that alſo, u The ſon of David will not come, till the wicked Empire (of the Romans) ſhall have ſpread it ſelf over all the World nine months; as it is ſaid, Therefore will he give them up, until the time that ſhe which travelleth, hath brought forth. *

VERS. XXVII.

Ὥσπερ γὰρ ἡ ἀστραπὴ, &c. For as the lightning, &c.

TO diſcover clearly the ſenſe of this and the following clauſes, thoſe two things muſt be obſerved which we have formerly given notice of.

1. That the deſtruction of Jeruſalem is very frequently expreſſed in Scripture, as if it were the deſtruction of the whole world, Deut. XXXII. 22. A fire is kindled in mine anger, which ſhall burn unto the loweſt hell (the diſcourſe there, is about the wrath of God conſuming that people. See verſ. 20, 21.) and ſhall conſume the Earth with her encreaſe, and ſet on fire the foundations of the Mountains, Jerem. IV. 23. I beheld the Earth, and low it was without form and void: and the Heavens, and they had no light, &c. The diſcourſe there alſo is concerning the deſtruction of that Nation, Iſa. LXV. 17. Behold, I create new Heavens and a new Earth; and the former ſhall not be remembred, &c. And more paſſages of this ſort among the Prophets. According to this ſenſe Chriſt ſpeaks in this place: and Peter ſpeaks in his ſecond Epiſtle, third Chapter: and John, in the ſixth of the Revelations; and Paul, 2 Cor. V. 17. &c.

2. That Chriſts taking vengeance of that exceeding wicked Nation, is called Chriſts coming in Glory, and His coming in the clouds, Dan. VII. It is alſo called, The day of the Lord. See Pſal. L. Mal. III. 1, 2. &c. Joel II. 31. Matth. XVI. 28. Rev. I. 7. &c. See what we have ſaid on Chap. XII. 20. & XIX. 28.

The

The meaning therefore of the words before us, is this: While they ſhall falſly ſay that Chriſt is to be ſeen here or there: Behold he is in the deſart, one ſhall ſay; another, Behold he is in the ſecret chambers: He himſelf ſhall come, like lightning, with ſudden and altogether unexpected vengeance; They ſhall meet him whom they could not find; they ſhall find him whom they ſought, but quite another than what they looked for.

VERS. XXVIII.

Ὅπου γὰρ ἐὰν τὸ πτῶμα, &c. For whereſoever the carcaſs is, &c.

I Wonder any can underſtand theſe words, of pious men flying to Chriſt, when the diſcourſe here is, of quite a different thing: They are thus connected to the foregoing. Chriſt ſhall be revealed with a ſudden vengeance: For when God ſhall caſt off the City and People, grown ripe for deſtruction, like a Carcaſs thrown out, the Roman Soldiers like Eagles ſhall ſtraight fly to it with their Eagles (Enſigns) to tear and devour it. And to this alſo agrees the anſwer of Chriſt, Luke XVII. and the laſt: when after the ſame words, that are ſpoke here in this Chapter, it was enquired, where Lord? He anſwered, Whereſoever the carcaſs is, &c. Silently hinting thus much, That Jeruſalem, and that wicked Nation, which he deſcribed through the whole Chapter, would be the Carcaſs, to which the greedy and devouring Eagles would fly, to prey upon it.

VERS. XXIX.

Ὁ ἥλιος σκοτισθήσεται, &c. The Sun ſhall be darkned, &c.

THAT is, the Jewiſh Heaven ſhall periſh, and the Sun and Moon of its glory and happineſs ſhall be darkned, and brought to nothing. The Sun is the Religion of the Church; The Moon is the Government of the State, and the Stars are the Judges and Doctors of both. Compare Eſa. XIII. 10. and Ezek. XXXII. 7, 8, &c.

VERS. XXX.

Καὶ τότε φανήσεται τὸ σημεῖον τοῦ υἱοῦ τοῦ ἀνθρώπου. And then ſhall appear the ſign of the Son of Man.

THEN ſhall the Son of Man give a proof of himſelf, whom they would not before acknowledge: a proof indeed, not in any viſible figure, but in vengeance and judgment ſo viſible, that all the Tribes of the Earth ſhall be forced to acknowledge him the Avenger. The Jews would not know him: now they ſhall know him whether they will or no, as Eſay XXVI. 11. Many times they aſked of him a ſign; now a ſign ſhall appear, (that he is the true Meſſias whom they deſpiſed, derided, crucified) namely his ſignal vengeance and fury, ſuch as never any Nation felt from the firſt foundations of the World.

VERS. XXXI.

Καὶ ἀποστελεῖ τοὺς ἀγγέλους αὐτοῦ, &c. And he ſhall ſend his Angels, &c.

WHEN Jeruſalem ſhall be reduced to aſhes, and that wicked Nation cut off and rejected, then ſhall the Son of Man ſend his Miniſters with the Trumpet of the Goſpel, and they ſhall gather together his Elect of the ſeveral Nations, from the four corners of Heaven: ſo that God ſhall not want a Church, although that ancient people of his, be rejected and caſt off: but that Jewiſh Church being deſtroyed, a new Church ſhall be called out of the Gentiles.

VERS. XXXIV.

Ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν ὅτι οὐ μὴ παρέλθῃ ἡ γενεὰ αὕτη, &c. This generation ſhall not paſs, &c.

HENCE it appears plain enough that the foregoing verſes are not to be underſtood of the laſt Judgment, but as we ſaid, of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem. There were ſome among the Diſciples, (particularly John) who lived to ſee theſe things come to paſs. With Matth. XVI. laſt. compare Joh. XXI. 22. And there were ſome Rabbins alive at the time when Chriſt ſpoke theſe things, that lived till the City was deſtroyed,

viz. Rabban Simeon, who periſhed with the City, R. Jochanan ben Zaccai, who out-lived it, R. Zadoch, R. Iſmael, and others.

VERS. XXXVI.

Οὐδεὶς οἶδεν, οὐδὲ οἱ ἄγγελοι. No man knoweth, no not the Angels.

THIS is taken from Deut. XXXII. 34. Is not this laid up in ſtore with me, and ſealed up among my treaſures?

VERS. XXXVII.

Ὥσπερ δὲ αἱ ἡμέραι τοῦ Νῶε, &c. But as the days of Noe were, &c.

THUS Peter placeth as parallels the ruine of the old World, and the ruine of Jeruſalem: x and by ſuch a compariſon his words will be beſt underſtood. For, 1. See how he ſkips from the mention of the death of Chriſt to the times before the flood, in the eighteenth and nineteenth verſes, paſſing over all the time between. Did not the Spirit of Chriſt preach all along in the times under the Law? Why then doth he take an example only from the times before the flood? Namely that he might fit the matter to his caſe, and ſhew that the preſent ſtate of the Jews was like theirs in the times of Noe, and that their ruine ſhould be like alſo. So alſo in his ſecond Epiſtle, Chap. III. verſ. 6, 7.

CHAP. XXV.

VERS. I.

Δέκα παρθένοις. Ten Virgins.

THE Nation of the Jews delighted mightily in the number ten, both in ſacred and civil matters. אין עירה פחותה מעשרה A Synagogue conſiſted not but of ten at the leaſt: which we have obſerved before, when we ſpoke about Synagogues. This alſo was current among them, אין שורה פחותה מעשרה An order or ring of men, conſiſted not but of ten at the leaſt. * The Text is ſpeaking of a company to comfort mourners: which, the Gloſs thus deſcribes, when the company was returned from burying a dead body, היו עושין שורית סביב האבל they ſet themſelves in order about the mourners, and comforted them: But now ſuch an order or ring, conſiſted of ten at the leaſt. To this commonly received number, there ſeems to be an alluding in this place: Not but that they very frequently exceeded that number of Virgins in weddings of greater note, but rarely came ſhort of it.

* Gloſſ. in Bab. Berac. fol. 16. 2.

Εἰς ἀπάντησιν τοῦ νυμφίου. To meet the bridegroom.

To go to a wedding, was reckoned among the works of mercy.

z Rambam on Peah, fol. 1. 1.

גמילות חסדים z The ſhewing of mercy implies two things. 1. That one ſhould aſſiſt an Iſraelite with ones wealth, namely by Alms and redeeming of Captives. 2. That one ſhould aſſiſt him in ones own perſon; to wit, by comforting the mourners, by attending the dead to burial, ולבוא לחופת חתנים and by being preſent at the Chambers of Bridegrooms. The preſence of Virgins alſo adorned the pomp and feſtivity of the thing. Marriages are called by the Rabbins נישואין Receivings, &c. הכנסת כלה The introducing of the Bride, namely, into the houſe of her huſband. There were no marriages, but of ſuch as had been before betrothed: and after the betrothing, the Bridegroom might not lye with the Bride in his father in Laws houſe, before he had brought her to his own. That bringing of her, was the conſummation of the marriage. This parable ſuppoſeth that the Bride was thus fetched to the houſe of her huſband, and that the Virgins were ready againſt her her coming. Who yet, being either fetched a great way, or ſome accident happening to delay her, did not come till midnight.

Λαβοῦσαι τὰς λαμπάδας. Took Lamps.

The form of Lamps is deſcribed by Rambam, and R. Solomon [a] whom ſee. Theſe things are alſo mentioned by R. Solomon. It is the faſhion in the Country of the Iſmaelites, to carry the Bride from the houſe of her father to the houſe of the Bridegroom, before ſhe is put to bed; and to carry before her about ten wooden ſtaves, having each of them on the top, a veſſel like a diſh, in which there is a piece of cloth with oyl and pitch: theſe being lighted, they carry before her for torches. The ſame things ſaith the Aruch in לפד.

VERS. II.

Πέντε φρόνιμοι Πέντε μωραί.
Five wiſe. Five fooliſh.

A Parable, not unlike this, is produced by Kimchi. b Rabban Jochanan ben Zaccai ſaith, as he hath it, This thing is like a King, who invited his ſervants, but did not appoint them any ſet time. פקחים שבהם Thoſe of them that were wiſe, adorned themſelves, and ſat at the gate of the Palace; טפשים שבהם Thoſe that were fooliſh, went about their own buſineſs. The King on a ſudden called for his ſervants: Thoſe went in adorned; theſe undreſt. The King was pleaſed with the wiſe, and angry at the fooliſh.

VERS. V.

Ἐνύσταξαν πᾶσαι, καὶ ἐκάθευδον. They all ſlumbred and ſlept.

נתנמנמו וישנו or נתנמנמו זנרדמו in Talmudick Language. c If ſome ſleep (while they celebrate the Paſchal ſupper) let them eat; if all, let them not eat. R. Joſi ſaith, נתנמנמו יאכלו Do they ſlumber? Let them eat. נרדמו לא יאכלו Do they ſleep? Let them not eat. The Gemariſts enquire, whence a man is to be reputed as a ſlumberer (היכי דמי מתנמנם) R. Iſhi ſaith, He ſleeps and doth not ſleep, he wakes and is not awake. If you call him, he anſwers; לא ידע לאהדורי סברא But he cannot anſwer to the purpoſe. The Gloſs, If you ſpeak to him, he will anſwer לא הין או yes, or no; But if you ask any thing that hath need of thinking; as for inſtance, where ſuch a veſſel is laid up? He cannot anſwer you.

[c] Peſachin, cap. 10. hal. 8.

VERS. XV.

Καὶ ᾧ μὲν ἔδωκε πέντε τάλαντα, &c. And unto one, he gave five talents, &c.

YOU have a like, and almoſt the ſame, parable Luke XIX. yet indeed not the very ſame; for (beſides that there is mention there of pounds being given, here, of talents) that parable was ſpoke by Chriſt going up from Jericho to Jeruſalem, before the raiſing up of Lazarus; this, as he was ſitting on Mount Olivet three days before the Paſſover. That, upon this account, becauſe he was nigh to Jeruſalem, and becauſe they thought that the Kingdom of God would immediately appear, Luke XIX. 11. and that he might ſhew, that it would not be long before Jeruſalem ſhould be called to an account for all the priviledges and benefits conferred upon it by God. (See verſe the fourteenth and ſeventeenth:) But this, that he might warn all to be watchful, and provide with their utmoſt care concerning giving up their accounts at the laſt Judgment.

VERS. XXVII.

Ἔδει σε βαλεῖν τὸ ἀργύριόν μου τοῖς τραπεζίταις, &c. Thou oughteſt therefore to have put my mony to the Exchangers, &c.

THE Lord did not deliver the Talents to his ſervants with that intent that they ſhould receive the increaſe and profit of them by Uſury; but that by Merchandiſe and ſome honeſt way of Trade, they ſhould increaſe them. He only returns this anſwer to the ſlothful ſervant, as fitted to what he had alledged, you take me for a covetous, griping and ſordid man; why then did you not make uſe of a manner of gain agreeable to theſe qualities, namely intereſt or uſury, (ſince you would not apply your ſelf to any honeſt traffick) that you might have returned me ſome increaſe of my money, rather than nothing at all? So that our Lord in theſe words doth not ſo much approve of uſury, as upbraid the folly and ſloth of his ſervant.

Τραπεζίταις

* Aruc. Τραπεζίτας, Exchangers, answering to the word שולחני very usual among the Talmudists. שולחני הוא מכר מטבעות * An Exchanger (Trapezita) sells mony, and because a Table is always before him, upon which he buys and sells, therefore he is called Mensarius, one that stands at a Table.

Of the same employment was חנווני The shopkeeper, of whom is as frequent mention among them. He exercised the employment of an Usurer in buying and changing of fruits, as the other in mony: for in these two especially consisted usury. Of which you

CHAP. XXVI.

VERS. III.

Συνήχθησαν εἰς τὴν αὐλὴν Ἀρχιερέως. Assembled together unto the palace of the High Priest.

§. Of the present Authority of the Council, and of its place.

THOSE ominous prodigies are very memorable, which are related by the Talmudists to have hapned forty years before the destruction of the Temple.

d Jerus. Jom. fol 43. 3. d A tradition. Forty years before the Temple was destroyed, The Western candle (that is, the middlemost, in the holy candlestick) was put out. And the crimson Tongue (that was fastned to the horns of the scape Goat, or the doors of the Temple) kept its redness. And the lot of the Lord (for the Goat that was to be offered up on the day of Expiation) came out on the left hand. And the gates of the Temple, which were shut over night, were found open in the morning. Rabban Jochanan ben Zaccai said therefore, O Temple, wherefore dost thou trouble us? We know thy fate, namely that thou art to be destroyed: e Idem, Sanh. d. fol 24. 2. For it is said, Open, O Lebanon, thy gates, that the flame may consume thy Cedars. e A Tradition. Forty years before the Temple was destroyed, Judgment in capital causes was taken away from Israel. f Jer. Avodah Zarah. fol. 8. 2. f Forty years before the Temple was destroy'd, the Council removed, and sat in the sheds.

With these two last Traditions lies our present business. What the Jews said, Joh. XVIII. 31. Ἡμῖν οὐκ ἔξεστιν ἀποκτεῖναι οὐδένα, It is not lawful for us to put any man to death, signifies the same thing with the Tradition before us, Judgments in capital causes are taken away from Israel. When were they first taken away? Forty years before the destruction of the Temple, say the Talmudists: No doubt, before the death of Christ; the words of the Jews imply so much. But how were they taken away? It is generally received by all, that the Romans did so far divest the Council of its authority, that it was not allowed by them to punish any with death; and this is gathered from those words of the Jews, It is not lawful for us to put any one to death.

But if this indeed be true, 1. What do then those words of our Saviour mean, g Παραδώσουσιν ὑμᾶς εἰς συνέδρια, They will deliver you up to the Councils? 2. How did they put Stephen to death? 3. Why was Paul so much affraid to commit himself to the Council, that he chose rather to appeal to Cæsar?

g Chap. X. 17

The Talmudists excellently well clear the matter. What signifieth that Tradition, say they, of the removal of the Council forty years before the ruine of the Temple? Rabh Isaac bar Abdimi saith, It signifieth thus much, That they did not judge of fines. And a little after, But R. Nachman bar Isaac saith, Do not say that it did not judge of fines, but that it did not judge in capital causes. And the reason was this, כיון דרחמו דנפישי להו רוצחין ולא יכלו למידן Because they saw murderers so much encrease that they could not judge them. They said therefore, It is fit that we should remove from place to place, that so we may avoid the guilt. That is, The number and boldness of thieves and murderers growing so great, that by reason thereof, the authority of the Council grew weak, and neither could, nor dared put them to death; It is better, say they, for us to remove from hence, out of this chamber Gazith, where by the quality of the place we are obliged to judge them, than that by sitting still here, and not judging them, we should render our selves guilty: Hence it is, that neither in the highest, nor in the inferiour Councils, any one was punished with death. (For they did not judge of Capital matters in the inferiour Councils in any City, but only when the great Council sat in the chamber Gazith, saith the Glos.) The authority of them, was not taken away by the Romans, but rather relinquished by themselves. The slothfulness of the Council destroyed its own authority. Hear it justly juſtly upbraided in this matter h. " The Council which puts but one to death in ſeven " years, is called deſtructive. R. Lazar ben Azariah ſaid, which puts one to death in ſeventy " years. R. Tarphon and R. Achiba ſaid, If we had been in the Council (when it judged of " capital matters) there had none ever been put to death by it. R. Simeon ben Gamaliel " ſaid, Theſe men have encreaſed the number of murderers in Iſrael. Moſt certainly true, O Simeon! for by this means the power of the Council came to be weakned in capital matters, becauſe they either by meer ſlothfulneſs, or by a fooliſh tenderneſs, or, as indeed the truth was, by a moſt fond eſtimation of an Iſraelite as an Iſraelite, they ſo far neglected to puniſh bloodſhed and murder, and other crimes, till wickedneſs grew ſo untractable that the authority of the Council trembled for fear of it, and dared not kill the killers. In this ſenſe their ſaying muſt be underſtood, It is not lawful for us to put any man to death. Their authority of judging not being taken from them by the Romans, but loſt by themſelves, and deſpiſed by their people.

h Maccoth. Chap. 1. Hal. 17

Notwithſtanding it was not ſo loſt but that ſometimes they exerciſed it; namely, when they obſerved they might do it ſafely and without danger. Dat veniam corvis, &c. (Spares Crows but vexeth Pigeons) thieves, murderers, and wicked men armed with force, they dared not call into their judgment, they were afraid of ſo deſperate a crew; but to judg, condemn, torture, and put to death poor men and Chriſtians, from whom they feared no ſuch danger, they dreaded it not, they did not avoid it. They had been ready enough at condemning our Saviour himſelf to death, if they had not feared the people, and if Providence had not otherwiſe determined of his death.

We may alſo by the way add that alſo which follows after the place above cited, ניטלו דיני ממונות מישראל i In the day of Simeon ben Jochai, judgments of pecuniary matters were taken away from Iſrael. * In the ſame Tract, this is ſaid to have been in the days of Simeon ben Shetah (long before Chriſt was born) but this is an error of the tranſcribers. But now if the Jewiſh Council loſt their power of judging in pecuniary cauſes, by the ſame means as they loſt it in capital, it muſt needs be that deceits, oppreſſions and mutual injuries were grown ſo common and daring that they were let alone, as being above all puniſhment. The Babylonian Gemariſts alledg another reaſon, but whether it be only in favour of their Nation, this is no fit place to examine k.

i Hieroſ. Sanhedr. fol. 24. 1. * Fol. 18. 1.

k See Avodah Zarah as before.

That we may yet further confirm our opinion, that the authority of that Council in capital matters was not taken away by the Romans, we will produce two ſtories as clear examples of the thing we aſſert: One is this, l R. Lazar Son of R. Zadok ſaid, When I was a little Boy, ſitting on my Fathers ſhoulders, I ſaw the Daughter of a Prieſt that had played the harlot, compaſſed round with fagots and burnt. The Council no doubt judging and condemning her, and this after Judea had then groaned many years under the Roman yoke; for that ſame R. Lazar ſaw the deſtruction of the City.

The other you have in the ſame Tract m, where they are ſpeaking of the manner of pumping out evidence againſt a Heretick and ſeducer of the people. They place, ſay they, two witneſſes in ambuſh, in the inner part of the houſe, and him in the outward, with a candle burning by him, that they may ſee and hear him. Thus they dealt with Ben Sudta in Lydda. They placed two Diſciples of the wiſe in ambuſh for him, and they brought him before the Council and ſtoned him. The Jews openly profeſs that this was done to him in the days of R. Akiba, long after the deſtruction of the City; and yet then as you ſee, the Council ſtill retained its authority in judging of capital cauſes. They might do it for all the Romans, if they dared do it to the Criminals.

m Fol. 25. 4.

But ſo much thus far concerning its authority, let us now ſpeak of its preſent ſeat.

n " The Council removed from the Chamber Gazith to the ſheds; from the ſheds into " Jeruſalem; from Jeruſalem to Jafne; from Jafne to Oſha; from Oſha to Shepharaama; " from Shepharaama to Bethſhaarim; from Bethſhaarim to Tſippor; from Tſippor to Tiberias, " &c. We conjecture that the great Bench was driven from its ſeat, the Chamber Gazith, half a year, or thereabout, before the death of Chriſt; but whether they ſat then in the ſheds (a place in the Court of the Gentiles) or in the City when they debated about the death of Chriſt, does not clearly appear, ſince no Authors make mention how long it ſat either here or there. Thoſe things that are mentioned in Chap. XXVII. 4, 5, 6. ſeem to argue that they ſat in the Temple. Theſe before us, that they ſat in the City. Perhaps in both places; for it was not unuſual with them to return thither as occaſion ſerved, from whence they came, only to the Chamber Gazith they never went back. Whence the Gloſs on the place lately cited, " They ſat in Jafne in the days of Rabban Jochanan; in Oſha, " in the days of Rabban Gamaliel; for they returned from Oſha to Jafne, &c. Thus the Council which was removed from Jeruſalem to Jafne, before the deſtruction of the City, returned thither at the Feaſt, and ſat as before. Hence Paul is brought before the Council at Hieruſalem, when Jafne at that time was its proper ſeat. And hence Rabban Simeon, Preſident of the Council, was taken and killed in the ſiege of the City; and Rabban Jochanan his Vice-preſident was very near it, both of them being drawn from Juſne to the City, with the reſt of the Bench for obſervation of the Paſſover.

Whether the Hall of the High Prieſt were the ordinary receptacle for the Council, or only in the preſent occaſion, we do not here enquire. It is more material to enquire concerning the Bench it ſelf, and who ſat Preſident in judging. The Preſident of the Council at this time, was Rabban Gamaliel (Paul's Maſter) and the Vice-preſident, Rabban Simeon his Son, or Rabban Jochanan ben Zaccai (which we do not diſpute now.) Whence therefore had the chief Prieſt here and in other places the precedence and the chief voice in judging? For thus in Stephen's caſe the High Prieſt is the chief of the inquiſition, Act. VI. 1. alſo in Paul's caſe, Act. XXIII. 2. ſee alſo Act. IX. 1. Had the Prieſts a Council and Judgment-ſeat of their own? Or might they in the chief Council when the Preſident was abſent, hear cauſes of life and death? To this long queſtion, and that enough perplexed, we reply theſe few things.

I. We confeſs indeed that the Prieſt had a Bench and Council of their own, yet denying that there was a double Council, one for Eccleſiaſtical, the other for Civil affairs, as ſome would have it.

1. We meet often with mention of the Chamber of the Councellors, לשכת בולוטי next the Court, which is alſo called לשכת פרהדרין concerning which thus the Bab. Joma o, "The Tradition of R. Juda: What? was it the Chamber of פרהדרין? Was it not the "Chamber בולוטי Βουλευτῆς, of the Councellors? At firſt it was called the Chamber of "the Councellors, (Βουλευτῆς): לשכת בולוטי But when the High Prieſthood came to "be bought with money, and changed yearly; כפרהדרין הללו as the Kings Preſidents "(Προέδρους) are changed every year from that time forward, it was called, The Cham-"ber of the Preſidents (Προέδρων.)

o Fol. 8.

Hear the Gloſſer on this place: "The High Prieſts were wicked and did not fulfill their "whole year; and he that ſucceeded the other changed this building, and adorned it, "that it might be called by his own name. Hear alſo the Gemara, "The firſt Temple "ſtood four hundred and ten years, and there were not above eighteen Prieſts under it. "The ſecond ſtood four hundred and twenty years, and there were more than three hun-"dred under it. Take out forty years of Simeon the Juſt, eighty of Jochanan, ten of Iſ-"mael ben Phabi, and eleven of Eleazar ben Harſum, and there doth not remain one "whole year to each of the reſt.

Behold the Chamber of the Βουλευτῆς, Councellors, properly ſo called, becauſe the Prieſts did meet and ſit there, not to judg, but to conſult; and that only of things belonging to the Temple! Here they conſulted and took care that all perſons and things belonging and neceſſary to the worſhip of God, ſhould be in readineſs; that the buildings of the Temple and the Courts ſhould be kept in repair; and that the publick Liturgy ſhould be duly performed; but in the mean time they wanted all power of judging and puniſhing; they had no authority to fine, ſcourge, or put to death, yea, and in a word, to exerciſe any judgment; for by their own examination and authority they could not admit a Candidate into the Prieſthood, but he was admitted by the authority of the Council: p "In the Chamber "Gazith ſat the Council of Iſrael, and held the examinations of Prieſts; whoſoever was "not found fit, was ſent away in black clothes, and a black veil; whoſoever was found "fit, was clothed in white, and had a white veil, and entred and miniſtred with his "Brethren the Prieſts.

p Bab. Joma, fol. 19. 1.

2. We meet alſo with mention of בירת דין של כהנים the Council-houſe of the Prieſts. עשו הכהנים גדולי קבע q The High Prieſts made a Decree, and did not permit an Iſraelite to carry the ſcape Goat into the wilderneſs. But in the Gloſs, לא היו בד"ש של כהנים מניח The Council of the Prieſts did not permit this. בד"ש של כהנים r The Council of the Prieſts exacted for the portion of a Virgin four hundred Zuzees, and the wiſe men did not hinder it.

q Bab. Joma, fol. 66. 1. in Gemara. r Coelabb. chap. 1. hal. 5.

Firſt, This was that Council of which we ſpoke before in the Chamber of the Councellors. Secondly, That which was decreed by them concerning the carrying away of the ſcape Goat, belonged meerly to the Service of the Temple, as being a caution about the right performance of the office in the day of Attonement. Thirdly, And that about the portion of a virgin was nothing elſe but what any Iſraelite might do: and ſo the Gemariſts confeſs. If any noble family in Iſrael, ſay they, would do what the Prieſts do, they may. The Prieſts ſet a price upon their virgins, and decreed by common conſent that not leſs than ſuch a portion ſhould be required for them, which was lawful for all the Iſraelites to do for their virgins if they pleaſed.

3. s There is an example brought of Tobias a Phyſician, who ſaw the New Moon at Jeruſalem, he and his Son, and his ſervant whom he had freed. The Prieſts admitted him and his Son for witneſſes, his ſervant they rejected; but when they came before "בד the Bench, they admitted him and his ſervant, and rejected his Son. Obſerve, 1. That בית דין the Council is here oppoſed to the Prieſts. 2. That it belonged to the Council to determine of the New Moon, becauſe on that depended the ſet-times of the Feaſts: this is plain enough in the

the Chapter cited. 3. That what the Prieſts did was matter of Examination only, not Decree.

4. t זקני העיר וה בד" של שלשה The Elders of the City, (Deut. XXII. 18.) are the Triumvirat Bench. השערה וה בד" של כהן גדול At the Gate (v. 24.) means the Bench of the chief Prieſt. The matter there in debate is about a married woman, who is found by her husband to have loſt her virginity, and is therefore to be put to death. Deut. XXII. 13, &c. In that paſſage among other things you may find theſe words, ver. 18. And the Elders of that City ſhall lay hold of that man and ſcourge him. The Gemariſts take occaſion from thence to define what the phraſe there and in other places means, The Elders of the City: and what is the meaning of השערה the word Gate, when it relates to the Bench. That, ſay they, ſignifies the Triumvirat Bench: This the Bench, or, Council of the High Prieſt: that is, unleſs I be very much miſtaken, every Council of twenty three; which is clear enough both from the place mentioned. and from reaſon it ſelf. t Jeruſ. Chetubb. fol. 28. 3.

1. The words of the place quoted are theſe: "R. Bon bar Chaija enquired before R. "Zeira, What if the Father (of the Virgin) ſhould produce witneſſes which invalidate "the teſtimony of the husbands witneſſes? if the Fathers witneſſes are proved falſe, he "muſt be whipped, and pay a hundred Selaim in the Triumvirat-Court, but the witneſſes "are to be ſtoned by the Bench of the Twenty three, &c. R. Zeira thought that this was "a double judgment: but R. Jeremias in the name of R. Abhu, that it was but a ſingle "one: But the Tradition contradicts R. Abhu; for אל זקני העיר To the Elders of the "City, (ver. 5.) זה בד" של שלשה Is, To the Triumvirat Bench. השערה וה בד" כהן גדול But at the Gate, means the Bench of the High Prieſt. It is plain, that the Bench of the High Prieſt is put in oppoſition to the Triumvirat-Bench; and by conſequence, that it is either the chief Council, or the Council of the Twenty three, or ſome other Council of the Prieſts, diſtinct from all theſe. But it cannot be this third, becauſe the place cited in the Talmudiſts, and the place in the Law cited by the Talmudiſts, plainly ſpeaks of ſuch a Council which had power of judging in capital cauſes. But they that ſuppoſe the Eccleſiaſtical Council among the Jews to have been diſtinct from the Civil, ſcarce ſuppoſe that that Council ſat on capital cauſes, or paſſed ſentence of death; much leſs is it to be thought that that Council ſat only on life and death; which certainly ought to be ſuppoſed from the place quoted, if בד" של כהן גדול The Council of the High Prieſt did ſtrictly ſignifie ſuch a Council of Prieſts. Let us illuſtrate the Talmudical words with a Paraphraſe. R Zeira thought that that cauſe of a husband accuſing his wife for the loſs of her virginity belonged to the judgment of two Benches; namely, of the Triumvirat, which inflicted whipping, and pecuniary mulcts; and of the Twenty three which adjudged to death; but Rabbi Abhu thinks it is to be referred to the judgment of one Bench only. But you are miſtaken, good Rabbi Abhu, and the very phraſe made uſe of in this caſe refutes you; for the expreſſion which is brought in, To the Elders of the City, ſignifies the Triumviral Bench; and the phraſe at the Gate, ſignifies the Bench of Twenty three; for the chief Council never ſat in the Gate.

2. Now the Council of Twenty three is called by the Talmudiſts the Bench, or the Council of the chief Prieſt, alluding to the words of the Law-giver, Deut. XVII. 9. where the word Prieſts denotes the inferiour Councils, and Judg the chief Council.

II. In the chief Council the Preſident ſat in the higheſt ſeat, (being at this time when Chriſt was under examination, Rabban Gamaliel, as we ſaid) but the High Prieſt excelled him in dignity every where; for the Preſident of the Council was choſe, not ſo much for his quality, as for his learning and skill in Traditions. He was מקבל (a phraſe very much uſed by the Author of Juchaſin, applied to Preſidents) that is, Keeper, Father, and deliverer of Traditions, and he was choſe to this office who was fitteſt for theſe things. Memorable is the ſtory of Hillel's coming to the Preſidentſhip, being preferred to the Chair for this only thing, becauſe he ſolved ſome doubts about the Paſſover, having learnt it, as he ſaith himſelf, from Shemaiah and Abtalion u. We will not think it much to tranſcribe the ſtory: The Sons of Betira once forgot a Tradition: for when the fourteenth day (on which the Paſſover was to be celebrated) fell out on the Sabbath, they could not tell whether the Paſſover ſhould take place of the Sabbath or no: But they ſaid, there is here a certain Babylonian, Hillel by name, who was brought up under Shemaiah and Abtalion, he can reſolve us whether the Paſſover ſhould take place of the Sabbath, or no; they ſent therefore for him, and ſaid to him, Have you ever heard in your life, (that is, have you received any Tradition) whether when the fourteenth day falls on the Sabbath, the Paſſover ſhould take place of the Sabbath, or no? He anſwered, Have we but one Paſſover that takes place of the Sabbath yearly? or are there not many Paſſovers that put by the Sabbath yearly? namely the continual ſacrifice. He proved this by arguments a pari, from the equality of it, from the leſs to the greater, &c. But they did not admit of this from him, till he ſaid, May it thus and thus happen to me, if I did not hear this of Shemaiah and Abtalion. When they heard this, they immediately ſubmitted, and promoted him to the Preſidentſhip, &c. u Jeruſ. Peſach. fol. 33. 1.

It belonged to the Preſident chiefly to ſum up the votes of the Elders, to determine of a Tradition, to preſerve it, and tranſmit it to poſterity; and theſe things excepted, you will ſcarce obſerve any thing peculiar to him in judging, which was not common to all the reſt. Nothing therefore hindred but that the High Prieſt, and the other Prieſts, (while he excelled in quality, and they in number) might promote acts in the Council above the reſt, and purſue them with the greateſt vigor; but eſpecially when the buſineſs before them was about the ſum of Religion, as it was here, and in the examples alledged of Paul and Stephen. It was lawful for them to whoſe office it peculiarly belonged, to take care of ſacred things, to ſhew more officious diligence in matters where theſe were concerned, than other men, that they might provide for their fame among men, and the good of their places. The Council indeed might conſiſt of Iſraelites only, without either Levites or Prieſts, in caſe ſuch could not be found fit: uThus it is commanded that in the great Council there ſhould be Levites and Prieſts; but if ſuch are not to be found, and the Council conſiſts of other Iſraelites only, it is lawful. But ſuch a ſcarcity of Prieſts and Levites is only ſuppoſed, was never found; they were always a great part, if not the greateſt of the Council. Rabban Jochanan ben Zaccai, the Prieſt, was either now Vice-preſident of the Council, or next to him. Prieſts were every where in ſuch eſteem with the people, and with the Council, and the dignity and veneration of the High Prieſt was ſo great, that it is no wonder if you find him and them always the chief actors, and the principal part in that great Aſſembly.

VERS. VI.

Ἰησοῦ δὲ γενομένου ἐν Βηθανίᾳ, &c. Now when Jeſus was in Bethanie, &c.

THAT this Supper in Bethanie was the ſame with that mentioned, Joh. XIII. I dare venture to affirm; however that be taken by very many for the Paſchal Supper. Let us examine the matter a little home.

I. This Supper was before the Paſſover, ſo was that; that this was ſo, none need doubt; no more may they of the other, if we conſider theſe things.

1. It is ſaid by John in expreſs words Πρὸ τῆς ἑορτῆς τοῦ Πάσχα, Before the Feaſt of the Paſſover, verſ. 1. Πάσχα, Paſſover, indeed, not ſeldom, ſignifies the Lamb it ſelf; ſometimes the very time of eating the Lamb; ſometimes the Sacrifice of the day following, as Joh. XVIII. 28. But Ἑορτὴ τοῦ Πάσχα, The Feaſt of the Paſſover, always ſignifies the whole ſeven days Paſchal Feaſt, both in the language of the Scripture, and of the Talmudiſts; a Jew would laugh at one that ſhould interpret it otherways.

2. When Chriſt ſaid to Judas going out, What thou doſt do quickly, ſome thought he meant this, Buy thoſe things which we have need of for the feaſt, at the twenty ninth verſe. For what Feaſt, I pray? for the Paſchal Supper? That according to the Interpreters which we here oppoſe, was juſt paſt. For the remaining part of the Feaſt of that ſolemnity? Alaſs how unſeaſonable! where were thoſe things, I pray, then to be bought? (If this were the very night on which they had juſt eaten the Lamb); the night of a feaſt-day was feſtival; where were there any ſuch markets to be found then? It was an unuſual thing indeed, and unheard of, to riſe from the Paſchal Supper, to go to market; a market on a feſtival night was unuſual and unheard of. It would argue ſome negligence, and little good husbandry, if thoſe things that were neceſſary for the feaſt, were not yet provided; but that they muſt be to run, now late at night, to buy thoſe things they knew not where, they knew not how. It is certainly very harſh and contrary to reaſon to underſtand theſe thing thus, when from the firſt verſe the ſenſe is very plain, Before the feaſt of the Paſſover. The Paſſover was not yet come, but was near at hand; the Diſciples therefore thought that our Saviour had given order to Judas to provide all thoſe things that were neceſſary to the Paſchal ſolemnity againſt it came.

3. Obſerve alſo that of Luke, Chap. XXII. 3, &c. Satan entred into Judas, and he went his way and communed with the chief Prieſts, &c. And after in the ſeventh verſe, Then came the day of unleavened bread. Hence I enquire, is the method of Luke direct or no? if not, let there be ſome reaſon given of the tranſpoſition; if it be direct, then 'tis plain that the Devil entred into Judas before the Paſſover; but he entred into him at that Supper in Joh. XIII. v. 27. therefore that Supper was before the Paſſover. For,

4. Let them who take that Supper in Joh. XIII. for the Paſchal-Supper, tell me how this is poſſible, that Judas after the Paſchal-Supper (at which they do not deny that he was preſent with the reſt of the Diſciples) could make his agreement with the Prieſts, and get his blades together ready to apprehend our Saviour, and aſſemble all the Council, ver. 57. The Evangeliſts ſay that he made an agreement with the chief Prieſts, Mat. XXVI. 14. καὶ τοῖς στρατηγοῖς, and with the Captains, Luk. XXII. 4. and with all the Council, Mark XIV. 41. But now which way was it poſſible that he could bargain with all theſe in in ſo ſmall a ſpace as there was between the going out of Judas from Supper, and the betraying of our Lord in the Garden? What were theſe all together at Supper that night? This is a matter to be laughed at, rather than credited. Did he viſit all theſe from door to door? And this is as little to be thought, ſince he had ſcarce time to diſcourſe with any one of them. Every one ſupped this night at home, the maſter of a family with his family. It would be ridiculous to ſuppoſe that theſe chief Prieſts ſupped together, while in the mean time their families ſat down at home without their head. It is required by the Law that every maſter of a family ſhould be with his family that night inſtructing them, and performing ſacred rites with and for them. Theſe were therefore to be ſought from houſe to houſe by Judas, if that were the firſt time of his treating with them about this matter, and let reaſon anſwer whether that little time he had were ſufficient for this? we affirm therefore with the authority of the Evangeliſts, that that Supper, Joh. XIII. was before the Paſſover; at which Satan entring into Judas, he bargained with the Prieſts before the Paſſover, he appointed the time and place of his betraying our Saviour, and all things were by them made ready for this wicked deed before the Paſſover came. Obſerve the method and order of the ſtory in the Evangeliſts, Mat. XXVI. 14, 15, 16, 17. Mark XIV. 10, 11, 12. Then went Judas to the Prieſts, and ſaid, What will you give me, &c. And from that time he ſought for an opportunity to betray him. Now on the firſt day of unleavened bread came the diſciples, &c. When was it that Judas came to the Prieſts to treat about betraying Chriſt? ſurely before the firſt day of unleavened bread. Luke alſo whom we quoted before, proceeds in the very ſame method. From that time, ſay they, he ſought for an opportunity to betray him. If then firſt he went to and agreed with the Prieſts, when he roſe up from the Paſchal-Supper, as many ſuppoſe, he did not then ſeek for an opportunity, but had found one. The manner of ſpeaking uſed by the Evangeliſts, moſt plainly intimates ſome ſpace of deliberation, not ſudden execution.

5. Let thoſe words of John be conſidered, Chap. XIV. 31. Ἐγείρεσθε, ἄγωμεν ἐντεῦθεν, Ariſe, let us go hence, and compared with the words, Chap. XVIII. 1. When Jeſus had ſpoke theſe words, he went away with his Diſciples over the brook Cedron. Do not theſe ſpeak of two plainly different departures? Did not Chriſt riſe up and depart, when he ſaid, Ariſe let us go hence? Thoſe words are brought in by the Evangliſt, without any end or deſign, if we are not to underſtand by them, that Chriſt immediately changed his place, and certainly this change of place is different from that which followed the Paſchal Supper, Joh. XVIII. 1.

6. In that Thirteenth Chapter of John there is not the leaſt mention nor ſyllable of the Paſchal Supper. There is indeed plain mention of a Supper before the Feaſt of the Paſſover, that is, before the Feſtival-day; but of a Paſchal-Supper, there is not one ſyllable. I profeſs ſeriouſly I cannot wonder enough how Interpreters could apply that Chapter to the Paſchal-Supper when there is not only no mention at all in it of the Paſchal-Supper, but the Evangeliſt hath alſo pronounced in moſt expreſs words, and than which nothing can be more plain, that that Supper of which he ſpeaks, was not on the Feaſt of the Paſſover, but before the Feaſt.

7. If thoſe things which we meet with Joh. XIII. of the Sop given to Judas, &c. were acted in the Paſchal-Supper, then how, I pray, was it poſſible for the Diſciples to miſtake the meaning of thoſe words, What thou doſt do quickly? In the Paſchal-Supper he ſaid, He that dips with me in the diſh is he; and the hand of Judas, as ſome think, was at that very moment in the diſh. To Judas asking, Is it I? he plainly anſwered, Thou haſt ſaid; and beſides he gave him a Sop for a token (as they ſay who maintain that opinion): Then with what reaſon, or with what ignorance, after ſo clear a diſcovery of the thing and perſon, could the Diſciples imagin that Chriſt ſaid, Buy quickly thoſe things that are neceſſary, or give ſomething to the poor?

8. And to what poor, I pray? It was unſeaſonable truly, late at night to go to ſeek for poor people here and there, who were now diſperſed all about in ſeveral (πατριαῖς) families eating the Paſſover; (for the pooreſt Iſraelite was obliged to that duty as well as the richeſt.) They who ſuppoſed that Chriſt commanded him to give ſomething to the poor, could not but underſtand it of a thing that was preſently to be done. For it had been ridiculous to conceive that Chriſt ſent him ſo haſtily away from Supper, to give ſomething to the poor to morrow. But if it be granted that the matter was tranſacted at Bethany, and that two days before the Paſſover, which we aſſert, then it is neither neceſſary you ſhould ſuppoſe that Supper to have been ſo late at night, nor were poor people then and there to be far ſought for, ſince ſo great a multitude of men followed Chriſt every where.

II. This Supper was at Bethany, two days before the Paſſover, the ſame we conclude of that Supper, Joh. XIII. both as to the place and time; and that partly by the carrying on of the ſtory to that time, partly by obſerving the ſequel of that Supper. Six days before the Paſſover Chriſt ſups at Bethany, Joh. XII. 1. The next day (five days before the Paſsover) he came to Jeruſalem riding on an Aſs, Joh. XII. 12, 13. and in the Evening he returned to Bethany, Mat. XXI. 17. Mark XI. 11. The day following, (four days before the Paſsover) he went to Jeruſalem; Mark XI. 11, 15, &c. and at Evening he returned the ſame way to Bethany. The day after (three days before the Paſsover) he goes again to Jeruſalem. Mark XI. 20. In the Evening he went out to the mount of Olives, Math. XXIV. 1, 3. Mark XIII. 1, 3. Luk. XXI. 37. Now where did he ſup this night? at Bethany. For ſo Matthew and Mark. After two days was the Paſsover, &c. Now when Jeſus was in Bethany. And from this time forward there is no account either of his ſupping or going to Jeruſalem till the evening of the Paſsover. From that ſupper both the Evangeliſts begin their ſtory of Judas his contriving to betray our Lord; Math. XXVI. 14. Mark XIV. 10. and very fitly; for at that Supper the Devil had entred into him, and hurried him forward to accompliſh his villany.

Paſſ-

We therefore thus draw up the ſeries of the Hiſtory out of the holy Writers. Before the feaſt of the Paſsover (Joh. XIII. 1.) namely, two days (Math. XXVI. 2, 6.) as Jeſus was ſupping in Bethany, a woman anoynts his head: and ſome of the Diſciples murmur at it. Our Saviour himſelf becomes both her Advocate and Encomiaſt. Before Supper was done, Chriſt riſeth from the table, and waſheth his Diſciples feet; and ſitting down again acquaints them with the betrayer. John asking privately about him, he privately alſo gives him a token by a Sop, and gives a Sop to Judas. With this, the Devil entred into him, and now he grows ripe for his wickedneſs. The Devil had before put it into his heart, to betray him: ver. 2. Now he is impatient till he hath done it. He riſeth up immediately after he had the Sop, and goes out. As he was going out, Jeſus ſaid to him, what thou doſt, do quickly: which ſome underſtood of buying neceſſaries for the Feaſt, that was now two days off. It was natural and eaſie for them to ſuppoſe, that he, out of his diligence (having the purſe, and the care of providing things that were neceſſary) was now gone to Jeruſalem, though it were night, there being a great deal to be done, to get all things ready againſt the Feaſt. He goes away; Comes to Jeruſalem; and the next day, treats with the Prieſt about betraying our Lord, and concludes a bargain with them. They were affraid of themſelves, leſt they ſhould be either hindred by the people, or ſuffer ſome violence from them, on the Feaſt day. He frees them from this fear, provided they would let him have Souldiers and company ready at the time appointed. Our Saviour lodges at Bethany that night, and ſpends the next day and the night after, there too: and, being now ready to take his leave of his Diſciples, He teaches, inſtructs and comforts them at large. Judas having craftily laid the deſign of his treachery, and ſet his nets in readyneſs, returns, as is probable to Bethany; and is ſuppoſed by the Diſciples, who were ignorant of the matter, to have performed his office exceeding diligently, in providing neceſſaries for the approaching Feaſt. On the day it ſelf of the Paſsover, Jeſus removes from Bethany with his Diſciples, Ariſe, ſaith he, let us go hence, Joh. XIV. laſt, and comes to Jeruſalem.

VERS. VII.

Κατέχεεν ὅτι τῆ κεφαλῆ αὐτῦ ἀνακειμένυ. Powred it upon his head as he ſate at meat.

THerefore it was not the ſame Supper with that in Joh. XII. 1. for then our Saviours feet were anointed, now his head. I admire that any one ſhould be able to confound theſe two ſtories. Oyl perfumed with Spices, was very uſual in Feaſts, eſpecialy ſacred; and it was wont to be poured upon the head of ſome one preſent.

* Hieroſ. Bracc. fol. 11. 2. * The School of Shammai ſaith, He holds ſweet Oyl in his right hand, and a cup of wine in his left. He ſays Grace firſt over the Oyl, and then over the wine. The School of Hillel ſaith, Oyl in his right hand, and wine in his left. He bleſſeth the ſweet Oyl and anoynts the head of him that ſerves: but if the waiter be a Diſciple of the Wiſe, he anoynts the wall; for it is a ſhame for a Diſciple of the Wiſe to ſmell of perfumes. Here the waiter anoynts the head of him that ſits down.

VERS. VIII.

Εἰς τί ἡ ἀπώλεια αὕτη; To what purpoſe is this waſte?

IT was not without cauſe that it was called, precious oyntment, verſ. 7. and very coſtly, Joh. XII. 3. To ſhew that it was not of thoſe common ſorts of oyntments uſed in Feaſts, which they thought it no waſt, to pour upon the waiters head, or to daub upon the wall. But this oyntment was of much more value, and thence aroſe the cavil.

VERS.

VERS. IX.

Καὶ δοθῆναι πτωχοῖς. And be given to the poor.

THAT it was Judas eſpecially who cavilled at this, we have reaſon to belive from what is ſaid of him in another Supper; Joh. XII. 4. Compare this with thoſe words, Joh. XIII. 29. When Jeſus ſaid to Judas, what thou doeſt do quickly, Some thought he had meant, Give ſomething to the poor. That Supper, I preſume, was the ſame with this: and, ſee, how theſe things agree! when a complaint aroſe of that prodigal waſt of the Oyntment, here, and before in Joh. XII. and that it ſeemed unfit to ſome, that that ſhould be ſpent ſo unadviſedly upon our Lord, which might have been beſtowed much better, and more fitly upon the poor: how eaſily might the others think that Chriſt had ſpoken to him about giving ſomewhat to the poor, that he might ſhew his care of the poor, notwithſtanding what he had before ſaid concerning them, and the waſt of the Oyntment.

VERS. XII.

Πρὸς τὸ ἐνταφιάσαί με ἐποίησεν. She did it for my burial.

SHE had anoynted his feet, Joh. XII. out of Love, duty, and honour to him; but this (which is added over and above to them) is upon account of his burial; and that not only in the interpretation of Chriſt, but in the deſign of the woman. She, and ſhe firſt, believes that Chriſt ſhould dye; and under that notion, ſhe pours the Oyntment upon his head, as if ſhe were now taking care of his body, and anoynting it for burial: And it is as if Chriſt had ſaid to thoſe that took exceptions, and complained; "You "account her too officious and diligent for her doing this; and waſtful rather than "prudent in the immoderate profeſſion of her friendſhip and reſpect, but a great and "weighty reaſon moves her to it. She knows I ſhall dye, and now takes care of my "burial; what you approve of towards the dead, ſhe hath done to one ready to dye. "Hence her fame ſhall be celebrated in all ages, for this her faith, and this expreſſion "of it.

VERS. XIX.

Ἡτοίμασαν τὸ Πάσχα. They made ready the Paſsover.

PETER and John were ſent for this purpoſe, Luke, XXII. 8. and perhaps they moved the queſtion, Πῦ θέλεις ἑτοιμάσωμεν; Where wilt thou, &c. They only knew that Judas was about another buſineſs, while the reſt ſuppoſed he was preparing neceſſaries for the Paſsover.

This, Peter and John were to do, (after having ſpoke with the Landlord, whom our Saviour pointed out to them by a ſign,) to prepare and fit the room.

I. A Lamb was to be bought, approved, and fit for the Paſsover.

II. This Lamb was to be brought by them into the Court where the Altar was.

a The Paſsover was to be killed only in the Court, where the other ſacrifices were ſlain: and it was to be killed on the fourteenth day, after noon, after the daily ſacrifice, after the offering

offering of the incenſe, &c. The manner of bringing the Paſsover into the Court, and of killing it, you have in Peſachin, b in theſe words. The Paſsover is killed in three companies; according as it is ſaid, ושחטו אותו כל עדת ישראל And all the Aſſembly of the Congregation of Iſrael ſhall kill the Paſsover; Aſſembly, Congregation and Iſrael. The firſt company enters, and fill the whole Court: they lock the doors of the Court: the trumpets ſound: the Prieſts ſtand in order, having golden and ſilver Vials in their hands; one row ſilver, and the other gold; and they are not intermingled: The Vials had no brims, leſt the blood ſhould ſtay upon them, and be congealed, or thickned: An Iſraelite kills it, and a Prieſt receives the blood, and gives it to him that ſtands next, and he to the next, who taking the Vial that was full, gives him an empty one. The Prieſt who ſtands next to the Altar, ſprinkles the blood at one ſprinkling againſt the bottom of the Altar: that company goes out, and the ſecond comes in, &c. Let them tell me now, who ſuppoſe that Chriſt eat his Paſsover one day ſooner than the Jews did theirs, how theſe things could be performed by him or his Diſciples in the Temple, ſince it was looked upon as a heinous offence among the people not to kill or eat the Paſsover in the due time. They commonly carried the Lambs into the Court upon their ſhoulders: this is called הרכבתו c Its carrying in Peſachin: where the Gloſs, The carrying of it upon a mans ſhoulders, to bring it into the Court, as into a publick place.

b Chap. 5. hal. 5, 6.

c Peſachin cap. 6. hal. 1.

III. It was to be preſented in the Court, לשם פסח under the name of the Paſchal Lamb, and to be killed למנויו For the company mentioned: See what the Gemariſts ſay of this thing in Peſachin, d If they kill it for ſuch as are not to eat, or as are not numbred, for ſuch as are not circumciſed or unclean, it is prophane: If for thoſe that are to eat, and not to eat, numbered and not numbered; for circumciſed and not circumciſed, clean and unclean, it is right: that is, for thoſe that are numbered, that attonement may be made for the not numbered; for the circumciſed, that attonement may be made for the uncircumciſed, &c. So the Gemariſts and the Gloſſes.

d Chap. 5. hal. 3.

IV. The blood being ſprinkled at the foot of the Altar, the Lamb ſlead, his belly cut up, the fat taken out and thrown into the fire upon the Altar, the body is carried back to the place where they ſup: the fleſh is roaſted, and the skin given to the Landlord.

V. Other things were alſo provided. Bread, according to Gods appoyntment, wine, ſome uſual meats, and the ſame called חריסת Charoſeth: Of which Commentators ſpeak every where.

VERS. XX.

Ἀνέκειτο μετὰ τῶν δώδεκα. He ſate down with the twelve.

II. The Iſraelites accounted ſuch lying down in eating a very fit poſture requiſite in ſacred feaſts, and higly requiſite and moſt neceſſary in the Paſchal Supper. We do not uſe lying down, but only to a morſel, &c. And indeed to thoſe that did eat leaning, leaning was neceſſary. But now our ſitting is a kind of leaning along. They were uſed to lean along, every one on his own couch, and to eat his meat on his own table: But we eat all together at one table.

b Another Gloſs in Berac. cap. 6. in the place above.

אפילו עני שבישראל לא יאכל עד שיסב: i Even the pooreſt Iſraelite muſt not eat, till he lyes down. The Canon is ſpeaking about the Paſchal Supper. On which, thus the Babylonians. It is ſaid that the feaſt of unleavened bread requires leaning or lying down, but the bitter herbs not: concerning wine it is ſaid in the name of Rabh Nachman, That it hath need of lying down: and it is ſaid in the name of Rabh Nachman, that it hath not need of lying down: and yet theſe do not contradict one another; for that, is ſaid of the two firſt cups, this, of the two laſt. k They lay down on the left ſide, not on the right, becauſe they muſt neceſſarily uſe their right hand in eating. So the Gloſs there.

IV. When there were two beds, נדול מיסב בראש The worthieſt perſon lyes uppermoſt; the ſecond to him next above him. But when there were three beds, the worthieſt perſon lay in the middle, the ſecond above him, the third, below him. o On which, thus the Gloſs. When there were two, the principal perſon, lay on the firſt couch, and the next to him, lay above him, that is on a couch placed at the pillow of the more worthy perſon. If there were three, the worthieſt lay in the middle; the next, above him; and the third, below him: that is, at the coverlids of his feet. If the principal perſon deſires to ſpeak with the ſecond, he muſt neceſſarily raiſe himſelf ſo as to ſit upright, for as long as he ſits bending, he cannot ſpeak to him; for the ſecond ſate behind the head of the firſt, and the face of the firſt was turned another away: and it would be better with the ſecond (in reſpect of diſcourſe) if he ſate below him; for then he might hear his words, even as he lay along. This affords ſome light to that ſtory Joh. XIII. 23, 24. where Peter, as ſeems likely, lying behind our Saviours head, in the firſt place next after him, could not diſcourſe with him, nor ask about the Betrayer. Therefore looking over Chriſts head upon John, he gave him a ſign to enquire: He ſitting in the ſecond place from Chriſt, with his face towards him, asketh him.

VERS. XXII.

Μήτι ἐγώ εἰμι, Κύριε; Lord, Is it I?

THE very occaſion, namely eating together, and fellowſhip, partly renews the mention of the Betrayer at the Paſchal Supper; at if he had ſaid, We are eating here friendly together, and yet there is one in this number, who will betray me: partly that the Diſciples might be more fully acquainted with the matter it ſelf. For at the Supper in Joh. XIII. he had privately diſcovered the perſon to John only; unleſs perhaps Peter underſtood it alſo, who knew of Johns queſtion to Chriſt, having at firſt put him upon it, by his beckning. The Diſciples ask, Is it I? partly through ignorance of the thing, partly out of a ſincere and aſſured profeſſion of the contrary.

VERS. XXVI.

Λαβὼν ὁ Ἰησοῦς τὸν ἄρτον, &c. Jeſus took bread, &c.

BREAD at Supper, the Cup after Supper. After Supper he took the cup, ſaith Luke, Chap. XXII. 20. and Paul, 1 Cor. XI. 25. but not ſo of the Bread.

That we may more clearly perceive the hiſtory of this Supper in the Evangeliſts, it may not be amiſs to tranſcribe the Rubric of the Paſchal Supper, with what brevity we can, out of the Talmudiſts; that we may compare the things here related, with the cuſtom of the nation.

I. The Paſchal Supper began with a Cup of Wine. q They mingle the firſt cup for him. The School of Shammai ſaith, He gives thanks firſt for the day, and then for the wine: But the School of Hillel ſaith, He firſt gives thanks for the wine, and then for the day. The Shammeans confirm their opinion, שהיום גורם ליין שבא Becauſe the day is the cauſe of their having wine: that is, as the Gloſs explains it, שיבא קודם סעודה that they have it before meat. r They firſt mingle a cup for every one, and (the Maſter of the Family) bleſſeth it, Bleſſed be he that created the fruit of the vine: and then he repeats the conſecration of the day. ונומן (that is, he gives thanks in the plural number for all the company, ſaying, Let us give thanks) and drinks up the cup. And afterward he bleſſeth concerning the waſhing of hands, and waſheth. Compare this cup with that, Luke XXII. 17.

r Maimon. in Chamets Umatſah, cap. 8.

II. Then the bitter herbs are set on. They bring in a table ready covered, upon which there is מרור וירק אחר Soure sauce and other herbs. s הביאו לפניו מטבל בחורצת עד שמגיע Let the Glossers give the interpretation. t לפרפרת הפרת u They do not set the table, till after the consecration of the day: and upon the table they set lettuce. After he hath blessed over the Wine, they set herbs, and he eats lettuce dipped; but not in חרוסת the soure sauce, for that is not yet brought: and this is not meant simply of lettuce, unless when there be other herbs. עד שמגיע לפרפרת הפת His meaning is this, Before he comes to those bitter herbs, which he eats after the unleavened bread, when he also gives thanks for the eating of the bitter herbs, as it is written, Ye shall eat (it) with unleavened bread and bitter herbs: First unleavened bread, and then bitter herbs. And this first dipping is used only for that reason, that children may observe and enquire; for it is unusual for men to eat herbs before meat.

s Maimon. t Pesachin. as before. u Bab. fol. 114. 1

III. Afterwards there is set on unleavened bread, and the sauce called חרוסת and the lamb, and the flesh also of the Chagiga of the fourteenth day. Maimonides doth not take notice of any interposition between the setting on the bitter herbs, and the setting on the unleavened bread: but the Talmudic Mishnah notes it in these words. הביאו לפניו מצה They set unleavened bread before him. Where the Glos, This is said because they had moved the table from before him, who performed the duty of the Passover: now that removal of the table was for this end, that the Son might ask the Father; and the Father answered him, Let them bring the table again that we may make the second dipping; then the Son would ask, Why do we dip twice? Therefore they bring back the table, with unleavened bread upon it, and bitter herbs, &c.

IV. He begins, and blesseth, Blessed be he that created the fruits of the Earth: and he takes the herbs, and dips them in the sauce Charoseth, and eats as much as an Olive, he, and all that lye down with him; but less than the quantity of an Olive he must not eat: then they remove the table from before the Master of the family. x Whether this removal of the table be the same with the former, is not much worth our enquiry.

V. מזגו לו כוס שני Now they mingle the second cup for him: and the Son asks the Father; or if the Son doth not ask him, he tells him himself, How much this night differs from all other nights. On other nights, saith he, we dip but once; but this night twice. On other nights we eat either leavened or unleavened bread; on this, only unleavened, &c. on other nights we eat either sitting or lying, on this all lying, &c.

VI. The Table is set before them again, and then he saith, This is the Passover, which we therefore eat, because God passed over the houses of our Fathers in Egypt. Then he lifts up the bitter herbs, in his hand, and saith, we therefore eat these bitter herbs, because the Egyptians made the lives of our Fathers bitter in Egypt. He takes up the unleavened bread in his hand, and saith, We eat this unleavened bread, because our Fathers had not time to sprinkle their meal to be leavened, before God revealed himself, and redeemed them. We ought therefore to praise, celebrate, honour, magnifie, &c. him, who wrought all these wonderful things for our Fathers, and for us, and brought us out of bondage into liberty, out of sorrow into joy, out of darkness into great light, let us therefore say Hallelujah. Praise the Lord. Praise him, O ye servants of the Lord, &c. to, And the flint stone into fountains of waters (that is, from the beginning of the CXIII, to the end of the CXIV Psalm.) And he concludes, Blessed be thou O Lord God our King Eternal, redeeming us, and redeeming our Fathers out of Egypt, and bringing us to this night; that we may eat unleavened bread and bitter herbs: and then he drinks off the second cup.

VII. Then washing his hands, and taking two loaves, he breaks one, and lays the broken upon the whole one, and blesseth it, Blessed be he who causeth bread to grow out of the earth: and putting some bread and bitter herbs together, he dips them in the sauce, Charoseth, and blessing, Blessed be thou, O Lord God, our Eternal King, he who hath sanctified us by his precepts, and hath commanded us to eat; he eats the unleavened bread and bitter herbs together; but if he eats the unleavened bread and bitter herbs by themselves, he gives thanks severally for each. And afterwards giving thanks after the same manner over the flesh of the Chagiga of the fourteenth day, he eats also of it; and in like manner giving thanks over the Lamb, he eats of it.

VIII. From thence forward he lengthens out the Supper, eating this or that, as he hath a mind; and last of all he eats of the flesh of the Passover, at least as much as an olive; but after this he tasts not at all of any food. Thus far Maimonides in the place quoted, as also the Talmudists in several places in the last Chapter of the Tract Pasachin.

And now was the time when Christ taking bread, instituted the Eucharist; but whether was it after the eating of those farewell morsels, as I may call them, of the Lamb, or instead of them? It seems to be in their stead, because it is said by our Evangelist and Mark, Ἐσθιόντων αὐτῶν, &c. As they were eating, Jesus took Bread. Now without doubt they speak according to the known and common custom of that Supper, that they might be understood by their own people. But all Jews know well enough that after the eating of those morsels of the Lamb it cannot be said, As they were eating; for the eating was ended ended with thoſe morſels. It ſeems therefore more likely, that Chriſt when they were now ready to take thoſe morſels, changed the cuſtom, and gave about morſels of bread in their ſtead, and inſtituted the Sacrament. Some are of opinion that it was the cuſtom to taſt the unleavened bread laſt of all, and to cloſe up the Supper with it; of which opinion I confeſs I alſo ſometimes was. And it is ſo much the more eaſie to fall into this opinion, becauſe there is ſuch a thing mentioned in ſome of the Rubricks about the Paſſover, and with good reaſon, becauſe they took up this cuſtom after the deſtruction of the Temple.

Εὐλογήσας ἔκλασε. Bleſſed, and brake it.

Firſt he bleſſed, then he brake it. Thus it always uſed to be done, except in the Paſchal bread. One of the two loaves was firſt divided into two parts, or perhaps into more, before it was bleſſed. חולק אחד מהן One of them is divided. They are the words of Maimonides, who alſo adds, But why doth he not bleſs both the loaves, after the ſame manner, as in other feaſts? Becauſe this is called לחם עוני The bread of poverty. Now poor people deal in morſels, and here likewiſe are morſels.

אין בוצע רשאי לבצוע עד שיכלה וכו' a Let not him that is to break the bread, break it, before Amen be pronounced from the mouths of the Anſwerers. a Bab. Berac. fol.47.1.

Τοῦτό ἐστιν τὸ σῶμά μου. This is my Body.

Theſe words being applied to the Paſſover now newly eaten, will be more clear. This now is my body, in that ſenſe, in which the Paſchal Lamb hath been my body hitherto. And in the twenty eighth verſe, This is my blood of the New Teſtament, in the ſame ſenſe, as the blood of Bulls and Goats hath been my Blood under the Old, Exod. XXIV. Heb. IX.

VERS. XXVII.

Τὸ ποτήριον. The cup.

BREAD was to be here at this Supper by Divine Inſtitution; but how came the Wine to be here? And how much? And of what ſort?

I. A Tradition.b It is neceſſary that a man ſhould chear up his wife and his children for the feaſt. But how doth he chear them up? With Wine. The ſame things are cited in the Babylonian Talmud.* The Rabbins deliver, ſay they, That a man is obliged to chear up his Wife and his Domeſticks in the feaſt; as it is ſaid, And thou ſhalt rejoyce in thy feaſt (Deut. XVI. 14.) But how are they cheared up? With wine. R. Judah ſaith, Men are cheared up with ſomething agreeable to them; Women, with that which is agreeable to them. That which is agreeable to Men to rejoyce them, is Wine. But what is that which is agreeable to Women to chear them? Rabh Joſeph ſaith, Died garments, in Babylon; and linnin garments, in the land of Iſrael. b Jeruſ. Peſachim. fol. 37.2. * Peſach. fol. 109.1.

II. Four cups of Wine were to be drunk up by every one. הכל חייבין בד' כוסות All are obliged to four cups, men, women, and children: R. Judah ſaith, But what have children to do with Wine? But they give them wheat and nuts, &c.

The Jeruſalem Talmudiſts give the reaſon of the number, in the place before quoted, at full. Some, according to the number of the four words made uſe of in the hiſtory of the Redemption of Iſrael out of Egypt. והוצאתי והצלתי וגאלתי ולקחתי And I will bring forth, and I will deliver, and I will redeem, and I will take. Some, according to the number of the repetition of the word כוס Cup, in Gen. XL. 11. 13. which is four times: Some, according to the number of the four Monarchies: Some, according to the number of the four cups of vengeance; which God ſhall give to the Nations to drink, Jer. XXV. 15. & LI. 7. Pſal. XI. 6. & LXXV. 8. And according to the number of the four cups which God ſhall give Iſrael to drink, Pſal. XXIII. 5. & XVI. 5. & CXVI. 13. כוס ישועות אשא תרוין The cup of two ſalvations.

III. The meaſure of theſe cups is thus determined, ארבעה כוסות שאמרו ישנן יביעית יין באיטלקי Rabbi Chaia ſaith, Four cups contain an Italian quart of Wine.c And more exactly in the ſame place: How much is the meaſure of a cup? Two fingers ſquare, and one finger, and an half and a third part of a finger, deep. The ſame words you have in the Babylonian Talmud at the place before quoted, only with this difference, that inſtead of שליש אצבע the third part of a finger, there is חומש אצבע the fifth part of a finger. c Jeruſ. Shabb. fol.11.1. * Peſach.

IV. מצוה לצאת ביין אדום It is commanded that he ſhould perform this office with red Wine. d So the Babylonian, צריך שיהא וכו' It is neceſſary that it ſhould taſte, and look like Wine. The Gloſs, שיהא אדום that it ſhould be red. d Hieroſ. as before.

V. If he drinks Wine pure, and not mingled with Water, he hath performed his duty; but commonly they mingled Water with it: Hence, when there is mention of Wine in the Rubrick of the Feasts, they always use the word מזגו They mingle him a cup. Concerning that mingling, both Talmudists dispute in the forecited Chapter of the Passover: which see, e The Rabbins have a Tradition, over Wine, which hath not Water mingled with it, they do not say that blessing, Blessed be he that created the fruit of the Vine; but, Blessed be he that created the fruit of the Tree. The Gloss, יינם חזק מאד Their Wine was very strong and not fit to be drunk, without water, &c. The Gemarists a little after: The Wise agree with R. Eleazar, That one ought not bless to over the cup of blessing, till water be mingled with it. The mingling of water with every cup, was requisite for health, and the avoiding of drunkenness. We have before taken notice of a story of Rabban Gamaliel, who found and confessed some disorder of mind, and unfitness for serious business, by having drunk off an Italian quart of Wine. These things being thus premised, concerning the Paschal Wine, we now return to observe this Cup of our Saviour.

e Bab. Berac. fol. 50. 2.

After those things which used to be performed in the Paschal Supper, as is before related, these are moreover added by Maimonides. Then he washeth his hands, ומברך ברכת המזון and blesseth the blessing of the meat, (that is, gives thanks after meat) over the third cup of Wine, and drinks it up. That cup was commonly called כוס הברכה The cup of blessing. אכסא דברכתא in the Talmudick dialect: כוס של ברכה ברכה המזון The cup of blessing is, when they give thanks after supper, saith the Gloss on Bab. Berac. f Where also in the Text, many things are mentioned of this cup. Ten things are spoken of the cup of blessing. הרחה ושטיפה Washing and cleansing: (that is, to wash the inside and outside, namely that nothing should remain of the Wine of the former cups.) חי Let pure Wine be poured into the cup, and water mingled with it there. ומלא Let it be full. עיטור The crowning, that is, (as the Gemara,) by the Disciples. While he is doing this, let the Disciples stand about him in a crown (or ring.) עיטוף The veiling; that is, as Rabh Papa, He veils himself, and sits down as R. Issai, he spreads a handkerchief on his head. נוטלו בשתי ידיו He takes up the cup in both hands, but puts it into his right hand, he lifts it from the table, fixeth his eyes upon it, &c. Some say he imparts it (as a gift) to his family.

f Fol. 51. 1.

Which of these rites our Saviour made use of, we do not enquire; The Cup certainly was the same with the cup of blessing: Namely, when according to the custom, after having eaten the farewel morsel of the Lamb, there was now an end of Supper, and thanks were to be given over the third Cup after meat; he takes that Cup, and after having returned thanks, as is probable, for the meat, both according to the custom, and his office, he instituted this for a cup of Eucharist (or thanksgiving.) Τὸ ποτήριον τῆς εὐλογίας ὃ εὐλογοῦμεν, The cup of blessing which we bless, 1 Cor. X. 16. Hence it is that Luke and Paul say that he took the Cup after supper, that is, that Cup, which closed up the Supper.

It must not be past by, that when he instituted the Eucharistical Cup, he said, This is my blood of the New Testament, as Matthew and Mark: nay as Luke and Paul, This cup is the New Testament in my blood. Not only the seal of the Covenant, but the Sanction of the new Covenant. The end of the Mosaical Oeconomy, and the confirming of a new one. The confirmation of the old Covenant, was by the blood of Bulls and Goats, Exod. XXIV. Heb. IX. because blood was still to be shed: the Confirmation of the new was by a Cup of Wine; because under the New Testament, there is no further shedding of blood. As it is here said of the Cup, This cup is the New Testament in my blood; so it might be said of the Cup of blood, Exod. XXIV. That cup, was the Old Testament in the blood of Christ; There, all the Articles of that Covenant being read over, Moses sprinkled all the people with blood, and said, This is the blood of the Covenant which God hath made with you; And thus that old Covenant, or Testimony, was confirmed. In like manner Christ having published all the Articles of the New Covenant, he takes the Cup of Wine, and gives them to drink, and saith, This is the New Testament in my blood, and thus the New Covenant is established.

There was besides a fourth Cup, of which our Author speaks also, Then he mingles a fourth cup, and over it he finisheth the Hallel; and adds moreover the blessing of the Hymn, ברכת השיר which is, Let all thy works praise thee, O Lord, &c. and saith, Blessed be he that created the fruit of the Vine, and afterwards he tastes of nothing more that night, &c. Finisheth the Hallel; that is, he begins there where he left off before, to wit, at the beginning of the CXV Psalm, and goes on to the end of the CXVIII Psalm.

Whether Christ made use of this Cup also, we do not dispute; 'Tis certain he used the Hymn, as the Evangelist tells us, Ὑμνήσαντες, when they had sung a Hymn, at the thirtieth verse, we meet with the very same word הימנון in *Midras Till.

*Fol. 42. & 42. 1.

And now looking back on this Paschal Supper, let me ask those who suppose the Supper in Joh. XIII. to be the same with this, What part of this time do they allot to the washing waſhing of the Diſciples feet? What part to Judas's going out? And what part to his diſcourſing with the Prieſts, and getting ready his accomplices for their wicked exploit.

I. It ſeems ſtrange indeed that Chriſt ſhould put off the waſhing of the Diſciples feet, to the Paſchal Supper: When, 1. That kind of action was not only unuſual, and unheard of at that Supper, but in no wiſe neceſſary, or fitting: for, 2. How much more conveniently might that have been performed at a common Supper before the Paſſover, as we ſuppoſe, when he was not ſtreightned by the time, than at the Paſchal Supper, when there were many things to be done, which required diſpatch?

II. The office of the Paſchal Supper did not admit of ſuch interruption, nor was it lawful for others ſo to decline from the fixed rule, as to introduce ſuch a forreign matter; and why ſhould Chriſt ſo ſwerve from it, when in other things he conformed himſelf to the cuſtom of the Nation, and when he had before, a much more fit occaſion for this action, than when he was thus preſſed and ſtreightned by the time?

III. Judas ſat at Supper with the reſt, and was there when they did eat; Matth. XXVI. 20, 21. Mark XIV. 18. and, Alaſs! How unuſual was it for any to depart in that manner, from that Supper before it was done: It is enough doubted by the Jewiſh Canons, whether it were lawful; and how far any one, who had joyned himſelf to this or that φεχέρια family, might leave it to go to another, and take one part of the Supper here, and another part there: but for a perſon to leave the Supper and go about another buſineſs, is a thing they never in the leaſt dreamt of; they would not, they could not ſuppoſe it. You ſee how light a matter Judas's going away to buy neceſſaries, as the Diſciples interpreted it, ſeemed to them, becauſe he went away from a common Supper; But if they had ſeen him thus diſmiſt, and ſent away from the Paſchal Supper, it would have ſeem'd a monſtrous and wonderful thing. What? To leave the Paſchal Supper now begun, to go to Market? To go from a common Supper at Bethany, to buy neceſſaries for the Paſſover, againſt the time of the Paſſover, this was nothing ſtrange or unuſual: but to go from the Paſchal Supper before it was done to a Market or Fair, was more unuſual and ſtrange, than that it ſhould be ſo lightly paſſed over by the Diſciples.

We therefore do not at all doubt that Judas was preſent both at the Paſſover and the Euchariſt: which Luke affirms in direct words, Chap. XXII. 20, 21. nor do we doubt much of his being preſent at the Hymn, and that he went not away, before all was done: but, when they all roſe up from the Table, and prepared for their journy to Mount Olivet (in order to lye at Bethany, as the Diſciples ſuppoſed) the vilanous Traytor ſtole away, and went to the company that he had appointed the Prieſts two days before, to make ready for him at ſuch a time and place. Methinks I hear the words and conſultations of this bloody Wretch: To morrow, ſaith he, will be the Paſſover, and I know my Maſter will come to it: I know he will not lye at Jeruſalem, but will go back to Bethany, however late at night, where he is uſed to lye: make ready therefore for me armed men, and let them come to a place appointed, immediately after the Paſchal Supper, and I will ſteal out privately to them, while my Maſter makes himſelf ready for his journy, and I will conduct them to ſeize upon him in the gardens without the City, where by reaſon of the ſolitarineſs of the place, and the ſilence of the night, we ſhall be ſecure enough from the multitude. Do ye make haſte to diſpatch your Paſſovers, that you may meet together at the Council after ſupper, to examine and judge him, when we ſhall bring him to you; while the ſilence of the night favours you alſo, and protects you from the multitude. Thus all things are provided againſt the place and time appointed, and the Theif ſtealing away from the company of the Diſciples, as they were going out towards the Mount of Olives, and haſtning to his armed confederates, without delay, brings them prepared along with him, and ſets upon his Maſter now in the Garden.

VERS. XXXIV.

THE ſame alſo he had ſaid, Joh. XIII. 38. The Cock ſhall not crow, till thou haſt denyed me thrice. Therefore ſome ſay, that that was the ſame Supper with this of the Paſſover. Very right indeed, if ἀλέκτωρ ὃ φωνήσει, ought to be rendred, The Cock ſhall not crow once, or, The Cock ſhall not crow at all: But it is not ſo; but it amounts to this ſenſe, within the time of Cock crowing, thou ſhalt deny me thrice, for Peter had denied him but once before the firſt crowing of the Cock, and thrice before the ſecond. Mark XIV. 68, 72. From hence therefore we may eaſily obſerve, in what ſenſe thoſe words are to be underſtood, which were ſpoke to Peter, two days before the Paſſover, Joh. XIII. laſt. The Cock ſhall not crow, &c. not that the Cock ſhould not crow at all between that that time, and Peter's denying; but, as if our Saviour had ſaid, Are you ſo ſecure of your ſelf, O Peter? Verily I ſay unto you, the time ſhall be, and that ſhortly, when you ſhall deny me thrice within the time of Cock crowing. Ἐν ἀλεκτοροφωνίᾳ, At Cock-crowing, Mark XIII. 35. At the Paſchal Supper, it is ſaid, This night, before the Cock crow, &c. Matth. XXVI. 34. Mark XIV. 30. Luke XXII. 34. But there is nothing of this ſaid in that Supper, Joh. XIII.

g Bab. Joma, fol. 21. 1. Concerning the Cock-crowing, thus the Maſters, g R. Shilla ſaith, Whoſoever begins his journey before Cock-crowing, his blood be upon his head. R. Joſiah ſaith, If before the ſecond crowing: But ſome ſay, If before the third. But of what kind of Cock is this ſpoken?

בתרנגול בינוני Of a midling Cock; that is, as the Gloſs explains it, A Cock that doth not crow too ſoon, nor too late. The Miſhnah, on which this Gloſs is, hath theſe words; Every day they remove the aſhes from the Altar, about Cock crowing: but on the day of Atonement, at midnight, &c. You may wonder that a dunghil Cock ſhould be found at Jeruſalem, when it is forbid by the Canons that any Cocks ſhould be kept there. אין מגדלין תרנגולין בירושלם מפני קדושים h They do not keep Cocks at Jeruſalem, upon account of the holy things: Nor do the Prieſts keep them through out all the land of Iſrael. The Gloſs gives the reaſon, Even Iſraelites are forbid to keep Cocks at Jeruſalem, becauſe of the holy things: for Iſraelites have eaten there peace-offerings, and thank-offerings: but now it is the cuſtom of dunghil Cocks to turn over dunghils, where perhaps they might find creeping things, that might pollute thoſe holy things that are to be eaten. By what means, and under what pretence the Canon was diſpenſed with, we do not diſpute. 'Tis certain there were Cocks at Jeruſalem, as well as at other places. And memorable is the ſtory of a Cock, which was ſtoned by the ſentence of the Council, for having killed a little child. i

VERS. XLIX.

Κατεφίλησεν αὐτόν. Kiſſed him.

IT was not unuſual for a Maſter to kiſs his Diſciple: but for a Diſciple to kiſs his Maſter, was more rare. Whether therefore Judas did this, under pretence of reſpect, or out of open contempt and diriſion, let it be enquired.

VERS. LX.

m Chap. 1. ENquire, Whether theſe are to be called עדים זוממים Of which the Talmudiſts ſpeak at large, eſpecially in the Treatiſe Maccoth. m זוממים are commonly rendred Falſe witneſſes; and deſervedly: and yet Maimonides reckons up theſe as neceſſary, in that City where the Council of twenty three, is placed: Why, ſaith he, is ſuch a Council not ſet up, but in a City where there are an hundred and twenty men? Namely, that there may be three and twenty for the Council, and three ranks conſiſting of ſixty nine men, and ten men to attend upon the affairs of the Synagogue: two Scribes, two Biſhops, two to be judged, two witneſſes. שני זוממין ושני זוממי זוממין &c. The reaſon of the thing is a little obſcure: the characters of the men you may take in theſe examples. The witneſſes ſay, We teſtifie that N. killed N. They ſay to them, How do you depoſe this, when the killer, or he that was killed, was with us in ſuch a place on that day. Theſe as yet are not זוממין But if they ſhould ſay, How can you teſtifie this, when you were with us on that day, n &c. On which Miſhnah, thus Maimonides, The witneſſes depoſe, that Reuben killed Simeon: and afterwards Kohath and Huſhim come, והזימו and diſprove their teſtimony: there come afterwards other witneſſes, and depoſe the ſame with the former, namely, that Reuben killed Simeon: and Kohath and Huſhim diſprove their teſtimony alſo; if a ſecond, third, and fourth, nay if a thouſand pair n Maccoth. Chap. 1. hal. 6.

ſtir, come and depoſe the ſame thing, while thoſe two ſo diſprove them, they muſt all dye by the teſtimony of theſe two, &c.

There was the like Teſtimony in other things: thus in the firſt Halacah of the Chapter quoted; ביצר העדים נעשים זוממין How are witneſſes made זוממים ? We teſtifie concerning N. that he is the Son of a divorced Woman, &c. They do not ſay, Let this witneſs (if he prove falſe) be made the Son of a divorced Woman, inſtead of the other, but he is beaten with forty ſtripes. The words are obſcure enough; but their meaning is this. Since a falſe witneſs was by the Law to ſuffer the ſame things which by his perjury he had deſigned to bring upon another; it is here enquired, in what caſes a witneſs is ſo far to be accounted falſe, as to undergo ſuch a retaliation? And it is anſwered, Not in all; and this reaſon is alledged, If any one, by falſe witneſs, ſhould endeavour to deprive another of his legitimacy, and by conſequence of the privilidges of being legitimate, by ſaying that he is the Son of a divorced Woman, though he were indeed עד זומם a falſe witneſs, yet he muſt not be puniſhed in the like kind, to be made as the Son of a divorced Woman; but he muſt be whipped. But in capital caſes the cuſtom was, that whoſoever endeavoured to procure death to another perſon by falſe witneſs, muſt himſelf be put to death.

VERS. LXV.

o WHEN witneſſes ſpeak out the blaſphemy which they heard, then all hearing the blaſphemy are bound to rend their clothes. See more there, p They that judge a blaſphemer; firſt ask the witneſs, and bid him ſpeak out plainly what he hath heard; and when he ſpeaks it, the Judges ſtanding on their feet, rend their garments, and do not ſow them up again &c. See there the Bab. Gemara diſcourſing at large why they ſtand upon their feet, why they rend their garments, and why they may not be ſowed up again.

CHAP. XXVII.

VERS. I.

Πρωΐας δὲ γενομένης, &c. When the morning was come, &c.

LET us trace a little, the proceedings of this Council.

I. They ſpend the night in judging on a capital cauſe; which is expreſly forbid by their own Canon. דיני נפשות דנין ביום וגומרין ביום They handle capital cauſes in the day time, and finiſh them by day. q Mony matters indeed that were begun by day, might be ended in the night, which is aſſerted in that place; but capital cauſes were only to be handled by day: But here, in ſitting upon the life and death of our Saviour, there is need of night and darkneſs. This judgment is begun in the night, and carried on all the night through in a manner.

q Sanhedr. cap. 4. hal. 1.

II. This night was the evening of a Feaſt-day, namely of the firſt day of the Paſchal-week, at what time they were alſo forbid to ſit in judgment. r They do not judg on a Feaſt-day. How the Lawyers are divided on this point, I will not trouble you now with recounting. This very Canon is ſufficient ground for ſcruple, which we leave to them to clear, who through rankor and hatred towards Chriſt, ſeem to ſlight and trample under feet their own Canons.

r Mocd Katon. chap. 3. hal. 2.

III. Πρωΐας γενομένης, when it was morning: This was the time of ſaying their Phylacteries, namely from the firſt day-light to the third hour s. But where was theſe mens Religion to day? Did you ſay your Phylacteries this morning, my good Fathers of the Council, before you came to ſit on the Bench? Another buſineſs that you had in hand, (effectually to deſtroy Jeſus) either rob'd you of your prayers, or robbed your prayers of charity.

s Berac. chap. 1. hal. 2.

IV. Now appears יו"ט ראשון של הפסח the firſt Feaſt-day of the Paſſover, when they uſed to preſent themſelves in the Temple, and offer their gifts, Exod. XXIII. 15. But when and how was this performed by them to day? They take heed of going into the Judgment (or Pretors) hall, leſt they ſhould be defiled, but that they might eat the Chagiga, Chagiga, or Paſſover, s but you will ſcarce find what time they allow'd to day for that purpoſe; nor indeed was it lawful for them to eat any thing on that day; it being provided by a Canon, That when the Council ſhall have adjudged any one to die, let them not taſt any thing that day t.

Συμβούλιον ἔλαβον, ὥστε θανατῶσαι αὐτόν. Took counſel to put him to death.

Let that be conſidered, tt Caſes of money are heard in the day-time, and may be determined in the night. Capital cauſes are tried in the day, and finiſhed in the day. Judgment in caſes of money is paſſed the ſame day, whether it be for fining or acquitting. Judgment in capital cauſes is paſſed the ſame day, if it be for acquitting: but if it be for condemning, it is paſſed the day after. The reaſon of this difference is given by the Gemariſts; whom ſee. The reaſon of the latter is thus expreſſed, אשרי הדיין שמחמץ את דינו Bleſſed is the Judg who leaveneth his judgment: that is, as the Gloſs, who delays his judgment, and lets it reſt all night, that he may ſift out the truth.

tt Sanhedr. in the place quoted cap. 4.

The difference between דינין and גומרין is greater than the Reader may perhaps think at firſt ſight; by the word דינין they ſignifie the whole proceſs of the trial, the examining of the Plaintiff and Defendant, and of the Witneſſes, the taking the votes of the Council, and the entring of them by the Scribes: גומרין ſignifies only the paſſing of judgment, or giving a definitive ſentence. You may better perceive the difference from the Gloſſary on Bab. Sanhedr. u In the Text this is decreed, אין דינין לא בערב שבת ולא בערב יום טוב Let them not judg on the eve of the Sabbath, nor on the eve of a Feaſt-day; which is alſo repeated in other places. x The reaſon of the prohibition is this, namely, that the trials which were begun on the eve of the Sabbath, or a Feaſt-day, ſhould not be finiſhed on the Sabbath or Feaſt-day. Which indeed, ſaith the Gloſs, is obſerved in pecuniary trials, and care is taken that there be no writing: (for it is forbid to write ſo much as a letter on the Sabbath) but in capital cauſes it takes not place upon that account; for the votes of thoſe that acquitted or condemned were written the day before.

VERS. V.

Απήγξατο. Hanged himſelf.

STrangulatus eſt, was ſtrangled: namely by the Devil, who had now been in him three days together. The words of Peter, Act. I. 18. do not ſuffer me to underſtand this of hanging himſelf. Πρηνὴς γενόμενος ἐλάκησε μέσος. Falling headlong he burſt aſunder in the midſt. Interpreters take a great deal of pains to make theſe words agree with his hanging himſelf, but indeed all will not do. I know the word ἀπήγξατο is commonly applied to a mans hanging himſelf, but not to exclude ſome other way of ſtrangling. And I cannot but take the ſtory (with good leave of antiquity) in this ſenſe. After Judas had thrown down the money, the price of his Treaſon, in the Temple, and was now returning again to his mates, the Devil who dwelt in him, caught him up on high, ſtrangled him, and threw him down headlong, ſo that daſhing upon the ground, he burſt in the midſt, and his guts iſſued out, and the Devil went out in ſo horrid an Exit. This certainly agrees very well with the words of Peter now mentioned, and alſo with thoſe that follow, This was known to all that dwelt at Jeruſalem. It agrees alſo very well with the deſerts of the wicked wretch, and with the title of Iſcariot. The wickedneſs he had committed was above all example; and the puniſhment he ſuffered was beyond all preſident. There had been many inſtances of perſons who had hanged themſelves, this would not ſo much have ſtirred up the people of Jeruſalem to take notice of it, as ſuch a ſtrangling and throwing down headlong, which we ſuppoſe horrible above meaſure, and ſingular beyond example. See what we have ſaid at the tenth Chapter concerning the word Iſcariot.

VERS. IX.

Τὸ ῥηθὲν διὰ Ἱερεμίου τοῦ Προφήτου. That which was ſpoken by Jeremy the Prophet.

HOW much this place hath troubled Interpreters let the famous Beza, inſtead of many others declare: This knot hath hampered all the moſt ancient Interpreters; in that the teſtimony here is taken out of Zachary, and not from Jeremy; ſo that it ſeems plainly to have been ἁμάρτημα μνημονικὸν, a failing of memory, as Auguſtine ſuppoſes in his third Book, De conſenſu Evangeliſtarum, Chapter the ſeventh; as alſo Euſebius in the twentieth

Book

Book Ἀποδείξεως, of Demonstration. But if any one had rather impute this error to the transcribers, or (as I rather suppose) to the unskilfulness of some person who put in the name of Jeremy, when the Evangelist had writ only as he often doth in other places, Διὰ τοῦ Προφήτου, by the Prophet. Yet we must confess that this error hath long since crept into the holy Scriptures, as Jerome expressly affirms, &c.

But (with the leave of so great men) I do not only deny, that so much as one letter is spurious, or crept in without the knowledg of the Evangelist, but I do confidently assert that Matthew writ Jeremy, as we read it, and that it was very readily understood and received by his Countrymen. We will transcribe the following monument of antiquity out of the Talmudists, and then let the Reader judg. y A Tradition of the Rabbins. This is the order of the Prophets. The Book of Josua, Judges, Samuel, Kings, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Esay, and the twelve. And a little after: But since Isaiah was before both Jeremiah and Ezekiel, he ought to have been set before them: כיון דמלכים סופרי חורבנא But since the Book of Kings ends with destruction, וירמיה כוליה חורבנא and all Jeremy is about destruction, and since Ezekiel begins with destruction, and ends with comfort; and all Isaiah is about comfort, סמכינן חורבנא לחורבנא ונחמתא וכו׳ They joyned destruction with destruction, and comfort with comfort; that is, they placed those Books together which treat of destruction, and those together which treat of comfort.

y Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 14. 2.

You have this Tradition quoted by David Kimchius in his Preface to Jeremy. Whence it is very plain that Jeremy of old had the first place among the Prophets; and hereby he comes to be mentioned above all the rest, Mat. XVI. 14. because he stood first in the volume of the Prophets, therefore he is first named. When therefore Matthew produceth a Text of Zacharias under the name of Jeremy, he only cites the words of the Volume of the Prophets under his name, who stood first in the Volume of the Prophets. Of which sort is that also of our Saviour, Luk. XXIV. 44. All things must be fulfilled which are written of me in the Law and the Prophets, and the Psalms. In the Psalms, that is, in the Book of Hagiographa, in which the Psalms were placed first.

You will wonder at the reaſon, which the Gloſs thus gives you: They did not openly bewail him, upon this account, that his being vilified (when no body openly lamented him) might help to attone for him; but they ſorrowed for him in their hearts; for this did not tend to his honour, nor leſſen the attonement. Theſe were better inſtructed, who lamented for Chriſt, both as to the thing and perſon.

TO thoſe that were to be executed they gave a grain of Myrrh infuſed in wine to drink, that their underſtanding might be diſturbed,* (that is, that they might loſe their ſenſes.) As it is ſaid, Give ſtrong drink to them that are ready to die, and wine to thoſe that are of a ſorrowful heart, &c. And the Tradition is, That ſome women of quality in Jeruſalem allowed this freely of their own coſt, &c. * In Bab Sanhedr. fol 43. 1.

But it makes a ſcruple that in Matthew it is ὄξος μετὰ χολῆς, vinegar with gall; in Mark Ἐσμυρνισμένον οἶνον, wine mingled with myrrh. If wine, why is it called vinegar? If wine mingled with Myrrh, why gall? Anſ. The words of Mark ſeem to relate to the cuſtom of the Nation; thoſe of Matthew to the thing as it was really acted. I underſtand Mark thus, They gave him, according to the cuſtom of the Nation, that cup which uſed to be given to thoſe that were led to execution; but (as Matthew has it) not the uſual mixture, namely wine and frankincenſe, or myrrh; but for the greater mockage, and out of more bitter rankor, vinegar and gall. So that we may ſuppoſe this cup not to have been prepared by thoſe honourable women, compaſſionating thoſe that were to die, but on purpoſe by the Scribes, and the other perſecutors of Chriſt, ſtudying to heap upon him all kind of ignominy and vexation. In this cup they afterwards dipped a ſpunge, as may be ſuppoſed. See the 48*th verſe.*

VERS. XXXV.

Διεμερίσαντο τὰ ἱμάτιά μου. Parted my Garments.

OF ſtoning we have this account n, When he is now four cubits from the place of ſtoning, they ſtrip him of his clothes; and if it be a man, they hang a cloth before him, if a woman, both before and behind. Theſe are the words of R. Juda: but the wiſe ſay, A man is ſtoned naked, a woman not naked. So that it is plain enough he was crucified naked. n Sanhedr. cap. 4. hal. 3.

VERS. XXXVIII.

Δύο λῃσταί. Two Thieves.

SEE in Joſephus who they were that at that time were called λῃσταί, and how much trouble and pains the Governours of Judea were at, to reſtrain and root out this curſed ſort of men. Ἐζεκίας ἀρχιλῃστὴς χειρωθεὶς ὑπ' Ἡρῴδου. o Ezekias the chief Robber was ſubdued by Herod. Σίμων τις περιὼν μετ' ὧν ἤθροιζε λῃστῶν τὰ μὲν Ἰερειχοῦς κατεπέμπρησε βασίλεια p. One Simon ſtragling about with the robbers with whom he aſſociated, burnt the palaces in Jericho. Φήλιξ ἀρχιλῃστὴν Ἐλεάζαρον, ἔτεσιν εἴκοσι τὴν χώραν δῃσάμενον, καὶ πολλοὺς σὺν αὐτῷ ζωγρήσας, &c. pp Felix having caught the chief Robber Eleazar, who for twenty years had waſted the Country with fire and ſword, ſent him to Rome, and many others with him. Ἕτερον εἶδος λῃστῶν ἐν Ἱεροσολύμοις ἀνεφύετο, οἱ καλέμβυοι Ζικάριοι, &c. q Another kind of Robbers ſprang up in Jeruſalem, who ſlew men in the day-time, and in the midſt of the City, &c. o De Bell. lib. 2. cap. 6. p Ibid. pp Ibid. cap. 22. q Ibid. cap. 23.

qq There is a rule ſet down, and the art ſhew'd of diſcovering and apprehending Robbers: Go to the victualing houſes at the fourth hour, (the Gloſs, That was the hour of eating,) and they went all to the victualing-houſes to eat) and if you ſee there a man drinking wine, and holding the cup in his hand, and ſleeping, &c. he is a thief, lay hold on him, &c. qq Bab. Bara Mitzia, fol. 85. 2.

Among the monſters of the Jewiſh routs, preceding the deſtruction of the City, the multitude of Robbers, and the horrible ſlaughters committed by them, deſervedly claim the firſt conſideration, which next to the juſt vengeance of God againſt that moſt wicked Nation, you may juſtly aſcribe to divers originals.

1. It is no wonder if that Nation abounded beyond meaſure with a vagabond, diſſolute, lewd ſort of young men; ſince by means of Polygamy, and the divorces of their wives at pleaſure, and the Nations unſpeakable addictedneſs to laſciviouſneſs and whoredoms, there could not but continually ſpring up baſtards, and an off-ſpring born only to beggary or rapine, as wanting both ſuſtenance and ingenuous education.

2. The fooliſh and ſinful indulgence of the Council could not but nurſe up all kind of broods of wicked men, while they ſcarce ever put any one to death, though never ſo wicked, as being an Iſraelite; who muſt not by any means be touched.

3. The oppoſition of the Zelots to the Roman yoke, made them ſtudy only to miſchief the Romans, and do all the miſchief they could to thoſe Jews that ſubmitted to them.

4. The Governours of Judea did often out of Policy indulge a licentiouſneſs to ſuch kind of rapines, that they might humble that people they ſo much hated, and which was continually ſubject to inſurrections, by beating them, as it were, with their own clubs; and ſometimes getting a ſhare in the booty. Thus Joſephus concerning Florus r, Δήμους ἀθρόους ἐλυμαίνετο, &c. He ſpoiled all the people, and he did in effect proclaim that all might go out in the Country to rob, that he might receive a ſhare in the ſpoils. And thus a ſword that firſt came out of their own bowels, was ſheathed in them.

VERS. XXXIX.

Κινοῦντες τὰς κεφαλάς. Wagging their heads.

קלות ראש To ſhake the head, with the Rabbins ſignifies irreverence and lightneſs.

VERS. XLVI.

I. ALL the rout indeed and force of Hell was let looſe at that time againſt Chriſt, without either bridle or chain: He calls it himſelf, Ἐξουσία τοῦ σκότους, The power of darkneſs, Luk. XXII. 53. God, who had foretold of old, that the Serpent ſhould bruiſe the heel of the promiſed ſeed, (and now that time is come) had ſlackned the Devils chain, (which in regard of men, the Divine Providence uſed to hold in his hand) ſo that all the power and all the rancor of Hell, might freely and without reſtraint aſſault Chriſt; and that all that malice that was in the Devil againſt the whole Elect of God, ſummed up and gathered together into one head, might at one ſtroke and on-ſet be brandiſhed againſt Chriſt without meaſure.

II. Our moſt Bleſſed Saviour therefore feeling ſuch torments as either Hell it ſelf, or the inſtruments of Hell, men conſpiring together in villany and cruelty, could pour out upon him, cries out under the ſharpneſs of the preſent Providence, My God, my God, why haſt thou delivered me up and left me to ſuch aſſaults, ſuch bitterneſſes, and ſuch mercileſs hands? The Talmudiſts r bring in Eſther uſing ſuch an ejaculation, which is alſo cited in the Gloſs on Joma s: Eſther ſtood in the inner Court of the Palace. R. Levi ſaith, when ſhe was now juſt come up to the Idol-Temple, the divine glory departed from her: therefore ſhe ſaid, Eli, Eli, lamma Azabhtani.

VERS. XLVII.

Ἠλίαν φωνεῖ οὗτος. This man calleth for Elias.

VERS. XLIX.

Ἴδωμεν, εἰ ἔρχεται Ἠλίας σώσων αὐτόν. Let us ſee whether Elias will come to ſave him.

THAT Chriſt here uſed the Syriac Dialect is plain from the word Sabacthani; but the word Eli, Eli, is not ſo properly Syriac; and hence aroſe the error and miſconſtruction of the ſtanders by; in Syriac he ſhould have ſaid, מרי מרי Mari, Mari; but Eli was ſtrange to a Syrian ear; this deceived the ſtanders by, who having heard more than enough of the apparitions of Elias from the Jewiſh fables, and being deceived by the double meaning of the word, ſuppoſed that Chriſt was tainted with the ſame folly and miſtake, and called out to Elias for help; which it was no ſtrange thing for that deluded people to expect.

VERS. LI.

Τὸ καταπέτασμα τοῦ ναοῦ ἐσχίσθη εἰς δύο, &c. The veil of the Temple was rent in twain, &c.

LET us hear what the Fathers of the Traditions ſay concerning this Catapetaſm, or veil t. The wall of the Pronaon was five cubits, the Pronaon it ſelf eleven. The wall of the Temple was ſix, the Temple forty. אמה טרקסין The Τάραξις one cubit, and the entrance twenty. What Taraxis means, Maimonides will tell you, u In the firſt Temple there was a wall one cubit thick, ſeparating the Holy from the Holy of Holies: but when they built the ſecond Temple, it was doubted, whether the thickneſs of that wall ſhould be accounted to belong to the meaſure of the Holy, or to the meaſure of the Holy of Holies; wherefore they made the Holy t Middoth, cap. 4. hal. 7.

u In Beth habbechirah, cap. 4.

of Holies twenty cubits compleat, and the Holy forty cubits compleat, and they left a void cubit between the Holy and the Holy of Holies, but they did not build any wall there in the ſecond Temple; only they made two hangings, one contiguous to the Holy of Holies, and the other to the Holy; between which there was a void cubit, according to the thickneſs of the wall that was in the firſt Temple; in which there was but one (Catapetaſm, or) veil only.

u The High Prieſt (on the day of attonement) goes forward in the Temple till he comes to the two hangings that divide the Holy from the Holy of Holies; between which there was a cubit. R. Joſi ſaith, There was but one hanging there; as it is ſaid, And the hanging ſhall ſeparate to, or, between the Holy and the Holy of Holies. On which words thus the Gemara of Babylon x. R. Joſi ſaith rightly to the Rabbins, and the Rabbins to thee: for he ſpeaks of the Tabernacle, and they of the ſecond Temple; in which ſince there was not a partition-wall, as there was in the firſt Temple, there was ſome doubt made of its holineſs, namely, whether it ſhould belong to the outward part of the Temple, or to the inward: whereupon they made two hangings.

While therefore their minds were troubled about this affair, not knowing whether they ſhould hang the veil at the Temple, or at the inmoſt receſs of it, and whether the void ſpace between of a cubit thick ſhould belong to this or that; they called the place it ſelf by the Greek word, Τάραξις, that is, Trouble, (as Aruch plainly affirms) and they hung up two Veils, that they might be ſure to offend neither againſt this part nor that.

You will wonder therefore that Matthew doth not ſay καταπετάσματα, Veils in the Plural; or perhaps you will think that only one of theſe two Veils was rent, not both: But it was enough for the Evangeliſts Matthew and Mark, who ſpeak of this miracle, to have ſhewed that that fence between, which hindred ſeeing into the Holy of Holies, and going into it was cleft and broken. This is it they mean, not being ſollicitous in explaining particulars, but contented to have declar'd the thing it ſelf. Perhaps the Prieſt, who offered the incenſe that Evening, was in the Temple at the very moment when this miracle happened; and when he went out amazed to the people, and ſhould tell them, The Veil of the Temple is rent, it would eaſily be underſtood of a paſſage broken into the Holy of Holies, by ſome aſtoniſhing and miraculous rending of the hangings. Compare Heb. X. 19, 20.

When the High Prieſt went into the inmoſt receſs of the Temple on the day of attonement, he went in by the South-ſide of the outward hanging, and the North-ſide of the inner x. But now both are rent in the very middle, and that from the top to the bottom.

x Joma in the place before.

VERS. LII.

Καὶ πολλὰ σώματα τῶν κεκοιμημένων ἁγίων ἠγέρθη. And many bodies of Saints which ſlept aroſe.

YOU can hardly impute the rending of the hangings to the Earthquake, but it muſt be aſcribed rather to another peculiar miracle; ſince it is more proper for an Earthquake to break hard things than ſoft, and to rend Rocks rather than Curtains: Rocks were rent by it in thoſe places where Sepulchres had been built, ſo that now the gates of the Reſurrection were thrown open, the bonds of the Grave were unlooſed, and the bodies of dead men were made ready, as it were, for their riſing again, when Chriſt the firſt-fruits was raiſed. The Jews had a fancy that the Kingdom of the Meſſias would begin with the Reſurrection of the dead, (as we have noted before) vainly indeed, as to their ſenſe of it; but not without ſome truth, as to the thing it ſelf, for from the Reſurrection of Chriſt, the glorious Epoch of the Kingdom of God, took its beginning, as we ſaid before, (which he himſelf alſo ſignifieth in thoſe words, Mat. XXVI. 29.) and when he aroſe, not a few others aroſe with him. What they thought of the Reſurrection, that was to be in the days of Meſſias, beſides thoſe things which we have already mentioned, you may ſee and ſmile at in this one example: y R. Jeremiah commanded when you bury me, put ſhoes on my feet, and give me a ſtaff in my hand, and lay me on one ſide, that when the Meſſias comes I may be ready.

y Jeruſ. Chetubboth. fol. 35 1.

VERS. LIV.

Ἀληθῶς Θεοῦ υἱὸς ἦν οὗτος. Truly this was the Son of God.

THAT is, This was indeed the Meſſias: Howſoever the Jews deny the Son of God in that ſenſe, in which we own it, that is, as the ſecond perſon in the holy Trinity; yet they acknowledged the Meſſiah for the Son of God, (not indeed by nature, but by adoption and deputation; ſee Mat. XXVI. 63.) from thoſe places, I Chron. XVII. 13. Pſal.

Pſal. II. 12. & LXXXIX. 26, 27. and ſuch like. The Centurion had learnt this from the people, by converſing among them; and ſeeing the Miracles which accompanied the death of Chriſt, acknowledged him to be the Meſſias, of whom he had heard ſo many and great things ſpoken by the Jews. In Luke we have theſe words ſpoken by him, z Certainly this was a righteous man. Which I ſuppoſe were not the ſame with theſe words before us; but that both they and theſe were ſpoken by him, Certainly this was a righteous man: Truly this was the Meſſias, the Son of God. Such are thoſe words of Nathaniel, Joh. I. 49. Thou art the Son of God, thou art the King of Iſrael. Peter when he declared that Chriſt was the Son of the living God, Mat. XVI. 16. ſpoke this in a more ſublime ſenſe than the Jews either owned or knew; as we have ſaid at that place.

VERS. LVI.

Μαρία ἡ Μαγδαληνή. Mary Magdalen.

THAT Magdalen was the ſame with Mary the ſiſter of Lazarus, Baronius proves at large a, whom ſee. It is confirmed enough from this very place; for if Mary Magdalene was not the ſame with Mary the ſiſter of Lazarus, then either Mary the ſiſter of Lazarus was not preſent at the Crucifixion of Chriſt, and at his burial; or elſe ſhe is paſt over in ſilence by the Evangeliſts, both which are improbable; whence ſhe was called Magdalene, doth not ſo plainly appear; whether from Magdala a Town on the Lake of Geneſareth, or from the word מגרלא which ſignifies a playting or curling of the hair, a thing uſual with harlots. Let us ſee what is ſpoken by the Talmudiſts concerning מרים מגרלא Mary Magdala, who they ſay was Mother of Ben Satda b.

b Bab. Sanhedr. fol. 67. 1.

They ſtoned the Son of Satda in Lydda, and they hanged him up on the evening of the Paſſover. Now this Son of Satda was Son of Pandira. Indeed Rabh Chaſda ſaid, the husband (of his mother) was Satda, her husband was Pandira, her husband was Papus, the Son of Juda: but yet I ſay his mother was Satda, מרים מגרלא נשים namely Mary the plaiter of women's hair; as they ſay in Pombeditha, סטת דא מבעלה ſhe departed from her husband. Theſe words are alſo repeated in Schabbath c: Rabh Bibai at a time when the Angel of death was with him, ſaid to his Officer, Go, אייתי לי מרים מגרלא שיער נשיא bring me Mary the plaiter of womens (hairs.) He went and brought to him מרים מגרלא חזוקי Mary the plaiter of young mens (hair), &c. The Gloſs, "The Angel of death reckoned up to him what he had done before; for this ſtory of Mary the Plaiter of women's hair was under the ſecond Temple, "for ſhe was the mother of N. as it is ſaid in Schabbath. See the Gloſs there at the place before quoted.

d "There are ſome who find a fly in their cup, and take it out and will not drink; "ſuch was Papus ben Judas, who lockt the door upon his wife, and went out. Where the Gloſſers ſay thus, "Papus ben Juda was the husband מרים מגרלא נשיא of Mary the "Plaiter of womens hair; and when he went out of his houſe into the ſtreet, he lockt "his door upon his wife, that ſhe might not ſpeak with any body; which indeed he ought "not to have done; and hence ſprang a difference between them, and ſhe broke out into "adulteries. See Alpheſius on Gittim e.

e Fol. 605.

I pronounce בן סטרא Ben Satda, not that I am ignorant, that it is called Ben Stada by very learned men. The reaſon of our thus pronouncing it, we fetch from hence, that we find he was called בן סוטרדה Ben Sutdah by the Jeruſalem Talmudiſts f, to which the word Satda more agrees than Stada. By the like agreement of ſounds they call the ſame Town both מגרלא Magdala, and מוגרלא Mugdala, as we have obſerved elſwhere.

f Sanhedr. fol. 25. 4.

As they contumelioufly reflect upon the Lord Jeſus, under the name of Ben Satda, ſo there is a ſhrewd ſuſpition that under the name of מרים מגרלא Mary Magdala, they alſo caſt reproach upon Mary Magdalen. The title which they gave their Mary, is ſo like this of ours, that you may with good reaſon doubt, whether ſhe was called Magdalene from the Town Magdala, or from that word of the Talmudiſts מגרלא A Plaiter of hair. We leave it to the learned to decide.

Ἠτήσατο τὸ σῶμα τοῦ Ἰησοῦ. Begged the body of Jeſus.

IT was not lawful to ſuffer a man to hang all night upon a tree, Deut. XXI. 23. Nay, nor to lye all night unburied. כל המלין את מתו עובר בלא תעש׳: "Whoſoever ſuffers a dead body to lye all night unburied, violates a negative precept; but they that "were put to death by the Council were not to be buried in the Sepulchres of their fathers, but two burying places were appointed by the Council, one for thoſe that were "ſlain by the ſword and ſtrangled; the other for thoſe that were ſtoned (who alſo were hanged)" and burnt. There according to the cuſtom, Jeſus ſhould have been buried, had not Joſeph with a pious boldneſs, beg'd of Pilate that he might be more honourably Interred; which the fathers of the Council out of ſpight to him, would hardly have permitted, if they had been asked; and yet they did not uſe to deny the honour of a Funeral to thoſe whom they had put to death, if the meanneſs of the common burial would have been a diſgrace to their family. As to the dead perſon himſelf they thought it would be better for him to be treated diſhonourably after death, and to be neither lamented nor buried; for this vilifying of him they fancied amounted to ſome attonement for him; as we have ſeen before. And yet to avoid the diſgrace of his family, they uſed at the requeſt of it to allow the honour of a funeral h. q Fol. 22. 2.

With good reason did our blessed Saviour remove the Sabbath to this day, the day of his resurrection, the day which the Lord had made. Psal. CXVIII. 24. when now the stone which the builders refused, was become the head stone in the Corner. For,

I. When Christ was to make a new world, or a New Creation, [r] it was necessary for him to make a new Sabbath. The Sabbath of the old Creation, was not proper for the new.

r Esai. LXV. 17.

II. The Kingdom of Christ took its beginning principally from the resurrection of Christ: when he had now overcome death and Hell. (The Jews themselves confess, that the Kingdom of the Messiah was to begin with the resurrection of the dead, and the renewing of the world.) Therefore it was very proper that that day from which Christs Kingdom took its beginning, should pass into the Sabbath, rather than the old Sabbath, the memorial of the Creation.

III. That old Sabbath was not instituted till after the giving the promise of Christ. Gen. III. 15. and the rest of God on that seventh day was chiefly, in having perfected the new Creation in Christ; that also was the Sabbatical rest of Adam. When therefore that was accomplished which was then promised, namely the bruising of the Serpents head, by the resurrection of Christ, [s] and that was fulfilled, which was typified and represented in the old Sabbath, namely the finishing of a new Creation, the Sabbath could not but justly be transferred to that day on which these things were done.

s Heb. II. 14.

IV. It was necessary that the Christians should have a Sabbath given them distinct from the Sabbath of the Jews, that a Christian might be thereby distinguished from a Jew. For as the Law took great care to provide, that a Jew might be distinguished from an Heathen; So it was provided by the Gospel, with the like care, that partly by the forsaking of those rites, partly by the bringing in of different manners and observances, a Christian might be distinguished from a Jew. The Law was not more solicitous to mark out, and separate a Jew from an Heathen by Circumcision, than the Gospel hath been, that, by the same Circumcision, a Christian should not Judaize: And the same care it hath deservedly taken about the Sabbath. For since the Jews, among other marks of distinction, were made of a different colour, as it were, from all nations, by their keeping the Sabbath; It was necessary that by the bringing in of another Sabbath (since of necessity a Sabbath must be kept up) that Christians might be of a different colour from the Jews.

This seems to have been done to kiss his feet. So 2 Kings IV. 27. For this was not unusual. As R. Janni and R. Jonathan were sitting together, a certain man came, and kissed the feet of R. Jonathan. [x] Compare the Evangelists here, and you will find that this was done by Mary Magdalen only, who formerly had kissed Christs feet, and who had gone twice to the Sepulchre, however Matthew makes mention but of once going. The story in short is thus to be laid together. At the first dawning of the morning, Christ arose; a great earthquake hapning at that time. About the same time Magdalen, and the other women, left their houses to go to the Sepulchre: While they met together, and made all things ready, and took their journey to the Tomb, the Sun was up. When they were come they are informed by the Angels of his resurrection, and sent back to the Disciples. The matter being told to the Disciples, Peter and John run to the Sepulchre, Magdalen also followed after them. They having seen the signs of the resurrection, return to their company, but she stayes there. Being ready to return back Christ appears to her taking him for the Gardiner. As soon as she knew him she worships him, and embracing his feet, kisseth them; and this is the history before us; which Matthew relates in the plural number, running it over briefly and compendiously, according to his manner.

VERS. XIX.

Πορευθέντες ἐν μαθητεύσατε πάντα τὰ ἔθνη, βαπτίζοντες αὐτούς, &c. Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them, &c.

I. THE encloſure is now thrown down, whereby the Apoſtles were kept in from preaching the Goſpel to all the Gentiles, Matth. X. 5. For, firſt, The Jews had now loſt their priviledge, nor were they hence forward to be counted a peculiar people, nay they were now become Lo-ammi. They had exceeded the Heathens in ſinging, they had ſlighted, trampled upon, and crucified the Creator himſelf, appearing viſibly before their eyes, in humane fleſh; while the Heathens had only conceived amiſs of the Creator, whom they neither had ſeen, nor could ſee, and thereby fallen to worſhip the creature. Secondly, Chriſt had now, by his blood, paid a price for the Heathens alſo. Thirdly, he had overcome Satan, who held them captive. Fourthly, he had taken away the wall of Partition. And fifthly, had exhibited an infinite righteouſneſs.

II. Μαθητεύσατε That is, make Diſciples. Bring them in, by baptiſm that they may be taught. They are very much out, who from theſe words, cry down Infant-baptiſm; and aſſert that it is neceſſary for thoſe that are to be baptized, to be taught before they are baptized. 1. Obſerve the words here, Μαθητεύσατε, make Diſciples; and then after, διδάσκοντες teaching, in the twentieth verſe. 2. Among the Jews, and alſo with us, and in all nations, thoſe are made Diſciples, that they may be taught. * A certain Heathen came to the great Hillel, and ſaith גייריני עם" שתלמדני Make me a Proſelyte, that thou maiſt teach me. He was firſt to be Proſelyted, and then to be taught. Thus firſt, make them Diſciples (Μαθητεύσατε) by baptiſm; and then, Teach them to obſerve all things, &c. Διδάσκετε αὐτοὺς τηρεῖν πάντα.

* Bab. Schab. fol. 31. 1.

III. Βαπτίζοντες, Baptizing. There are divers ends of Baptiſm. 1. According to the nature of a Sacrament, it viſibly teacheth inviſible things, that is, the waſhing of us from all our pollutions, by the blood of Chriſt, and by the cleanſing of grace. Ezek. XXXVI. 25. 2. According to the nature of a Sacrament, it is a Seal of divine truth. So circumſion is called, Rom. IV. 11. And he received the ſign of Circumciſion, the Seal of the righteouſneſs of Faith, &c. So the Jews, when they circumciſed their children, gave this very title to circumciſion. The words uſed, when a child was circumciſed, you have in their Talmud. Among other things, he who is to bleſs the action, ſaith thus; bleſſed be he, who ſanctified him that was beloved from the womb, and ſet a ſign in his fleſh, וצאצאיו חתם באות ברית קדש and ſealed his children with the ſign of the holy Covenant, &c.

y Hieroſ. Berac. fol. 13. 1.

But in what ſenſe are Sacraments to be called Seals? Not that they ſeal (or confirm) to the receiver his righteouſneſs, but that they ſeal the divine truth of the covenant and promiſe. Thus the Apoſtle calls Circumciſion, the Seal of the righteouſneſs of Faith: that is, it is the Seal of this truth and doctrine, that Juſtification is by Faith, which juſtice Abraham had, when he was yet uncircumciſed. And that is the way whereby Sacraments confirm Faith, namely becauſe they do doctrinally exhibite the inviſible things of the Covenant; and like Seals do by divine appoyntment ſign the doctrine and truth of the Covenant. 3. According to the nature of a Sacrament, it obligeth the receivers to the terms of the Covenant: for as the Covenant it ſelf is of mutual obligation between God and man; So the Sacraments, the Seals of the Covenant, are of like obligation. 4. According to its nature, it is an introductory into the viſible Church. And, 5. it is a diſtinguiſhing ſign between a Chriſtian and no Chriſtian, namely between thoſe who acknowledg and profeſs Chriſt, and Jews, Turks, and Pagans, who do not acknowledg him. Μαθητεύσατε πάντα τὰ ἔθνη, βαπτίζοντες: Diſciple all nations, baptizing. When they are under baptiſm, they are no longer under Heatheniſm, and this Sacrament puts a difference between thoſe who are under the diſcipleſhip of Chriſt, and thoſe who are not. 6. Baptiſm alſo brings its priviledge along with it, while it opens the way to a partaking of holy things in the Church, and placeth the baptized within the Church, over which God exerciſeth a more ſingular providence, than over thoſe that are out of the Church.

And now, from what hath been ſaid, let us argue a little in behalf of Infant baptiſm. Omitting that argument, which is commonly raiſed from the words before us, namely that when Chriſt had commanded to baptize all nations, Infants alſo are to be taken in, as parts of the family. Theſe few things may be obſerved.

I. Baptiſm, as a Sacrament, is a ſeal of the Covenant. And why, I pray, may not this ſeal be ſet on Infants? The ſeal of Divine truth hath ſometimes been ſet upon inanimate things, and that by Gods appointment. The Bow in the cloud, is a ſeal of the Covenant: The Law engraven on the Altar, Josh. VIII. was a seal of the Covenant. The blood sprinkled on the twelve pillars, that were set up to represent the twelve Tribes, was a seal and bond of the Covenant, Exod. XXIV. And now tell me, why are not Infants capable in like manner of such a sealing? They were capable heretofore of circumcision, and our Infants have an equal capacity. The Sacrament doth not lose this its end, through the indisposition of the receiver. Peter and Paul, Apostles, were baptized: their Baptism, according to its nature, sealed to them the truth of God in his promises, concerning the washing away of sins, &c. And they, from this doctrinal virtue of the Sacrament, received confirmation of their faith. So also Judas, and Simon Magus, hypocrites, wicked men, were baptized: did not their Baptism, according to the nature of it, seal this doctrine and truth, that there was a washing away of sins? It did not indeed seal the thing it self to them, nor was it at all a Sign to them of the washing away of theirs: but Baptism doth in it self seal this doctrine. You will grant that this Axiome is most true, Abraham received the sign of circumcision, the seal of the righteousness of faith. And is not this equally true? Esau, Ahab, Ahaz received the sign of circumcision, the Seal of the righteousness of Faith? Is not circumcision the same to all? Did not circumcision, to whomsoever it was administred, sign and seal this truth, that there was a righteousness of Faith? The Sacrament hath a sealing vertue in it self, that doth not depend on the disposition of the receiver.

II. Baptism, as a Sacrament, is an obligation. But now Infants are capable of being obliged. Heirs are sometimes obliged by their Parents, though they are not yet born: See also Deut. XXIX. 11, 15. For that to which any one is obliged, obtains a right to oblige, ex æquitate rei, from the equity of the thing, and not ex captu obligati, from the apprehension of the person obliged. The Law is imposed upon all, under this penalty, Cursed be every one that doth not continue in all, &c. It is ill arguing, from hence, that a man hath power to perform the Law; but the equity of the thing it self, is very well argued hence. Our duty obligeth us to every thing which the Law commands, but we cannot perform the least tittle of it.

III. An infant is capable of priviledges, as well as an old man, (and Baptism is privilegial.) An infant hath been crowned King in his cradle: An infant may be made free, who is born a slave. The Gemarists speak very well in this matter, [z] Rabh Honna saith, They baptize an infant Proselyte by the command of the Bench. מאי קמל" Upon what is this grounded? דוכות הוא לו On this, that Baptism becomes a priviledge to him. וזכין לאר שלא בפניו And they may endow an absent person with a priviledge: or they may bestow a priviledge upon one, though he be ignorant of it. Tell me then, why an infant is not capable of being brought into the visible Church, and receiving the distinguishing sign between a Christian and a Heathen, as well as a grown person?

[z] Rab. Chetubboth, fol. 11. 1.

IV. One may add, that an infant is part of his parent: upon this account, Gen. XVII. 14. an infant is to be cut off, if he be not circumcised, when indeed the fault is his parents; because thus the parents are punished in a part of themselves, by the cutting off of their child. And hence is that of Exod. XX. 5. Visiting the sins of the fathers, upon the children, because children are a part of their fathers, &c. From hence ariseth also, a natural reason of infant Baptism: The infants of baptized parents are to be baptized, because they are part of them, and that the whole parents may be baptized. And upon this account they used of old, with good reason to baptize the whole family, the master of it.

Εἰς τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ πατρός, &c. In the name of the father, &c.

I. Christ commands them to go and baptize the nations, but how much time was past before such a journey was taken. And when the time was now come that this work should be begun, Peter doth not enter upon it without a previous admonition given him from heaven. And this was occasioned hereby, that according to the command of Christ, the Gospel was first to be preached to Judea, Samaria, and Galilee.

II. He commands them to baptize In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: but among the Jews, they baptized only in the name of Jesus; which we have observed before from Act. II. 38. & VIII. 16. & XIX. 5. For this reason, that thus the Baptizers might assert, and the Baptized confess, Jesus to be the true Messias; which was chiefly controverted by the Jews.

Of the same nature is that Apostolic blessing, Grace and peace from God the Father, and from our Lord Jesus Christ. Where then is the Holy Ghost? He is not excluded, however he be not named. The Jews did more easily consent to the Spirit of the Messias, which they very much celebrate, than to the person of the Messias. Above all others, they deny and abjure Jesus of Nazareth. It belonged to the Apostles therefore fore the more earneſtly to aſſert Jeſus (to be the Meſſias,) by how much the more vehemently they oppoſed him: which being once cleared, the acknowledging of the Spirit of Chriſt, would be introduced without delay or ſcruple. Moſes (in Exod. VI. 14.) going about to reckon up all the Tribes of Iſrael, goes no further than the Tribe of Levi only; and takes up with that, to which his buſineſs and ſtory at that preſent related. In like manner the Apoſtles, for the preſent, baptize in the name of Jeſus, bleſs in the name of the Father and of Jeſus, that thereby they might more firmly eſtabliſh the doctrin of Jeſus, which met with ſuch ſharp and virulent oppoſition; which doctrin being eſtabliſhed among them, they would ſoon agree about the Holy Ghoſt.

III. Among the Jews, the controverſie was about the true Meſſiah; among the Gentiles, about the true God; it was therefore proper among the Jews to baptize in the name of Jeſus, that he might be vindicated to be the true Meſſias: among the Gentiles, In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt; that they might be hereby inſtructed in the doctrin of the true God. Here this O Arian and Socinian.

IV. The Jews baptized Proſelytes Into the name of the Father, that is, into the profeſſion of God, whom they called by the name of Father. The Apoſtles baptize the Jews, Into the name of Jeſus, the Son: and the Gentiles, into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt.

V. The Father hath revealed himſelf in the old Covenant; The Son in the new; in human fleſh, by his Miracles, Doctrin, Reſurrection, and Aſcenſion; The Holy Ghoſt, in his gifts and miracles: Thus the doctrin of the ever bleſſed Trinity grew (by degrees to full maturity. For the arriving to the acknoledgment of which it was incumbent upon all, who profeſſed the true God to be Three in one, to be baptized into his name.

To God Three-in-one, be Glory.

Printed by William Rawlins, for Richard Chiswell at the Rose and Crown in St. Paul's Church-Yard, MDCLXXXIV.

tofore by two Kings; perſons they were of eminent Name, of no ordinary Worth, and the like to whom their times produced not many: One was the very famous George Downham S. T. D. preſented by King James, who was promoted hence, and ſent over to the Biſhoprick of Derry in Ireland. And he leaving it, that excellent perſon Samuel Ward, S. T. D. Maſter of Sidney Suſſex College, in the Univerſity of Cambridge, and alſo the moſt Grave and Learned Profeſſor of the Lady Margaret in the ſame Univerſity, was made his ſucceſſor by King Charles. Upon his deceaſe I ſucceeded here; far unequal (alas!) to ſo great Men; and as unhappy, that I was not admitted by the ſame right, but by that Power, that then, while the Wars prevailed, poſſeſſed all. The brittleneſs of this my weak Title lay not concealed, but when the Kings Majeſty, in which we now rejoyce, by a happy turn of Providence returned to his own Rights, it was preſently diſcovered; and this Rectory was granted to one, who was a ſuiter for it, by the Royal Donation.

Thus I and my fortunes are Shipwracked, and my affairs are come to that laſt extremity, that nothing now remains for me, but to leave my Houſe, and theſe quiet retirements, wherein for ſo many Years I followed my Studies with the higheſt ſatisfaction, and the ſweeteſt leiſure. But another thing there was, that ſtuck more cloſe, namely, that I ſeemed to ſee Royal Majeſty offended with me, and that brow, that ſhined on others with a moſt ſweet Serenity, ſad, clouded, bended upon me; and certainly to periſh under the diſpleaſure of a King, is twice to periſh.

Under theſe ſtreights what ſhould I do? There was no place for hope, when the fatal Inſtrument was now ſigned againſt me: But to Diſpair is to ſubſcribe to ones own misfortune, is to derogate from the Kings mercy, is to ſubmit to certain ruine, under uncertain ſuſpicion. Perhaps the moſt merciful King is not angry with me at all; for Eagles do not uſe to be angry with Flies. Nor perhaps is it too late, nor altogether to no purpoſe, to ſeek after a remedy for my Wound, not yet uncurable, for as yet the fatal Decree was not gone out without Repeal. Perhaps my caſe is altogether unknown to the beſt King, or diſguiſed by ſome unjuſt complaint; and it is a comfort, that my buſineſs lies before a King, not before a common Man.

To the Altar therefore of his Mercy, I humbly fly, in a lowly ſupplication, begging and intreating him to conſider my caſe, to revoke the deſtructive Decree, and to vouchſafe to continue, and eſtabliſh my ſtation in this place. Take now, O England, a meaſure of thy King; and even from this one Example learn, what a Prince thou haſt to boaſt of. The Royal Father of his Country received my ſupplication chearfully, complied with my deſires, and granted me his Donation, eſtabliſhed it with his Great Seal, and (which I deſire might be written in Letters of Gold to laſt for ever) by a particular and, as it were, a paternal care, took order, that hereafter none by any means whatſoever ſhould proceed to do any thing that tended either to my danger or ruine.

O! how would I commemorate thee, thou beſt of Princes, Greateſt Charles, how would I commemorate thee! What praiſes, or what expreſſions ſhall I uſe to celebrate or ſet forth ſo great Clemency, commiſeration and goodneſs? Thoſe are light obligations that ſpeak, theſe my Obligations ſtand amazed, are ſpeechleſs, and ſwallowed up in admiration.

miration. It is for common Men to do benefits that may be expreſſed in Words, it is for Charles to oblige beyond all that can be ſpoken.

I will add another thing alſo, O ſtranger, which the ſame Mercy and Goodneſs alſo added. For when I feared the ſame fortune, in the Univerſity, as I had felt in the Country, and fled again to the ſame Altar, the Royal bounty heard me, granted my Petition, ratified my Deſires, and confirmed and ſtrengthned my Station there alſo.

To comprize all in a word, which indeed exceeds all words. Although I were an obſcure perſon and of no note, altogether unworthy, and of no merit, wholly unknown to the Kings Majeſty, and lying poſſibly under ſome kind of accuſations (for it wanted not an accuſation, that I was put into theſe places by that Authority, that I was) yet twice within two weeks, by the Royal favour I obtained his Grant, confirmed by his Hand, and the Great Seal of England. And thus rooted out here, he replanted me, and ready to be rooted out elſewhere, he preſerved me, reſcued me from danger, freed me of my fear: ſo that now I, as well as my Worthy predeceſſors, have this to boaſt of, that I have a King to my Patron.

But far be it, far be it from me, moſt unworthy Man, to boaſt; all this, moſt Great, moſt Merciful Prince, redounds to your Praiſe alone, and let it do ſo: rather let England glory in ſuch a Prince, and let the Prince glory in ſuch Mercy. Triumph, Ceſar, triumph in that brave Spirit of yours, as you well may. You are Charles, and you conquer, you ſubdue all, by pitying, delivering, giving and forgiving all.

That conqueſt I ſhall always acknowledge with all humility and thankfulneſs: and thou, little Book, and you trifling Sheets, whereſoever ye ſhall fly, tell this abroad in my Name every where, and to every man. That although there be nothing elſe in you worthy to be read, yet that this my ſincere profeſſion may be read and heard; that next after the Divine Mercy, I ow to the mercy of the King, that I enjoy this ſweet leaſure for Learning, that I enjoy theſe quiet Retirements, that I enjoy a Houſe, that I enjoy my Self.

So, O Father of the Country, may the Father of Mercies reward you ſeven fold, and ſeventy times ſeven fold into your boſom, and may you feel every day the benefit and ſweetneſs of doing good by the recompences that are made you by Heaven. Thus may your Mercy ever triumph, and ever reap, as the fruit of it, the eternal favour of the Divine Mercy. Thus may England be Crowned for a long time with her King, and may the King be Crowned for ever with the Love of God, with his Protection, his Bleſſing, his Grace, his Glory.

Made theſe Vows, Jan. I. 1661.

THE Sacrifice by the Law was to be delivered into the hands of the Prieſt, and to be offered by him: and ſince your hands, Reverend Prelate, vouchſafed to offer my Εὐκτήρια, Petitions to the Kings Majeſty, I now become an humble Petitioner, that thoſe hands would pleaſe to offer alſo my χαριστήρια, Theſe Teſtimonials of my thanks.

I bring the firſt fruits of my replantation, which the Royal favour indulged me, by the interceſſion of your Honour, when I had been rooted up. For ſince by that Favour I am reſtored to theſe Seats, to peace, and my ſtudies, there is nothing I now deſire beſides, nothing more, than that that moſt excellent Prince may perceive, that he hath not been a Benefactor to an ingrateful perſon, however unworthy, however obſcure: and that your Honour may ſee, that you have not interceded for a forgetful perſon, howſoever undeſerving.

I ſhall never forget, Great Sir, with how much kindneſs and candor, your Honour received me in my ſtraits, altogether unknown to You, and whoſe face You had never before ſeen: with how great concern You pleaded my cauſe before the Kings Majeſty, before the moſt Honourable the Lord Chancellor of England, and before the right Reverend my Dioceſan: how your Honour conſulted for me, wrote Letters, laid Stops, that my ruine might not proceed beyond a poſſibility of reſtoration. All which while I reflect upon, which I ever do, and while together with that reflection I conſider what obligation lays upon me on one hand, and my own meanneſs on the other; on one hand how unworthy I am of ſo great favour, and how altogether unable to make any recompence on the other; what elſe is left me, but to fly again to the ſame Kindneſs, humbly imploring it, that as it at firſt ſo obligingly received me, a perſon unknown and unworthy; ſo it would now entertain me, known and bound by ſo great obligation, and approaching with all the thanks, I can give. Thoſe thanks, ſo due to your Honour, I have committed to theſe papers; unlearned indeed they are, and undreſſed; but ſuch as carry Sincerity with them, though not Learning, Thankfulneſs, though not Eloquence. And I have intruſted this charge with them, the rather, becauſe I ſuppoſe they may diſperſe themſelves far and near, and perhaps may live to poſterity; and that which I deſire of them is, that they would declare to all, how endebted he is to your Honour, and to your great Humanity, with how great obligations he is bound to You, and with how grateful a mind, and inward affection he profeſſeth all this, and will acknowledge it for ever, Who is,

A CHOROGRAPHICAL DECAD

Searching into some Places OF THE Land of ISRAEL:

Those especially whereof mention is made in St. MARK.

WHEN this our Evangelist, whom we have undertaken to handle, makes mention of some places in the Land of Canaan, whose situation is somewhat obscure and more remote from vulgar knowledge; I might seem to be wanting to my task, if I should pass them over unsaluted, and not clear them, as much as lyes in me, with some illustration: which I thought very convenient to do here in the very entrance; partly, lest by the thrusting in of these discourses into the body of this Comment, whatsoever it be, the order of it might be too much broken: and partly, because I would do the same here that I did before my Animadversions on St. Matthew.

The places which here are handled, are these,

I. Idumea, Mark III. 8.
II. Ἔρημος, The Wilderness. Chap. I. 4.
III. Γαζοφυλάκιον, The Treasury. Chap. XII. 41.
IV. Ἡ κώμη ἡ κατέναντι, The Village over against. Chap. XI. 2.
V. Dalmanutha. Chap. VIII. 10.
VI. Ὅρια Τύρου, καὶ Σιδῶνος. The Borders of Tyre and Sidon. Chap. VII. 24.
VII. The Coasts of Decapolis. Chap. VII. 31. And to compleat the Decad are added, VIII. Some Measurings.
IX. Some places here and there noted.
X. Concerning some Inhabitants of the Land.

That I have enlarged upon some places, besides those in the Evangelists, I have done it for the Readers sake; to whom I hope it will not be unacceptable to hear such things, which do either bring with them profit, or pleasure, or at least such as are not commonly heard of.

CHAP. I.

SECTION I.

Idumea, Mark III. 8.

THERE was a time, when the Land of Iſrael and Idumea were not only diſtinct Countries, but ſeparated with an iron Wall, as it were, of Arms and Hoſtility: but I know not how, Idumea at laſt crept into Judea; and ſcarcely left its name at home, being ſwallowed up in Arabia.

They were truths which Pliny ſpeaks, in that time when he ſpake them: a Arabia is bounded by Peluſium LXV mile. Then Idumea begins, and Paleſtine, at the riſing up of the Sirbon Lake. But thou art deceived, O Pliny, would the Antienter ages have ſaid; for Idumea is bounded by Peluſium LXV. miles. Then begins Paleſtine at the riſing up of the Sirbon.

a Nat. Hiſt. lib. 5. cap. 12.

We are beholding to Strabo that we know the reaſon of the tranſmigration of that people and of the name. For thus he writes; Τῆς Ἰουδαίας τὰ μὲν ἑσπέρια ἄκρα, τὰ πρὸς τῷ Κασίῳ κατέχουσιν Ἰδουμαῖοί τε καὶ λίμνη. Ναβαταῖοι δ' εἰσὶν οἱ Ἰδουμαῖοι κατὰ στάσιν ἐκπεσόντες, &c. b The Idumeans and the Lake (of Sirbon) take up the furtheſt Weſtern parts of Judea, next to Caſius. The Idumeans are Nabateans: but being caſt out thence by a ſedition, they joyned themſelves to the Jews and embraced their Laws.

b Strab. Geog. lib. 16.

Every one knows, what the Land of Edom or Idumea, in the Old Teſtament was: but it is not the ſame in the New, and if that old Idumea retained its name, (which it ſcarcely did, but was ſwallowed up under the name of Arabia) then by way of diſtinction, it was called Ἰδουμαία Μεγάλη, c Great Idumea. Idumea the leſs or the new, is that which we are ſeeking and concerning which St. Mark ſpeaks, no ſmall part of Judea, ſo called either from its nearneſs to Idumea properly ſo called, or becauſe of the Idumeans that travailed thither and poſſeſſed it, and that became Proſelytes to the Law and manners of the Jews. Such a one was Herod Aſcalonita. When therefore it is ſaid by the Evangeliſt, that a great multitude followed Jeſus from Galilee and from Judea, and from Jeruſalem and from Idumea, he ſpeaketh either of the Jews inhabiting that part of Judea, which at that time was called Idumea, or at leaſt of the Idumeans who inhabited it, being now tranſlated into the Religion of the Jews. Concerning the Country now contained under that name we ſhall ſpeak by and by, following firſt, Pliny's footſteps a little, from the place where he ſets out his progreſs, namely, from Peluſium.

c Joſ. de Bell. lib. 4. cap. 30.

SECT. II.

A few things of Peluſium.

IN Ezekiel XXX. 15, 16. סין Sin, in the Vulgar Interpreter is Peluſium: which the Latine Interpreter of the Chaldee Paraphraſt follows there: nor without good Reaſon. For סין Sin, and טין Tin, among the Chaldees is Mud. See the Targum upon Eſai. LVII. 21. And Pithom and Raamſes, (Exod. I. 11.) in the Targums of Jeruſalem and Jonathan, are טנים ופילוסין Tanis and Peluſium: thence thoſe two Gates of Nile, the Tanitic and the Peluſiac, in Ptolomy and the Maps. But now, that Country or place which the Syrians and Chaldeans call Sin, that is, Muddy, the Greeks call Peluſium, from Πηλὸς, Mud. And who ſees not that Tanis is derived from טין Tin?

And

And here for the sake of Learners, let me observe that Peluſium is called in the Talmudiſts קפוטקיא which who would not presently interpret Cappadocia?

נשא בקפוטקיא וגירשה בקפוטקיא נותן לה מעות קפוטקיא : Would not any render the words thus, d If a man marries a wife in Cappadocia and divorces her in Cappadocia, let him give her the mony of Cappadocia. But hear Rambam upon the place, קפוטקיא saith he, is Caphtor, and is called by the Arabians טמיאטי Damiata: which all know is the ſame with Peluſium. d Chetub. fol. 110. 2. & 120. 2.

Hence the Targums of Jeruſalem and Jonathan and the Syriac interpreter upon Gen. X. 14. for כפתורים Caphtorim, read קפודקאי Cappadokia, but the Arabic reads Damiatenos; And the Seventy, upon Deut. II. 23. for, The Caphtorim going out of Caphtor, read Οἱ Καππάδοκες ἐξελθόντες ἐκ Καππαδοκίας, The Cappadocians going out of Cappadocia.

The Targum upon Jer. XLVII. 4. for שאריתא אי כפתור The remnant of the Country of Caphtor, hath שאר נגות קפוטקאי of Kapotokia. Where Kimchi ſaith R. Saadias interprets Caphtor דמיטא Damiata.

כתיב אפיתחא דקפוטקיא אנפק אנבג אנטל : e Theſe words were written upon the gate of Peluſium; Anpak, Anbag, Antal. Which were the names of ſome meaſures that it might be known to all that they were to buy and ſell according to that meaſure. e Bab. Eathr. 58. 2.

SECT. III.

CASIOTIS.

WE now go on from Peluſium to mount Caſius: So Pliny; From Peluſium, the trenches of f Chabrias. Mount Caſius, the Temple of Jupiter Caſius. The Tomb of Pompey the Great, &c. f Of Chabrias See Diod. Sic. pag. mihi 347.

g Caſius was diſtant about CCC furlongs from Peluſium (in Antoninus it is XL miles) and the Lake of Sirbon was XXVIII miles from Caſius. Thus Plinies LXV miles ariſe, from Peluſium to the ending of Arabia. e Strab. ubi ante. Tabbi Aſia c. 9.

Caſius in Ptolomy is written Κάσιον, Caſſion and Κασιῶτις, Caſſiotis, with a double s, and ſo alſo it is in Dion Caſſius, who adds this ſtory.

h Pompey died at mount Caſſius, on that very day whereon formerly he had triumphed over Mithridates and the Pirates. Καὶ εἰς πάντας τὲς πολίτας τὲς Κασίες ὑπό τινος χρησμῶ ἐπανεστάσας, &c. And when from a certain Oracle he had ſuſpition of the Caſſian Nation, no Caſſian laid wait for him, but he was ſlain and buried at the Mountain of that name. h Dion. Caſ. lib. 42.

Thoſe words of Moſes do rack Interpreters, Exod. XVII. 16. יד על כס־יה Jad Al Cas-jah. The LXX render it, Ἐν χειρὶ κρυφαίᾳ πολεμεῖ Κύριος, The Lord wars with with a ſecret hand. All other verſions almoſt render it to this ſenſe, The hand upon the Throne of the Lord; So the Samaritan, Syrian, Arabic, Vulgar and the Rabbins, that is, God hath ſworn.

What if כס־יה Cas-jah be Caſiotis? For that Country was the Country of the Edomites, but eſpecially of the Amalekites, concerning whom Moſes treats in that Hiſtory. We will not too boldly depart from the common conſent of all, and we do modeſtly and humbly propound this conjecture: which if it may take any place, the words may there be rendred, without any ſcruple or knot, to this ſenſe, The hand of the Lord is againſt Caſſiotis, (the Country of the Amalekites, for) the Lord hath War with Amalek from generation to generation.

SECT. IV.

Rhinocorura. The Arabic Interpreter noted.

WE are now come to the River Sichor: called the River of Egypt; not, becauſe it was within the Egyptian territories, but becauſe it was the Jews limits towards Egypt. There heretofore was Rhinocorura. Whence the LXX in Eſai. XXVII. 12. render עד נחל מצרים Unto the River of Egypt, Ἕως Ῥινοκορέων, Unto the Rhinocoruri. I ſuppoſe the Arabic Interpreter imiated them, and writ firſt כורור Corura, but that at laſt a little poynt crept in into the laſt letter, and ſo it was changed from r into n. So that now we read כורון which is founded Coronis, in the Latine Interpreter.

SECT. V.

The Country of the Avites: a part of the New Idumea.

PAſſing the River, we enter into new Idumea, antiently the region of the Avites: in the holy Scripture called Hazerim, Deut. XI. 24. In the Eaſtern Interpreters, Raphia. In Pliny, Rhinocorura, and Raphia inwards. Sometimes alſo in the holy Scripture it is called Shur, and inſtead of it, in thoſe Interpreters it is called Chagra. Whence is the name of Mount Angaris, concerning which Pliny ſpeaks, Gaza, and inwards Antbedon, Mount Angaris. For when the Syrians pronounced Chaggara, the Greeks would ſound a double Gamma by n and g, and would ſay Angara.

Shur alſo is ſometimes rendred by the Eaſtern Interpreters חלוצה Chaluzzah, as the Jeruſalem Targum upon Gen. XVI. 7. and Jonathan upon Exod. XV. 22. The Arabic renders Gerarim, ſo Gen. XX. 1. And Jonathan Bared, Gen. XVI. 14. Bared indeed which ſignifies Hail, you call in Greek χάλαζα: and whither the Targumiſts uſe the Greek word, when they render it Chaluzah, let the Reader Judge.

Shur, ſometimes in the Syriac Interpreter is שור Sud, as Exod. XV. 22. the poynt for difference in the laſt letter, being placed amiſs. In Gen. XVI. 7, 14. Shur, and Bared, are rendred by them Gedar, inſtead of Gerar, by the ſame error, Bared in the Arabic, is Jared there, with two poynts placed under the firſt letter inſtead of one.

The Country of the Avites, call it by what name you will, ended at Gaza, being ſtretched out thither in length from the River of Egypt, XLIV miles. But the Idumea, which we ſeek, ended not there, but extended it ſelf further into Judea, ſwallowing up, under the name, that whole breadth of the Land, from the Mediterranean Sea, to the Sea of Sodom, according to the length of it.

SECT. VI.

The whole portion of Simeon within Idumea.

IT ſwallowed up firſt, the whole portion of Simeon, a great part of which was contained within the Country of the Avites, but not a ſmall part alſo extended it ſelf further into Judea. Mention is made of his fourteen Cities, Joſh. XIX. if you tell them one by one; but they are ſaid to be only thirteen ver. 6. where the LXX make an even number, while they take שרוחן Sharuhen, not for a City, but render it Οἱ ἀγροὶ αὐτῶν, as if they had read שריהן Their fields. But Sheba ſeems rather to be one and the ſame with Beerſheba; and ſo the number is made equal.

SECT. VII.

The whole Southern Country of Judea, within Idumea.

IT ſwallowed up alſo the whole Country of South Judea, which was more generally marked out by two names דרומא עילאה ותחתאה The upper and the nether South: a more particularly and diffuſively, as ſome of the Jews pleaſe, it is divided into ſeven parts, 1. דרום 2. נגב 3. תימן 4. ים 5. ימין 6. חדר 7. סנינים or סנים and ſometimes מרבד הרים a Hieroſ. Sanhedr. fol. 18. 4. Beriſh. Rabba, §. 52.

So that when the Holy Scripture divides the South of Judea from Idumea, Numb. XXXIV. and Joſh. XV. we muſt know that dividing line now is broken, and all the South of Judea is called Idumea. But here by the way, I cannot but note the Arabic Interpreter who renders Edom, in Joſh. XV. 2. by אל רום Rome, by what authority, let himſelf look to it, ſo let the Jews do too, who commonly call the Romans, Edomites.

How much this new Idumea ſhot it ſelf into Judea, is not to be defined; ſince it admitted indeed no limits, but where either the Force or Fraud of that Nation could not thruſt it ſelf in farther. If you betake your ſelf to Joſephus, here and there ſpeaking of that nation, you would think that it extended almoſt as far as Hebron. Thence perhaps, were thoſe endeavours of ſome, b of freeing the Hill Country of Judea from Tithing. Of which endeavour we can ſcarce conceive another reaſon then; that that Country was now too much turned Heathen, and Tithes ſhould not be taken from Heathens. For theſe Idumeans were but a remove from Heathen. They had paſſed into the Jewiſh Rites, but they were neither friends to the Jews, nor to their Religion.

b Hieroſ. Demai, fol. 24. 4.

SECT.

SECT. VIII.

Of the Third Paleſtine, or Paleſtine called the Healthful.

WHILE I am thinking of this new Idumea, I have a ſuſpicion, whether the Third Paleſtine, which is alſo c called the Healthful, may not be underſtood of this very part of Paleſtine; and while I think upon it, I doubt again of the diviſion of Paleſtine into two parts, in the Code of Juſtinian and Theodoſius; and into three parts in the Notitia.

c In. Notit. Imper. Orient.

d In the Edict of Theodoſius and Valentinian are theſe words, Judæorum Primates, qui in utriuſque Paleſtinæ Synedriis dominantur, vel in aliis provinciis degunt, periculo ſuo anniverſarium Canonem de Synagogis omnibus, Palatinis compellentibus, exigant ad eam formam quam Patriarchæ quondam, coronarii auri nomine poſtulabant, &c. The chief of the Jews, who were over the Sanhedrins in both Paleſtines, or live in other Provinces, &c.

d Cod. lib. 1. tit. de Jud. & cælic. §. 17.

The mention of both Paleſtines ſeems plainly to exclude a threefold diviſion, or, at leaſt, to conclude, that there were no Sanhedrins in the third part. For without all ſcruple, the Notitia Imperii gives us a Third part, in which are ranked, Under the diſpoſition of the worthy man the Earl of the Eaſt, theſe Provinces underwritten:

Paleſtine.	Paleſtine the ſecond.
Phenice.	Paleſtine the Healthful.
Syria.	Phenice of Libanus.
Cyprus.

And e Juſtinian hath theſe words; When all Paleſtine formerly was one, it was afterwards divided into three parts.

e Novel. 103.

The head of the Firſt the ſame Emperour aſſigns to be Ceſarea, f Gulielmus Tyrius to be Jeruſalem: and concerning the Second and Third, he and Pancirolus do not agree. For the Metropolis of the Second, according to Tyrius is Ceſarea, and Scythopolis of the Third. According to Pancirolus, Samaria is the Metropolis of the Second, and Jeruſalem of the Third f De Bell ſacr. lib. 13. cap. 2.

On the credit of Juſtinian, you may with good reaſon ſuppoſe the Firſt to be that whoſe head is Ceſarea: the Second, reaſon it ſelf will perſwade us, to have been that of Jeruſalem; and where you will go to ſeek the Third, I for my part know not, if not in this our Idumea. It is not indeed to be diſſembled that in the Notitia imperii, in the Scheme adorned with the pictures of the Roman garriſons, Jordan is painted running between them, five being placed on this ſide, and eight on that. So that it may ſeem, that the Country beyond Jordan was the third part. But I ſhall not diſpute here, whither that be not in part to be diſpoſed under the Governour of Syria or Arabia; but there are ſome things which ſeem to favour ſuch an opinion, partly in the Notitia it ſelf, but eſpecially in the Authors alleadged.

If therefore I may be allowed my conjecture, concerning this new Idumea, then ſome Anſwer may be given about the Sanhedrins of both Paleſtines, in the mean time not denying the threefold diviſion of it. We muſt conſider indeed that there were Councils or Sanhedrins, in the times of Theodoſius and Valentinian, &c. They were, in times paſt, in that Paleſtine, whoſe head was Ceſarea, and in that Paleſtine, whoſe head was Jeruſalem: but not in that Idumea concerning which we ſpeak, whoſe head, whither ye ſtate it to be Gaza or Askalon, or Elutheropolis, concerning which Jerom ſo often ſpeaks, and perhaps g Bereſhith Rabba, we do not define.

g In Sc...

Mention indeed occurs in the Talmudiſts of דרומאי & וקני דרום The Southern Rabbins; but not ſo called, becauſe they dwelt in the furtheſt Southern parts of Judea, for thoſe of Jafne and Lydda had that name, but becauſe Judea was South of Galilee. For the Rabbins of Tiberias give them that title.

But, whatſoever at laſt that third Paleſtine was, no leſs ſcruple ariſes why it was called Salutaris the healthful. Pancirolus will have it to be from the wholeſom waters: and he learned from h Sozomen, that they ran from Emmaus into Judea, namely, that fountain where Chriſt waſhed his diſciples feet: from whence the water, to uſe his words, facta eſt diverſarum medicamen paſſionum, became medicinal for divers diſtempers.

h I...

But beſides, that that ſtorie favours enough of fable, the word Emmaus, if I may be Judg, deceived its firſt Author, which indeed, ſometimes is written for Ammaus denoting hot Bathes, and tranſlates the word Chammath into Greek pronounciation; But He, whoſoever was the firſt Author of it, had ſcarcely found that Town of Judea called Emmaus, written by the Jews חמת Chammath, but עמאוס or אמאוס Ammaus very far from the ſignification of warm Bathes.

To

To this add alſo, that mention is made in the ſame Notitia of Galatia Salutaris or the Healthful; and there is a diſtinction between Macedonia, and Macedonia the Healthful; Phrygia Pacatiana, and Phrygia the Healthful; Syria of Euphrates, and Syria the Healthful. In all which it will be ſomewhat hard to find medicinal waters: and the examples which the Author alledged produceth concerning ſome of them, are ſo incredulous, that I would be aſhamed to relate them after him.

I ſhould rather think theſe Countryes ſo called from the Companies and Wings of the Roman Army, called Salutares: for mention is made in the ſame Notitia of Ala Salutis, The Wing of Health, or Safety; as Ala ſecunda Salutis, The ſecond Wing of Safety under the Duke of Phenice, and Cohors prima Salutaria, The firſt ſaving Company, under the Duke of Paleſtine: or perhaps the beſt appoynted and ſtrongeſt Garriſons of the Romans, and ſuch as conduced moſt to the ſafety and peace of the whole Country, had their ſtations there. And in this our Idumea, which we ſuppoſe to be the Third Paleſtine or Salutaris, were placed, and that out of the greater Muſter-roll.

The Dalmatian Horſe of Illyria at Beroſaba, or in Beerſheba.

The Shield-bearing Horſe of Illyria at Chermula, or in Carmel, where Nabal dwelt.

The promoted Horſe, Inhabitants at Zodecath: which I ſuſpect to be the Cave of Zedechia, concerning which the Talmudiſts ſpeak.

The javelin bearing Horſe, Inhabitant at Zoar. But let theſe things be left in ſuſpence.

And now to return thither, whence this whole diſpute was raiſed, when it is ſaid by St. Mark, That a great multitude followed Jeſus from Galilee and Judea, and Jeruſalem, and from Idumea, and from beyond Jordan; he retains the known and common diviſion of the land of Iſrael at that time, although not in the ſame terms. The diviſion was into יהודה Judea; and גליל Galilee; and עבר הירדן The Country beyond Jordan. Galilee and the Country beyond Jordan he expreſſeth in terms: and for Judea in general, he names the parts of it, Jeruſalem and Judea, as diſtinguiſhed from Idumea, and Idumea as the South part of Judea.

CHAP. II.

The Wilderneſs. Mark I. 4, 12.

I. Ἔρημος, The wilderneſs, of different ſignification. II. מדבר יהודה The Wilderneſs of Judah. III. A Scheme of Aſphaltites, and the Wilderneſs of Judah, or of adjacent Idumea. IV. Ἔρημος Ἰουδαίας, The Wilderneſs of Judea, where John the Baptiſt was. V. Μέλι ἄγριον, Wild hony, Mark I. 6. V. Περίχωρος τοῦ Ἰορδάνου, The Region about Jordan. Mat. III. 5.

THE word Ἔρημος, Wilderneſs, ſtops us in a Wilderneſs, if it is of ſo various, and doubtful ſignification.

I. Sometimes it denotes only the Fields, or the Country in oppoſition to the City: which we obſerved at Mat. III. 1. Where if any one be diſpleaſed, that I rendred, Seah of the Wilderneſs, by the Country Seah, when it might be rendred, and perhaps ought, the Seah which the Iſraelites uſed, when they encamped in the Wilderneſs, let him, if he pleaſe, take another example for it.

[a] אין משקין ושוחטין את המדבריות a They do not water, and kill the Cattle of the wilderneſs. The Gloſs is, It was uſual to water Cattel before killing them, that they might the more eaſily be flayed. אבל משקין את הביתות But they water domeſtic (or tame) Cattel. And theſe are מדבריות Cattel of the Wilderneſs, Thoſe that go out to paſture in time of the Paſsover, and return home at the firſt rain, that is, in the Month Marheſhvan. Rabba ſaith, Theſe are Cattel of the Wilderneſs, כל הרועות אפר namely, all that feed in the meddows and come not home. The Gloſs is, מדבריות הבריתות The Cattel of the Wilderneſs are thoſe that are abroad in the fields.

II. The word מדבר The wilderneſs, denotes a Campain Country, where one mans ground is not diſtinguiſhed by fences from anothers.

b They do not breed up ſmaller cattel in the Land of Iſrael, but in Syria they do. ובמדבריות שלא' and in the Wilderneſſes of the Land of Iſrael. Where the Gloſs thus, They do not breed ſuch cattel in the Land of Iſrael, that they feed not down the fields: now the fields in the Land of Iſrael do belong without doubt to ſome Iſraelite. But they fed in the deſerts, that is, where field was not diſtinguiſhed from field, but all was common. Hence you may underſtand what is ſignified by the Deſert of Ziph, of Maon, of Tekoah, &c. namely, a Region, or Country, near to Cities, where alſo were ſcattered houſes; but eſpecially, either Champaign, where no fences were to make diſtinction of Lands, or Mountainous, and that which was barren and without improvement. b Bava Kama, fol. 79. 2.

III. There is no need to ſpeak of the deſerts that were altogether deſolate, and without inhabitant, ſuch as the Deſerts of Arabia, of Lybia, &c.

SECT. II.

מדבר יהודה The Wilderneſs of Judah.

PErhaps I ſhall be laughed at, if I diſtinguiſh between the Wilderneſs of Judah, and the Wilderneſs of Judea. And formerly ſuch a diſtinction did deſerve laughter; but when the name of Idumea, as I have ſhewed, ſwallowed up a great part of Judea, then it was not only to be born with, but neceſſary alſo, to diſtinguiſh between the Wilderneſs of Judah, of which Joſh. XV. 61. and the Title of Pſal. LXIII. and the Wilderneſs of Judea where John Baptized.

The Title of that Pſalm in the original Hebrew is thus, מזמור לדויד בהיותו במדבר יהודה A Pſalm of David when he was in the deſert of Judah. But the Greek Interpreters render it, A Pſalm of David when he was ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ τῆς Ἰδουμαίας, in the wilderneſs of Idumea. And the Vulgar, A Pſalm of David when he was in the deſert of Idumea: acting the part of no good Interpreters, but of no ill Paraphraſts. So Jer. IX. 26. על יהודה ועל אדום Ἐπὶ Ἰδουμαίαν, καὶ ἐπὶ Ἐδώμ. Upon Idumea, and upon Edom.

If you ask where David was when he compoſed that Pſalm, it is anſwered, 1 Sam. XXIV. 1. In the wilderneſs of Engaddi: and if you ſearch further for the preciſe place, it was there where the Caſtel Maſada was afterwards built. For I doubt not at all, that that place, as c Joſephus deſcribes it, was the ſame with צורי היעלים the Rocks of the wild Goats.

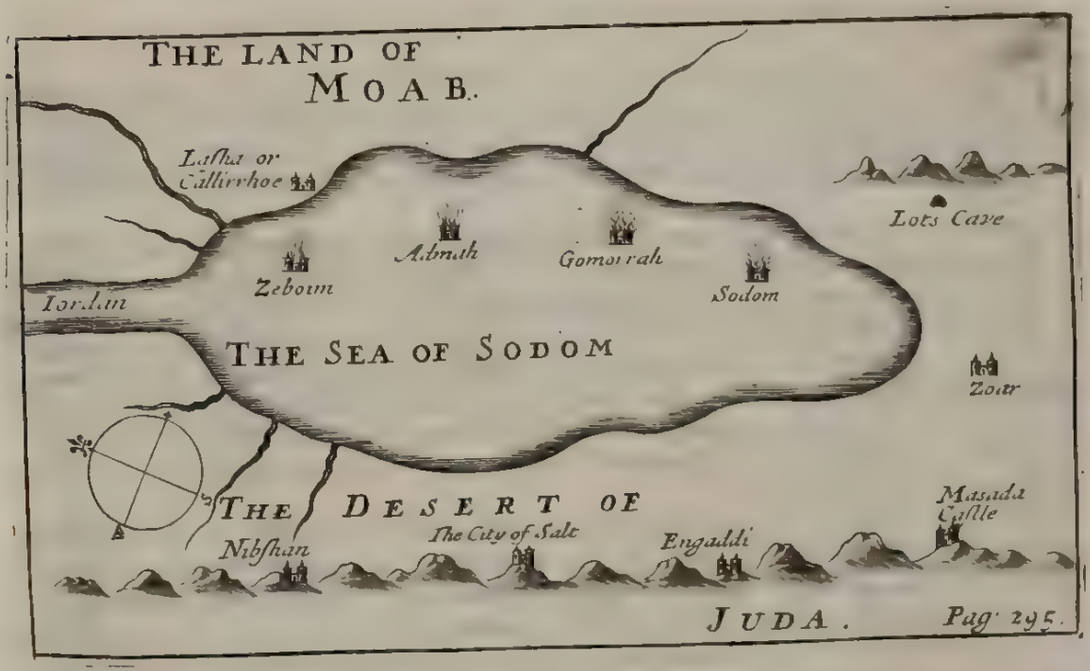
I appeal here to the Maps and their Authors, in whom Engedi and Maſada (and Lots Cave) are placed not very far from the utmoſt North coaſt of Aſphaltites; let them ſay whether Idumea ſtretched out it ſelf ſo far. If not, let them correct the Interpreters whom we have named; and though it be ſo, they might ſhew by what authority they place thoſe places there, and let them friendly correct me putting them far elſwhere.

SECT. III.

A Scheme of Aſphaltites, and of the Wilderneſs of Judah, or Idumea adjacent.



WE are now indeed out of our bounds (but we hope not out of the bounds of truth.) Therefore in one or two words we thus confirm the ſituation that we have aſſigned to theſe places.

I. In Gen. X. 19. Gaza and Sodom are made to lye in a parallel line.

II. Laſha is Callirrhoe. So Jonathan renders עד לשע Unto Laſha: עד קלרוהי Unto Callirrhoe. So alſo d Bereſhith Rabba, and the e Jeruſalem Talmudiſts, in the places cited at the Margent.

d Sect. 37. e Megill. fol. 71. 2.

f Nat. Hiſt. lib. 5. cap. 16.

You have the ſituation of it in Pliny on the ſame coaſt, with Macherus. f Arabia of the Nomades looks upon Aſphaltites on the Eaſt, Macherus on the South. On the ſame ſide is Callirrhoe a warm ſpring of a medicinal wholſomneſs.

And now let it be obſerved from the place alledged out of Geneſis, that after the ſame manner, as Sidon and Gaza, the limits on the Weſt part are placed, ſo are Sodom and Laſha ſeated on the Eaſt, one on the South, and the other on the North; and the other Cities ſtood in this order: From Laſha Southward Zeboim, after it Admah, after it Gomorrha, and after it on the utmoſt Southern coaſt, Sodom.

g De Bell. lib 4. cap. 27.

III. g The Aſphaltites, ſaith Joſephus, is extended in length, Μέχρι Ζοάρων τῆς Ἀραβίας, unto Zoar of Arabia; and Deut. XXXIV. 3. Moſes from Mount Nebo beheld Zoar from the utmoſt bounds of the land on that ſide, as he had beheld the utmoſt bounds of it from other ſides.

IV. Engedi is Hazezon Tamar; ſo the Targum, Onkelos in Gen. XIV. 7. See 2 Chron. XX. 2. and Tamar was the utmoſt South border. Ezek. XLVII 19. עין גדי חמריה h h Bereſhith Rabba, Sect. 26.

V. i The border of Judea, ſaith Solinus, was the Caſtle Maſada. And that not far from Aſphaltites l.

i Solin. cap. 38. l Plin. lib. 5. cap. 15.

m Joſephus indeed ſaith, that this Caſtle was ἐ πόῤῥω Ἱεροσολύμων, not far from Jeruſalem; which ſeems to thwart me in placing it as I have done. But beſides, that we might contend about that reading, when it is very uſual with Hiſtorians to uſe the words ἐ πόῤῥω, and ἐγγὺς, not far off, and near, in a very wide and looſe ſenſe, one can hardly build any thing upon this. So Solinus, n Callirrhoe is a fountain very neer Jeruſalem, when yet how far off was it? And in Strabo, o Lecheus is Λιμὴν τῆς Ἰταλίας ἐγγὺς, A Port neer Italy, when yet it was diſtant many hundreds of miles.

m De Bell. lib. 4. cap 24.

n Solin. in the place above. o Geograph. lib. 8.

Maſada in Hebrew is מצרה Matſada, which implies fortification: and that with good reaſon, when that Caſtle was fortified even to a miracle. The name is taken from 1 Sam. XXIII. 14, & 24. where the Seventy, the Syriack and Arabick ſeem to have read מצרה with ר Reſh, and not with ד Daleth. For they read in the former place Ἐν τοῖς ϛενοῖς in the ſtrait places: and in the latter Ἐν Μαστερεμ, in Maſerem, (otherwiſe Μασερεθ, Maſereth) ἐν τοῖς ϛενοῖς, in the ſtrait places. The Syriack and Arabick read Maſroth; as though they had read in the Original במצרות So p Joſephus, Αὐτὸς (Δαβίδης) μετὰ τῶν σὺν αὐτῷ εἰς τ Μασθήρου ἀνέβη ϛένην. He (David) with thoſe that were with him went up to the ſtrait place of Maſtheri.

SECT. IV.

The Wilderneſs of Judea, where John Baptiſt was.

THUS far we have lanched out into the Wilderneſs of Judah, or Idumea, and that the more willingly, becauſe in deſcribing it, I have deſcribed alſo ſome part of new Idumea, of which diſcourſe was had in the Chapter aforegoing. Now we ſeek Ἔρημος Ἰουδαίας the Wilderneſs of Judea, concerning which the Goſpels ſpeak in the Hiſtory of the Baptiſt.

I. And firſt we cannot paſs it over without obſervation, that it was not only without Prophetical prediction, that he firſt appeared Preaching in the Wilderneſs, Iſa. XL. 3. but it was not without a myſtery alſo. For when the Heathen world is very frequently in the Prophets called the Wilderneſs, and God promiſeth that he would do glorious things to that Wilderneſs, that he would produce there Pools of waters, that he would bring in there all manner of fruitfulneſs, and that he would turn the horrid deſert into the pleaſure of a Paradice (all which were to be performed in a ſpiritual ſenſe by the Goſpel) it excellently ſuited even in the letter with theſe promiſes, that the Goſpel ſhould take its beginning in the Wilderneſs.

II. I indeed think the Baptiſt was born in Hebron, a City of Aaron, in the Hill-Country of Judea, Joſh. XXI. 11. Luk. I. 5, 39. he being an Aaronite by Father and Mother. The houſe of his Cradle is ſhewn to Travellers elſwhere, concerning which enquire whether Beth Zachariah, mentioned in q Joſephus, and the Book of the r Maccabees, afforded not a foundation to that Tradition. It was diſtant from Bethſura only ſeventy furlongs or thereabouts, as may be gathered from the ſame Joſephus, (by which word the Seventy render render South Bethel in 1 Sam. XXX. 27.) and whether the situation does not agree, let them enquire who please.

A little Cell of his is also shewed further in the Wilderness, as it is called, of Judea, cut out of a rock, together with his bed, and a fountain running by, which we leave to such as are easie of belief; the Wilderness certainly where he preached and baptized is to be sought for far elsewhere.

III. Luke saith, That the word of the Lord came to John in the Wilderness, ἦλθεν εἰς πᾶσαν περίχωρον τοῦ Ἰορδάνου, and he went into all the Country about Jordan. He sojourned from Wilderness to Wilderness. In the Wilderness in the Hill-country of Judea, he passed his youth as a private man; not as an Eremite, but employed in some work or study; and assumed nothing of austerity, besides Nazariteship, before the thirtieth year of his age. Then the spirit of Prophesie came upon him, and the word of the Lord came unto him, teaching him concerning his function and office, instructing him about his food and cloathing, and directing him to the place where he should begin his Ministry.

The region about Jericho was that place, or that Country that lay betwixt that City and Jordan, and so on this side of it and on that about the same space; also on this side Jericho towards Jerusalem. A Country very agreeable to the title which the Evangelists give it, and very fit for John's Ministry. For,

I. It was sufficiently desert, according to what is said, John came preaching in the Wilderness.

s The place, saith Josephus, from Jericho to Jerusalem, is desert and rocky; but towards Jordan and the Asphaltites more level, but as desert and barren. And Saligniac writes, t The journey from Jerusalem is very difficult, stony and very rough; the like to which I do not remember I have seen. Jericho is distant from Jordan almost ten miles, &c.

s De bello, lib 4 cap 27
t Tom. IX. cap. 5.

II. This Country might for distinction be called the Wilderness of Judea, because other Regions of Judea had other names: as The Kings Mountain, The Plain of the South, The Plain of Lydda, The Valley from Engedi, The Region about Betharon, u &c.

u Hieros. Sheviith, fol. 38. 4.

III. Although that Country were so desert, yet it abounded very much with people. For besides that abundance of Villages were scattered here and there in it, 1. Jericho it self was the next City to Jerusalem in dignity. 2. There were always twelve thousand men in it, of the courses of the Priests. 3. That way was daily trodden by a very numerous multitude, partly of such, who travailed between those Cities, partly of such, who went out of other Parts of Judea, and likewise out of the Land of Ephraim into Perea, and of them who went out of Perea into those Countries. 4. John began his Ministry about the time of the Passover, when a far greater company flocked that way.

IV. This Country was very convenient for food and provision, in regard of its Wild Hony; of which let me say a few things.

SECT. V.

Μέλι ἄγριον, Wild Hony, Mark I. 6.

WHEN it is so often repeated in the Holy Scripture, that God gave to his people Israel a Land flowing with Milk and Hony, hence 1. One would conclude that the whole Land flowed with it. And 2. hence one would expect infinite hives of Bees. But hear what the Talmudists say of these things.

x R. Jonah saith, The Land flowing with Milk and Hony is the Land, some part of which flows with Milk and Hony. And that part, they say, is in Galilee; for thus they speak, For sixteen miles every way from Zippor is a Land flowing with Milk and Hony: of which thing and Country we shall speak elsewhere.

x Hieros. Bicurim, fol. 64. 2

y R. Jose of Galilee saith, They bring not the first fruits out of the Country which is beyond Jordan, because that is not the Land flowing with Milk and Hony. And he that brought the first fruits was to say, The Lord gave us this Land flowing with Milk and Hony; And now I have brought the first fruits of the Land, which thou, O Lord, hast given me. Deut. XXVI. 9, 10.

y Bicurim, cap. 1. hal. 15.

But that part that flowed, how did it flow with Hony? Learn that from Ramban upon the place: When he saith, And Hony, he understands דבש שרל תמרים The Hony of Palms. For the Palm Trees which are in the Plain and in the Vallies abound very much with Hony.

There was Hony also distilling from the Fig-trees. z R. Jacob ben דוסתאי Dostheus saith, I went on a certain time from Lydda to Ono before day break, up to the ankles in the Hny of Figs.

z Chetub. fol. 111. 2.

This is the Μέλι ἄγριον The wild Hony, of which the Evangelists speak, as of the Baptists food. And how convenient for this the Region about Jericho was, which was called The Country of Palm-trees, is clear to every Eye. Diodorus Siculus hath these words of a certain Nation of Arabians; Φύεται αὐτοῖς τὸ πέπερι ἀπὸ τῶν δένδρων, ἐν μέλι πολὺ τὸ ἀγριόμελυσσον ὃ χρῶνται ποτῷ μετὰ ὕδατος. a They have Pepper from the Trees, and much Hony, called wild Hony, which they use to drink with water. Whether it were also as plentiful in Locusts, we do not say; certainly in this also it gave place to no Country, if either barrenness or fruitfulness served for the breeding them: for Jericho, and the adjacent parts was like, a garden of pleasure, in the midst of a Desert. Certainly the place was very convenient for that great Work to be performed by the Baptist, that is, Baptizing in Jordan.

a Diod. Sic. lib. 19.

SECT. VI.

Περίχωρος τοῦ Ἰορδάνου. The Region round about Jordan, Matth. III. 5.

HERE that of Borchard is not unuseful. b Know, that from the rise of Jordan under Libanus, unto the Desert of Pharan, almost an hundred miles, Jordan it self on both shores, hath spacious and pleasant fields, which are compassed behind with very high mountains. The truth of which, if his Eyes had not experienced it, he might have learned from Josephus, who speaks thus.

b Burch. cap. 7. 26.

c Over Jericho hangs a mountain stretched forth Northward, even to the Country of Scythopolis; and Southward to the Country of Sodome, and the utmost borders of the Asphaltites. It is craggy, and not habitable by reason of barrenness. Against it runs out a mountain near Jordan, beginning at Julias, and the North Country, and stretched out Southward unto Gomorrha, where it bounds the Rock of Arabia. The Middle between these two Mountanous Regions is called Μέγα πεδίον, The great Plain, extended from the Town Ginnabri unto the Asphaltites: in length MCC furlongs, in breadth CXX. Καὶ μέσον αὐτὸ τέμνει ὁ Ἰορδάνης. And it is cut in the middle by Jordan. The Plain of Jordan before the overthrow of Sodome, &c. Gen. XIX. is ἡ περίχωρος, The Country about it, in the LXX.

c Jos. de bell. lib. 4. cap. 27.

Those words teach, what is ἡ περίχωρος τοῦ Ἰορδάνου, The Region about Jordan: and the word πᾶσα All, added by the Evangelist, may perswade us, that the further side may also be taken in, especially if it be considered, how small a distance the River made. The space was so little, that, as the Gemarists relate, d a fire kindled on one side reached over to the other. And they suppose, water on this side, might be spurted to the other, in that Caution; e Let no man take the waters of purification, and the ashes of purification, and carry them beyond Jordan. Nor let him stand on this side, and spurt to the other.

d Hitrof. Bava Kama, fol. 5. 3.

e Bab. Jevamoth, fol. 116. 2.

However, The River was not so broad, but that two standing on each bank, might look upon one another, cast something over from the one side to the other, yea, and talk together. And then think, whether the Inhabitants of the further side resorted not to the Baptist, being so near him, and as it were within sight of him.

The Masters dispute, whether Jordan be to be esteemed, as the bounds of the Land of Israel, or as the Land it self: and the occasion of that dispute, ariseth from another question, namely this, The flock of one man is separated and divided into two parts, and those two parts feed in distant places: it is asked, Whether tithe is to be taken as of one flock, or two? Hence the discussion of the point glides to Jordan; one part of the flock is on this side Jordan, the other on the other. If Jordan be to be esteemed for the bounds of the Land, then one part is within the Land, the other without. But if it be to be reputed for the Land it self, then the business is otherwise. Among other things in this dispute, f Saith Rabbah Bar bar Channah, R. Jochanan saith, אין ירדן אלא מבית ירחו ולמטה Jordan is not, but inwards from Jericho, and beneath it. You would think me more skilful than a Diver, to fetch this secret from the bottom. Jordan is not Jordan above Jericho, is a paradox that vexes the Glossers themselves, much more therefore may it me. One understands the thing according to the bare letter; for he that voweth, saith he, that he will not drink of Jordan, may drink above Jericho. Another understands it of Jericho, as being a bounds, yea as the bounds named below Jericho only, Josh. XVIII. 20. We make no tarrying upon the business. But if Jordan had such a limitation, that Jordan was not above Jericho, ἡ περίχωρος Ἰορδάνου, The Region about Jordan, is to be understood in the same limitation, namely, that it is only below Jericho. See the LXX on Gen. XIII. 10, 12.

f Beeroth, fol. 55. 1.

The Masters sifting this business out of one scruple move another; for they speak these words, Jordan floweth out of the Cave of Paneas, goes along by the Sibbechean Sea, by the Sea of Tiberias, by the Sea of Sodome, והולך ונופל לים הגדול And passeth on, and glides into the great Sea, אין ירדן אלא מבית ירחו ולמטה But Jordan is not but inwards from Jericho, and below it. Let any shew me where Jordan flows out of the Sea of Sodome into the Mediterranean. The River Shihor, carrying blackness in its name, may may be taken for it, if it be any other, but neither does this appear concerning it.

While you see multitudes gathered together to John, and gladly baptized in Jordan, without fear, without danger, alas! how much was Jordan changed from that Jordan in that story of Saligniac. Jordan, saith he, g in which place Christ was baptized, is famous for a ruinous building. Here therefore all we Pilgrims went into the holy River, and washed our Bodies, and our Souls; those from filth, and these from sin, a matter of very great joy and health, had not an unhappy accident disturbed our joys. For a certain Physician a French man of our company, an honest man, going something farther into the River, was caught with a Crocodile (whether one should call it a Dragon, or a beast, it is uncertain) and swallowed him up, not without the common grief of our brethren. g Salign. Tom. IX. cap.6.

The Wilderness also, where our Saviour underwent his forty days temptation, was on the same bank of Jordan where the baptism of John was, St. Luke witnessing it, that Jesus being now baptized ὑπέστρεψεν ἀπὸ τοῦ Ἰορδάνου, returned from Jordan, namely from the same Tract, whereby he came thither.

CHAP. III.

Γαζοφυλάκιον. The Treasury, Mark XII. 41.

I. Various Corbans. II. שופרות Corban chests. III. The Corban לשכה Chamber. IV. Where the Γαζοφυλάκιον The Treasury, was. V. גד יון Gad Javan in the Temple. VI. Jerusalem in Herodotus is Cadytis. VII. The streets of Jerusalem. VIII. The street leading from the Temple towards the Mount of Olivet.

THAT which the Talmudists say of some other things שתים שהן ארבע a that they were two, which at last became four, may have place as to the Corbans, or holy treasuries. b They were two as to their end, but four as to the dispatch of them to that end.

a Shevuoth, cap. 1. hal. 1.

c There was a Corban לברק הבית for the repair of the building of the Temple; and there was a Corban לעבודת המקדש for the preparing such things, as were necessary for the Divine Service in the Temple. And both were two. The duplicity of the former you have in this tradition.

c Shekalim, cap. 5. hal. 6.

שתי לשכות היו במקדש: There were two chambers in the Temple. לשכת חשאים The chamber of the silent, or, of the private; where pious men offered privately; whence the children of pious parents were nourished also privately. That is, they did their charity secretly, for this pious use, that it might not be known, who did it. There are some, who think these חשאים Silent ones, were the same with the Essеans; of which we will not dispute: nor do we number this charitable Treasury among the Corbans, concerning which we are now treating; because it conferred nothing to the business of the Temple. But the Tradition goes forward.

ולשכת הכלים: And there was the chamber of the Vessels, where whosoever offered any vessel, laid it. And after thirty days, the Treasurers opened the chambers, and whatsoever Vessel was found in it which was useful to the repairing of the building, was laid up for that use. And whatsoever was not useful was sold, and the price of it went ללשכת ברק הבית to the chamber for the repairing of the House.

You observe, how there was a Corban of Vessels, or Instruments of Iron, Brass, Silver, &c. And a Corban of Mony: both for the same end, that is, for the repair of the building and structure of the Temple, and Courts, if by some means or other they might fall down, or might receive damage by the injury of time, of tempests, or rains.

Maimonides adds, פרכות של היכל d The Vails of the Temple also come out of the chamber for the repair of the building; but the Vails of the doors out of the Corban לשכה of the chamber. Of which afterwards.

d In Shekalim, cap. 4.

SECT. II.

שופרות The Corban chests.

THERE was also a double Corban, whence the charges of things necessary for the Divine Worship were defrayed. The first was שופרות or certain Chests, of which thus the Masters.

e Shekalim, cap. 6. hal. 5. Joma, fol. 55. 2

e There were thirteen chests in the Temple, in which was written, יג' שופרות היו במקדש: תקלין חדתין New Shekels, (that is, of the present year) תקלין עתיקין Old Shekels, (or, Shekels of the year past) קינין Turtles, &c.

f In the place above, cap. 2.

f Maimonides still more largely and plainly: In the Temple were thirteen chests formed like Trumpets; that is, narrower below, and more broad above.

"The first was for the Shekels of the present year.

"The second was for the Shekels of the year past.

"The third, for those who were to bring an oblation of two Turtles, or Pigeons, one "for a burnt Offering, the other for a Sacrifice for Sin; the price of it they cast into "this chest.

"The fourth, for him, who otherwise ought an oblation of birds. The price of it "he cast into this chest.

"The fift, for him who voluntarily offered mony to buy Wood for the Altar.

"The sixt, for him who offered mony to buy Frankincense.

"The seventh, for him who offered Gold for the Mercy-seat.

"The eighth, for that which remained of the Sacrifice for sin. Namely, when one "dedicated mony for the Sacrifice for sin, and bought a Sacrifice with it, and something "remained over and above, let him cast that into this chest.

"The ninth, for that which remained of the Sacrifice for transgression.

"The tenth, for that which remained of the Pigeons for the Women that had Fluxes, "and that were delivered from Child-birth.

"The eleventh, for that which remained of the Oblations of the Nazirite.

"The twelfth, for that which remained of the Sacrifice of the Leper.

"The thirteenth, for him who offered monies for the burnt offering of cattel.

"And upon each chest was written that for which the mony that was laid up in it, was "appointed.

In one of these chests the Widdow, commended by our Saviour, cast in her two mites: but where they were placed we will enquire by and by.

SECT. III.

The Corban לשכה Chamber.

THERE was also a Chamber, in which whatsoever mony was collected in these chests, of which we have spoken, was emptied out into three other chests; which is called by the Talmudists emphatically, and אלפא ביתא לשכה or The Chamber.

e Jona, f 64. 1.

g There were three chests, each containing three Seahs, into which they empty the Corban, and on them were written א'ב'ג' And why saith R. Jose, was Aleph, Beth, Gimel writ upon them? Namely that it might be known, which of them was filled first, that it might first be emptied. R. Ishmael saith, the inscription was in Greek, Alpha, Beta, Gamma. h

h Shekalim, c. 3

The chests, which are here spoken of, were those, into which the three greater were emptied, which always stood unmoveable in the Chamber. The manner of the emptying of which take from the words of the Glos in the place alledged. Those chests, in which the mony was laid up did contain twenty seven Seahs (each nine) and they were covered with a linnin cloth. He, who was to empty, entred with three chests containing nine Seahs. He first filled the chest marked א, out of the first of the three great chests, and then covered it with the linnin cloth. Then he uncovered the second of the great chests, and out of it he filled the second chest, marked with ב; and covered it again. Then he uncovered the third of the great chests, and filled the third chest marked ג: but covered not the other again, &c.

i Ibid.

Moreover of the manner and time of this emptying thus the Masters speak. i Thrice in a year תורמין את הלשכה They take care about the Chamber (for let me render it thus in this place) that is, as the Glos writes. Out of the thirteen chests they transferred whatsoever had been collected in them, into these three great ones, which were in this chamber, and in like manner they emptied them into three less, (of which before) מפרום הפסח About the space of half a month before Passover, before Pentecost, and before the Feast of Tabernacles: or, in the beginning of the month Nisan, and of the month Tisri, and fifteen days before Pentecost.

And

And here I cannot but tranſcribe the words of the Gloſſer in that place of the Talmud, which we are now upon, as not a little illuſtrating the place in the Evangeliſts.

They publiſhed, ſaith he, and made known, that they ſhould bring the oblation of the Lord (the half Shekel) they that were near (to Jeruſalem) at the Paſsover; and they that were further off, at Pentecoſt; and they that were moſt remote, at the Feaſt of Tabernacles הלין דקריבי בפרוס פסח והלין דרחוק בפרוס עצרת והלין דרחוקין מנהון בפרוס החג: These words ſerve for a light to the ſtory in S. Matthew, Chap. XVII. of the Collectors of the Didrachm, or half Shekel, requiring it of Chriſt at Capernaum, when the Feaſt of the Paſsover was now paſt a great while ago. But we go on.

He who went into the Chamber, to empty the cheſts, went not in with a folded garment nor with ſhoes, nor with Sandals, nor with Phylacteries, nor with charms, &c. And the reaſon was, that there might be no opportunity, and all ſuſpicion might be removed, of ſtealing, and hiding any of the mony under them.

The money taken thence ſerved to buy the daily Sacriſice, and the drink-offerings, ſalt, wood, frankincenſe, the ſhew-bread, the garments of the Prieſts, and in a word, whatſoever was needful for the Worſhip and ſervice of the Temple.

Yea, I Rabb Aſa ſaith, גזרי גזילות בירושלם The Judges of things ſtolen, who were at Jeruſalem, received as their ſtipend ninety nine Mana's מתרומת הלשכה out of the rent of the Chamber. l Chullin. fol. 105. 1.

SECT. IV.

Where the Ταζοφυλάκιον, Treaſury was.

WE have ſearched out the things, now let us enquire after the places.

I. Thoſe thirteen Cheſts which were called שופרות or Trumpets, we have fixed without all doubt in the Court of the Women; and that upon the credit of Joſephus, Αἱ δὲ στοαὶ μεταξὺ τῆς πυλῶν ἀπὸ τοῦ τείχους ἔνδον ἐσφαμμέναι πρὸ τῆς ταζοφυλακίων, σφόδρα μὲν καλοῖς καὶ μεγάλοις ἀνειχοντο κίοσιν. i The Walks (ſaith he, ſpeaking of that Court) running along between the Gates, extended inwardly from the Wall before the Treaſuries, were born up with fair and great Columns. To this let us add the words of the Evangeliſt, Joh. VIII. 20. Theſe words ſpake Jeſus, ἐν τῷ ταζοφυλακίῳ, in the Treaſury: if it had been ſaid κατέναντι τοῦ ταζοφυλακίου, over againſt the Treaſury, which Mark ſaith, it might be underſtood of one of the Chambers, of which we have ſpoken: which ſenſe the Arabick Interpreter ſeems to follow; who renders it, that Jeſus ſat ענר באב at the Gate of the Treaſury. But when it is ſaid, that he ſpake thoſe words Ἐν τῷ ταζοφυλακίῳ, in the Treaſury, thoſe Chambers are wholly excluded, into which it would be ridiculous to think that they permitted Chriſt to enter. i De Bell. lib. 5. cap. 14.

But note, the word Ταζοφυλακίων, Treaſuries, in Joſephus is the Plural Number, and that he ſpeaks of the Court of the Women, and you will be paſt doubting that he reſpected theſe Cheſts under the word Treaſuries; and you will doubt as little that Mark looked the ſame way, when you ſhall have obſerved that his ſpeech is of the woman, how both ſhe and others caſt money εἰς τὸ ταζοφυλάκιον, into the Treaſury, which as appears from thoſe things we have produced out of the Talmudiſts, was neither cuſtomary nor allowed to do into other Corbans.

This Court indeed is commonly called in the Jewiſh Writers עזרת נשים The Court of the Women; not that women only entred in there, but becauſe women might not go further; in the ſame ſenſe as the outward Court is called the Court of the Gentiles, not that Heathens only might enter there, but becauſe they might not go further. That Court was alſo moſt ordinarily called הר הבית The Mountain of the Temple; ſo this alſo whereof we are treating, was called Ταζοφυλάκιον, The Treaſury.

When therefore it is ſaid by St. Mark, that Jeſus ſat κατέναντι τοῦ ταζοφυλακίου, Over againſt the Treaſury, it comes to this, that he ſat under the Walk, before which thoſe Cheſts were placed. And when John ſaith, Jeſus ſpake theſe words in the Treaſury, it is all one as if he had ſaid, He ſpake theſe words in the Court of the Women; yea, in that place where thoſe Cheſts were, that that place might be diſtinguiſhed from others which were in that Court; for in every corner of that Court there was a little Court, each one called by its own name, as appears in the places written in the Margin m. m Middoth. cap. 2. hal. 5. Joma. fol. 16. 1.

II. To trace the ſituation of the reſt of the Corbans, concerning which we have made mention, is not now the buſineſs before us; for that which was propounded as our task, we have diſpatched. But this we cannot but adviſe for the Readers ſake, that on the North-ſide of the Court of Iſrael, was a Gate which was called the Corban-gate; n yea by comparing the words of the Maſters, there ſeem to be two Gates of the ſame name, one of which if you make to belong to that Corban Chamber, into which the money out of the thirteen Cheſts was emptied, and the other to belong לשכת בדק הבית to that Corban, that n Middoth. in the place above, Hal. 6.

that was appoynted for the repair and amending of the building it self, perhaps you will not mistake. Certainly you will not find any place more probable in those Writers.

SECT. V.

גד יון Gad Javan in the Temple.

IN the Talmudic Book Zavim these words occur, obscure enough: ראה אחד מרובה כשלש שהיא כמין גד יון לשילוה He saw one (woman) multiplied (or, continued) like three, which are as from Gad Javan to Siloah. The thing discoursed of, is of the discovery of some profluvious issue. For example, one discovers such a profluvious issue in himself, now one, by and by another, presently after a third; it is disputed, how great or how little distance of time is to be assigned, to make it one or two profluviums; and consequently to how great or how small an oblation the party is bound for his purification. The Tradition, which we have produced comes to this: namely, if one sees such an issue at one time, which is so continued, that it contains the space of three discoveries; that is, so much time as one might walk from Gad Javan to Siloam הן זה גמור Behold! such a man is compleatly Profluvious.

The Glossers, and the Aruch teach us what was גד יון Gad Javan. Hear themselves, Gad Javan is a phrase drawn from those words: הערכים לגד שלחן That prepare a Table for that Troop (Esai. LXV. 11. Where the LXX read, Ἑτοιμάτοντες τῷ Δαιμονίῳ τράπεζαν, Preparing a Table for the Devil. The Vulgar reads, Qui ponitis fortunæ mensam, Who set a Table for fortune. The Interlinear, Jovi mensam, a Table for Jupiter.) And it is a place where the Kings of Grecia erected an Idol: as it is said in the book Avodah Zarah, In the corner looking North-East, the Asmoneans hid the stones of the Altar, which the Greeks had profaned with their Idols.

But whether these our Interpreters suppose Gad Javan to be that chamber, where those stones lay hid, laid up there, by the Asmoneans when they repaired the Altar, concerning which place see, if you please, the place in the Margin; o or whether they suppose it to be the place it self where the Idol stood, enquire. But how much space it was thence, and what way they went from thence to Siloam, I heartily wish, they had told us. They say only thus much of that matter, That it was so much space as one might walk while a man twice bathed, and twice dryed himself.

o Middoth, c. 1. hal. 6.

Being now in the Temple we cannot but take notice of a name of it, usual among the Masters, namely בירה Birah, that is, as the Aruch explains it, A Palace. p If a mischance in the night (or a Gonorrhea) happened to any Levite, going forth הולך לו במסינה ההולכת תחת הבירה he went down into a secret walk, which led away under Birah, or the Sanctuary, to a Bath, &c. These things are related of the second Temple. But elsewhere, when it is disputed, Whether men were better under the first Temple, or the second, Rabba determins it, בירה שחזרה לראשונים ולא חזרה לאחרונים Birah may teach this, which they had, that lived before; but they had not, that lived after. If by בירה Birah, is to be understood the Temple it self, both they that lived before, and they that lived after, had it; if some particular part of the Temple, they that lived after had that also, as appears from the places alledged. But by the thread of the Discourse in the place quoted, it seems, that by בירה Birah, Rabbah understood not the Temple it self, but the Glory of the Temple, and those divine endowments of it, The Heavenly fire, The Ark, Urim, &c. Which were present to the first Temple, but absent from the second. For presently they slip into discourse concerning the ceasing of Prophesie under the second Temple, and the Bath Kol succeeding in its places. The word בירה is in Davids mouth, 1 Chron. XXIX. 19. לבנות הבירה אשר הכינותי to build the Palace for which I have made provision.

p Ibid. hal. 8.

SECT. VI.

Jerusalem in Herodotus is Cadytis.

LET us also salute Jerusalem, and that under its most glorious name, The Holy City. Herodotus points it out, if we are not much mistaken, under the name of Cadytis. Ἀπὸ Φοινίκης μέχρι ὄρεων τῶν Καδύτιος πόλιος, ἡ ἔστι Συρίων τῶν Παλαιστινῶν καλεομένων. From q Phenice unto the mountains of Cadytus, which is the City of those Syrians, who are called Palestins. That Jerusalem is pointed out by him under this name, these things following perswade me.

q Herodot. in Thalia, cap. 5.

I. It

I. It was commonly called קדושה Kedoſhah, Holy. The Jewiſh mony wheresoever diſperſed, ſpake out this title of the City. But now when it was very common in the Syrian Dialect to change ש Śchin into ת Thau, how eaſy was it among them, and among other nations imitating them, that Cadyſha ſhould paſs into Cadyta, and Cadytis; as חדשה Chedaſha, New, paſſed into חדתה Chadatha.

II. He compareth Cadytis to the great City of Sardis. For Ἀπὸ δὲ Καδύτου ἔστι πόλις (ὡς ἐμοὶ δοκεῖ) Σαρδίων οὐ πολλῷ ἐλάσσων. From the City Cadytis, as he goes on, not much leſs than Sardis, as I think. But now there was no City at all within Paleſtine, worthy to be compared with Sardis, a moſt famous Metropolis in times paſt, except Jeruſalem.

III. Theſe things alſo he ſpeaks of Necho King of Egypt: Καὶ Σύροισι πεζῇ ὁ Νεκὼς συμβαλὼν ἐν Μαγδώλῳ ἐνίκησε. Μετὰ δὲ τὴν μάχην Κάδυδιν πόλιν τὴν Συρίας ἔσχεν μεγάλην εἶλε. r But Necus joyning in a foot battle with the Syrians in Magdalus, obtained the victory: and after that took Cadytis the great City of Syria. r Id. in Euterpe, cap. 159.

Which paſſage, if it be compared with the holy ſtory of Pharaoh Necho overcoming Joſiah in the battel in the vale of Megiddo, and diſpoſing of the Jewiſh throne, 2 King. XXIII. 33, 34. it fixeth the thing beyond all controverſy.

Herodotus goes forward, Ἀπὸ ταύτης (Καδύτου) τὰ ἐμπόρια τὰ ἐπὶ θαλάσσης μέχρι Ἰηνύσου πόλιος ἐστὶ τὰ Ἀραβίου. Ἀπὸ δὲ Ἰηνύσου αὖτις Συρίων μέχρι Σερβωνίδος λίμνης. From Cadytis the Sea Mart towns, as far as Jenyſus belong to Arabia. From Jenyſus onward to the Serbon Lake belong to the Syrians, Words obſcure enough, eſpecially which was the City Jenyſus: the Talmudiſts indeed mention עינוש Jenuſh among the Towns, which they ſay are בתחום in the Conſines, s but the ſituation does not agree. But we will not purſue the matter in this place. s Hieroſ. Demai, fol. 22. 4.

SECT. VII.

The Streets of Jeruſalem.

t THE Streets of Jeruſalem were ſwept every day. שוקי ירושלם עשויין להתכבד בכל יום Hence The monies that were found in Jeruſalem before thoſe that bought Cattel, are always tenths. The monies found in the Mount of the Temple are חולין prophane, or common. In Jeruſalem on other days of the year they are common, but in the time of the Feaſts, they are all Tenths. But ſaith R. Shemaia, Upon what reaſon is this? When the Streets of Jeruſalem are ſwept every day. t Peſachin, fol. 7. 1. & Megia, fol. 26. 1.

The Gloſs writes thus, They are always tenths: both in the time of the feaſts, and in the time when there are no feaſts. But monies found in the mount of the Temple were common, even in the time of the feaſts. For it is ſuppoſed, thoſe monies fell from them, (or were loſt) in the mount of the Temple, and thereupon they are common. But why were they tenths in Jeruſalem in the time of the Feaſts? And why is it not ſaid, that they had fallen from them there before the Feaſt, as we ſay of the mount of the Temple? Becauſe the ſtreets of Jeruſalem were ſwept every day; and if monies had been loſt there before the Feaſt, they who ſwept the ſtreets, had found them before. But the mount of the Temple had no need to be ſwept every day: for dirt and duſt remained not there, becauſe the mount was ſhelving: and moreover it was not lawful for any to enter there with his ſhoes, or with duſt on his feet.

I cannot omit what he ſaith beſides. Much of the fleſh which was eaten at Jeruſalem (in the time of the Feaſts) was of (the ſecond) tithes. For ſcarce any one tarried there until he had eaten all his tithes; but he gave the monies of the tithes either to the poor, or to his friends in the City. And for the moſt part with the monies of the Tithes they bought their thank-offerings.

SECT. VIII.

The ſtreet leading from the Temple towards Olivet.

u RAbban Jochanan ben Zaccai היה יושב בצלי שלּ הוכר ſat under the ſhaddow of the Temple, and taught the people the whole day. The Gloſs, when the Temple was an hundred Cubits high, it caſt its ſhaddow a great way in length, unto that ſtreet which was before הר הבית the Mountain of the Houſe. And becauſe that Street was ſpacious, and might contain a great multitude of men, Jochanan taught there by reaſon of the heat. For no Synagogue could contain his hearers. u Peſach. fol. 26. 1.

That ſtreet which was before the Mount of the Temple, according to the accuſtomed form of ſpeech, was that by which they went to the Temple, at the Eaſt gate; concerning which Street, and the people convened thither by Hezechia, mention is made 2 Chron. XXIX. 4.

XXIX. 4. This Street went out into the Vally of Kidron by the Water gate. And this way the Prieſt went out, that was to burn the Red Cow in Olivet. And this way our great High Prieſt entred with Palms and Hoſanna. This was called the Street of the Temple, Ezra. X. 9.

SECT. I.

A Sabbath days journey.

Ὅτε ἐγγίζουσιν εἰς Ἱερουσαλὴμ, εἰς Βηθφαγὴ, καὶ Βηθανίαν. As they came near to Jeruſalem, to Bethphage and Bethany. So alſo Luke: when according to the order of the ſtory; one would think it ſhould rather be ſaid, εἰς Βηθανίαν καὶ Βηθφαγή. To Bethany and Bethphage. For Chriſt in his travailing came to Bethany, and there lodged, Joh. XII. and from that City went forward by the ſpace almoſt of a mile, before he came as far as Bethphage. And yet it is named by them in this order, To Bethphage and Bethany; that it might be ſhewn that the ſtory is to be underſtood of the place where Bethany and Bethphage touch upon one another: Matthew therefore names Bethphage alone.

We have elſewhere ſhewn more at large theſe two things out of the Talmudiſts, which do not a little tend to the clearing of this matter.

I. That a Tract, or one part of Mount Olivet was called Bethany, not from the Town of that name, where Lazarus dwelt, but the Town was ſo called from that Tract; and that Tract from the Dates or Palm trees growing there בית חיני Beth Hene, The Pla e of Dates.

II. That there was no Town at all named Bethphage, but another Tract of Olivet was ſo called, for Green figs growing there; that is the meaning of בית פגי Beth-phagi, The place of Green figs; and that the Village, or outmoſt ſteeet of Jeruſalem, laying next it, was called by the ſame name.

We obſerved alſo that that place in mount Olivet, where theſe two Tracts Bethany and Bethphage touched on one another, was a Sabbath days journy from the City, or thereabouts. Which, how it may be applied to illuſtrate the preſent buſineſs, we are upon, let us ſay a few things concerning ſuch a journey.

How far the bounds of a Sabbath days journy reached, every one knows: and every one knows, that that ſpace was meaſured out every way without the Cities, that the certain bounds might be fixed, and that there might be no miſtake, and that by ſome evident mark, the limits might be known, that they might not remain doubtful, in a thing wherein they placed ſo much religion.

Theſe are the rules of the Maſters concerning meaſuring two thouſand Cubits from every ſide of the City.

[a] Maimon. in Sabb. cap. 28. a A City, which is long or ſquare, when it hath four juſt corners, they let be as it is, and they meaſure two thouſand cubits for it on every ſide. If it be round, they frame it into a ſquare, and they meaſure, from the ſides of that ſquare, If it be triangular, they frame it into a ſquare, and meaſure from the ſides of the ſquare, &c. And after, They meaſure only with a line of fifty cubits, and that of flax.

[b] Bitza, f. 36. 2. An intimation is given concerning the marks of thoſe bounds by that Canon. b They do not ride upon a beaſt (on the Sabbath, and on an holy day) that they go not forth beyond the bounds. Where the Gloſs is, Becauſe he that walketh not on foot אין רואה את סימני תחומין ſeeth not the marks of the bounds.

It

It is said by St. Mark, that the two Disciples sent by Christ, εὗρον τὸ πῶλον δεδεμένον ἐπὶ τῆς ἀμφόδου, found the colt tyed where two ways met. Let me pass my conjecture, that it was in such a place, where a mark was set up of a Sabbath days journey from the City; where the Sabbath way from the City, and the common way thence into the Country touched on one another.

SECT. II.

Shops in mount Olivet.

THE c shops of the children of Chanan, חניות בני חנן were layd wast three years, before the destruction of the Temple. d And why were the shops חניות של בית הינו of Beth Heno laid wast three years before the destruction of the Temple? Because they establisht their doings upon the words of the Law, &c. The Glos is, That which was forbidden by the words of the wise men, they found allowed by the words of the Law.

c Hieros. Berac. fol. 16. 1.
d Bab. Mezia, fol. 88. 1.

The story is the same in both places. In the former place the shopkeepers are named, in the latter, the place of the Shops. The Shopkeepers were בני חנן The Sons of Chanan or Jochanan (for in the Jerusalem Language Chanan and Jochanan are the same.) The place was בית הינו Beth Heno; which I fear not to assert to be the same with Bethany. The reason of my confidence is twofold. 1. Because the Talmudists call Bethany בית היני Beth Hene to which how near does Beth Heno come? 2. Because in them there is open mention of Shops in Mount Olivet.

There e were two Cedars, say they, in Mount Olivet: under one of them there were four Shops, where all things needful for purification were sold. From one of them they produced forty Seahs of Pigeons every month, whence women to be purified were supplyed. Four Shops were under one, and how many were there under another, whence so many Pigeons should come? Therefore either shew me some other Village between the Town of Bethany, and the first skirt of Bethphage, or else allow me to believe that this was that to which the two Disciples were sent, and which, then when they were sent was Κώμη ἡ κατέναντι ὑμῶν, The Village over against you: namely either a Village consisting of those various Shops only, or a Village, a part of which those Shops were.

e Hieros. Taan. fol. 69. 2.

SECT. III.

מרחץ בית הינו The Lavatory of Bethany.

PARDON the word, which I am forced to frame, lest if I had said The Bath, or the Laver, they might streighten the sense of the thing too much. That place whereof we are now speaking, was a Pool, or a Collection of waters, where people were wont to wash; and it agreeth very well with those things, that were spoken before concerning Purifications. Here either unclean men or unclean women might wash themselves; and presently buying in the neighbouring Shops what was needful for Purification, they betook themselves to Jerusalem, and were purified in the Temple.

Of this place of washing, whatsoever it was, the Gemarists speak in that story דרס שועל רחל במרחץ בית היני f A Fox rent a Sheep at the Lavatory of Beth Hene: and the cause was brought before the Wise men, and they said, אין דריסה It is not a rending. We doubt not that Beth Hene is Bethany: and this cause was brought thence before the Wise men of Jerusalem, that they might instruct them, whether it were lawful to eat of the carcas of that sheep, when the eating of a beast that was torn was forbidden. See if you please, their distinction between טריפה snatching away by a wild Beast, and דריסה Tearing, in the place cited, where they discuss it at large.

Travailers speak of a Cistern near the Town of Bethany, neer which in a field is shewn the place where Martha met our Lord coming to Bethany. They are the words of Borchard the Monk. Whether the thing it self agrees with this, whereof we are speaking, must be left uncertain.

SECT. IV.

Migal Eder. מגדל עדר

BY occasion of these places discovered to us by the Talmudists, I cannot but observe another also out of them, on another side of the City, not further distant from the City, than that whereof we now spake, if it were as far distant as that. That is Migdal Edar, or the Tower of the Flock, different from that mentioned, Gen. XXXV. 21. The Jerusalem Talmudists of this our place speak thus, g The Cattle which are found

found מירושלם ועד מגדל עדר From Jeruſalem as far as Migdal Eder on every ſide, &c. The Babylonian Writers more fully, h The Cattle which are found from Jeruſalem as far as Migdal Eder, and in the ſame ſpace on every ſide, being males are burnt offerings, females, are peace offerings.

h Bab. Kidd. fol. 55. 1.

In that place the Maſters are treating and diſputing, Whether it is lawful to eſpouſe a Woman, by ſome conſecrated thing given in pledg to aſſure the thing. And concerning Cattle, found between Jeruſalem and Migdal Eder, and the ſame ſpace every where about Jeruſalem, they conclude that they are to be reputed for conſecrated. Becauſe it may be ſuppoſed (as the Gloſs ſpeaks) that they were ſtrayed out of Jeruſalem; for very many Cattle going out thence were to be ſacrificed.

They have a tradition not unlike this, as we ſaid before, of mony found within Jeruſalem. i Monies which are found in Jeruſalem, before thoſe that buy Cattle, are always tithes, &c.

i Bava Metzia, fol. 26. 1.

But to our buſineſs. From the words alledged we infer, that there was a Tower or a place, by name Migdal Eder, but a very little ſpace from Jeruſalem, and that it was ſituate on the South ſide of the City. I ſay, A little ſpace from Jeruſalem: for it had been a burthen to the Inhabitants dwelling about the City, not to be born, if their Oxen, or ſmaller Cattle, upon any occaſion ſtraying away and taken in ſtray, ſhould immediately become conſecrated, and that the proper Owner ſhould no longer have any right in them. But this Tower ſeems to be ſituate ſo near the City, that there was no Town round about within that ſpace. We ſay alſo, that that Tower was on the South ſide of the City; and that upon the credit (ſhall I ſay?) or miſtake of the LXX Interpreters.

SECT. V.

The LXX Interpreters noted.

HERE, Reader, I will reſolve you a riddle in the LXX in Gen. XXXV. In Moſes the ſtory of Jacob in that place is thus. They went from Bethel; and when it was but a little ſpace to Ephratha, Rachel travailed, &c. And afterwards, Iſrael went on, and pitched his Tabernacle beyond the Tower Eder.

The LXX invert the order of the hiſtory, and they make the encamping of Jacob beyond Migdal Eder to be before his coming to the place where Rachel dyed. For thus they write: Ἀπάρας δὲ Ἰακὼβ ἐκ Βαιθὴλ, ἔπηξε τὴν σκηνὴν αὐτοῦ ἐπέκεινα τοῦ πύργου Γαδέρ. Ἐγένετο δὲ ἡνίκα ἤγγισεν εἰς Χαβρααθὰ τοῦ ἐλθεῖν εἰς τὴν Ἐφραθᾶ, ἔτεκε Ῥαχήλ, &c. And Jacob departing from Bethel, pitched his tent over againſt the Tower Gader. And it came to paſs, when he approached to Chabratha to come to Ephratha, Rachel travailed, &c.

I ſuſpect, unleſs I fail in my conjecture, that they inverted the order of the hiſtory, fixing their eyes upon that Migdal Eder, which was very near Jeruſalem. For when Jacob travailed from Bethel, to the place of Rachels Sepulchre, that Tower was firſt to be paſſed by, before one could come to the place; and when Jacob in his journey travailed Southward, it is very probable that Tower was on that quarter of the City.

There was indeed a Migdal Eder near Bethlehem, and this was near Jeruſalem; and perhaps there were more places of that name in the Land of Iſrael. For as that word denotes, The Tower of a Flock, ſo thoſe Towers ſeem to have been built for the keeping of Flocks; that Shepherds might be there ready alſo anights; and that they might have weapons in a readineſs, to defend their Flocks, not only from wild beaſts, but from robbers alſo. And to this ſenſe we ſuppoſe that expreſſion, מגדל נוצרים The Tower of the Keepers, is to be taken in that ſaying, ממגדל נוצרים עד עיר מבצר From the Tower of the Keepers to the ſtrong City, 2 King. XVII. 9. & XVIII. 8.

Hence the Targumiſt Jonathan, to diſtinguiſh Migdal Eder of Bethlehem from all others, thus paraphraſeth Moſes words. And Iſrael went forward, and pitched his Tabernacle beyond Migdal Eder, the place whence the Meſſias is to be revealed in the end of days. Which very well agree with the hiſtory, Luke II. 8. Whether Micha, Chap. IV. 8. ſpeak of the ſame, enquire.

SECT. VI.

The Pomp of thoſe that offered the firſt fruits.

WE have ſpoken of the places neareſt the City, the mention of them taking its riſe from the Triumph of Chriſt ſitting upon the Aſs, and the people making their acclamations: and this awakens the remembrance of that Pomp, which accompained the bringing of the firſt fruits, from places alſo near the City. Take it in the words of the Maſters in the place cited in the Margin.

After

After l what manner did they bring their first fruits? All the Cities שבמעמד which were of one station (that is, out of which one Course of Priests proceeded) were gathered together into a stationary City, and lodged in the Streets. In the morning he who was the first among them, said, Arise, Let us go up to Zion, to the house of the Lord our God. l Bicurim, c. 3.

An Ox went before them, with gilded horns, and an Olive crown upon his head, (The Gloss is, That Ox was for a Peace-offering) and the Pipe played before them, until they approached near to Jerusalem. When then they came to Jerusalem, they crowned their first fruits, (that is, they exposed them to sight in as much glory as they could) and the chief men, and the high Officers, and Treasurers of the Temple came to meet them, and that to do the more honour to them, that were coming; וכל בעלי אומניות And all the workmen in Jerusalem rose up to them (as they were in their shops) and saluted them in this manner, O our brethren, Inhabitants of the City N. ye are welcome.

The Pipe played before them till they came to the Mount of the Temple: When they came to the Mount of the Temple אפי אגריפס המלך Even King Agrippa himself, took the basket upon his shoulder, and went forward, till he came to the Court, the Levites sung, I will exalt thee, O Lord, because thou hast exalted me, and hast not made mine enemies to rejoyce over me (Psal. XXX. 1.) While the basket is yet upon his shoulder, he recites that passage, (Deut. XXVI. 3.) I profess this day to the Lord my God, &c. R. Judah saith, when he recites these words, A Syrian ready to perish was my Father, &c. vers. 5. he casts down the basket from his shoulders, and holds his lips, while the Priest waves it hither and thither. The whole passage being recited to vers. 10. he placeth the basket before the Altar, and adores, and goes out.

Matth. XV. 39. Ἦλθεν εἰς τὰ ὅρια Μαγδαλά. And came to the coasts of Magdala. Mark VIII. 10. Ἦλθεν εἰς τὰ μέρη Δαλμανουθά. Came into the parts of Dalmanutha.

The story is one and the same; and that Country is one and the same: but the names Magdala and Dalmanutha are not so to be confounded, as if the City Magdala was also called Dalmanutha, but Dalmanutha is to be supposed to be some particular place within the bounds of Magdala. I observe the Arabick Interpreter in the London Polyglot Bible, for Dalmanutha in Mark, reads Magdala, as it is in Matthew; in no false sense, but in no true interpretation. But the Arabick of Erpenius his edition reads Dalmanutha. Erasmus notes, saith Beza upon the place, that a certain Greek Copy hath Magdala. And Augustin writes that most Copies have Mageda. But in our very old Copy, and in another besides, for εἰς τὰ μέρη Δαλμανουθά Into the parts of Dalmanutha, is written εἰς τὰ ὅρια Μαδηγαδά. Into the Coasts of Madegada.

If the name and situation of Magdala in the Talmudists, had been known to these Interpreters, I scarcely think they would have dashed upon so many uncertainties. We have largely and plainly treated of it in another Volume, out of those Authors: and out of the same, unless I mistake, something may be fetched, which may afford light to Mark's Text of Dalmanutha. Which thing before we take in hand, perhaps it will not be unacceptable to the Reader, if we describe the Sea of Genesaret, and the places adjoyning, by some kind of delineation, according to their situation, which we take up from the Hebrew Writers.

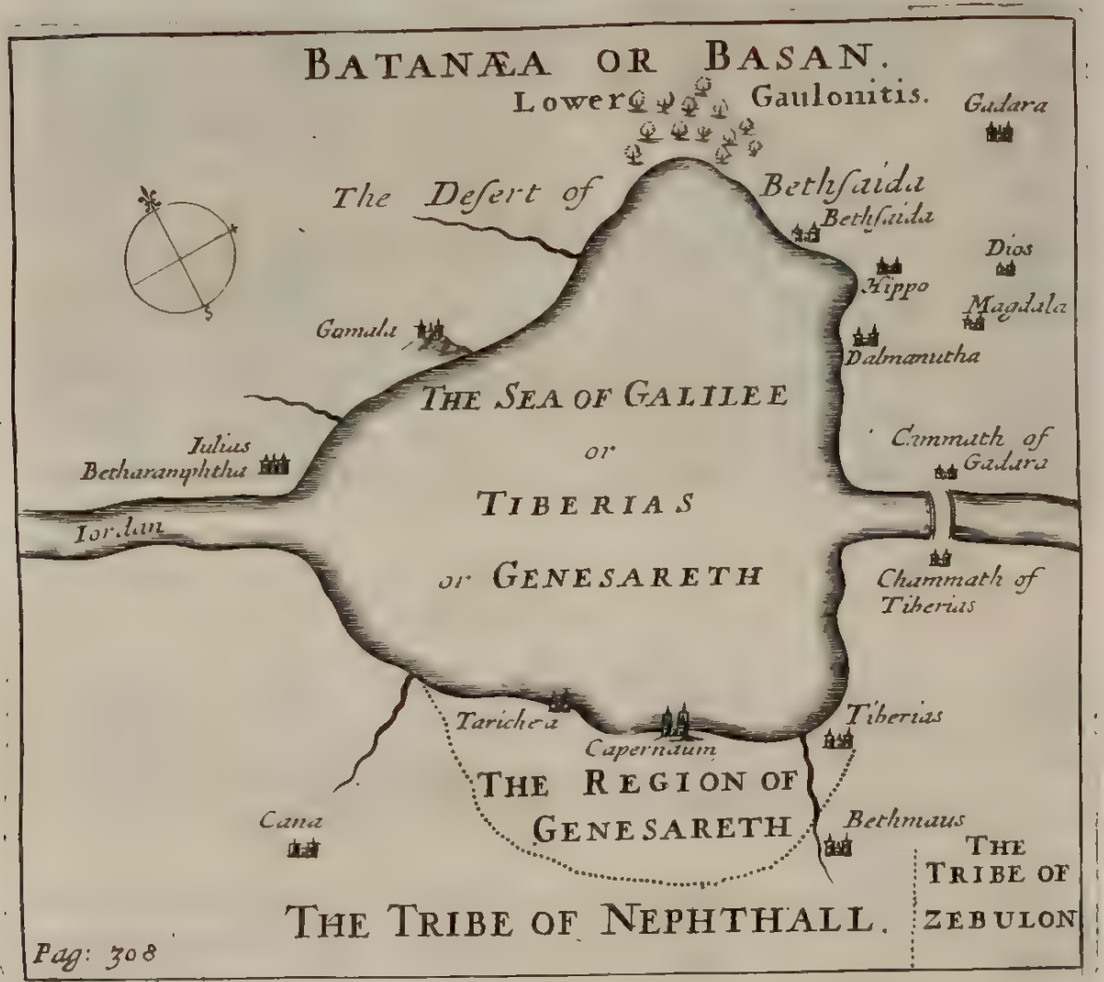
SECT. I.

A Scheme of the Sea of Geneſaret, and the places adjacent.



COmparing this my little Map with others, ſince you ſee it to differ ſo much from them, you will expect, that I ſufficiently prove and illuſtrate the ſituation of the places, or I ſhall come off with ſhame. I did that, if my opinion deceive me not, a good while ago in ſome Chapters in the Chorographical Century. I will here diſpatch the ſum total in a few lines.

a Megill. fol. 6. 1 Hieroſ. Erub. fol. 23. 4. Id. Kidduſh. fol. 64. 3. Id. Shevuith, fol. 36. 3.

I. a Chammath was ſo called becauſe of the warm baths of Tiberias: from which it was ſo very little diſtant, that as to a Sabbath days journey the men of Tiberias, and the men of Chammath might make but one City.

It is called חמתא גדר Chammath of Gadara, not only to diſtinguiſh it from חמת רפחל Chammath of Pella, that is, Callirrhoe; but becauſe a part of it was built upon the bank of Gadara, and another part upon the bank of Nephthali, or Tiberias, the bridge lying between: which ſhall be ſhewn preſently.

Capernaum we place within the Country of Geneſaret upon the Credit of the Evangeliſts, Matth. XIV. 34. and Mark VI. 53. compared with Joh. VI. 22, 24.

c Joſeph. in his own life.

c Taricha was diſtant from Tiberias thirty furlongs: Bethmaus four furlongs.

d Hieroſ. in Erubb. in the place above.

Magdala was beyond Jordan; for it is called מגדל גדר Magdala of Gadara: and that which is ſaid by the Talmudiſts, d The Gadarens might, by the permiſſion of R. Juda Naſi, come down to Chammath on the Sabbath, and walk through it, unto the furtheſt ſtreet, even to the bridge; is expreſſed and expounded by them in the ſame place, That the people of Magdala, by the permiſſion of R. Juda Naſi, went up to Chammath, &c. From which ſingle tradition one may infer, 1. That Magdala was on the bank of Gadara. 2. That it was not diſtant from Chammath above a Sabbath days journey. 3. That it was on that ſide of Chammath, which was built on the ſame bank of Gadara, by which it reached to the bridge above Jordan, which joyned it to the other ſide on the bank of Galilee.

e Hippo was diſtant from Tiberias thirty furlongs. With which meaſure compare theſe words, which are ſpoken of Suſitha; which that it was the ſame with Hippo, both the derivation of the words, and other things do evince.

i Bethſaida was in τῇ κάτω Γαυλανίτιδι lower Gaulanitis, beyond Jordan in Batanea. It is ſhewn to Pilgrims on the ſhore of the Sea of Geneſaret in Galilee; and thence the error of the Maps was taken. Hear our Countryman Biddulph, who ſaw thoſe places about the year MDC.

i Id. de bell. lib. 2. cap. 13.

March the twenty fourth we rode by the Sea of Galilee, which hath two names, Joh. VI. 1. The Sea of Galilee and Tiberias of Galilee, becauſe it is in Galilee; and of Tiberias, becauſe the City of Tiberias was built near it: alſo Bethſaide, another antient City. We ſaw ſome ruines of the Walls of both. But it is ſaid in that Chapter, Joh. VI. 1. That Jeſus ſailed over the Sea of Galilee. And elſewhere, that he went over the Lake; and Luke IX. 10. it is ſaid, that he departed into a deſert place near the City Bethſaida. Which Text of John, I learned better to underſtand by ſeeing, than ever I could by reading. For when Tiberias and Bethſaida were both on the ſame ſhore of the Sea, and Chriſt went from Tiberias, to, or near Bethſaida: hence I gather that our Saviour Chriſt, ſailed not over the length, or bredth of the Sea, but that he paſſed ſome bay, as much as Tiberias was diſtant from Bethſaida. Which is proved thence, in that it is ſaid elſewhere, That a great multitude followed him thither on foot; which they could not do, if he had ſailed over the whole Sea to that ſhore among the Gergaſens, which is without the Holy Land. Theſe are his words.

But take heed, Sir, that your Guids, who ſhew thoſe places under thoſe names, do not impoſe upon you. If you will take Joſephus for a Guid, he will teach, That l Philip repaired the Town Bethſaida, and he called it Julias, from Julias the Daughter of Ceſar. And, That m that Julias was Ἐν τῇ κάτω Γαυλανίτιδι, In lower Gaulanitis. Nor is the argument good, Otherwiſe they could not follow him a foot: for from Capernaum and Tiberias, there was a very beaten, and common way by the bridge of Chammath into the Country of the Gadarens, and ſo to Bethſaida.

m Id. in the place above.

Cana was a great way diſtant from Tiberias: n Joſephus ſpent a whole night travailing from this Town to that with his Army. It was ſituate againſt Julias of Betharamptha, as may be gathered from the ſame Author in the place quoted in the margin o. Now that Julias was ſituate at the very influx of Jordan into the Sea of Geneſaret.

n In his own life, p. 631.

o Ibid. p. 653.

Theſe things might be more largely explained and illuſtrated, but we are affraid of being too long; and ſo much the more, becauſe we have treated copiouſly of them elſewhere. This will be enough to an unbiaſſed Reader, to whoſe judgment we leave it: and now go on to Dalmanutha.

SECT. II.

IF we may play a little with the name Dalmanutha, hear a Talmudical Tradition. p He that ſells a Farm to his neighbour, or that receives a place from his neighbour, לעשות לו בית חתנות לבנו ובית אלמנות לבתו to make him a houſe of betrothing for his ſon, or a houſe of widowhood for his daughter; let him build it four cubits this way, and ſix that. Where the Gloſs, בית אלמנות לבתו An houſe of widowhood for his daughter, whoſe husband is dead, and ſhe now returns to the houſe of her father.

p Bava bathra, fol. 98. 2.

The meaning of this Tradition is, When the ſon of any one had married a wife, he did not uſe to dwell with his father in Law; but it was more cuſtomary, for his Father to build him a little houſe near his own houſe. So alſo when the husband was dead, and the daughter now being a widow returned to her father, it was alſo cuſtomary for the father to build her a little houſe; in which ſhe dwelt indeed alone, but very near her father.

But now from ſome ſuch houſe of more note than ordinary, built for ſome eminent widow; or from many ſuch houſes ſtanding thick together, this place perhaps might be called דאלמנותא Dalmanutha, that is, The place of widowhood. And if ſome more probable derivation of the name occurred not, it might not without reaſon have had reſpect to this.

But we ſuppoſe the name is derived elſewhere; namely, from צלמון Zalmon, צ Tſaddi being changed into ד Daleth; which is no ſtrange thing to the Syrians and Arabians.

Of

Of Zalmon we meet with mention, Judg. IX. 48. namely, a Mountain, or ſome tract in a Mountain, near Sychem: but that place is a very great way off of that, concerning which we are now treating. But the Talmudiſts mention a place called Zalmon, which agrees excellently well with Dalmanutha. q "There is a ſtory, ſay they, of a certain man "in Zalmon, who ſaid, I N. the ſon of N. am bitten by a Serpent, and behold I die. "They went away, and found him not: they went away therefore, and married his "wife. The Gloſs is, They heard the voice of him crying, and ſaying, Behold, I die, "but they found not ſuch a man in Zalmon. And again, r There is a ſtory in Zalmon of "a certain man, who planted his Vineyard ſixteen and ſixteen cubits; and a gate of two "ranks of Vines: now he turned on this ſide, and the year following on the other, and "plowed on both ſides. And the cauſe was brought before the wiſe Men, and they ap- "proved of it.

r Kilaim, cap. 4 hal. 9. Bava Bathra, fol. 82. 2.

None will ſuſpect this Zalmon to be the ſame with that near Sichem, when it is ſaid that they brought the cauſe before the wiſe Men; for what had the Samaritans to do with the wiſe Men of the Jews? One might rather believe it to be ſome place near to Tiberias (where was an Univerſity of wiſe Men) well known, and commonly ſpoke of, and mentioned in the Traditions cited, as a place ſo known. So divers places about Tiberias are mentioned by the Talmudiſts, as well known, which you will ſcarce find any where but in the books of the Talmudiſts. Such are Chammath, Magdila, Beth Meon, Paltathan, Caphar Chittaia, &c. Concerning which we have ſpoken in another place. There was alſo מוגה Mizgah, s The ſeat of Simeon ben Lachiſh; and איליטים דטבריא t It is of Tiberias, a place near Tiberias, of an unwholſom air; and בוטיטה דטבריא u The Cave of Tiberias; and בר סליני Bar Selene, and others, which are no where mentioned, but in theſe Authors; but in them of very noted name. Of this number we ſuppoſe this Zalmon was, a place ſo near to Tiberias, and ſo known, that it was enough to name it only. But now when any that ſpake Hebrew would pronounce it Zalman, and Zalmanutha, he that ſpake Syriack would pronounce it Dalmon and Dalmanutha.

SECT. I.

The Maps too officious.

YOU will ſee in ſome Maps, the Syrophenician woman pictured making her ſupplication to our Saviour for her poſſeſſed daughter, almoſt at the Gates of Sidon. But by what right, I fear the Authors will not tell me with ſolidity enough.

In one of Adrichomius's, the woman is pictured and no inſcription added: but in the Dutch one of Doet, ſhe is pictured with this Inſcription, Hier badt de Cananeiſche Vrou voor ſiine dochter, Here the Canaanitiſh Woman prayed for her daughter, Matth. XV. In that of Geilkirch, with theſe words written at it, Porta Sidonis, ante quam mulier Canaanæa filiæ ſuæ Dæmoniacæ a Domino ſalutem obtinuit: The Gate of Sidon, before which the Canaanitiſh Woman obtained health for her daughter poſſeſſed with a Devil, Matth. XV.

Before the gate of Sidon (ſaith Borchard the Monk) Eaſtward, there is a Chappel built in the place, where the Canaanitiſh Woman prayed our Saviour for her Demoniacal daughter: concerning whom we read thus, Matth. XV. that going out of the coaſts of Tyre and Sidon, ſhe came to Jeſus.

There are two things, which plainly diſagree with that ſituation, and opinion.

I. That it is not credible, that Chriſt ever paſſed the bounds of the Land of Iſrael. For when he ſaid of himſelf, I am not ſent but to the loſt ſheep of Iſrael only: and to his Diſciples, Go not into the way of the Gentiles: and, If theſe wonderful works had been done in Tyre and Sidon; you will never perſwade me, that he ever went as far as the gates of Sidon.

in

II. It is ſaid by S. Mark, that after that Maid was healed, Chriſt came from the coaſt of Tyre and Sidon to the Sea of Galilee, through the middle of the coaſts of Decapolis. What? From the gate of Sidon to the Sea of Galilee through the midſt of Decapolis? It would have been more properly ſaid, Through the midſt of Galilee: and hence, as it ſeems, ſome have been moved to place Decapolis within Galilee, with no reaſon at all. We ſhall meet with it in another place, in the following Chapter, and in ſuch a place, that it is not eaſie to conceive how Chriſt could paſs through it from the Gate of Sidon to the Sea of Galilee.

SECT. II.

כבול Ὅριον, A Coaſt.

TO determine concerning ἐφίοις Τύρου καὶ Σιδῶνος the coaſts of Tyre and Sidon in this ſtory, we firſt propound this to the Reader. It is ſaid 1 King. IX. 11, 12. That Solomon gave to Chiram the King of the Tyrians twenty Cities in Galilee: which when he had ſeen, and liked them not, he called the Land כבול Chabul unto this day. The LXX render it, Ἐκάλεσεν αὐτὰς Ὅριον. He called them the border, or coaſt. Now let any one, I beſeech you, ſkilled in the Tongues, tell me what kin there is between כבול and Ὅριον A bound, or coaſt, that moved the LXX ſo to render it.

The Talmudiſts ſpeak various things of the word כבול Chabul: but the ſenſe and ſignification of the word Ὅριον, A coaſt, is very far diſtant from their meaning. The Jeruſalem Talmudiſts ſpeak thus, כבול ארץ שאינה עושה פירות a Chabul ſignifies a Land, which bears not fruit: The Babylonian thus; b What is the meaning of the Land Chabul? Rabh Honna ſaith, Becauſe its Inhabitants מכובלין בכסף ובזהב were wrapped up in ſilver and gold. Abba ſaith to him, Is it ſo? Behold it is written, That the Cities pleaſed him not. Should they diſpleaſe him, becauſe they were wrapped up in ſilver and gold? He ſaith to him, Yea, becauſe they were wealthy and delicate, they were not fit for the Kings works. Rabh Nachman bar Iſaac ſaith חומטון היתה It was a ſalt Land, and gaping with clefts. Why is it called Chabul? דמשתגדא בה כרעה עד כבלא Becauſe the Leg is plunged in it up to the garters. Joſephus thus, Ἔκλοτε προσηγορεύθη χαβαλῶν γῆ· Μεθερμηνεύομενον δὲ τὸ χαβαλῶν, κατὰ Φοινίκων γλῶτταν, οὐκ ἀρέσιον σημαίνει. Outwards they called it the Land of Chabul: for this word Chabul being interpreted ſignifies in the Phenician Tongue, that which pleaſeth not.

a Hieroſ. Schab. fol. 7.

b Bab. Schabb. fol. 54. 1.

Theſe things they ſpeak, tracing the ſenſe of the word, as well as they can; but of the ſenſe of ὅριον a bound, or coaſt, they did not ſo much as dream.

I cannot paſs away without taking notice of the Gloſſer at the place, cited out of the Babylonian Talmudiſts, having theſe words; בעשרים ושתים עיר יכו' The Text alledged ſpeaks of twenty two Cities, which Solomon gave to Chiram: he reckons two and twenty, when in the Hebrew Original and in all Verſions, twenty Cities only are mentioned. Whether it be a failing of the memory, or whether he ſpeaks it on purpoſe, who is able to define? Much leſs are thoſe words of the Holy Ghoſt to be paſſed over, 2 Chron. VIII. 2. והערים אשר נתן חורם לשלמה בנה שלמה אותם The Grammatical interpretation is very eaſie, And the Cities which Churam gave to Solomon, Solomon built them: but the hiſtorical interpretation is not ſo eaſie. For it is demanded, Whether did Chiram give thoſe Cities of his own; or did he reſtore them, which Solomon gave to him, when they pleaſed him not? And there are ſome Verſions, which render the word נתן not, he gave, but he reſtored, or gave back again; and in this ſenſe, Solomon built the Cities, which Chiram had reſtored back to Solomon. As if Hiram would not keep thoſe twenty Cities in the Land Chabul, becauſe they diſpleaſed him, but reſtored them back to Solomon in ſome indignation.

Kimchi on the place more rightly, It is very well expounded, that Hiram gave Cities to Solomon in his own Land; and he placed Iſraelites there to ſtrengthen himſelf. And he in like manner gave Cities to Hiram in Galilee; and that to ſtrengthen the league between them. In the book of the Kings it is recorded, what Solomon gave to Hiram; and in this (of the Chronicles) what Hiram gave to Solomon. Moſt true indeed: for that Hiram gave to Solomon ſome Cities in his juriſdiction, appears beyond all controverſie from thence, that Solomon is ſaid to build Tadmor in the wilderneſs, 1 King. IX. 18. But what is that place Tadmor? Joſephus will teach us: Θαδαμόραν Ἕλληνες προσαγορεύουσι Παλμυρᾶν· c Thadamor, ſaith he, the Greeks call Palmyra. And the Vulgar Interpreters read, He built Palmira. Therefore we muſt by no means think, that Hiram rejected the Cities that were given him by Solomon, however they pleaſed him not; but kept them for his own, which Solomon alſo did with them, which Hiram gave to him.

c Joſ. Antiq. lib. 8. cap. 2.

But

But whence ſhould the Greek Interpreters render that place called כבול Chabul by Ὅριον, a coaſt, when there is no affinity at all between the ſignifications of the words?

SECT. III.

The Greek Interpreters noted.

THE Greek Interpreters are not ſeldom wont to render the names of places, not by that name as they are called in the Hebrew Text, but as they were called in after times under the ſecond Temple: which is alſo done often by the Chaldee Targumiſts. Of this ſort are Καππάδοκες Cappadocians, for Caphtorim: Ῥινοκόρουρα, Rhinocorura for the River of Egypt: of which we have ſpoke before; and among very many examples which might be produced, let us compare one place out of the Talmudiſts with them.

The Jeruſalem Talmudiſts, calling ſome Cities, mentioned Joſ. XIX. both by their antient and preſent names, ſpeak thus at verſ. 15.

: קטת קטונית d Kattath is Katonith. The LXX render it Κατανάθ. Katanath.
: נהלל מהלול Nahalal is Mahalol.
: שמרון סימוניה Shimron is Simonia. The LXX render it Συμεών. Symoon.
: יראלה חירייה Irala is Chiriah. The LXX render it Ἰεριχώ. Jericho.

He that obſerves ſhall meet with very many ſuch. And from this very thing you may perhaps ſuſpect, that that Verſion favours not of the Antiquity of the times of Ptolomeus Philadelphius.

The ſame that they are wont to do elſewhere, we ſuppoſe, is done by them here; and rejecting the former name whereby that Region of Galilee was called in the more antient ages, namely Chabul, they gave it the name and title, whereby it now ordinarily went, that is Ὅριον, The bound, or, the Coaſt.

תחום I ſuſpect, denotes the very ſame thing, in that Tradition in the Jeruſalem Writers; אילו עירות אסורות בתחום  Thoſe Cities are forbidden* ἐν τῷ ὁρίῳ, in the border, or coaſt, Tſur, Shezeth, and Bezeth, &c. and thoſe Cities שהן מותרות בתחום are permitted, ἐν τῷ ὁρίῳ, in the border, or coaſt, Nebi, Tſur, Tſiar, &c. The permiſſion, or prohibition here ſpoke of, as much as we may by gueſs, fetch from the ſcope of the place, is in reſpect of tithing; and the determination is, from which of thoſe Cities tithes were to be required and taken, and from which not. They were to be required of the Iſraelites, not from the Heathen: which thing agrees very well with the Land of Chabul, where Cities of this and that juriſdiction ſeem to have been mixed, and as it were interwoven.

SECT. IV.

Midland Phenicia.

THERE was a Midland Phenicia, as well as a Phenicia on the Sea coaſt. That on the Sea coaſt all know; of the Midland thus Ptolomy. Φοινίκης μεσόγειοι πόλεις e Tabb. Aſiæ, p. 139.

Ἄρκα, &c. The e midland Cities of Phenicia are Arca, Paleobiblus, Gabala, Ceſarea of Paneas.

Whether Midland Phenicia, and Syrophenicia be to be reckoned all one, I am in doubt. I had rather divide Phenicia into three parts, namely, into Phenicia on the Sea coaſt, Midland Phenicia, and Syrophenicia. And the reaſon is, becauſe I aſk whether all Midland Phenicia might be called Syrophenicſſian: and I aſk moreover, whether all Syrophenicia were to be reckoned within the bounds of Tyre and Sidon. Certainly Nicetas Choniates mentions the Syrophenicſſian Cities, as far as Antioch. For he in the ſtory of John Comnenus, hath theſe words, Ἔγνω προσδέχεσθαι τὰς πρὸς τὴν Ἀντιόχειαν ἱδρυμένας, καὶ Ἀγαρηνῶν κατεχομένας Συροφοινίσσας πόλεις. He reſolved to ſet upon the Syrophenicſſian Cities bordering upon Antioch, which were poſſeſſed by the Agarens. But now will you reckon thoſe Cities as far as Antioch to be within the juriſdiction of Tyre and Sidon? But certainly there is nothing hinders, but you may reckon thoſe to be ſo, which Ptolomey eſteems to belong to Midland Phenicia, only the ſcruple is about Ceſarea of Paneas, which is Ceſarea Philippi: and that we ſhall ſee, belonged to the Decapolitan Cities, and may be determined without any abſurdity to be within that juriſdiction of Tyre and Sidon, as alſo Leſhem of old, which was the ſame City, Judg. XVIII. 28.

Let one clauſe of the Talmudiſts be added, and then thoſe things which are ſpoken may be reduced into a narrower compaſs. They, reducing the bounds of the Land under the ſecond Temple, fix for a bound תרנגולא עילאה דלמעלה מן קיסרין ſ Tarnegola the Upper which is above Ceſarea. Obſerve that Ceſarea is a City of Midland Phenicia according to Ptolomey; and yet Tarnegola which bends more Northward is within the Land of Iſrael according to the Hebrews.

ſ Hieroſ. Shevith, fol. 36. 3.

So

So that in this ſenſe, Chriſt might be within the coaſts of Tyre and Sidon, and yet be within the limits of the Land of Iſrael. We muſt therefore ſuppoſe, and that not without reaſon, that he when he healed the poſſeſſed Maid was, 1. In that Country, in the outermoſt coaſts of Galilee, which formerly was called Chabul, in the Seventy called Ὅριον, The coaſt; in the Talmudiſts תחום The border; which antiently was given by Solomon to the King of Tyre; and from that grant in the following ages it belonged to the right and juriſdiction of Tyre and Sidon; however it were within thoſe boundaries, wherein the Land of Iſrael was circumſcribed from the beginning; yea wherein it was circumſcribed under the ſecond Temple. 2. We ſuppoſe him to have been not far from the ſprings or ſtream of Jordan, which being paſſed over he could not come to the Sea of Galilee, but by the Country of Decapolis.

SECT. V.

Of the Sabbatic River.

WHEN we are ſpeaking of Syro-Phenicia, we are not far off from a place, where the Sabbatic River either was, or was feigned to be: and I hope the Reader will pardon me, if I now wander a little out of my bounds, going to ſee a River that kept the Sabbath: for who would not go out of his way to ſee ſo aſtoniſhing a thing?

And yet if we believe Pliny, we are not without our bounds, for he fixeth this River within Judea. g In Judea, ſaith he, a River every Sabbath day is dry. Joſephus otherwiſe, h Titus, ſaith he, (going to Antioch) ſaw in the way a River very well worthy to be taken notice of, between the Cities of Arca and Raphana, Cities of the Kingdom of Agrippa. Now it hath a peculiar nature. For when it is of that nature, that it flows freely, and does not ſluggiſhly glide away; yet it wholly fails from its ſprings for ſix days, and the place of it appears dry. And then, as if no change at all were made, on the ſeventh day the like River ariſeth. And it is by certain experience found that it always keeps this order. Whence it is called the Sabbatic River, from the holy Seventh day of the Jews.

g Nat. Hiſt. lib. 31. cap. 2.
h Joſ. de bell. lib. 7. cap. 13.

Whether of the two do you believe, Reader? Pliny ſaith, That River is in Judea: Joſephus ſaith, No. Pliny ſaith, It is dry on Sabbath days: Joſephus ſaith, It flows then. The Talmudiſts agree with Pliny, and Joſephus agrees not with his own Country men.

In the Babylonian Tract Sanhedrin, Turnus Rufus is brought in, aſking this of R. Akibah, מי ימר האידנא שבתא i Who will prove that this is the Sabbath day? (The Gloſs, For perhaps one of the other days is the Sabbath) R. Akibah anſwered, נהר סבטיון יוכיח The Sabbatic River will prove this. בעל אוב יוכיח He that hath a Python, or, a familiar ſpirit will prove this. וקברו של אביו יוכיח And the Sepulchre of his father will prove this. The Gloſs writes thus: The Sabbatic River will prove this. That is a rocky River, which flows and glides all the days of the week, but ceaſeth and reſteth on the Sabbath. He that hath a Python, or, a familiar ſpirit will prove this. For a Python aſcendeth not on the Sabbath day. And the Sepulchre of Turnus Rufus all the days of the year ſent forth a ſmoke; becauſe he was judged and delivered to fire. But Tranſgreſſors in Hell reſt on the Sabbath day. Therefore his Sepulchre ſent not forth a ſmoke on the Sabbath day.

i Fol. 56. 2.

Do you not ſuſpect, Reader, whence and wherefore this fable was invented? Namely, when the brightneſs of the Chriſtian Sabbath was now riſen, and encreaſed every day, they had recourſe to theſe Monſters either of Magick, or of Fables, whereby the glory of our Sabbath might be obſcured, and that of the Jews exalted. The various, and indeed contrary relations of Hiſtorians, bring the truth of the ſtory into ſuſpicion.

CHAP. VII.

The Region of Decapolis, What? Mark VII. 30.

I. Illy placed by ſome. II. Scythopolis, heretofore ביתשאן Bethſhean, one of thoſe Decapolitan Cities. III. Alſo Gadara, and Hippo. IV. And Pella. V. Caphar Tſemach, Beth Gubrin. Caphar Carnaim. VI. Ceſarea Philippi. VII. The City ערבו Orbo.

SECTION I.

The Region of Decapolis not well placed by ſome.

WE meet with frequent mention of Decapolis in the Evangeliſts, as alſo in forreign Authors; but no where in a more difficult ſenſe than in thoſe words of St. Mark, Chap. VII. where it is thus ſpoken of Chriſt; Καὶ πάλιν ἐξελθὼν ἐκ τῶν ὁρίων Τύρου καὶ Σιδῶνος, ἦλθε πρὸς τὴν θάλασσαν τῆς Γαλιλαίας, ἀνὰ μέσον τῶν ὁρίων Δεκαπόλεως· And again departing from the coaſts of Tyre and Sidon, he came to the Sea of Galilee through the midſt of the coaſts of Decapolis. The difficulty lies in this, that ſuppoſing by the coaſts of Tyre and Sidon, a place near the gates of Sidon is to be underſtood, of which before, it can ſcarcely be conceived how Chriſt went through the middle of Decapolis to the Sea of Galilee, unleſs it be ſuppoſed, that Decapolis was within Galilee.

Hence a Borchard certainly, and others that follow him, ſeem to be induced, to number theſe Towns of Galilee for Decapolitan Towns; Tiberias, Sephet, Kedeſh Naphtali, Hazor, Capernaum, Ceſarea Philippi, Jetopata, Bethſaida, Chorazin, Scythopolis. Upon whoſe credit Baronius writes thus: b "The Province of Decapolis, ſaith he, was placed in "the ſame Galilee; ſo called becauſe there were ten Cities in it, among which one was "reckoned Capernaum. Confidently enough indeed, but without any ground. Pliny much otherwiſe. "There is joyned to it, ſaith he, on the ſide of Syria the Region of "Decapolis, from the number of the Towns, in which Region all do not keep the ſame "Towns. Yet moſt do. Damaſcus and Opoto watered with the River Chryſorrhoa, fruit-"ful Philadelphia, Raphana, all lying backwards towards Arabia: Scythopolis, (hereto-"fore called Nyſa from Father Bacchus, his Nurſe being there buried,) from Scythians "drawn down, (and planted) there: Gaddara, (the River) Hieromiax gliding by it, "and that which is now called Hippo, Dio, Pella rich in waters, Galaſa, Canatha. The "Tetrarchies run between theſe Cities, and compaſs them about, which are like to King-"doms, and are divided into Kingdoms, namely, Trachonitis, Puneas, in which is Ceſarea, "with the Fountain before ſpoke of, Abila, Arca, Ampeloeſſa.

a Borchard. cap. 6. §. 6. Saligniac. Tom. 9. cap. 1.

b Ad annum Chriſti 31.

Whom ſhould we believe? Borchard and his followers place all Decapolis within Galilee, being extended the whole length of Galilee, and adjacent to Jordan, and on the ſhore of the Sea of Geneſaret. Pliny and his followers, place it all in the Country beyond Jordan, except only Scythopolis.

In Scythopolis both parties agree, and I in this with both: but in others I agree with Borchardus hardly in any, and not with Pliny in all. In them, it is abſurd, to reckon the moſt famed Cities of Galilee for Cities of Decapolis, when both in ſacred and prophane Authors, Galilee is plainly diſtinguiſhed from Decapolis. In Pliny, it ſeems an unequal match to joyn Damaſcus and Philadelphia, formerly the two Metropoles of Syria and the Kingdom of Ammon, with the ſmall Cities of Gadara and Hippo.

With Pliny and his followers, Joſephus alſo conſents, in reckoning up ſome Cities of Decapolis. For ſeverely chiding Juſtus of Tiberias, he has theſe words: Σὺ δὲ οὐ πάντες Τιβεριεῖς ὁμοῦ μόνον ἀνειλήφατε τὰ ὅπλα, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὰς ἐν τῇ Συρίᾳ Δεκαπόλεως ἐπολεμεῖτε. c "You alſo and all the men of Tiberias, have not only taken up arms, but have fought againſt "the Cities of Decapolis in Syria. Obſerve that, The Cities of Decapolis ἐν Συρίᾳ in Syria, not in Galilee. Σὺ γὰρ τὰς κώμας αὐτῶν ἐνέπρησας· "Thou haſt ſet their Cities on fire." And a little after; After that Veſpaſian was come to Ptolemais, οἱ πρῶτοι τῶν τῆς Συρίας δέκα πόλεων, "The chief men of Decapolis of Syria ſharply accuſed Juſtus of Tiberias, ὅτι τὰς κώμας αὐτῶν ἐνέπρησεν, "that he had fired their Towns." But what thoſe Towns of Decapolis were were, he hints elſwehere in theſe words: [d] Then Juſtus perſwading his fellow citizens to take arms and compelling thoſe that would not, and going forth with all theſe, ἐμπίμπρησι τὰς τε Γαδαρέων καὶ Ἱππηνῶν κώμας, he fires the Villages of the Gadarens and the Hippens.

[d] Ib. pag. 618.

You ſee how with Pliny Joſephus joyns the Region of Decapolis to the ſide of Syria, and how he reckons Gadara and Hippo for Decapolitan towns with him. And yet as we ſaid, Pliny doth not pleaſe us in all: but that which in him might ſeem moſt ridiculous and abſurd, namely, that he reckons Scythpolis, which is beyond Jordan, with the other Cities, pleaſeth me moſt of all. For from that very City we are certified what were the other Cities, and why they were of ſuch ſingular name and note: having firſt taken notice of the condition of Scythopolis, it will be more eaſie to judg of the reſt.

SECT. II.

THE Talmudiſts very frequently propound the particular example of the City Beth-ſhean, which is alſo called Schythopolis (ſee the LXX in Judg. I. 27.) and do always reſolve it to ſtand in a different condition from the other Cities of the Land of Iſrael.

[e] Rabbi, ſay they, looſeth Beth-ſhean, Rabbi looſeth Ceſarea, Rabbi looſeth Beth Gubrin, Rabbi looſeth Caphar Tſemach from the Demai; that is, from the tithing of things doubtful. Jarchi citing theſe words addeth theſe moreover, [f] For all thoſe places were like to Bethſhean, which the Iſraelites ſubdued coming up out of Egypt, but they ſubdued it not when they came out of Babylon.

[e] Hitroſ. Demai, fol. 22. 3.

[f] R. Sol. in Demai, c. 1. hal. 3.

[g] R. Meir, ſay they, ate the leaves of herbs (not tithed) in Bethſhan, and thenceforth Rabbi looſed all Bethſhean from tithing. Upon which ſtory thus Jarchi again, R. Meri ate leaves in Bethſhan not tithed, becauſe tithing is not uſed out of the Land of Iſrael. Note this well, I pray, that Bethſhean which plainly was within the Land of Iſrael, yet is reckoned for a City, which is out of the Land of Iſrael, and for a Heathen City: and the reaſon is given, becauſe although it were within the Land, and came into the poſſeſſion of the Iſraelites in the firſt conqueſt of it, yet it came not into their poſſeſſion in their ſecond conqueſt, but was always inhabited by Heathens. The ſame with good grounds we judg of the reſt of the Cities of Decapolis, which were indeed within the limits of Iſraelitic Land, but which the Syrians or Heathens had uſurped, and until then poſſeſſed. After we have numbred ſome of thoſe Cities, the thing will appear the more clearly.

[g] Cholin, f. 6. 2.

But if you ask by the way, who the Inhabitants of Bethſhean were, when the Jews came up out of Babylon; and who would not, could not be ſubdued by the Jews, is a matter of more obſcure ſearch: you would gueſs them to be Scythians from the derivation of the word, and from the words of Pliny: Scythopolis, heretofore Nyſa, from Scythians brought down thither. But if you go to Herodotus, [h] diſcourſing concerning the Empire of the Scythians in Aſia, and eſpecially in Paleſtine, you will find that that Empire was extinct, when the Grandfather of Cyrus was ſcarce born: that it may ſeem more a wonder, that the name of Scythopolis did ſo flouriſh, when the Jews under Cyrus went back to their own Land. But concerning this matter we will not create more trouble either to the Reader, or to our ſelves.

[h] Herodot. In Clio, cap. 105, 106.

SECT. III.

Gadara and Hippo Cities of Decapolis.

SO Pliny and Joſephus in the words lately alledged out of them: and ſo the Evangeliſts not obſcurely concerning Gadara. For Mark ſaith, He began to preach in Decapolis; Luke, He departed preaching throughout all the City of Gadara.

And that Gadara was of Heathen juriſdiction, beſides what may be gathered out of thoſe words of Joſephus, may be made out alſo from thence, that Hogs were kept there in ſo great a number, (Mat. VIII.) the keeping of which was forbidden the Jews by the Talmudic Canons, as well as the eating them by the Moſaic Law. Hence in our notes on Mark V. we are not affraid to pronounce that poſſeſſed Gadaren to be a Heathen; and that if our conjecture fail us not, upon good grounds.

That Hippo alſo was of Heathen juriſdiction, the teſtimonies of the Jews concerning the City Suſitha, may ſufficiently argue: which as it is of the ſame ſignification with the word Hippo, ſo without all doubt, it is the ſame place. So they write of its Heatheniſm.

i Hieroſ. Sheviith, f. 36. 4. The i Land Jobh, to which Jephta fled, is Suſitha. And why is the name of it called Tobh, (that is, good) Becauſe it is free from tithes. And whence came it to be free from tithe? Becauſe it was of Heathen poſſeſſion. For there was no tithing without the Land, that is, out of any place, which belonged to the Heathen. And again, If two l witneſſes come forth out of a City, the greater part of which conſiſts of Gentiles, as Su- ſitha, &c.

l Id. Roſh. baſhana, fol. 54. 4.

SECT. IV.

Pella, a City of Decapolis.

m Epiphan. de menſur. & ponder. cap. 15. PLINY numbers Pella alſo among the Decapolitan Cities: and ſo alſo doth m Epiphanius: and that it was of the ſame condition, under which, we ſuppoſe, the other Decapolitan Cities were put, namely, that it was inhabited by Heathens, the words of Joſephus make plain. n Antiq. lib. 13. cap. 23. u The Jews recovered theſe Cities of the Moabites from the Enemy, Heſhbon, Medeba, Lemba, Oronas, Telithon, Zara, Cilicium, Aulon, Pella. Ταύτην δὲ Καλόκαλαν, &c. But this (Pella) they overthrew, becauſe the Inhabitants would not endure to be brought over unto the cuſtoms of the Country. Behold the Citizens of Pella vigorouſly Heathen, ſo that their City underwent a kind of Martyrdom, if I may ſo call it, for retaining their Heatheniſm. And when it was reſtored under Pompey, it was rendred back to the ſame Citizens, the ſame Joſephus bearing witneſs. o o Ibid. lib. 14. cap. 8.

But take heed, Reader, that his words do not deceive you concerning its ſituation; who writes thus of Perea, Μῆκος μὲν αὐτῆς ἀπὸ Μαχαιροῦντος εἰς Πέλλαν, &c. p The length of Perea is from Macherus to Pella, and the Nothern Coaſts are bounded at Pella: that is, of Perea, as diſtinct from Trachonitis, and Batanea. For Pella was the furtheſt Northern coaſt of Perea, and the South coaſt of Trachonitis. Hence Joſephus reckons and ranks it together with Hippo, Dio, Scythopolis, in the place before cited. q p Id. de bello, lib. 3. cap. 4.

q Antiq. lib. 14.

There is no need to name more Cities of Decapolis beyond Jordan, theſe things which have been ſaid make ſufficiently for our opinion, both concerning the ſituation of the places, and the nature of them. Let us only add this, while we are converſant beyond Jordan, and about Pella. r Ammon and Moab, ſay the Gemariſts, tithe the tithe of the Poor in the ſeventh year, &c. Where the Gloſs thus, Ammon and Moab are Iſraelites who dwell in the Land of Ammon and Moab, which Moſes took from Sichon. And that land was holy according to the holineſs of the Land of Iſrael. But under the ſecond Temple its holineſs ceaſed. They ſow it therefore the ſeventh year; and they appoint thence the firſt tithe, and the poors tithe the ſeventh year, for the maintenance of the poor; who have not a corner of the field left, nor a gleaning thăt year: Thither therefore the poor betake themſelves, and have there a corner left, and a gleaning, and the poors tithe.

r Jevamoth, fol. 16. 1.

We produce this, for the ſake of that ſtory, which relates how the Chriſtians fled from the ſiege and ſlaughter of Jeruſalem to Pella. And why to Pella? Certainly if that be true which obtains among the Jews, that the deſtruction of Jeruſalem was בשביעית In the ſeventh year (which was the year of releaſe) when on this ſide Jordan they neither plowed nor ſowed, but beyond Jordan there was a Harveſt, and a Tithing for the poor, &c. hence one may fetch a more probable reaſon of that ſtory, than the Hiſtorians themſelves give. Namely, that thoſe poor Chriſtians reſorted thither for food and ſuſtinence, when husbandry had ceaſed that year in Judea and Galilee. But we admire the ſtory, rather then acquieſce in this reaſon.

SECT. V.

Caphar Tſemach. Beth Gubrin. Caphar Carnaim.

WE neither dare, nor indeed can, number up all the Cities of Decapolis, of the ſame condition with Bethſhean: yet the Jeruſalem Talmudiſts fix and rank theſe three under the ſame condition with it, in thoſe words which were alledged before, Caphar Carnaim excepted, of which afterwards.

I. כפר צמח Caphar Tſemach. Let ſomething be obſerved of its name out of R. Solomon.

1. In the Jeruſalem Talmudiſts it is כפר צמח Caphar Tſemach; but R. Solomon citing them reads כפר עמס Caphar Amas: which one would wonder at. But this is not ſo ſtrange to the Chaldee and Syriac dialect, with which it is very uſual to change צ Tſadi into ע Ain. So that the Rabine in the prouncing of this word עמס Amas, plays the Syrian in the firſt letter, and the Grecian in the laſt, ending the word in ס Samech for ח Cheth.

2. We

2. We dare prononnce nothing confidently of the ſituation of the place: we have only ſaid this of it before, that it is reckoned by the Jeruſalem Writers among עירות אסורות בתחום The Cities forbidden in the borders; perhaps Ἐν δείᾳ In the Coaſt, of which before: but I reſolve nothing.

II. בית גוברין Beth Gubrin. The ſituation of this place alſo is unknown. There was a Gabara about Ceſarea Philippi, called by the Rabbins תרנגולא עילאה Tarnegola the Upper. But we dare not confound words and places. It is famous for s R. Jochanan of Beth Gubrin, who ſaid, there are four noble tongues, &c.

III. כפר קרנים כבית שאן t Caphar Karnaim, ſay the Jeruſalem Talmudiſts, is of the ſame condition with Bethſhean: that is, of Heathen juriſdiction.

t Id. Demai, fol. 22. 3.

And now let the Reader judge, whether theſe were ſome of the Decapolitan Cities. Whether they were or no, we neither determine, nor are we much ſolicitous about it: that which we chiefly urge, is, that by the places before mentioned, it appears, as I ſuppoſe, that the Cities of Decapolis were indeed within the limits of the Land of Iſrael, but inhabited by Gentiles. Jews indeed dwelt with them, but fewer in number, inferior in power, and not ſo free both in their poſſeſſions and priviledges. And if you ask the reaſon, why they would dwel in ſuch an inferiority with the Heathens, take this. u The Rabbins deliver. Let one always live in the Land of Iſrael, though it be in a City, the greateſt part of which are Heathens. And let not a man dwel without the Land, yea not in a City, the greateſt part of which are Iſraelites. For he that lives in the Land of Iſrael hath God: but he that lives without the Land, is as if he had not God: as it is ſaid, To give you the Land of Canaan, that God may be with you, &c. Would you have more reaſons? whoſoever x lives within the Land of Iſrael, is abſolved from iniquity. And whoſoever is buried within the Land of Iſrael, is as if he were buried under the Altar. Take one for all. y The men of Iſrael are very wiſe. For the very climate makes wiſe. O moſt wiſe Rabbins.

SECT. VI.

Ceſarea Philippi.

THIS City alſo is of the ſame rank with Bethſhean in the Talmudiſts: and Ptolomy beſides encourages us to number it among the Cities of Decapolis, who reckons it among the Cities of Midland Phenicia; and Joſephus, who in his own life intimates Syrians to be its Inhabitants. We correct here that which elſewhere ſlipped us, namely, that the Arabic Interpreter while he renders Ceſarea for Hazor, Joſ. XI. 1. may be underſtood of Ceſarea of Strato, when he ſeems rather to reſpect this Ceſarea.

And now from what has been ſaid, think with your ſelf, Reader, what is to be reſolved concerning thoſe words of St. Mark, Jeſus went from the coaſts of Tyre and Sidon unto the Sea of Galilee, through the midſt of the coaſts of Decapolis. Think, I ſay, and judge, whether by the coaſts of Tyre and Sidon, any place can be underſtood at the very gates of Sidon: and not rather ſome place not very remote from Ceſarea Philippi. And judge again, whether Decapolis ought to be placed within Galilee, and not rather (with Pliny and Joſephus) that a great part of it at leaſt, ought not to be placed in the Country beyond Jordan, and if any part of it ſtood in Galilee, whether it ought not to be placed in the utmoſt Northern coaſt of it, except only Scythopolis, or Bethſhan.

SECT. VII.

The City ערבו Orbo.

BY occaſion of the mention of Bethſhean, I cannot but ſubjoyn the mention of the City ערבו from the words of R. Judah in the place at the margin. x R. Judah ſaith עורבים The Ravens (or The people of Orbo) brought bread and fleſh Morning and Evening to Elias. עיר היתה בתחום בית שאן ושמה ערבו That City was in the borders of Bethſhean, and was called Orbo.

x Bereſh. Rab. §. 33.

Some Jews raiſe a Scruple, whether Ravens brought Elias bread and fleſh, or men called עורבים Ravens. So Kimchi upon the place: There are ſome who by עורבים underſtand Merchants, according to that which is ſaid, עורבי מערבך The men of Orbo of thy merchandize, Ezech. XXVII. 27. Hence you may ſmell the reaſon, why the Arabic renders it Orabimos. To which ſenſe our R. Judah, who thinks that they were not Ravens, but the Inhabitants of the City of Orbo that miniſtred to Elias. But here the objection of Kimchi holds. God commanded Elias, ſaith he, that he ſhould hide himſelf, that that none ſhould know that he was there. And we ſee that Achab ſought him every where, &c.

But omitting the triflingneſs of the dream, we are ſearching after the Chorogaphical concern: and if there be any truth in the words of R. Judah, that there was a City by ערבו Orbo, by name near Bethſhan, we find the ſituation of the brook Cherith, or at leaſt, where he thought it ran. That brook had for ever laid hid in obſcurity, had not Elias lay hid near it: but the place of it as yet lies hid. There are ſome Maps which fix it beyond Jordan, and there are others fix it on this ſide; ſome in one place, and ſome in another, uncertainly, without any ſetled place. But I eſpecially wonder at Joſephus, who ſaith that z Antiq. lib. 8. cap. 7. Ἀνεχώρησεν εἰς τὰ πρὸς νότον μέρη, ποιούμενος παρὰ χειμάρρῳ τινὶ τῷ ὄνοματι Χοραθείν. z He went away towards the North, and dwelt near a certain brook: When God in plain words ſaith, And thou ſhalt turn thee, or go towards the Eaſt. ופנית לך קדמה For he was now in Samaria. God adds, Hide thee at the brook Cherith, אשר על פני הירדן which is before Jordan. So, you will ſay, was every brook that flowed into Jordan. But the ſenſe of thoſe words, which is before Jordan, is this, which (brook,) as thou goeſt to Jordan, is flowing into it on this ſide Jordan. So that although the Rabbin miſtakes concerning the creatures that fed Elias, yet perhaps he does not ſo miſtake concerning the place where the brook was.

The ſtory of the Syropheniſſian Woman beſeeching our Saviour for her poſſeſſed daughter, and of his return thence by Decapolis to the Sea of Galilee, hath occaſioned a diſcourſe of the coaſts of Tyre and Sidon, and the Region of Decapolis. And now having finiſhed the ſearch after the places, let us ſpeak one word of the woman her ſelf. She is called by Mark Ἕλληνις Συροφοινισσα A Syropheniſſian Greek, which is without all ſcruple; but when ſhe is called Χαναναία A Canaanitiſh woman, by Matthew, that is ſomewhat obſcure. If thoſe things, which in our animadverſions upon Matthew we have ſaid, upon that place, do not pleaſe any, let theſe things be added. 1. That Canaan, and Phenicia are ſometimes convertible terms in the LXX, Joſ. IV. 1, 12. &c. 2. If I ſhould ſay that Ἕλληνις A Greek woman, and Χαναναία, A Canaanitiſh woman were alſo convertible terms, perhaps it may be laughed at; but it would not be ſo among the Jews, who call all Men ſervants, and Women ſervants not of Hebrew bloud, Canaanites. It is a common diſtinction עבד עברי An Hebrew Servant, and עבד כנעני A Canaanite Servant; and ſo in the feminine ſex. But now a Canaanite Servant, ſay they, is a ſervant of any nation, beſides the Hebrew nation. Imagine this woman to be ſuch, and there is nothing obſcure in her name: becauſe ſhe was a Servant woman of an Heathen ſtock, and thence commonly known among the Jews under the title שפחה כנענית Of a Cnaanite woman Servant.

The Meaſures of the Jews.

a Gloſs in Bava Mezia, fol. 28. 1.
b Migil. f. 3. 1.
c Bava Kama, fol. 82. 2.

IT obtained among the Jews a That the Land of Iſrael contained the ſquare of four hundred Parſæ. And they are delighted I know not how, nor why, with this number and meaſure. b Jonathan Ben Uzziel interpreted from the mouth of Haggai, Zachariah and Malachi; and the Land of Iſrael was moved ד' מאות פרסה על ד' מאות פרסה Four hundred Parſa every way. c When a hog was drawn up upon the walls of Jeruſalem, and fixed his hoofs upon them, the Land of Iſrael ſhook four hundred Parſa every way.

פרסה

פרסה A Parſa contains in it four miles. Ten d Parſæ, ſaith the Gloſs at the place in the Margin, are forty miles. Which might be proved largely elſewhere, if need were. So that four hundred Parſæ, (or ſo many thirty furlongs) made a thouſand ſix hundred miles. Which meaſure why they aſcribed it to the Land of Iſrael on every ſide of the ſquare of it, whether from the meaſurings of Ezechiel, or from ſomewhat elſe, we do not here enquire. But we cannot but obſerve this; that the ſame number is mentioned, and perhaps the ſame meaſure underſtood, Revel. XIV. 20. Bloud iſſued out of the Lake to the horſes bridles for a thouſand ſix hundred furlongs. Where the Arabic reads, אמיאל אלף וסתמאית for the ſpace of a thouſand ſix hundred miles.

d Gloſs in Peſach, fol. 93. 2.

The Talmudiſts meaſure ſometimes by miles, ſometimes by Parſes, ſometimes by Diets. Every one of theſe you will meet with in them very frequently.

Of the Talmudic mile, take this admonition of theirs. אחד משבע ומחצב במיל זה הוא ריס: Namely that it e conſiſted (not of eight, as the Greek and Roman did, but) of ſeven furlongs and an half. For by what other word to render ריס I know not, nor do I think it to be rendred by any other.

e Bava Mtzia, fol. 33. 1.

And of the Diet take this. f R. Jochanan ſaith, כמה מהלך אדם ביום How much is a mans journey in one day? פרסאות י' Ten Parſes. From the firſt dawning of the morning to Sun riſe, five miles. From Sunſet until ſtars appear, five miles. פשי ל' חמיסר מצפרא לפלגא חמיסר מפלגא דיומא לאורתא יומא: There remain thirty. Fifteen from morning to noon. Fifteen from Noon till Even. Behold a days journey, of forty miles in one ſenſe, that is, as much as may be diſpatched in one day; and of thirty in another, that is, as much as moſt uſually was wont to be diſpatched. Where you are admoniſhed by them alſo; that theſe are computed כיום בינוני according to the Equinoctial day.

f Peſachin, fol. 93. 2.

They g feign that Saul in one day travailed ſixty miles, as the Iſraelites did alſo from Jordan to mount Gerizim: but moſt commonly they judge the Diet, to be according to what was ſaid, namely, that under it are comprehended thirty miles.

g Midr. Till. fol. 7. 4. Gloſs in Sanhedr. fol. 44. 1.

And hither let thoſe paſſages be brought. אי זו היא דרך רחוקה What h is a long way? מן המודיעים וכו' From Modim (the Sepulchres of the Macabees) and forward, and according to this meaſure on every ſide. He ſaith, moreover: From Modim to Jeruſalem were fifteen miles. The Diſpute is upon that, Numb. IX. 10. where it is commanded that every one keep the Paſsover in the firſt month, unleſs he be unclean, או בדרך רחוקה Or in a long way, and it is concluded, that by a long way is to be underſtood the diſtance of fifteen miles at the leaſt, which was the half of a common Diet.

SECT. II.

The Jews meaſuring out the Land by Diets.

IN the place noted in the margin the Maſters ask, i How long is any bound to make known by public outcry concerning ſomething found? R. Judah ſaith, Three feaſts, and ſeven days after the laſt feaſt. Namely, three days for any to go home to ſeek, whether he hath loſt any thing, and three days to come back (to Jeruſalem) and that ſtill one day might remain for public outcry. (The Gloſs is, That he might make an outcry, I loſt, ſuch a thing, and theſe are the marks of it) But they object, the third day of the month Marheſhvan they pray for rains. Rabban Gamaliel ſaith, the ſeventh of that month, which is the fifteenth day from the Feaſt of Tabernacles: namely, that the laſt of all the Iſraelites (who came up to the Feaſt) might go to Euphrates, and not be caught by the rains.

i Bava Mtzia, fol. 28. 1.

It is preſumed by this Tradition, that the utmoſt bounds of the Land of Iſrael was within three days journy of Jeruſalem, nor amiſs: and under the ſame condition the utmoſt bounds of the Land beyond Jordan, are reckoned; namely that they exceeded not that diſtance; but how much they came ſhort of it, is left in doubt. It is not my purpoſe to determine of that buſines in this place: that which we purſue is, to meaſure out the bredth of the Land within Jordan.

SECT. III.

The Talmudiſts meaſuring the bredth of the Land within Jordan.

THere was a Traditon and National Cuſtom famous among them, concerning which we have mention ſomewhere, כרם רבעי היה עולה לירושלם מהלך יום אחד לכל צד That a Vineyard of four years old ſhould go up to Jeruſalem in a days journey on every ſide. The ſenſe of the Tradition is this; The ſecond Tithes were either to be eaten at Jeruſalem, or being ſold at home, the mony was to be brought to Jeruſalem, whence ſomethings were brought, that were eaten there. Now proviſion is made by this Ca-k Maaſar Sheni, cap. 5. hal. 2.

non,

non, that the tithe of Vineyards which were within a Diet of the City ſhould not be ſold, but that they ſhould be brought to Jeruſalem, and eaten there.

But אי זו היא תחומה What are the bounds ſay they, of that days journey.

אילת מן דרום :	Elath on the South.
עקרבת מן הצפון :	Acrabat on the North.
לוד מן המערב :	Lydda on the Weſt.
ירדן מן המזרח :	Jordan on the Eaſt.

m Erub, f. 5. 1. Ro,h Haſhanah, fol. 31. 2.

So both Miſhnahs. But the Babylonian Gemara in the m places noted in the margin reads אילת מן הצפון Elath on the North, Acrabat on the South. By what reaſon, and in what ſenſe theſe words agree, Commentators endeavour to reſolve obſcurely enough: but it is not of ſo much moment, to detain us.

Elath recals to my mind ſome things which are ſpoken by the Notitia of the Eaſtern Empire. Where, under the Diſpoſition of the Honourable man the Duke of Paleſtine, is ſubſtituted among others, Præfectus Legionis Decimæ Fretenſis Ailæ, The Lieutenant of the Tenth Fretenſian Legion at Aila. Where Pancirollus writes, that Aila was ſeated on the ſhore of the Red Sea. S. Hieron. upon Ezek. XLVII. writes thus, The tongue of the Red Sea, on the ſhore of which Aila is ſeated, where a Roman Legion and Garriſon is now quar-

n De loc. Hebr. tered. And the ſame Father n elſewhere, Aila, ſaith he, is in the utmoſt borders of Paleſtine, joyned to the South Deſert, and the Red Sea, whence men ſail out of Egypt into India, and thence into Egypt. And there alſo is a Roman Legion called Decima, The Tenth.

We dare not contradict ſo great an oracle, otherwiſe my thoughts would run back to this our Elath: and that upon this reaſon eſpecially, becauſe it ſeems ſomewhat hard, to ſubſtitute a Garriſon at the Red Sea under the Duke of Paleſtine, when that was ſo far diſtant from Paleſtine, and ſince there was a Duke of Arabia (in which Elath at the Red Sea was) as well as of Paleſtine.

You ſee the Fathers of the Traditions meaſuring from Lydda by Jeruſalem to Jordan in a double diary: but here alſo they leave us again at uncertainties of the bredth of the Land; becauſe Lydda was not upon the utmoſt coaſt of the Land on that ſide. Unleſs perhaps you might ſay, that whatſoever ſpace went between Lydda and the Sea, was מדינת הים The Region of the Sea, eſteemed as Heathen Land; when Caphar Lodim, o Gittin, cap. 1. hal. 1. which was ſeated in that Interval, and not far from Lydda, was of no better o account, Let us get therefore, if we can, more certain accounts, and more faithful direction.

SECT. IV.

Ptolomy conſulted and amended.

IT would be ridiculous ſo much as to dream, that the bredth of this Land is every where the ſame: ſince the Seas bounding on all ſides, here the Mediterranean, there that of Sodom, the Sea of Genazeret, the Sea of Samochonitis, and Jordan gliding, between them, cannot but make the ſpace very unequal by their various windings.

p Tabb. Aſiæ, cap. 6. Take a proſ of this from Ptolomy in the Mediterranean Shore. p

Thus He		Thus the Latine verſion of him.

Γάζα.	ξε γ′ ιβ	Gaza.	65. 26.

and more of the like variation.

Of the laſt, namely of the haven of the Gazites, and Gaza it ſelf, we may juſtly be at ſome ſtand. In Ptolomy himſelf, as you ſee, the Haven of the Gazites is in ξε ς′ 65.45. But the Latine Interpreter hath 64. 45. Nor indeed without reaſon, when Gaza it ſelf is only in 65. 26. But indeed on the contrary it is more probable, that the Haven of the Gazites ſhould be placed in 65. 26. and Gaza it ſelf in 65. 45, Where by the Haven is by no means to be underſtood that place where Ships put in, and unladed, but the whole Bay comprehended within the Promonotories, that thruſt themſelves out into the Sea; the very laſt poynt of which thruſting forth you may conceive to be in degr. 65. and 26. From the City 19 minutes.

If therefore you are minded to follow Ptolomy with this amendment in meaſuring out the bredth of the Land between Gaza and Aſphaltites, take it thus. Let Gaza be in degr. 65. 45. And in him alſo, Ἀσφαλτίτιδ& τὸ μέσον ἐπέχει μοίρας ξ' ε' The Latin Verſion is, Aſphaltitis medium continet gradus 66. 50. The middle of Aſphaltites contains degrees 66. 50. From Gaza therefore to the middle of the Dead Sea will be a whole degree, and ſ minutes; to which LXV miles, and V minutes do anſwer: whence if you withdraw the half of the Aſphaltites, there will remain LV miles, or thereabouts, from the ſhore of it to Gaza.

in

SECT. V.

Pliny to be corrected.

AND here I cannot but amend the reading of Pliny, or at leaſt ſhew that it wants mending, in whom we read thus. q Deinde Nabatæi oppidum, &c. Thence the Nabateans inhabit the Town called Petra, The Rock, in a Valley, little leſs then two miles in bigneſs, cirrounded with unacceſſible Mountains, a River running between. It is diſtant from Gaza, a Town of our Shore, D. C. miles. From the Perſian bay CXXII. miles. Two double ways meet here, the way of thoſe who went to Palmyra of Syria, and of thoſe who came from Gaza. Thoſe words, It is diſtant from Gaza, &c. are they with which we have to do. q Nat. Hiſt. lib. 6. cap. 28.

What? D. C. M. ſix hundred miles from Gaza to Petra, the Metropolis of the Moabites? I wonder the very Learned r Heidman ſhould ſo ſoftly ſwallow down theſe words, and that without any regret. But let me have leave to conjecture, that Pliny in his own Copy wrote thus, It is diſtant from Gaza, a Town of our Shore CX. M. But by the careleſneſs of the Tranſcribers, the Numerical letter X was cut into two parts after this manner)(, and the left half of it at length cloſed in with the former C in this manner (), and ſo at laſt paſſed into D. And the other right hand half remained thus C, and was reckoned for an hundred. r See Heidman. Paläſt. c. 7 § 6.

However we may miſtake in our conjecture, yet certainly concerning the ſpace and number of the miles we do not ſo miſtake. For allow XXXVIII miles or thereabouts between Petra and Aſphaltites, and grant XX miles or thereabouts to the bredth of that Sea (that we may go ſomething in the middle between Pliny and Joſephus concerning the bredth of it) then there will remain, of the CX miles, which we ſuppoſe Pliny wrote, LII or thereabouts from that Sea to Gaza. Which is not far from the mark. But the mark is vaſtly overſhot, when DC miles are aſſigned from Gaza to Petra. You will ſurely favour our computation, and conjecture of the injury done Pliny by the Tranſcribers, when you ſhall have obſerved, that the firſt ſhore of Gaza is according to Ptolomey, as we have ſaid, in Degr. 65. 26. and Petra is only in Degr. 66. 45.

Let us therefore grant LII or LIII miles or thereabouts for the bredth of the Land from the ſhore of the Mediterranean Sea to the Aſphaltites: you muſt allow ſome more miles between the Mediterranean ſhore and Jordan: becauſe, by how much the more broad the Aſphaltites is, ſo much the leſs broad is the Land; and the ſame muſt be ſaid of the Sea of Geneſaret, and Samochonitis. And Galilee is not only ſtraitned according as they are enlarged, but it is ſtraitned alſo by the Territories of Tyre and Sidon running between it and the Sea.

So that it would be in vain to trace out an exact bredth of the Land every where; and it would be ridiculous to meaſure it by any one meaſure or extenſion. It is well enough, if one come near the thing by ſome convenient gueſs here and there, or err not much of it.

The determination of the length of the Land ſeems more ſure, while it is meaſured out by Towns and Cities, from Sidon to the River of Egypt: but here alſo is not the ſame ſpace to all, and in ſome places the meaſuring is very uncertain.

SECT. VI.

The length of the Land out of Antoninus.

THUS the Itinerary of Antoninus.

From Sidon to Tyre	XXIV	miles	Phenicia.
To Ptolemais	XXXII	miles
Sicamina	XXIV	miles
Ceſarea	XX	miles
Betaro a	XVIII	miles	a Paleſtine.
Dioſpoli	XXII	miles

Aſcalon	XX	miles
Gaza	XVI	miles
Rapa	XXII	miles
Rhinocolura	XXII	miles
	CCXXXII.

We have elſewhere meaſured out this ſpace by the cords of Pliny and Strabo, leſs than this number by thirteen miles: where if ſome miſtake hath crept into the computation, let Gulielmus Tyrius bear the blame, who ſtretched the bounds of Phenicia four or five miles only from Tyre Southward.

But what ſhall we ſay of another Itinerary? Which whether it be Antoninus his, I dare not define; where it is thus, exceeding the former computation nine and twenty miles. There is ſomewhat there alſo, which how to reconcile with Joſephus, it is not eaſie to ſhew: for it is ſaid,

From Ceſarea to Betaron	XXXI	miles
To Dioſpolis	XXXVIII	miles.

From Neapolis to Ælia	XXX	miles
To Eleutheropolis	XX	miles
To Aſcalon	XXIV	miles.

Where from Ælia or Jeruſalem to Aſcalon run out only XLIV miles: whereas Joſephus ſaith of Aſcalon, that it was Τῶν Ἱεροσολύμων ἔλασσον ἑπτὰς τοῖς πεντακοσίοις ἀπέχουσα σταδίους: s diſtant from Jeruſalem DXX furlongs; or LXV miles. This breach is a little filled up by this, that New Aſcalon was nearer to Jeruſalem, than the old, by ſixteen miles, as Benjamin relates.

s De Bell. lib. 3. c. 2.

Whether Betaron were the ſame with ביתר Betar, where that horrible ſlaughter was under Ben Cozba, we will not diſpute here; there is no doubt to be made but Liamnia is illy writ for Jamnia. And now let us follow Antoninus to Peluſium.

Rhinocolura
Oſtracena	XXIV	miles
Caſſio	XXVI	miles
Pentaſcino	XX	miles

Which how they agree with Pliny, who numbers only ſixty five miles from Peluſium to the ending of Arabia, viz. to the Sirbon, on which Rhinocolura borders, I ſhall not take upon me to ſay. This I have ſaid elſewhere, that it is a wonder, that ſome Maps ſhould place the Sirbon between Caſſius and Peluſium, when the contrary manifeſtly appears both here, and in Pliny and Strabo. Perhaps they took the error from Ptolomey, or at leaſt from his Interpreter, in whom Caſſius is in Latitude, Degr. 31. 15. But the breaking out of the Sirbon in 31. 10.

SECT. VII.

The bredth of the ways.

THE t Rabbins deliver. A private way (דרך היחיד) is four cubits. A way from a City to a City is eight cubits. A publick way (דרך הרבים) is sixteen cubits. The way to the Cities of refuge is two and thirty cubits. The Kings way hath no measure: for the King may break down hedges to make himself a way. And the way to a Sepulchre hath no measure, משום יקרא דשכבא for the honour of the dead. Compare Matth. VII. 13. 14. t Bav. Bathra, fol. 100.

There was this difference between a way from a City to a City, and דרך הרבים a publick way; that a publick way was that along which all Cities passed; a way from a City to a City was that, along which this City passed to that, and that to this, but no other City passed that way.

"That way from a City to a City was eight cubits, saith the Gloss, that if haply two "Chariots met, there might be space to pass.

The way to a sepulchre had no measure, that those that attended the Corps might not be separated by reason of the straitness of the way. They add, הבעמד ריני צפורי אמרו בית ד' קבין A station, as the Judges of Zippor say, is as much as contains four Cabes, By Station they understand the place where those that return from the Sepulchre stand about the Mourner to comfort him אבדים ושפחות אין עומדין עליהם u "For men servants and "women servants they do not stand, nor for them do they say the blessing of the Mourners. The Gloss is, When they returned from the Sepulchre היו עושים שורות they "stood in rows comforting him. And that row consisted not of less than ten. They "made him set, and they stood about him. x u Beracoth, fol. 16. 2.

x Gloss in Chetubb. fol. 8. 2.

בית ד' קבים "A piece of ground containing four Cabes of seed, saith the Gloss, is "thirty three cubits, and two hands bredth broad, and fifty long.

SECT. VIII.

The distance of Sepulchres from Cities.

BUrying places z were not near the Cities, לא היו בתי קבורות סמוכין לעיר They are the words of the Glosser upon Kiddushin in the place quoted; and that upon this Tradition: "For all the thirty days he is carried in his Mothers bosom, and is buried by "one Woman and two Men; but not by one Man, and two Women. The sense is this, An Infant dying before the thirtieth day of his age, hath no need of a Bier, but is carried in his Mothers bosom to burial, two men accompanying; but he is not carried by two women, one man only accompanying. And this reason is given, Because when the Burying places were a good way distant from the City, it might happen that two women might be enticed by one man to commit whoredom, when they were now out of the sight of men, but two men would not so readily conspire to defile one woman. z Gloss in Kiddush. fol 80 2.

They produce examples, "A certain woman, say they, carried out a living Infant, as "though it were dead, to play the whore with him, who accompanied her to the place "of burial. And, Ten men took up a living woman, as though she were dead, that "they might lye with her. Certainly, thou forgetest thy self, O Jew, when one while thou sayest, that two men would scarcely conspire together for the defiling the same woman, and other while, that ten men did.

The burying places were distant two thousand cubits from the Levitical Cities; from all other Cities a great space, if not the same. How far Jerusalem agreed with these in this matter, or not agreed, we must observe elsewhere.

Zin. צין Cadeſh רקם.

THESE places are named in the line bounding the Land Southward. Numb. XXXIV. and Joſ. XV.

The Jews teach us that it was called the Deſart of Zin from a Mountain of that name, and that the Mountain was ſo called from the Groves of Palm-trees, and that it was famous for Iron-mines. For thoſe words, Numb. XXXIV. 4. ועבר צנה And paſs on to Zin, are rendred by Hieruſalem Targumiſt, ועבר טוור פרולא And the border paſſed on to the Mountain of Iron. By Jonathan ועבר לציני טוור פרצלא And paſſed on to the Palms of the Mountain of Iron. ציני in the Talmudiſts are leſſer Palms. a Rabh Judah ſaith, He that ſells a farm to his neighbour, muſt write, Poſſeß to thy ſelf, דקלין תאלין הוצין וצינין Let the Aruch be an Interpreter for us. a Bava Bathra, fol. 69. 2.

הוצין are the reſt of the ſmaller trees.
צינין are the ſmaller Palm-trees.

And the Talmudiſts again ציני דר ברזל כשרות b The Palms of the Mountain of Iron are fit, to make a bunch to hold in the hand in the feaſt of Tabernacles. Where the Gloſs, ציני are ſmaller Palms. b Succah. cap. 3. hal. 1.

It ſeems therefore to be ſome mountanous tract, very near to the borders of the Land of Iſrael, famous for Palms of a lower ſize, and Iron mines, called from its Palm-trees צין Tſin, and from that name giving a denomination to the adjacent Country, which was deſert.

Cadeſh, in the Eaſtern Interpreters רקם Rekam, was a bound of the Land; yet Cadeſh it ſelf was in effect without the Land. Hence thoſe words, c He that brings a bill from a heathen place, &c. Yea, that brings it from Rekam. And, d All the ſpots that come from Rekam are clean. The Gloſs is, Some ſpots in the garments (namely of a profluvious woman) which came from Rekam, were clean, becauſe they determined not of the ſpots of ſtrangers. Another Gloſs thus. In Rekam were Iſraelites, and yet ſpots coming from Rekam are clean, becauſe they belong to Iſraelites, and the Iſraelites hide their ſpots, &c. c Gittin, cap. 1. hal. 1. d Jevam. fol. 16. 1.

Cades, as Bridenbachius, relates, is called Cawatha by the Arabians: for thus he, At length we came into a certain Country, which in the Arabian Tongue is called Cawatha, but in the Latine Cades. Which while we read, thoſe things come into my mind, which the eminent Edward Pocock S. T. D. a man of admirable Learning, diſcourſeth concerning the word Kawa in his very Learned Miſcellaneous Notes, e that it ſhould ſignifie Crying aloud, an outcry, &c. To which whether the word גועה Gohe, and גיעה (whereby Rekm is alſo called) that denotes Bellowing, may any way anſwer, it is more fit for that great Oracle of Tongues to judge, than for ſo mean a man as I am. e Pag. 48, 49, &c.

Lazar ben R. Joſah* ſaith, It was deſtroyed in the days of the Concubine in Gibeah, but Elpael ſtood forth, and repaired it.

With Lod and Ono is alſo joyned גיא החרשים or, The Vally of Crafts-men, Nehem. XI. 35. which ſome of the Jews ſuppoſe to be a particular City; and that it was walled from the days of Joſua. But ſaith R. Theſe were Ben Azzai, Ben Zuma, Chanan, and Chananiah, and Ben Nanas. i Juchas. in the place above.

Why the Maps placed Lod and Ono near Jordan, not far from Jericho, I can meet with no other reaſon, than that in Joſephus is found the Town Adida, not far from thence, and Hadid is reckoned with Lod and Ono in Ezr. II. 33. and Lod and Hadid are framed into into one word Λοδαδὶ, Lodadi, Ezr. II. 33. and Λοδαδὶδ, Lodadid, Nehem. VII. 37. by the Seventy Interpreters. But there were more places called by the name of Adida, ſo that that reaſon fails, if that were the reaſon. For there was Ἀδιδὰ ἐν τῇ Σεφήλᾳ, Adida in Sephel, l 1 Macc. XII. 38. Adida in the Vally. l And, Ἀδιδὰ πόλις ἐπ' ὄρους κειμένη, The City Adida in the Mountain: ὑφ' ἧς ὑποκεῖται τὰ τῆς Ἰουδαίας πεδία. Under which lay the plains of Judea. m And, Adida in Galilee before the great Plain, n if it were not the ſame with Adida ἐν τῇ Σεφήλᾳ in Sephel.

Of Lydda, which we are now near, when we are ſpeaking of Ono, let that be conſidered for the ſake of young Students, which the Gloſs o adviſeth, That Lydda is called alſo לודקיא Lodicea: and frequent mention is made of הרוגי בלוד The Martyrs in Lydda, which is ſometimes alſo pronounced הרוגי בלודקיא The Martyrs in Lodicea; as in that ſtory among other places: p When the Tyrant (or Trajan) endeavoured to kill Lolienus (perhaps Julianus) and Papus his brother בלודקיא in Lodicea, &c. the Gloſs, לודקיא היא לוד Lodicea that is Lydda) he ſaid to them, If you are of the people of Ananias, Michael and Azarius, let your God come, and deliver you out of my hand.

o In Taanith.

p Taanith, fol. 18. 2.

The Martyrdom of theſe brethren is much celebrated, which they underwent for the Kings daughter, who was found ſlain, and the enemies of the Jews ſaid, that the Jews had ſlain her; and theſe brethren to deliver Iſrael, ſaid, We ſlew her, therefore thoſe alone the King ſlew. So the Gloſs.

In the Tract Kelim q there is mention of סנדל לדיקי which whether it refers to the ſame place, and be to be rendred The Sandal of Lydda, doth not appear. With it is mentioned alſo סנדל עמקי The Emkean ſandal, ſo called from כפר עמקי Caphar Imki; the mention of which place is in the Tract Taanith, where it is ſaid, r The City out of which are five hundred footmen, as Caphar Imki, &c. So the Aruch and R. Solomon cite the place, and pronounce the name of the City כפר עמקי Caphar Imki; but in the Talmudick Text it is כפר עמיקי Caphar Imiki. About which we ſhall not contend.

Of the various Inhabitants of the Land.

I. It was the Land of the Hebrews, before it was the Canaanites. II. Whence it came to paſs that Canaan was only a part of Canaan, Judg. IV. 1. III. Who the Perizzites were. IV. The Kenites. V. Rephaim.

SECT. I.

It was the Land of the Hebrews, before it was the Canaanites.

ABRAHAM is called עברי Hebrew, then only, when the difference between him, and the Elamites was to be decided by war. And the reaſon of the ſurname is to be fetched from the thing it ſelf, which then was tranſacted.

I. The hereditary right of the Holy Land, which by Divine diſpoſal was Sems Land, Elem the firſt born of Sem did deſervedly claim; nor was there any of the ſons of Sem, upon whom in humane judgment it was more equally and juſtly devolved. But the Divine Counſil and Judgment had deſigned it another way; namely, that it ſhould come to the family of Arphaxad, and Heber, of which family Abraham was. Him therefore God ſtrengtheneth againſt the Army of Elam, and declares him heir by a ſtupendious victory; which Sem himſelf likewiſe does, bleſſing him, although he had overthrown in battel his ſons the Elamites, born of his firſt born Elam. For that moſt holy Man, and a very great and noble Prophet withal, acknowledged the Counſel of God, whom he is ſo far from oppoſing him for the ſlaughter of his ſons, that on the contrary he bleſſeth the Conqueror, and yields him the choiſeſt fruits of his Land, Bread and Wine, not only for refreſhment to him and his Soldiers, but alſo perhaps for a ſign rather of reſignation, and inveſting him with the hereditary right of it, whom God by ſo ſignal a mark had ſhewn to be the heir. Upon very good reaſon therefore Abraham is called Hebrew, to point as it were with the finger, that God would derive the inheritance of that Land from the family of Elam to the family of Heber: from the firſt born to him that was born after, which was alſo done afterwards with Ruben and Joſeph.

II. It

II. It neither ought, nor indeed can be paſſed over without obſervation, that the Country of Pentepolis, and the Countries adjacent, were ſubjects and tributaries to Chedorlaomer King of Elam. What? Was there any part of the Land of Canaan ſubject to the King of the Perſians, when ſo many Kings and Countries lay between it and Perſia? No idle ſcruple and difficulty, I aſſure you, nor, as far as I can ſee, any otherwiſe to be reſolved, than that Elam the firſt born of Sem, or Melchiſedek, by his birthright was heir of that Land, which his father Sem poſſeſſed by divine right and Patent; and the ſons of Elam, alſo held after him, and his grandſons unto Chedorlaomer. For when it is ſaid, that thoſe Cities and Countries had ſerved Chedorlaomer twelve years, the times of his reign ſeem rather to be reckoned, than the years of the reign of the Elamites. Not that thoſe Nations were ſubject to the Scepter of the Elamites twelve years only, but that that year was only the twelfth of Chedorlaomer. But now God tranſlates the inheritance to the family of Heber, called Hebrew before, but now more particularly, and more honorably, ſince of all the families of Sem, that was now moſt eminent. עבר Heber denotes Hebrews as אשור Aſſur denotes Aſſyrians in thoſe words of Balaam, Numb. XXIV. 24. וענו אשור וענו עבר And ſhall afflict Aſſur, and ſhall afflict Heber.

It is a dream of ſome body among the Rabbins. *That * when the whole Land was divided among the ſeventy Nations, at the confuſion of Tongues, the Land of Canaan came to none: therefore the Canaanites betook themſelves thither; and being found not only empty, but conferred by lot upon none, they uſurped it for their own.*

* Shem tobh, in Pſal. XLVIII.

But what then ſhall we ſay of Melchizedek, whom now all acknowledge for Sem? Which is more probable, that he intruded among the Canaanites, now inhabiting the Land, or that they intruded upon him? Was not that Land hereditary to him and his rather, than uſurped by wrong and intruſion? And did not he by the direction of the Spirit of God betake himſelf thither rather, than either that he wandring about uncertainly lighted upon that Land by chance, or acted by a Spirit of ambition or uſurpation violently poſſeſſed himſelf of it? For my part, I ſcarcely believe, either that the Canaanites went thither before the confuſion of Tongues, or that Sem at that time was not there: but that he had long and fully inhabited the Land of Canaan (as it was afterwards called) before the entrance of the Canaanites into it: and that by the privilege of a Divine Grant, which had deſtin'd him and his poſterity hither: and that afterwards the Canaanites crept in here, and were firſt ſubjects to the family of Sem, whoſe firſt born was Elam, but at length ſhook off the yoke.

When therefore all thoſe original Nations from the Confuſion of Tongues, pertook of their names immediately from the fathers of their ſtock, as the Aſſyrians from Aſſur, the Elamites from Elam, &c. the ſame we muſt hold of the Hebrew Nation, namely, that it from that time was called Hebrew from Heber: and that it was called the Land of the Hebrews before it was called the Land of the Canaanites. For I can neither think, that the ſtock of the Hebrews had no name for almoſt three hundred years after the Confuſion of Tongues, until the paſſing of Abraham out of Chaldea found a name for it, which ſome would have: nor methinks is it agreeable, that Abraham was therefore called Hebrew, becauſe travailing out of Chaldea into the Land of Canaan he paſſed Euphrates; when upon the ſame reaſon both Canaan himſelf, and the Fathers of all the Weſtern Nations almoſt, ſhould be called Hebrews; for they paſſed over Euphrates, travailing out of Chaldea. And when the Patriarch Joſeph himſelf is called by his Miſtreſs a Hebrew ſervant, Gen. XXXIX. 17. and ſo called by the ſervants of Pharaoh, Chap. XLI. 12. and when he ſaith of himſelf, that he was ſtollen away out of the Land of the Hebrews, Gen. XL. 15. it is ſcarcely probable, that that whole Land was known to other Countries under that name, only for one family now dwelling there, and that family a ſtranger, a travailer, and living in danger from the Inhabitants: but rather that it was known by that name from antient ages, even before it was called The Land of the Canaanites. Nor, if we ſhould raiſe a conteſt againſt that opinion, which aſſerts that the Language of the Canaanites and the Hebrews was one and the ſame, would that argument any whit move us, that the Towns and Cities of the Canaanites bore names, which were alſo Hebrew; for thoſe their Hebrew names they might receive from Sem, Heber, and their children, before they were places of the Canaanites.

Heber lived when the Tongues were confounded, and the Nations ſcattered; and when none denied, that the ſons of Heber were Hebrews (yea, who would deny that that Land was the Land of Heber?) By what reaſon ſhould not they, and that Nation take their name from him, after the ſame manner, as other Nations took theirs from their father, at the Confuſion of Languages?

SECT.

SECT. II.

Whence Canaan was a part only of Canaan, Judg. IV. 2.

CANAAN with his people wandring from Babylon after the confusion of Languages, passed over Euphrates through Syria, and travailed towards Palestine, and the way led him straight into the Northern part of it first. And that which the Jews say of Abraham travailing thither, may be said of this person also, in this regard. b God said to Abraham, say they, לך לך To thee, To thee, the words being doubled by reason of a double journy, one from Arain Naharaim, the other from Aram Nachor. While Abraham lived in Aram Naharaim, and Aram Nahor, he saw men eating, drinking, and playing: he said therefore, Let not my portion be in that Land. But after he came לסולמרה של צור To the ladder of the Tyrians, he saw men labouring in digging their grounds, in gathering their Vintage, and in husbandry: and then he said, Let my portion be in this Land.

b Bereſh. rabb. §. 39.

Note, how Abraham coming into the Land of Canaan, is first brought into the North part of it; for there was Scala Tyriorum, The Ladder of the Tyrians. Canaan in like manner with his sons, travailing from Babylon went the same way, and possesseth first the North parts, both those that were without the Land of Canaan, and those that were parts of the Land of Canaan it self.

First, Let the seats of these his four sons without the Land of Canaan be observed.

I. ארודי Arvadi, The Arvadites. Which word in all Versions almost is read as Aradi, The Aradites. And their seats are easily discovered in Arad, and Antarad. Jonathan for ארודי Arvadi the Arvadites, reads לוטסאי The Lutasites. Which people, in what part of the World were they? When I search in the Aruch what the word לוטס Lutas means, he cites these words out of Bereshith Rabba. A certain woman of the family of טבריגוס Tiberinus was married ללוטס אחד to one Lutas: and when accordingly I search Bereschith Rabbah, I find it there written, She was married ללסטים אחד to a certain robber.

If it were written in Jonathan לטוסאי instead of לוטסאי I should suspect his eye was bent upon Latavin, a place of Phenicia: concerning which mention is made in the Notitia Imperii; where the Roman Garrisons under the Duke of Phenice are Otthara, Euhara, Saltucha, Latavis, &c.

II. צמרי Zemari, The Zemarites. In the Targumists both that of Jerusalem, and of Jonathan it is חמצי Chamatsi. So it is in the Arabic, and in the Jerusalem Gemarists c; and also in Bereshith Rabbah d; which either supposeth them called צמרי Zemarites, or alludes to the word, שעושין בצמר because they wrought in צמר Zemer, woollen manufacture. But Chamats and Apamia are convertible terms in the Jerusalem Talmudists: ימא דאפמיא ימא דחמץ The Sea of Apamia, say they, is the Sea of Chamats. e But now that Apamia, we shew elsewhere, is the same with Sepham; on the utmost coast of the Land of Israel North, and North East.

c Hieroſ. Megill. fol. 71. 2. d Bereſh. rabb. § 37.
e Hieroſ. Chetubb, fol. 35. 2.

III. ערקי Arki, The Arkites. ארקו ארקם דליבנן f Arki is Arcas of Libanus. Pliny writes thus, g Paneas, in which is Cesarea with the Spring before spoken, Abila, Arca, &c. Borchard thus, In terminos (read Inter) Libani & Antilibani offendimus castrum Arachos, &c. On (or rather between) the borders of Libanus and Antilibanus we found the strong hold Arachas, and built by Arachens the son of Canaan, when the deluge was over.

f Bereſh. Rab. in the place before.
g Nat. Hiſt. lib. 5. 19.

IV. חמתי Hamathi, The Hamathites. In the Jerusalem Targum it is Antioch. And Bereshith Rabbah not much from that sense, though in very different words, סיני ארתוסיורה A Smite, saith he, and Arethusia: חמתי פיפניה Chamathi is Epiphania. Thus Pliny, The rest of Syria hath these people, except what shall be said with Euphrates, the Aretheusians, the Bercans, and the Epiphanians.

You see the Antiochian and Syrophenician Syria possessed by the Canaanites, and yet we are not come as far as the Land of Canaan.

Let us therefore proceed onwards with Canaan, and the rest of his sons. The borders of the Canaanites, saith the Holy Scripture, were from Sidon to Gerar, even unto Gaza, Gen. X. 19. You will say, they were from Antioch, and utmost Phenicia, and a great part of Syria. True indeed, those Countries, as we have seen, were planted by the sons of Canaan, but the Scripture doth not call them Canaanites, but where their Coasts end towards the South, there the Canaanites begin. The Tract therefore, or Region, first possest by them, is called by a peculiar name Canaan, as distinct from the rest of the Land of Canaan, Judg. IV. 2. Where Jabin the King of Hazor, is called The King of Canaan, that is, of the Northern coast of the Land of Canaan. And among the seven Nations, devoted by God himself to a curse and cutting off, the Canaanites are always numbred, when all indeed were Canaanites: and that, as it seems, upon a double reason: partly, because that Country was distinctly so called, as another Country, and was of a peculiar difference from those Countries inhabited by the sons of Canaan, of whom we have spoke:

partly

partly becauſe Canaan the Father, probably fixed his ſeat there himſelf, and thence both that Country was called Canaan, and the whole Land moreover called The Land of Canaan.

SECT. III.

The Perizzites, who?

REckon the ſons of Canaan in Gen. X. and where do you find the Perizzites? And yet, a matter to be wondered at, they are always numbered in that black Catalogue, of the ſeven Nations to be cut off.

I know, it is ſuppoſed by ſome, that they are called Perizzites, as much as to ſay Villagers, becauſe they dwelt in Villages, and ſmall Towns unfortified: which indeed varies not much from the derivation of the word: But certainly it is needleſs, when all the Canaanitiſh families are reckoned up, which poſſeſſed the whole Land, to add The Villagers over and above, who were ſufficiently included in the aforeſaid reckoning.

But that which we know was done by the Iſraelites, we juſtly ſuppoſe was done by the Canaanites alſo; namely, that ſome families of the Canaanite ſtock, were denominated not from the very immediate ſon of Canaan, from whom they derived their original, but from ſome famous and memorable man of that ſtock. Nor do we ſay this upon conjecture alone, but by very many examples among the Iſraelites, and indeed among other Nations, and this in that very Nation, of which we are ſpeaking. In Gen. XXXVI. Zibeon was the ſon of Seir, verſ. 20. and the whole Nation and Land was called, The Nation and Land of the ſons of Seir. But now that that Seir was of the Canaanite pedegree, appears ſufficiently hence, that his ſon Zibeon was called an Hivite, verſ. 2. After the ſame manner therefore as the Seirites, who were of Canaanite blood, were ſo named, I make no doubt the Perizzites were named from one Perez, a man of great name in ſome Canaanite ſtock.

SECT. IV.

The Kenites.

OF the ſame rank were the Kenites, the Knizzites, Cadmonites: by original indeed Canaanites, but ſo named from ſome Cain, and Kenaz, and Cadmon, men of famous renown in thoſe families. If ſo be the Cadmonites were not ſo called from their antiquity, or rather from their habitation Eaſtward: Which is the derivation of Saracens, from Saracon, the Eaſt.

The Maſters of the Traditions do not agree among themſelves what to reſolve concerning theſe Nations. In the Jeruſalem Talmudiſts you have theſe paſſages. h Your Fathers poſſeſſed ſeven Nations, but you ſhall poſſeſs the Land of ten Nations. The three laſt are theſe, the Kenites, the Kenizzites, the Cadmonites, R. Judah ſaith, Theſe are the Salmeans, the Sabeans, and the Nabatheans. R. Simeon ſaith, Aſia, אסטטיס and Damaſcus. R. Lazar ben Jacob ſaith, Aſia and Cartagena, and Turky. Rabbi ſaith, Edom and Moab, and the firſt fruits of the children of Ammon. h Hieroſ. Kidduſh. fol. 61. 4.

In the Babylonian Talmudiſts theſe paſſages. i Samuel ſaith, All that Land, which God ſhewed to Moſes, is bound to tithes, To exclude what? To exclude the Kenites, the Kenizzites, the Cadmonites. A Tradition. R. Meir ſaith, Theſe are the Naphtuchites, the Arabians, and the Salmeans, R. Judah ſaith, Mount Seir, Ammon, and Moab. R. Simeon ſaith, ערריסקים Aſia and Spain. i Bab. Bathra, fol. 56. 1.

l Theſe Nations were not delivered to Iſrael in this age, but they ſhall be delivered in the days of the Meſſias. ——— l Beriſh rab. fol. 28. 2.

In m the days of the Meſſias they ſhall add three other Cities of refuge. But whence? From the Cities of the Kenites, the Kenizzites, and the Cadmonites. Concerning whom God gave a promiſe to our father Abraham, but they are not as yet ſubdued. m Maimon. id רוצה cap. 8.

We may borrow light concerning theſe Nations from thoſe words of Moſes, Gen. X. 18. Afterwards the families of the Canaanites were diſperſed. Firſt, They repleniſhed Phenicia, and the Northern Country of the Land of Canaan; by little and little the whole Land of Canaan within Jordan. Then they ſpread themſelves into the Land which afterwards belonged to the Edomites, and there they were called Horites from Mount Hor; and the children of Seir, from Seir the father of thoſe families, he himſelf being a Canaanite. On the Eaſt they ſpread themſelves into thoſe Countries, which afterwards belonged to the Moabites, the Ammonites, the Midianites; and they were called Kenites, Kenizzites, Cadmonites, from one Cain, one Kenaz, and perhaps one Cadmon, the fathers of thoſe families; if ſo be the Cadmonites were not ſo called from the aforeſaid cauſes.

The mention of a certain Cain, calls to my mind the Town or City Cain, which you see in the Maps placed not far from Carmel: in that of Doet, adorned (shall I say?) or disfigured with a Dutch picture of one man shooting another, with this inscription Cain wert geschoten van Lamech. Cain was shot by Lamech, Gen. IV. A famous monument forsooth! That place indeed is obscure, Gen. IV. and made more obscure by the various opinions of Interpreters: and you, Doet, have chosen the worst of all. If the word Lamech may be cleared from the Text (and if you clear it not from the context, whence will you clear it?) they carry this plain and smooth sense with them. He had brought in Bigamy: that also had laid waste the whole World, Gen. VI. For so wretched a wickedness, and which by his example was the destruction of infinite numbers of men, Divine Justice and Vengeance strikes and wounds him with the horror and sting of conscience, so that groaning and howling before his two bigamous wives, Adah and Zillah, he complains, and confesseth that he is a much more bloody murtherer than Cain. For he had only slain Abel, but he an infinite number of young and old by his wicked example.

SECT. V.

רפאים Rephaim.

THE Samaritan Interpreter always renders these, Aseans, in Gen. XV. 20. written with Cheth. But in Deut. II. 20. with Aleph. If they were called Aseans, as they were by him, so by all other speaking Syriac and Chaldee; I know not whence the word Asia may more fitly be derived, than from the memory of this Gygantic race living almost in the middle of Asia, and monstrous and astonishing above all other Asiatics. The LXX call them Τιτάνας, Titans, 2 Sam. V. 18. 22. The word used by the Samaritan denotes Physicians, and so it is rendred by me in the Polyglot Bible, lately published at London, Deut. II. partly that it might be rendred word for word, but especially, that it might be observed by what sound, and in what kind of pronunciation he read the word רפאים Rephaim. So the LXX render it, Ἰατροί, Physicians, Esa. XXVI. 14. &c.

CHAP. I.

VERS. I.

Ἀρχὴ τοῦ Εὐαγγελίου. The beginning of the Gospel.

THE Preaching and Baptism of John was the very gate, and entrance into the state and dispensation of the Gospel. For

I. He opened the door of a new Church by a new Sacrament of admission into the Church.

II. Poynting as it were with the finger at the Messias that was coming, he shewed the beginning עולם הבא of the world to come.

III. In that manner, as the Jews by Baptism admitted Gentile Proselytes, into the Jewish Church; he admits both Jews and Gentiles into the Gospel Church.

IV. For the doctrine of justification by works, which the Schools of the Scribes had defiled all Religion with, he brings in a new (and yet not a new) and truly saving doctrin of Faith and Repentance.

VERS. II.

Ὡς γέγραπται ἐν τοῖς Προφήταις. As it is written in the Prophets.

HERE a doubt is made of the true reading: namely, whether it be Ἐν τοῖς Προφήταις; In the Prophets, or Ἐν Ἡσαΐᾳ τῷ προφήτῃ, In Esaias the Prophet. These particulars make for the former.

I. When two places are cited out of two Prophets, it is far more congruously said, As it is written in the Prophets, than, As it is written in Esaias, but especially, when the place first alledged is not in Esaias, but in another Prophet.

II. It was very customary among the Jews (to whose custom in this matter it is very probable the Apostles conformed themselves in their Sermons) to hear many testimonies cited out of many Prophets under this form of speech ככתוב בנביאים As it is written in the Prophets. If one only were cited, if two, if more, this was the most common manner of citing them, As it is written in the Prophets. But it is without all example, when two testimonies are taken out of two Prophets, to name only the last, which is done here, if it were to be read, As it written in Esaias the Prophet.

III. It is clear enough from the scope of the Evangelist, that he propounded to himself to cite those two places, both out of Malachi; and out of Esaias. For he doth two things most evidently. 1. He mentions the Preaching of the Baptist, for the illustrating of which he produceth the same text, which both Matthew and Luke do, out of Esaias. 2. He saith that that preaching was The beginning of the Gospel; to prove which he very aptly cites Malachi, of sending a Messenger, and of preparing the way of the Lord.

But what shall we answer to Antiquity, and to so many, and so great men reading, As it is written in Esaias the Prophet. I wonder, saith the very learned Grotius, that any doubt is made of the truth of this writing, when beside the Authority of copies, and Ireneus so citing it, there is a manifest agreement of the ancient Interpreters, the Syriac, the Latine, the Arabic. True indeed, nor can it be denyed that very many of the Antients so read, but the Antients read also, As it is written in the Prophets. One Arabic copy hath, In Esaiah the Prophet: but another hath, In the Prophets. Irenæus once reads, In Esaiah: but reads twice, In the Prophets. a And, so we find it written, saith the famous Beza, (who yet follows the other reading,) in all our ancient copies, except two, and that my very ancient one, in which we read, Ἐν Ἡσαΐᾳ τῷ Προφήτῃ, In Esaias the Prophet.

a Lib. 3. cap. 11. & 18.

The whole knot of the question lies in the cause of changing the reading; Why, As it is written in Esaias the Prophet, should be changed into, As it is written in the Prophets; the cause is manifest, saith that very learned man, namely, because a double testimony is taken out of two Prophets. But there could be no cause, saith he, of changing of them. For if Mark in his own Manuscipt, wrote, As it is written in the Prophets, by what way could this reading at last creep in, As it is written in Esaias, when two Prophets are manifestly cited?

Reader, will you give leave to an innocent and modest guess. I am apt to suspect, that, in the Copies of the Jewish Christians, it was read, In Esaiah the Prophet; but in those of the Gentile Christians, In the Prophets: and that the change among the Jews arose from hence, that St. Mark seems to go contrary to a most received Canon and Custom of the Jews. b He that reads the Prophets in the Synagouges אין מרלגין מנביא לנביא Let him not skip from one Prophet to another. But in the lesser Prophets, he may skip: with this provision only that he skip not backward: that is, not from the latter to the former.

b Migil. f. 24. 1.

But you see, how Mark skips here (from whom far be it, to be subject to such foolish Canons) from a Prophet of one rank, namely, from a Prophet who was one of the twelve, to a Prophet of another rank; and you see also, how he skips backward from Malachi to Esaiah. This perhaps was not so pleasing to the Christian Jews, too much Judaizing yet, nor could they well bear, that this allegation should be read in their Churches, so differently from the common use. Hence, In Esaiah the Prophet, was inserted for, In the Prophets. And that they did so much the more boldly, because those words which are cited out of Malachi are not exactly agreeable either to the Hebrew Original, or the Greek Version: and those that are cited from Esaiah, are cited also by Matthew and Luke; and the sense of them which are cited from Malachi may also be fetched from the place alledged out of Esaiah.

VERS. VI.

Ἐνδεδυμένος τρίχας καμήλου. Cloathed with Camels hair.

IN the Talmudists it would be read צמר גמלים Camels Wool. c He hath not a garment besides a Woolen one, לרבות צמר גמלים וצמר ארנבים to add wool (or hair) of Camels, and wool of Hares. צמר רחלים וכו' d Wool of Sheep, and Wool of Camels which they mix, &c. And a little after, ואפיל עשה בגד מצמר גמלים If he make a garment of Camels hair, and weave in it but one thred of Linnen, it is forbidden, as things of different kinds.

c Menacoth, fol. 39. 2.

d Orach Chajim, lib. 2. 309.

There

There is one that thinks, that thoſe garments of Adam, concerning which it is ſaid, that God made for them כתנות עור Coats of Skins, were of Camels hair. בתורת רבי מצאו כתוב כתנות אור In the Law of R. Meir, They found written כתנות אור Garments of light. R. Iſaac ſaith, that they were like thoſe thin linnen garments, which come from Beiſhan. R. Samuel bar Nachman ſaith, they were of the wool (or hair) of Camels, and the wool of Hares. e Bereſh. Rab. §. 20.

We cannot paſs that by without obſervation that it is ſaid; That in the Law of R. Meir they found written כתנות אור Garments of light, for כתנות עור Garments of Skins. The like to which is that, f In the Law of R. Meir they found it written inſtead of והנה טוב מאד Behold it was very good, והנה טוב מות And behold death is a good thing. Where by the Law of R. Meir, ſeems to be underſtood ſome volum of the Law, in the margin of which, or in ſome papers put in, that Rabbin had writ his critical toyes, and his fooliſh pieces of wit upon the Law, or ſome ſuch trifling commentary of his own upon it. f Ibid. §. 9.

Ἐσθίων ἀκρίδας. Eating Locuſts.

They who had not nobler proviſion, hunted after Locuſts for food. g The Gemariſts feign, that there are eight hundred kinds of them, namely of ſuch as are clean. That Lexicographer certainly would be very acute, who could deſcribe all theſe kinds particularly by their names. g Hieroſ. Taanith, fol. 69. 2.

The Rabbins deliver, הצר הגבים והגוין וגו׳ h He that hunts Locuſts, Waſps (a kind of Locuſts) Hornets, and Flies on the Sabbath, is guilty. The Gloſs there, הגוין are a kind of clean locuſts, and are eaten. And the Gemara a little after, He that hunts Locuſts in the time of the dew (on the Sabbath) is not guilty. The Gloſs there writes thus, The Locuſts in the time of the dew are purblind; ſo that if you hunt them at that time, they ſtop their pace. The Gemara goes on, Eliezer ben Mahbai ſaith, If they go in Flocks he is not guilty. The Gloſs writes, If they flock together in troops, and be as it were ready to be taken, he is not guilty, who hunts them even in the time of heat. h Bab. Schabb. fol. 106. 2.

VERS. XIII.

Καὶ ἦν μετὰ τῶν θηρίων. And was with the Wild Beaſts.

HE was among the wild beaſts, but was not touched by them. So Adam firſt before his fall.

Καὶ Ἄγγελοι διηκόνουν αὐτῷ. And Angels miniſtred to him.

Forty days he was tempted by Satan invifibly, and Angels miniſtred to him viſibly. Satan at laſt put on the appearance of an Angle of light, and pretending to wait on him, as the reſt alſo did, hid his hook of temptation the more artificially.

VERS. XXIV.

Ἦλθες ἀπολέσαι ἡμᾶς; Art thou come to deſtroy us?

US? Whom? The Devils? or thoſe Galileans in the Synagouge? See what the Maſters ſay. i In that Generation in which the Son of David ſhall come, ſaith Rabban Gamaliel, Galilea ſhall be laid waſt, and the Galileans ſhall wander from City to City, and ſhall not obtain mercy. If ſuch a report obtained in the Nation, the Devil thence got a very fit occaſion in this poſſeſſed man, of affrighting the Galileans from receiving Chriſt, becauſe they were to expect nothing from his coming, but devaſtation. i Maſſecheth, Derech aretz Zuta, cap. 6.

VERS. XXXVIII.

Κωμοπόλεις. Towns.

WHAT this word means may be excellently well diſcovered by ſearching into the diſtinction between כרכים & כפרים and עירות to which Πόλεις, Cities, and κῶμαι, Villages, and κωμοπόλεις Towns in the Evangeliſts do anſwer.

I. I render כרכים by Πόλεις, Cities, But by what word, you will ſay, will you render עירות? By κωμοπόλεις, Towns. l A man cannot compel his wife to follow him to dwell. לא מעיר לכרך ולא מכרך לעיר from Town to City, nor from City to Town. The proper Engliſh of which take from what follows. שלמא מכרך לעיר It is plain why he cannot force l Bab. Chetub. fol. 110.

force her from City to Town, דבכרך שכיחי כל מילי Because in a City any thing is to be found, or to be had; אלא בעיר But in a Town any thing is not to be had. The Gloſs writes, כרך גדול מעיר Kerac is greater than Ir (that is, A City than a Town) And there is a place of broad ſtreets, where all neighbouring Inhabitants meet at a Market, and there any thing is to be had. So the ſame Gloſs elſewhere, m Kerac is a place of broad ſtreets, where men met together from many places, &c.

m Joma, fol. 12.

The Gemariſts go on: R. Joſi bar Chaninah ſaith, Whence is it, that dwelling in כרכין Keracin (cities) is more inconvenient? For it is ſaid, And they bleſſed all the people who offered themſelves willingly to dwell at Jeruſalem. (Neh. XI.) Note by the way, that Jeruſalem was כרך Kerac. The Gloſs there is, Dwelling in Keracin is worſe, becauſe all dwell there, and the houſes are ſtreightned, and joyn one to another, ſo that there is not free air. But בעיר In a Town are gardens and paradices by the houſes, and the air is more wholeſome.

כרכים Keracim therefore were 1. Cities girt with walls. Hence is that diſtinction כרכין המוקפין חומה מימי יהושע that there were ſome Keracin which were girt with walls from the days of Joſhuah, and ſome walled afterwards. 2. Trading and Mart Cities, and that were greater and nobler than the reſt.

II. כפרים therefore were Villages, or Country Towns, in which no Synagogue was. Hence is that כרך שאין בו י' בטלנין נדון ככפר n A Kerac (a City) in which are not ten men to make a Synagogue, is to be reckoned for a Village. And o where ſome of a Village are bound to read the book of Eſther in the Feaſt of Purim: ומקרימים ליום הכניסה it is indulged to them to do it on a Synagogue day: that is, when they had not a Synagogue among them, but muſt reſort to ſome neighbour Town, where a Synagogue was, it was permitted them to go thither on ſome week day, appointed for meeting together in the Synagogue; and that they might not take the trouble of a journey on another day, however that day was appoynted by Law for that Leſſion.

n פטקו דראש in Megil. cap. 1. o Megil. cap. 1.

III. עיר Which word is commonly rendred Urbs or Civitas, A City, and denoted generally fortified Cities and Towns alſo not fortified, where Synagogues were, and Villages where they were not. Hence is that diſtinction עיר גדולה That was a great City where there was a Synagogue: עיר קטנה A ſmall City, where there was not.

By κωμοπόλεις therefore here are to be underſtood Towns, where there were Synagogues, which nevertheleſs were not either fortified, or Towns of trade: among us Engliſh called Church-Towns.

CHAP. II.

VERS. IV.

Ἀπεστέγασαν τὴν στέγην, &c. They uncovered the roof, &c.

HERE I recollect that phraſe דרך גגין The way of the roof. a When Rabh Honna was dead, his Bier could not be carried out through the door, the door being too ſtraite, סבור שלשולי דרך גגין Therefore they thought good to draw it out and let it down through the roof, or (through the way of the roof.) But Rabh Chaſda ſaid to them, Behold, we have learned from him, That it redounds to the honour of a wiſe man to be carried out by the door.

a Bab. Mord Katon, fol. 25. 1.

b It is written, And they ſhall eat within thy gates (Deut. XXVI. 12.) that is, when the entrance into the houſe is by the gate. לאפולי דרך גגות To except the way through the roof. דרך פתחים וכו' c Does he enter into the houſe, uſing the way through the gate? or uſing the way through the roof? The place treats of an Houſe, in the lower part of which the Owner dwels, but the upper part, that which is called ὑπερῷον, is let out to another. It is asked, What way he muſt enter, who dwells in an upper room, whether by the door, and the lower parts, where the Owner dwels? Or whether he muſt climb up to the roof דרך גגין by the way to the roof: that is, as the Gloſs hath it, That he aſcend without the houſe by a ladder ſet againſt it, for entrance into the ὑπερῷον, the Upper Room, and ſo go into the Upper Room.

b Bava Metzia, fol. 88. 1. c Ibid. f. 117. 1.

By ladders ſet up or perhaps faſtned there before, they firſt draw up this Parylitic ἐπὶ δῶμα, upon the Roof, Luke V. 19. Then ſeeing there was a door in every roof, through which they went up from the lower parts of the houſe into the roof, and this being too narrow to let down the bed and the ſick man in it, they widen that ſpace by pulling off the tiles that lay about it.

Well:

Well: having made a hole through the roof, the Paralitic is let down εἰς τὸ ὑπερῶον, Into the Upper Chamber. There Chriſt ſits, and the Phariſees, and the Doctors of the Law with him, and not in the lower parts of the houſe. For it was cuſtomary for them, when they diſcourſed of the Law or Religion, to go up into the Upper Chamber.

d Theſe are the Traditions, which they taught בעליית In the Upper Chamber of Hananiah, ben Hezekiah, ben Garon. e The Elders went up לעליית into an Upper Chamber in Jericho. They went up alſo into an Upper Chamber in Jabneh. Rab. Jochanan and his Diſciples went up εἰς ὑπερῶον to an Upper Chamber, and read and expounded. Compare Mark XIV. 15. Act. I. 13. and XX. 8.

VERS. VII.

Τίς δύναται ἁμαρτίας ; Who can forgive ſins ?

A Certain f Heretic ſaid to Rabh Idith, It is written, And he ſaid unto Moſes, Come up unto the Lord (Exod. XXIV. 1.) It ſhould rather have been ſaid, Come up to me. He anſwereth, This is Mitatron, whoſe name is like the name of his Lord, as it is written, My Name is in him, (Exod. XXIII. 21.) If it be ſo, then ſaid the other, he is to be worſhipped. To whom Idith replyed, אל תמר בו אל תמירני בו Properly: Do not embitter, or, provoke him; but they illy and perverſly read, Do not change for him, do not exchange me for him. If that be the ſenſe, ſaid the other, What is the meaning of that, He will not forgive your ſins? He anſwered, true indeed, בפרוונקא נמי לא קבלניה For we received him not ſo much as for a meſſenger. The Gloſs is, He will not forgive your ſins, that is, He cannot pardon your ſins, and then what advantage is there from him? For he had not the power of pardoning our ſins; we therefore rejected him, &c. Ye rejected him indeed, in whom was the name of Jehovah: but alas! how much to your own miſchief!

f Sanhedr. fol. 38. 2.

VERS. IX.

Τί ἐστιν εὐκοπώτερον εἰπεῖν ; Which is eaſier to ſay, &c.

HE that obſerves the uſe of the word נוחא It is eaſie, and קשיא It is hard, in the Jewiſh Schools (and the School men were now with Chriſt) cannot think it improper, that εὐκοπώτερον ſhould be of the ſame import with נוחא Which word denotes the thing, or the ſenſe plain, ſmooth and without ſcruple קשיא It is hard, denotes the contrary. As if our Saviour had ſaid, were not the ſenſe plainer, and more ſuited to the preſent buſineſs, to have ſaid, Ariſe and take up thy bed, than to ſay, Thy ſins are forgiven thee? But I ſay thus, That ye may know that the Son of man hath power, &c. He does not ſpeak of the eaſineſs of the pronunciation of the words, but of the eaſineſs of the ſenſe. And I ſhould thus render the words, It is eaſier to ſay to the Paralytic, Thy ſins are forgiven thee, than to ſay, &c. Whether to ſay, as it is vulgarly rendred, hath a ſenſe not to be diſapproved of; but, Then to ſay, hath a ſenſe more emphatical. Is not the ſenſe eaſier, as to the preſent buſineſs, to ſay, Thy ſins are forgiven, than to ſay, Riſe up and walk.

VERS. XII.

Ἐξῆλθεν ἐναντίον πάντων. He went out before them all.

IT is very well rendred, Before them all: and it might truly be rendred Againſt them all, according to another ſignification of the word ἐναντίον. That is, when the multitude was ſo crowded, that there was no way of going out through it, he being not only made whole, but ſtrong and luſty, preſſed through the preſs of the multitude, and ſtoutly made his way with his bed upon his ſhoulders.

VERS. XVI.

Καὶ ἁμαρτωλῶν. And Sinners.

WHO were they? g Dicers, Uſurers, Plunderers, Publicans, Shepherds of leſſer Cattle, thoſe that ſell the fruit of the ſeventh year, thoſe that make gain of birds with their fiſts, &c.

g Sanhedr. fol. 25. 2.

VERS.

VERS. XXVI.

Ἐπὶ Ἀβιάθαρ τοῦ Ἀρχιερέως. In the days of Abiathar the High Priest.

IT is well enough known, what is here said in defence of the purity of the text: namely, that Ahimelech the father was called Abiathar, and Abiathar the Son was called also Ahimelech. But I suppose, that something more was propounded by our Saviour in these words. For it was common to the Jews, under Abiathar, to understand the Urim and Thummim. Nor without good reason, when it appears, that under the Father and the Son, both of that name, the mention of enquiring by Urim and Thummim is more frequent, than it is ever any where else; and after Abiathar the Son, there is scarcely mention of it at all. Christ therefore very properly adds ὅτι Ἀβιάθαρ Ἀρχιερέως, In the days of Abiathar the High Priest, therein speaking according to a very received opinion in the Nation: as though he had said, David eat the Shew-bred given him by the High Priest, who had the Oracle by Urim and Thummim present with him, and who acted by the Divine direction.

b Bab. Sanhedr. fol. 16. 2. h Ahitopel, that is, A Councellour, Benaiah, the Son of Jehoiadah, that is the Sanhedrin, אביתר אילו אורים ותמים Abiathar, that is, Urim and Thummim.

CHAP. III.

VERS. IV.

Οἱ δὲ ἐσιώπων. But they held their peace.

THIS reminds me of the like carriage of the Sanhedrin, in judging a Servant of King Janneus, a murtherer, when Janneus himself was present in the a Sanhedrin. It was found sufficiently that he was guilty, but for fear they dared not to utter their opinion, when Simeon ben Sheta, President of the Sanhedrin required it. נפנה לימינו כבשו פניהם בקרקע He looked on his right hand, and they fixed their eyes upon the earth, on his left hand, and they fixed their eyes upon the earth, &c.

a Sanhedr. fol. 19. 1.

VERS. XVII.

Βοανεργές. Boanerges.

I SEE what Beza saith here. To which our very learned Hugh Broughton, a man very well exercised in these studies, replies. The Jews to this very day pronounce Ceva by oa, as Noabhyim for Nebhyim. So Boanerges. When Theodore Beza will have it written Benerges, the very Jews themselves will defend our Gospel.

Certainly it is somewhat hard, and bold to accuse the Scripture of St. Mark, as corrupt, for this manner of pronunciation, when among the Jews, the pronouncing of some letters, vowels, words, was so different and indifferent, that they pronounced one way in Galilee, another way in Samaria, and another way in Judea. And I remember, saith the famous Ludovicus de Dieu, b that I heard the excellent Erpenius say, that he had it from the mouth of a very learned Maronite, that it could not be taught by any Grammatical rules, and hardly by word of mouth, what sound Scheva hath among the Syrians.

b In his Preface ad Apoc. Syriac.

That Castel of noted fame, which is called Masada in Josephus, Pliny, Solinus, and others (in Hebrew מצדה) in Strabo is Moasada, very agreeable to this our sound. Πέλεκας τινὰς ὑπικαιομένας δείκνυσι Τραχεῖας περὶ Μοασάδα. c Some scorched rocks about Moasada. Where without all controversie, he speaks of Masada.

c Strab. Geograph. lib. 16.

II. There is is a controversie also about the word Erges. It is obscure in what manner it is applyed to Thunder. But give me your judgment, courteous Reader, what רגשא is in this story. d The Father of Samuel sat in the Synagogue of Shaph, and Jathib, in Nehardea. אתיא שכינתא The divine Glory came, ולא נפק רגשא קול שמע He heard the voice of רגשא Rigsha, and went not out: the Angels came, and he was affrighted.

d Megil. fol. 29. 1.

Of the word רגשא Rigsha the Glossers say nothing. And we do not confidently render it Thunder, nor yet do we well know how to render it better: if so be it doth not denote denote ἦχος ὥσπερ φερομένης πνοὴς βιαίας, the ſound as of a mighty ruſhing wind, Act. II. 2. But let the Reader judg.

III. As obſcure is the reaſon of the name, impoſed upon theſe two Diſciples, as the derivation of the word. We have only this certain in this buſineſs, that we never find them called by this name elſewhere. Chriſt called Simon Peter, and likewiſe others called him Peter, and he calls himſelf ſo. But you never find James called Boanerges, or John ſo called, either by themſelves or by others. We muſt truſt conjecture for the reſt.

IV. It is well enough known, what the Phraſe בת קול Bath Kol, the daughter of thunder, means among the Jews. Our Saviour uſing another word, ſeems to reſpect another Etymology of the name. But it is demanded, what that is. He calls Simon Peter with reſpect had to the work he was to ply, in building the Church of the Gentiles upon a rock. For he firſt opened the door to let in the Goſpel among the Gentiles. Whether were James and John called Sons of thunder with reſpect had to their ſtout diſcourſing againſt the Jews, we neither dare to ſay, nor can we deny it. James did this, as it ſeems, to the loſs of his life, Act. XII.

But what if alluſion be here made to the two Regiſters, or Scribes of the Sanhedrin? whereof one ſat on the right hand, and the other on the left; one wrote the Votes of thoſe that quitted, the other the Votes of thoſe that condemned. e Or to the Preſident himſelf, and the Vice-Preſident? Whoſe definitive ſentence, ſumming up the Votes of the whole Sanhedrin, was like thunder and lightning to the condemned perſons, and ſeemed to all like the Oracles given from Sinai out of lightning and thunder.

e Sanhedr. fol. 35. 1. & Maimon. in Sanhedr. cap. 1.

V. But whatſoever that was in the mind of our Saviour, that moved him to imprint this name upon them, when theſe two Brethren, above all the other Diſciples, would have fire fall from Heaven upon that Town of the Samaritans, which refuſed to give Chriſt entertainment, Luke, IX. 54. they ſeem to act according to the ſenſe of this ſurname. And when the Mother of theſe deſired a place for one of them on Chriſts right hand, and for the other on his left, ſhe took the confidence of ſuch a requeſt probably from this, that Chriſt had ſet ſo honourable a name upon them above the other Diſciples. And when John himſelf calls himſelf The Elder κατ' ἐξοχήν, and he was ſufficiently known to thoſe to whom he writ, under that bare title Ὁ Πρεσβύτερος The Elder; I cannot but ſuſpect, this diſtinguiſhing Character aroſe hence. All the Apoſtles indeed were Elders, which Peter ſaith of himſelf, 1 Pet. V. 1. but I ask, whether any of the twelve, beſides this our Apoſtle, (his Brother James being now dead) could be known to thoſe that were abſent under this title The Elder, by a proper, not additional name, as he is in his two latter Epiſtles.

VERS. XXI.

Ὅτι ἐξέστη. He is beſide himſelf.

IN the Talmudiſts it is, נחרפה דעתו His judgment is gone, and שף דעתיה His underſtanding is ceaſed. f If any becomes mute, ונכנה דעתו and yet is of a ſound mind, and they ſay to him, ſhall we write a bill of Divorce for thy wife? and he nods with his head, and they try him thrice, &c. And it is neceſſary, that they make trial of him more exactly, שמא נטרפה דעתו leſt perhaps he might be deprived of his ſenſes. This is to be underſtood of a dumb perſon, made ſo by ſome Paralytical or Apoplectical ſtroke, which ſometimes wounds the underſtanding.

f Maimon. Geruſch. cap. 2.

The g Rabbins deliver: If any one is ſick, and in the mean time any of his friends die, they do not make it known to him, that ſuch a one is dead, שמא תטרף דעתו Leſt his underſtanding be diſturbed. One h thus lamented R. Simeon ben Lachiſh; Where art thou, O bar Lachiſh? Where art thou, O bar Lachiſh? And ſo cryed out עד דשף דעתיה Until his underſtanding periſhed. For ſo the Gloſs renders it.

g Moed Katon, fol. 26. 2.

h Bava Mezia, fol. 84. 1.

How fitly this word ἐξέστη expreſſeth theſe Phraſes, is readily obſerved by him, who underſtandeth both Languages. And a Jew reading theſe words in Mark, would preſently have recourſe to the ſenſe of thoſe phraſes in his nation; which do not always ſignifie madneſs, or being bereft of ones wits, in the proper ſenſe, but ſometimes and very frequently ſome diſcompoſure of the underſtanding for the preſent, from ſome too vehement paſſion. So ſay Chriſts friends, נטרפה דעתו His knowledg is ſnatched away. He hath forgotten himſelf, and his own health, he is ſo vehement and hot in diſcharging his office, and in preaching, that he is tranſported beyond himſelf, and his underſtanding is diſturbed, that he neither takes care of his neceſſary food, nor of his ſleep. Thoſe his friends indeed have need of an Apology, that they had no ſounder, nor holier, nor wiſer conceit of him: but it is ſcarcely credible, that they thought him to be fallen into plain and abſolute madneſs, and pure diſtraction. For he had converſed among the multitudes before, at all times, in all places, and yet his friends do not ſay this of him. But now he was retired to his own houſe at Capernaum, were he might juſtly exſpect reſt and repoſe; yet the multitudes ruſh upon him there, ſo that he could not enjoy his table and his bed at his own home. Therefore his friends and kinsfolk of Nazareth (among whom was his Mother, verſ. 31.) hearing this, unanimouſly run to him, to get him away from the multitude, for they ſaid among themſelves Ἐξέῃ, He is too much tranſported beyond himſelf, and is forgetful of himſelf.

CHAP. IV.

VERS. I.

Ἤρξατο διδάσκειν. He began to teach.

THAT is, he taught, by a Phraſe very uſual to theſe holy writers, becauſe very uſual to the Nation. שרי רב כהנא מאריך בצלותיה a Rabh Cahah began to be tedious in his oration; that is, He was tedious שרי ההוא תלמידא בכי b That Scholar began to weep, that is, He wept. שרי נעץ c The Ox began to low, that is, He lowed. When the Tyrants letter was brought to the Rabbins מרון בכיין they began to weep, d that is, They wept.

a Hieroſ. Sanhed. fol. 18. 3.
b Ibid. f. 23. 3.
c Beriſh. rabb. § 33.
d Ibid. §. 64.

This our Evangeliſt uſeth alſo another word, and that numberleſs times almoſt: the others alſo uſe it, but not ſo frequently: namely, the word Εὐθὺς, & εὐθέως, preſently; which anſwereth to the word מיך Out of hand, moſt common among the Talmudiſts. We meet with it in this our Evangeliſt ſeven or eight times in the firſt Chapter, and elſewhere very frequently: and that not ſeldom according to the cuſtom of the Idiom, more than out of any neceſſity of the thing ſignified.

VERS. IV.

Ὃ μὲν ἔπεσε. And ſome fell.

כדי נפילה : c According to what falls. The Gloſs there, According to the meaſure which one ſows. And there the Gemariſts ſpeak of מפולת יד ſeed falling out of the hand: that is, that is caſt out of the hand of the ſower: and of מפולת שוורים ſeed falling from the Oxen: that is, that which is ſcattered and ſown by the ſowing Oxen. For, as the Gloſs ſpeaks, ſometimes they ſow with the hand, and ſometimes they put the ſeed into a cart full of holes, and drive the Oxen upon the plowed earth, and the ſeed falls through the holes.

c Bava Metzia, fol. 105.

VERS. V.

Διὰ τὸ μὴ ἔχειν βάθος γῆς. Becauſe it had not depth of earth.

FOR it was rocky, whoſe turf nevertheleſs was thick enough, and very fruitful. But this ground which the parable ſuppoſeth, wanted that thickneſs. f You have not a more fruitful land among all lands, than the land of Egypt: nor a more fruitful Country in Egypt, than Zoan. And yet Hebron, which was rocky, exceeded it ſevenfold. Note that, It was rocky, and yet ſo fruitful.

f Sotah, fol. 34. 2 & Chetub. 112. 1

VERS. VII.

VERS.

VERS. XI.

Ἐκείνοις δὲ τοῖς ἔξω. To them that are without.

Οἱ ἔξω Thoſe without in Jewiſh ſpeech were the Gentiles; a phraſe taken hence, that they called all Lands and Countries, beſides their own חוצה לארץ Without the land. Would you have an exact inſtance of this diſtinction. h A tree, half of which grows within the land of Iſrael, and half without the land, the fruits of it which are to be tithed, and the common fruits are confounded. They are the words of Rabba. But Rabban Simeon Ben Gamaliel ſaith, That part which grows within the place, that is bound to tithing (that is, within the land of Iſrael) is to be tithed: that which grows in the place free from tithing (that is, without the land) is free. The Gloſs is, For if the roots of the tree are without the land, it is free, although the tree it ſelf extends it ſelf ſixteen cubits within the land. h Bava Bathra, fol. 27. 2.

Hence ספרים חיצונים Books οἱ ἔξω, that are without, are Heathen Books. ספרים החיצונים Extraneous books of Greek wiſdom. i

This is the common ſignification of the phraſe. And certainly it foretels dreadful things, when our bleſſed Saviour ſtigmatizeth the Jewiſh Nation with that very name, that they were wont to call the Heathens by. i Aruch in the word ברוס

The word חיצונים Thoſe without, occurs alſo in the Talmudiſts, when it ſignifies the Jews themſelves, that is ſome of the Jewiſh Nation. l Here קראים the Karaites, who rejected Traditions; there ציחונים οἱ ἔξω Thoſe without, are oppoſed to חכמים The wiſe Men. He that puts his Phylacteries on his forehead, or in the Palm of his hand הרי ו Behold! he follows the cuſtom of the Karaites. And he that overlays one of them with gold, and puts it upon his garment, which is at his hand, הרי ו דרך החיצונים Behold! he follows the cuſtom of thoſe that are without. Where the Gloſs, חיצונים are men, who follow their own will, and not the judgment of the wiſe Men. They are ſuppoſed to wear Phylacteries, and to be Jews; but when they do according to their pleaſure, and deſpiſe the rules of the wiſe Men, they are eſteemed as Thoſe that are without, or Heathens. So was the whole Jewiſh Nation according to Chriſts cenſure, which deſpiſed the Evangelical Wiſdom. l Megill. fol 24 2.

Ἐν παραβολαῖς πάντα γίνεται. All things are done in Parables.

I. How much is the Jewiſh Nation deceived concerning the times of the Meſſias? They think his forerunner Elias will explain all difficulties, reſolve ſcruples, and will render all things plain; ſo that when the Meſſias ſhall come after him, there ſhall be nothing obſcure or dark in the Law and in Religion. Hence theſe expreſſions and the like to them. m One found a bill of contracts in his keeping, and knew not what it meant. יהא מונח עד שיבא אליהו Let it be laid up till Elias ſhall come. And more in the ſame Tract concerning things found, when it is not known to whom they are to be reſtored, Let them be laid up till Elias come. פרשה ו עתיד אלידו לפרשה n That paſſage Ezek. XLV. 18, 19. Where עולה A burnt offering is called חטאת A ſacrifice for ſin, Elias will unfold. Infinite examples of that ſort occur. m Bav. Metzia, cap. 1. hal. ult. n Menacoth, fol. 45. 1.

But alas! thou art deceived, O Jew! all things are made clear which make to eternal Salvation, Elias and Meſſias, John and Chriſt preaching the Goſpel, when they came; but they are obſcure to you, both by reaſon of your voluntary blindneſs, who have ſhut your eyes and your mind againſt the ſaving Doctrine of the Goſpel; and from the juſt judgment of the Meſſias, who juſtly preached in clouds and in covered expreſſions to them, who would not ſee the Sun, and the open light.

II. How thoſe words have wracked Interpreters, Is a Candle put under a buſhel? &c. And, There is nothing hidden, &c. You ſee alſo without a Candle. A very eaſie ſenſe of them is gathered from the context. When Chriſt ſpeaks in Parables, A light is put under a buſhel. But the light, ſaith he, is not come for this end, that it ſhould be ſo hidden; nor indeed were it fit ſo to hide it, but that the Divine Juſtice would have it ſo, that they who will not ſee the light, ſhould not enjoy the light. But There is nothing hid which ſhall not be made manifeſt by the brightneſs of the Doctrine of the Goſpel, ſo there be Eyes, that do not refuſe the light, nor voluntarily become purblind. Therefore take you heed how you hear, leſt ye be like them, and Divine Juſtice meet to you by the ſame meaſure, as is meaſured to them, namely, that they ſhall never hear, becauſe they will not hear.

CHAP. V.

VERS. I.

Εἰς τὴν χώραν τῶν Γαδαρηνῶν. Into the Country of the Gadarens.

SO alſo Luke. But Matthew, εἰς τὴν χώραν Γεργεσηνῶν. Into the Country of the Gergeſens. And which ought not to be paſſed over without obſervation, Mark and Luke, who call it the Country of the Gadarens, make mention only of one poſſeſſed perſon, but Matthew, who calls it the Country of the Gergeſens, ſpeaks of two. We know what is here ſaid by Commentators to reconcile the Evangeliſts. We fetch their reconciliation from the very diſtinction of the words, which the Evangeliſts uſe, and that from thoſe concluſions.

I. We ſay, the Region of the Gergaſens was of broader extent and ſignification, than the Region of the Gadarens was, and that the Region of the Gadarens was included within it. For whether it were called ſo, from the old Gergaſite family of the Canaanites, or from the muddy and clayey nature of the ſoil, which was called גרגשתא Gergiſhta, by the Jews, which we rather believe; it was of wider extenſion than the Country of the Gadarens; which denoted only one City, and the ſmaller Country about it, and that belonged to Gadara. But this Country comprehended within it the Country of Gadara, of Hippo, and of Magdala, if not others alſo.

II. We ſay, Gadara was a City of Heathens (hence it is leſs marvail, if there were Swine among them.) Which we prove alſo elſewhere, when we treat of the Region of Decapolis.

III. We ſay, there were two poſſeſſed perſons, according to Matthew, one a Gadaren, another coming from ſome other place than the Country of Gadara, namely, from ſome place in the Country of the Gergaſens.

IV. We believe, that that Gadarene was a Heathen; and that Mark and Luke mentioned only him on ſet purpoſe, that ſo they might make the ſtory the more famous. Any one ſkilled in the Chorography of the land of Iſrael, might underſtand, that the Country of the Gadarens was of Heathen poſſeſſion: they therefore mark him with that name, that it might preſently be perceived, that Chriſt now had to do with a Heathen Poſſeſſed perſon; which was ſomewhat rare, and except the daughter of the Syrophenisſian woman, without any example. Matthew would deſcribe the greatneſs of the miracle; he therefore mentions two moſt miſerably poſſeſſed perſons; but Mark and Luke chuſe out only one, and him more remarkable for this very thing, that he was a Gadarene, and by conſequence, an Heathen. Theſe things well weighed, do not only confirm the concord between the Evangeliſts, but render the ſtory far clearer. For,

Firſt, It is to be marked, that the Devil adjures Chriſt not to torment him, verſ. 7. which is not elſewhere done by him. As though he were without Chriſts juriſdiction, not being among his people the Jews, but among the Heathens. And,

Secondly, Chriſt does not elſewhere aſk any about their name, beſides this alone, as being of more ſingular example and ſtory.

Thirdly, The Heathen name Λεγεὼν, Legion, argues him an Heathen, concerning whom the ſtory is.

Fourthly, The Devils beſought him much, that he would not ſend them out of the Country, for being among Heathens, they thought they were among their own.

Our Saviour therefore healed thoſe two in Matthew together, the one a Gadarene, and Heathen, and the other from ſome other place, a Gergeſen, and a Jew; and that not without a myſtery; namely, that there ſhould be comfort in Chriſt both to Jews and Gentiles, againſt the Power and Tyranny of Satan. Of thoſe two, Mark and Luke mention the more remarkable.

VERS. IX.

Λεγεὼν ὄνομά μοι. My name is Legion.

I. THIS name ſpeaks a numerous company, the Devil himſelf being the Interpreter; Legion, ſaith he, is my name, for we are many.

And among the Jews, when a man would expreſs a great number of any thing, it was not unuſual to name a Legion. a R. Eliezer ben Simeon ſaith נוח לו לאדם לגדל לגיון של זיתים בגליל a Bereſh. rabb. §. 20.

בגליל It is eaſier for a man to nouriſh a Legion of Olives in Galilee, than to bring up one child in the land of Iſrael.

II. Among the Talmudiſts, A Legion beſpeaks an unclean company, at leaſt they reckoned all the Legions for unclean. b The Rabbins deliver לגיון העובר A Legion that paſſeth from place to place, if it enter into any houſe, the houſe is thereby become unclean. שאין לך כל לגיון ולגיון שאין לו כמה קרקפלין For there is no Legion which hath not ſome Carcaphalia. And wonder not at this, when the Carcaphalion of R. Iſmael was faſtned to the heads of Kings. קרקפל Carcaphal, ſaith the Gloſs, is the ſkin of an head pulled off from a dead perſon, which they make uſe of in inchantments. It is a Greek word ſaith the Aruch. (Καρακεφαλή.) b Cholin, fol. 133. 1.

III. What the Romans thought of their Legions, take from the words of Ceſar to the Spainyards. c Did ye not conſider, if I were overthrown, that the people of Rome have ten Legions, which could not only reſiſt you, but pull down even Heaven it ſelf? What then is the power of more than twelve Legions of Angels? c Comment. de Bell. civil lib. 6

VERS. XIV.

Ἀνήγγειλαν εἰς τὰς ἀγρούς. Told it in the Country.

TOLD it, εἰς τὰς ἀγροὺς in the fields? But to whom? What? To them that laboured, or that travailed in the fields? So Chap. VI. 36. Ἀπελθόντες εἰς τοὺς κύκλῳ ἀγροὺς, ἀγοράσωσιν ἑαυτοῖς ἄρτους· That they may go away into the fields round about, and buy themſelves bread. From whom I pray, ſhould they buy in the fields? And verſ. 56. Καὶ ὅπου ἂν εἰσεπορεύετο εἰς κώμας, ἢ ἀγροὺς, ἐν ταῖς ἀγοραῖς ἐτίθεσαν τοὺς ἀσθενοῦντας· And whereſoever he entred into Towns or fields, they laid the ſick in the ſtreets, or markets. What ſtreets, or markets are there in the fields?

Rabba ſaith, That food made of meal, דחקלאי מפושי ביה of thoſe that dwell in the fields, in which they mingle much meal, over it they give thanks, חקלאי ſaith the Gloſs, are בני כפר Inhabitants of the Villages. And the Aruch ſaith, חקלייתא are private men, who dwell in the fields: that is, in houſes ſcattered here and there, and not built together in one place, as it is in Towns and Cities.

VERS. XXVI.

Καὶ πολλὰ παθοῦσα ὑπὸ πολλῶν ἰατρῶν. And had ſuffered many things of many Phyſicians.

AND it is no wonder: for ſee what various and manifold kinds of Medicines are preſcribed to a woman labouring under a flux. e R. Jochanan ſaith, לייתי מתקל Bring (or Take) of Gum of Alaxandria the weight of a Zuzee. ווא קומא אלכסנדריא And of Alum the weight of a Zuzee. ומתקל ווא גביא גילא And of Crocus Hortenſis the weight of a Zuzee. ומתקל ווא כורכמא רישקא let theſe be bruiſed together, and be given in Wine to the Woman, that hath an iſſue of blood, &c. ולישחקינהו וכו' e Bab. Schabb. fol. 110.

But if this does not benefit, לייתי תלתא קפיוי שמכי פרסאי Take of Perſian Onions thrice three logs, boile them in Wine, and then give it her to drink, and ſay קום מוביך Ariſe from thy flux.

But if this does not prevail, לותבה אפרש דרכים Set her in a place where two ways meet, and let her hold a cup of Wine in her hand; and let ſomebody come behind her, and affright her, and ſay, קום מוביך Ariſe from thy flux.

But if that do no good, לייתי בונא דכמונא Take a handful of Cummin, ובונא דמריקא And a handful of Crocus, ובונא דשבלילתא And a handful of Fœnum Græcum. Let theſe be boyled in Wine, and give them her to drink, and ſay, Ariſe from thy flux.

But

But if these do not benefit, other Doses and others still are prescribed, in number Ten or more, which see, if you please, in the place cited. Among them I cannot omit this.

ליכרי ז' בירי Let them dig seven ditches: in which let them burn some cuttings of such Vines, as are not circumcised; that is, that are not yet four years old. And let her take in her hand a cup of Wine. And let them lead her away from this ditch, and make her sit down over that. And let them remove her from that, and make her sit down over another. And in every removal you must say to her, Arise from thy flux, &c.

VERS. XXIX.

Ἐξηράνθη ἡ πηγὴ τοῦ αἵματος αὐτῆς. The fountain of her blood was dried up.

OF the fountain of the blood or of the flux, called by the Hebrews מקור See the places in the margin. f Where also it is treated of זבה גדולה The greater profluvious woman, and זבה קטנה The lesser. The former title you may well bestow upon this woman, who had laboured under a flux for twelve years.

f Niddah, cap. 2. hal. 4. Maimon. in Issur. biah, cap. 5. & 6

VERS. XLI.

Ταλιθὰ κοῦμι. Talitha Kumi.

Rabbi Jochanan saith, We remember when מטיילין טליא וטלייתא Boys and Girls, of sixteen and seventeen years old, played in the Streets, and no body was offended with them. Where the Gloss is, טליא וטלייתא Tali, and Talitha is a boy and a girle.

Τὸ κοράσιον, σοὶ λέγω, ἔγειραι. Damsel, I say unto thee, Arise.

Talitha Kumi signifies only, τὸ κοράσιον, ἔγειραι. Maid, arise. How comes that clause then, I say unto thee, to be inserted?

I. You may recollect here, and perhaps not without profit, that which was alledged before; namely, that it was customary among the Jews, when they applied Physick to the Profluvious woman, they said, Arise from thy flux: which very probably they used in other diseases also.

II. Christ said nothing else, than what sounded all one with, Maid, arise; but in the pronouncing and uttering those words, that authority and commanding power shined forth, that they sounded no less, than if he had said, Maid, I say to thee, or I command thee, Arise. They said, Arise from thy disease, that is, I wish, thou wouldst arise: but Christ saith, Maid, Arise, that is, I command thee, Arise.

VERS. XLIII.

Εἶπε δοθῆναι αὐτῇ φαγεῖν. He commanded that something should be given her to eat.

NOT as she was alive only, and now in good health, but as she was in a most perfect state of health, and hungry. The son of Rabban Gamaliel was sick. He sent therefore two Scholars of the wise Men to R. Chaninah ben Dusa into his City. He saith to them, Wait for me until I go up into the upper chamber: he went up into the upper chamber, and came down again, and said, I am sure that the son of Rabban Gamaliel is freed from his disease. The same hour he asked for food.

VERS. XIII.

Ἤλειφον ἐλαίῳ πολλοὺς ἀῤῥώστους. Anointed with Oyl many that were ſick.

THE Oyl therefore was, ſaith the famous Beza, a ſymbol of that miraculous power, not a medicament whereby they cured diſeaſes. But the Jews ſay, and that truly, ſuch an anointing was Phyſical, although it did not always obtain its end. But this anointing of the Apoſtles ever obtained its end. d R. Simeon ben Eliezer ſaith, R. Meir permitted the mingling of Wine and Oyl, and to anoint the ſick on the Sabbath. But when he once was ſick, and we would do the ſame to him, he permitted it not. This ſtory is recited elſewhere, e where for R. Simeon ben Eliezer, is R. Samuel ben Eliezer. Perhaps in the Manuſcript Copy it was written with an abreviation רש' and thence came the ambiguity of the name.

Let it be granted, ſuch anointing was Medicinal, which cannot poſſibly be denied, and then there is nothing obſcure in the words of James, Chap. But

II. But now two hundred Zuzees, or Pence, was a ſumm very famous, and of very frequent mention. h If one of elder years lay with a woman of leſs years, or if one of leſs years lay with a woman of elder years, or one that is wounded, their portion is מאתים two hundred Zuzees. i If one gives another a blow upon the cheek, נותן לו מאתי זוז Let him give him two hundred Zuzees. l A woman that is now become a widdow, or diſmiſſed by a Divorce, who was married a Virgin, let her have for her portion two hundred Zuzees.

h Chetub. cap. 1. hal. 2. i Bava Kama, cap. 8. hal. 6. l Chetubb. fol. 17. 1.

Hence perhaps is the ſame number of two hundred pence, in the mouth of the Diſciples, becauſe it was a moſt celebrated ſumm, and of very frequent mention in the mouths of all.

VERS. XL.

Πεζαὶ πεζαί. By ranks.

שורות שורות rank by rank in Talmudic Language. The Univerſity of Jabneh is very frequently celebrated under the name כרם ביבנה of the vineyard in Jabneh. And R. Solomon gives the reaſon שהיו יושבין שורות שורות Becauſe the Scholars ſat there ranks by ranks בכרם הנטוע שורות שורות Like a Vineyard which is planted rank by rank.

VERS. III.

Ἐὰν μὴ πυγμῇ νίψωνται. Except they waſh their hands.

Πυγμῇ, The fiſt. When they waſhed their hands, they waſhed the fiſt עד הפרק unto the joyning of the arm. ידים מטמאות ומיטהרות עד הפרק a The hands are polluted, and made clean unto the joyning of the arm. b The Rabbins deliver. לחולין עד הפרק The waſhing of hands, as to common things (or common food) was unto the joyning of the arm. And the cleanſing of hands and feet in the Temple was to the joynt. פרק faith the Aruch, is where the arm is diſtinguiſhed from the hand. So alſo where the foot is diſtinguiſhed from the leg.

a Jadaim, cap. 2. hal. 3. b Cholin, fol. 106.

c The ſecond Waters cleanſe, whatſoever parts of the hands the firſt waters had waſhed. But if the firſt waters had gone above the juncture of the arm, the ſecond waters do not cleanſe, becauſe they do not cleanſe אלא עד הפרק beyond the juncture. If therefore the Waters, which went above the juncture, return upon the hands again, they are unclean.

c Gloſs in Jadaim, in the place above.

VERS. IV.

Καὶ ἀπὸ ἀγορᾶς, ἐὰν μὴ βαπτίζωνται. And when they come from the Market, except they waſh.

THE Jews uſed גטילת ידים the waſhing of the hands, and טבילת ידים The plunging of the hands. And the word νίψωνται Waſh, in our Evangeliſt ſeems to anſwer to the former, and βαπτίζονται Baptize, to the latter.

I. That the plunging of the whole body is not underſtood here, may be ſufficiently proved hence, that ſuch plunging is not uſed, but when pollution is contracted from the more principal cauſes of uncleanneſs. d A man and Veſſels contract not uncleanneſs, אלא מאב הטומאה but from the father of uncleanneſs. Such as, Uncleaneſs from a creeping thing, from the ſeed in the unclean act, from him that is polluted by the dead, from a Leper, from the water of purification, from him that lies with a menſtruous woman, from the fluxe of him that hath the Gonorrhea, from his ſpittle, from his urine, from the bloud of a menſtruous woman, from a profluvious man, &c. By theſe a man was ſo polluted, that it was טיבול יום A days waſhing, and he muſt plunge his whole body. But for ſmaller uncleanneſſes, it was enough to cleanſe the hands.

d R. Sol. in Kelim, cap. 1.

II. Much leſs is it to be underſtood of the things bought; as if they when they were brought from the market, were to be waſhed (in which ſenſe ſome Interpreters render the words, And what they buy out of the market, unleſs they waſh it, they eat it not) when there were ſome things, which would not endure water, ſome things which when bought were not preſently preſently eaten; and the Traditional Canons diſtinguiſh between thoſe things which were lawful as ſoon as they came from the market, and thoſe which were not.

III. The Phraſe therefore ſeems to be meant of the immerſion or plunging of the hands only, and the word πυγμῇ Fiſt is here to be underſtood alſo in common. Thoſe that remain at home eat not, ἐὰν μὴ πυγμῇ νίψωνται, unleſs they waſh the fiſt. But thoſe that come from the Market eat not, ἐὰν μὴ πυγμῇ βαπτίζωνται unleſs they plunge their fiſt into the water, being ignorant and uncertain what uncleanneſs they came near unto in the Market.

The e waſhing of the hands, and the plunging of the hands were from the Scribes. The hands which had need טבילה of plunging, they dipped not but in a fit place, that is, where there was a confluence of forty Seahs of water. For in the place where any dipped Veſſels, it was lawful to dip the hands. But the hands which have need נטילה of waſhing only, if they dip them in the Confluence of waters, they are clean; whether they dip them in waters that are drawn, or in Veſſels, or in the pavement. They do not cleanſe the hands (as to waſhing) until waters are poured upon the hands out of a Veſſel. For they do not waſh the hands but out of a Veſſel.

Ξεσῶν. Pots.

It is doubtful whether this word be derived from ξέστης A Sextary, (a certain meaſure) or form ξεστὰ, Veſſels plained or engraven. To take it as ſpeaking of Sextaries, is indeed very agreeable to the word, and not much different from the matter. And ſo alſo it is, if you derive it from ξεστὰ, by which word are denoted Veſſels plained, or turned, that is, of Wood. And perhaps thoſe Veſſels, which are called by the Rabbins פשוטים Flat, and are oppoſed to מקבלים ſuch as may contain ſomething within them, are expreſſed by this word. Of that ſort were Knives, Tables, Seats, &c. Concerning which as capable of polution, See Maimonides, f and the Talmudic Tract g Kelim. Where are reckoned up 1. שולחן The very Table, at which they eat. 2. חרלופקי The little Table, or the Wooden Side-Table, where wine and fruits were ſet, that were preſenttly to be brought to Table. 3. ספסל A Seat. 4. שרפרף The footſtool for the feet under the Seat.

f In Kelim, cap. 4.

g Chap. 21.

Χαλκίων. Brazen Veſſels.

Κλινῶν. Of Beds.

Beds contracted uncleanneſs, either that which they called מדרס טומאת or that which they called מדרס טומאת מגע One can hardly put theſe into good Engliſh without a Paraphraſe. מדרס טמאה מטה Was a bed, on which a profluvious man or woman, or a menſtruous woman, or a woman in chid-birth, or a leper, had either ſate or ſtood, or laid, or leaned, or hung. מדרס טמאה מגע מטה Was a bed which any thing had touched, that had been touched before by any of theſe.

The word therefore Βαπτισμὸς waſhings, applyed to all theſe, properly and ſtrictly is not to be taken of dipping or plunging, but in reſpect of ſome things, of waſhing only, and in reſpect of others of ſprinkling only.

VERS. XI.

Κορβᾶν (ὅ ἐστι Δῶρον.) Corban, (that is a Gift.)

THE word Δῶρον A gift, was known and common among the Talmudiſts. אמר רבא עולה דורון היא h Rabba ſaith, A burnt ſacrifice is δῶρον, a guift. Where the Gloſs writes thus, A burnt ſacrifice is not offered to expiate for any deed: but after repentance hath expiated the deed, the burnt ſacrifice comes להקביל פנים that the man may be received with favour. As when any hath ſinned againſt the King וריצהו עי פרקלטין and hath appeaſed him by a Paraclete, (an Advocate) and comes to implore his favour, he brings דורון δῶρον, a Gift.

VERS. XII.

Τί ἡ γενεὰ αὕτη σημεῖον ἐπιζητεῖ; Why doth this generation seek after a sign?

IN stead of a Comment take a story. a On that day R. Eliezer answered to all the Questions in the whole world, but they hearkened not to him. He said therfore to them, If the Tradition be according to what I say, Let this Siliqua (a kind of Tree) bear witness. The Siliqua was rooted up, and removed an hundred cubits from its place: there are some who say four hundred. They say to him a proof is not to be fetched from a Siliqua. He saith to them again, If the Tradition be with me, let the rivers of waters testifie: the rivers of waters are turned backward. They say to him, a proof is not to be fetched from the rivers of waters: He said to them again, if the tradition be with me, let the walls of the Schools testifie: The walls bowed as if they were falling. R. Josua chid them saying, if there be a controversie between the Disciples of the wise men about Tradition, what is that to you? Therefore the walls fell not in honour of R. Josua. Yet they stood not upright again, in honour of R. Eliezar. He said to them moreover, If the Tradition be with me, let the heavens bear witness. The Bath-Kol, went forth and said, Why do ye contend with R. Eliezar with whom the Tradition always is? R. Jonah rose up upon his feet, and said, It is not in Heaven (Deut. XXX. 12.) What do these words, It is not in Heaven, mean? R. Jeremiah saith, when the Law is given from Mount Sinai, we do not care for the Bath Kol.

a Bav. Mezia, fol. 59. 2.

Shall we laugh at the Fable? or shall we suspect some truth in the story? For my part, when I recollect with my self, how addicted to and skilful that Nation was in Art Magic; which is abundantly asserted not only by the Talmudists, but by the holy Scriptures; I am ready to give some credit to this story, and many others of the same nature: namely, that thing was really acted by the art and help of the Devil by those Ensign-bearers and Captains of errors, the more to establish their Honour and Tradition.

Therefore from the story, be it true or false, we obseve these two things.

I. How tenacious the Jews were of their Traditions, and how unmoveable in them even beyond the evidence of miracles. That Eleazar was of great fame among them, but he was a follower of Shammai. Hence he is called once and again שמותי The Shammean. b When therefore he taught, something against the School of Hillel, although he did miracles (as they themselves relate) they gave no credit to him, nay they derided him. The same was their practise, the same was their mind against the miracles of Christ. And to this may these words of our Saviour tend, Why does this generation seek a sign? A generation, which is not only altogether unworthy of miracles, but also which is sworn to retain their Traditions and doctrines, although infinite miracles be done to the contrary.

b Hieros. Trumah, fol. 43. 3. Jom. Tobb, fol. 60. 3, &c.

II. You see how the last testimony of the miracles of this conjurer is fetched from Heaven. For the Bath Kol went forth, &c. Which the followers of Hillel nevertheless received not: and therein not justly indeed; when they feign such a voice to have come to themselves from Heaven, as a definitive Oracle for the authority of the School of Hillel, not to be gainsaid: concerning which the Talmudists speak very frequently, and very boastingly.

After the same manner they require a sign from Heaven of our Saviour; not content with those infinite miracles that he had done; the healing of diseases, the casting out Devils, the multiplying of loaves, &c. They would also have somewhat from Heaven, either after the examole of Moses, fetching Manna from thence; or of Elias, fetching down fire; or of Joshua staying the Sun; or of Esaias, bringing it backwards.

VERS. I.

Τὴν βασιλείαν τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐληλυθυῖαν ἐν δυνάμει. The Kingdom of God coming in power.

IN Matthew it is ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐρχόμενον ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ αὐτοῦ. The Son of man coming in his Kingdom. The coming of Chriſt in his Vengeance and power, to deſtroy the unbelieving and moſt wicked Nation of the Jews, is expreſſed under theſe forms of Speech. Hence the day of Judgment and Vengeance.

I. It is called the great and terrible day of the Lord, Act. II. 20. 2 Theſ. II. 2, 3.

II. It is deſcribed as the end of the world, Jer. XXIV. 24. Mat. XXIV. 29. &c.

III. In that phraſe, In the laſt times, Eſa. II. 1. Act. II. 17. 1 Tim. IV. 1. 2 Pet. III. 3. That is, in the laſt times of that City and Diſpenſation.

IV. Thence, the beginning of the new World, Eſ. LXV. 17. 2 Pet. III. 13.

V. The Vengance of Chriſt upon that Nation is deſcribed, as his coming: Joh. XXII. 21. Heb. X. 37. His coming in the clouds, Rev. I. 7. In glory with the Angels, Mat. XXIV. 30. &c.

VI. It is deſcribed as the inthroning of Chriſt, and his twelve Apoſtles judging the twelve tribes of Iſrael. Mat. XIX. 28. Luke XXII. 30.

Hence this is the ſenſe of the preſent place: Our Saviour had ſaid in the laſt verſe of the former Chapter, Whoſoever ſhall be aſhamed of me, and of my words in this adulterous and ſinful generation; of him ſhall the Son of man be aſhamed, when he ſhall come in the glory of his father with his holy Angels, to take puniſhment of that adulterous and ſinful generation. And he ſuggeſts with good reaſon, that that his coming in Glory ſhould be in the life time of ſome that ſtood there.

VERS. II.

Εἰς ὄρος ὑψηλόν. Into an high mountain.

NOW your pardon, Reader. I know it will be laughed at, if I ſhould doubt, Whether Chriſt were transfigured upon Mount Tabor; for whoever doubted of this thing? But let me, before I give faith to the thing, reveal my doubts concerning it: and the Reader, laying before his eyes ſome Geographical Map of Galilee, perhaps when he ſhall have heard me, will judge more favourably of my doubting.

I. Let him conſider that Chriſt in the ſtory next going before, was in the Coaſts of Ceſarea Philippi, Mat. XVI. 13. Mark VIII. 27. Luke IX. 18. and for any thing, that can be gathered out of the Evangeliſts, changed not his place before this ſtory. Who will deny thoſe words, There are ſome that ſtand here, who ſhall not taſt of death, &c. were uttered in thoſe coaſts of Ceſarea Philippi? And preſently the ſtory of the Transfiguration followed.

II. Six days indeed came between: in which, you will ſay, Chriſt might travail from Ceſarea Philippi to Tabor. He might indeed: But 1. The Evangeliſts intimate no change from place to place, ſaying only this, that he led up into the Mountain three of his Diſciples. 2. It ſeems indeed a wonder, that our Saviour would tyre himſelf with ſo long a journey, to chooſe Tabor whereon to be transfigured, when, as far as we read, he had never before been in that Mountain; and there were Mountains elſewhere, where he converſed frequently. 3. Follow the footſteps of the Hiſtory, and of Chriſt in his travail, from his transfiguration onwards. When he came down from the Mountain he healed a child poſſeſſed with a Devil: and when he betook himſelf into the houſe, they ſaid, Why could not we caſt out the Devil, &c. And they departed thence, and paſſed through Galilee, And came to Capernaum. Mark IX. 30. 33.

III. And now, Reader, look upon the Chorographical Map, and how incongruous will this travailing ſeem? 1. From Ceſarea Philippi to Mount Tabor through the whole length almoſt of Galilee. 2. From thence from Mount Tabor by a courſe back again to Capernaum, a great part of Galilee (eſpecially as the Maps place Capernaum) being again paſſed over. When Capernaum was in the way from Ceſarea Philippi to Tabor, and there was a Mountain there, well known to Chriſt, and very much frequented by him.

IV. So that it seems far more consonant to the History of the Gospel, that Christ was transfigured in some Mountain neare Cesarea Philippi; perhaps that, which, Josephus being witness, was the highest, and hung over the very fountains of Jordan, and at the foot whereof Cesarea was placed.

In that place formerly called Dan, was the first Idolatry set up, and now in the same place the Eternal Son of God is shewn, both in the confession of Peter, and in the unspeakably clear and illustrious demonstration of the Messias.

VERS. XXXVIII.

Εἴδομέν τινα ἐν τῷ ὀνόματί σου ἐκβάλλοντα δαιμόνια. We saw one in thy name casting out Devils.

I. WIthout doubt he truly did this work, whosoever he were. He cast out Devils truly and really, and that by the divine power, otherwise Christ had not said those things which he did, Forbid him not: there is no man that doth a miracle in my name, who can speak evil of me, &c.

II. Whence then could any one, that followed not Christ, cast out Devils? Or whence could any one that cast out Devils, not follow Christ?

I answer. We suppose

I. That this man cast not out Devils in the name of Jesus, but in the name of Christ, or Messias: and that it was not out of contempt that he followed not Jesus, but out of ignorance; namely, because he knew not yet that Jesus was the Messias.

II. We therefore conjecture, that he had been heretofore some Disciple of John, who had received his Baptism in the name of the Messias now speedily to come (which all the Disciples of John had) but he knew not as yet, that Jesus of Nazareth was the Messias: which John himself knew not, until it was revealed to him from Heaven.

III. It is probable therefore, that God granted the gifts of miracles to some lately baptized by John, to do them in the name of the Messias; and that to lay a plainer way for the receiving of the Messias, when he should manifest himself under the name of Jesus of Nazareth.

See Vers. 41. In my name Ὅτι Χριστοῦ ἐστε, Because ye belong to Christ: and Chap. XIII. 6. Many shall come in my name, not in the name of Jesus, but in the name of the Messias: for those false Prophets assumed to themselves the name of the Messias, to bring to naught the name of Jesus. That Joh. XVI. 24. Hitherto ye have asked nothing in my name, differs not much from this sense. The Apostles poured out their prayers, and all the holy men theirs, in the name of the Messias, but ye have as yet asked nothing in my name Jesus, &c.

VERS. XLIII.

a Pirk. Schabb. fol. 108. 2.

a Rabh Mona in the name of R. Judah saith A Drop of cold water in the morning (applyed to the eye) and the washing of the hands and feet in the Evening, מכרל קילורין שבעולם is good beyond all the Collyrium, eye salve, in the whole world. For he said יד לעין תקצץ The hand applyed to the eye (in the morning before washing) let it be cut off. The hand applyed to the nostril, let it be cut off: the hand put to the ear let it cut off, &c.

VERS. XLIX.

Πᾶς γὰρ πυρὶ ἁλισθήσεται. For every one shall be salted with fire.

b In Spicileg. Scholast. Sacrific. Problem. 3.

THE great Scaliger is well chastized, and not without cause by b John Clopenberg, because he changed the reading here into πᾶσα πυρὶ ἁλισθήσεται Every sacrifice shall be salted. See what he saith.

Πᾶς, All, is not to be understood of every man, but of every one of them, Whose worm dyeth not, &c.

The sense of the place is to be fetched from those words, and the sense of those words, from Esai. LXVI. ult. And they shall go forth and look upon the carcasses of the men that have transgressed against me; for their Worm shall not dye, neither shall their fire be quenched; and they shall be an abhorring to all flesh. Upon which place thus the Jews write: They shall go forth and look, &c. Is not the finger of a man, if it be put into the fire, immediately burnt? But God gives power (or being) to wicked men to receive ceive torments. Kimchi upon the place thus, They shall see the carcasses of them full of worms, and fire burning in them: and yet the worms dye not.

The words therefore of our Saviour respect this. Their worm dyeth not, and the fire is not quenched: for every one of them shall be seasoned with fire it self, so as to become unconsumeable, and shall endure for ever to be tormented, as salt preserves from corruption.

That very learned man mentioned before called the common reading very improper. For what is it, saith he, Ἁλίζειν πυρί; To season with fire? Let me retort. And what is it πυρίζειν ἁλί; To fire with salt? And yet that sense occurs very frequently in the Talmudists. For in them הקדיח is to burn (which signifies properly indeed) and very frequently it is, To corrupt any thing with too much salting, so that it cannot be eaten, To be fired with salt. So in this place, To be salted with fire, that it cannot be corrupted or consumed.

Καὶ πᾶσα θυσία ἁλὶ ἁλισθήσεται. And every sacrifice shall be salted with salt.

Here the discourse is of salting, which was done at the Altar, See Levit. II. 13. c In the ascent of the Altar they salted the parts of the sacrifice, and on the top of the Altar they salt the handful of meal, of frankincense, of incense, and the mincha of the Priests, and the mincha of the anoynted Priest, and the mincha of the drink offerings, and the sacrifice of birds. Yea עצים קרבן מנחה הן ונסכין מלח d The very wood is a Corban of the Mincha, and is to be salted.

c Menacoth, fol. 21. 2.

d Fol. 20. 2.

But in the former clause the allusion was not to the fire of the Altar, but to the fire in the valley of Hinnom, where dead carcasses, bones and other filthy things were consumed. Carcasses crawl with worms, and instead of Salt, which secures against worms, they shall be cast into the fire, and shall be seasoned with flames, and yet the worms shall not dey. But he that is a true sacrifice to God, shall be seasoned with the salt of Grace to the incorruption of Glory.

Our Saviour speaks in this place with Esaiah, Chap. LXVI. 20. Ἄξουσι τοὺς ἀδελφοὺς ὑμῶν ἐκ πάντων τῶν ἐθνῶν δῶρον Κυρίῳ --- ὡς ἀνενέγκαιεν οἱ υἱοὶ Ἰσραὴλ τὰς θυσίας αὐτῶν ἐμοὶ μετὰ ψαλμῶν εἰς τὸν οἶκον Κυρίου. They shall bring their brethren out of all the Nations for a gift to the Lord ---- as the children of Israel offer their sacrifices to me with Psalms in the house of the Lord. And Vers. 24. Καὶ ἐξελεύσονται καὶ ὄψονται τὰ κῶλα τῶν ἀνθρώπων τῶν παραβεβηκότων ἐν ἐμοί. Ὁ γὰρ σκώληξ αὐτῶν οὐ τελευτήσει, καὶ τὸ πῦρ αὐτῶν οὐ σβεσθήσεται, &c. And they shall go forth, and look upon the limbs of the men that transgressed against me. For their worm shall not dy, and their fire shall not be quenched, &c.

Πᾶσα θυσία, Every sacrifice, saith our Saviour, concerning holy men seasoned with Grace: So the Prophet, They shall bring your Brethren for a gift to the Lord, as the children of Israel do the sacrifices.

Ἁλισθήσονται πυρὶ, shall be seasoned with fire, saith our Saviour, of wicked men: in the same sense Esaiah, They shall be in unquencheable fire, and yet their worm shall not dye.

Their fire, and their worm: Whose? Concerning the former, tis somewhat obscure in our Saviours words, and so indeed, that it is without all obscurity, that he refers his words only to the words of Esaiah. But who they are in Esaiah, is plain enough.

CHAP. X.

VERS. I.

Ἔρχεται εἰς τὰ ὅρια τῆς Ἰουδαίας, διὰ τοῦ πέραν τοῦ Ἰορδάνου. Cometh into the Coasts of Judea by the farther side of Jordan.

HERE is need of a discerning eye, to distinguish of the true time, and method of this story, and of Christs journey. If you make use of such an eye, you will find half a year, or thereabouts to come between the uttering of the words immediately beforegoing, and this travail of our Saviour: however it seems to be intimated by our Evangelist, and likewise by Matthew, that when he had finished those words, forthwith he entred upon his journey: When in truth he went before to Jerusalem, through the midst of Samaria, to the Feast of Tabernacles, Luke IX. 51, &c. Joh. VII. And again. From Galilee, after he had returned thither, through the Cities and Towns, to Jerusalem, Luke XIII. 22. to the Feast of Dedication, Joh. X. 22. And again beyond Jordan indeed, Joh. X. 40. but first taking his way into Galilee, and thence beyond Jordan, according to that story which is before us. The studious Reader, and that in good earnest imployeth his labour upon this business, has no need of further proof; his own eyes will witness this sufficiently. Thus the Wisdom and Spirit of God directed the pens of these holy Writers, that some omitted some things to be supplyed by others; and others supplyed those things which they had omitted: and so a full and compleat history was not composed but of all joyned and compared together.

I wish the Reverend Beza had sufficiently considered this, who rendreth πέραν Ἰορδάνου, not Beyond, but By Jordan, and corrects the vulgar Interpreter and Erasmus, who render it, Beyond Jordan properly and most truly. As if by Perea, saith he, or the Country beyond Jordan, Christ passing over Jordan or the lake of Tiberias, came into Judea out of Galilee, which is not true. But take heed you do not mistake, Reverend Old-man. For he went over Jordan from Capernaum, as it is very probable, by the bridge built over Jordan between Chammath, near to Tiberias, at the Gadaren Country. He betook himself to Bethabara, and stayed some time there, Joh. X. 40. thence he went along Perea to the bank over against Jericho. While he tarrieth there a Messenger sent from Mary comes to him concerning the death of Lazarus, Joh. XI. and thence after two days he passeth Jordan in Judea.

VERS. XVII.

Γονυπετήσας αὐτόν. Kneeled to him.

SO Chap. I. 40. Παρακαλῶν αὐτὸν, καὶ γονυπετῶν αὐτόν. Beseeching him, and kneeling to him. This is variously rendred, Procidit ad pedes, Genu flexo, Genu petens, Ad genua procidens, &c. He fell at his feet, Bowing the knee, Beseeching upon his knee, Falleng down at his knees. Which rendrings are not improper, but I suspect something more is included. For 1. It was customary for those that so adored, to take hold of the knees or the legs, 2 King. IV. 27. Mat. XXVIII. 9. 2. To kiss the knees or the feet. See what we have said at Mat. XXVIII. 9.

a Bab. Chetub. fol. 63. 1. When a R. Akiba had been twelve years absent from his Wife, and at last came back, his Wife went out to meet him: and when she came to him, falling upon her face, נשקה ליה לכרעיה She kissed his knees. And a little after, When he was entred into the City, his Father-in-Law knowing not who he was, but suspecting him to be some great Rabbin, went to him and falling upon his face נשקיה ליה לכרעיה Kissed his knees. b Speaking of Job, בא שטן נשקה לכרעיה Satan came and he kissed his knees. But in all this Job sinned not with his lips, &c. c When a certain Rabbin had discourse of divers things קם בר חמא ונקשיה אכרעיה Bar Chama rose up and kissed his knees.

VERS. XXI.

Ἠγάπησεν αὐτόν. Loved him.

THAT is, by some outward gesture he manifested that this man pleased him, both in his question, and in his answer: when he both seriously enquired concerning attaining eternal life, and seriously professed that he had addicted himself to Gods Commandments with all care and circumspection.

d Hieros. Chagigah, f. 77. 1. Let us compare the customs of the Masters among the Jews. Eliezer d ben Erech obtained leave from Rabban Jochanan ben Zaccai, to discourse of some things before him. He discoursed of Ezekiels Chariot (מעשה מרכבה Chap. I. or, Of Mystical Divinity) When he had made an end, Rabban Jochanan arose up, ונקשיה בראשיה And kissed his head. R. e Abba bar Cahna heard R. Levi disputing profoundly. When he had made an end, R. Abba rose up, and kissed his head. There is a story of a certain Nazarite, young man, that exceedingly pleased Simeon the Just, with a certain answer that he gave. Whereupon, said, Simeon, f I bowed towards him with my head, and said, O Son, let such, as you, be multiplyed in Israel. This story is found elsewhere, g Where for דרכנתיו בראשי I bowed towards him with my head, it is חבקתיו ונשקתיו על ראשו I embraced him, and kissed his head. h Miriam before the birth of Moses had propheſied, My Mother shall bring forth a Son, who shall deliver Israel. When he was born the whole house was filled with light. His Father stood forth ונשקה על ראשה And kissed her upon the head and said, thy propheſie is fulfilled. And when they cast him into the River טפחה על ראשה He struck her upon the head.

t Id. Horaioth, fol. 48. 3.

f Id. Nedarim, fol. 36. 4. g Nazir, fol. 51. 3. h Bab. Megil. fol. 14. 1.

What if our Saviour used this very gesture towards this young man? And that the more conveniently, when he was now upon his knees before him. Some gesture at least he used, whereby it appeared both to the young man, and to the standers by, that that the young man did not a little pleaſe him, both by his queſtion, and by his anſwer. So אהבתי I have loved, Pſal. CXVI. 1. in the LXX, Ἠγάπησα, I have loved, one may render well, Complacet mihi; It pleaſeth me well. So Joſephus of Davids Souldiers, 1 Sam. XXX. Thoſe four hundred, who went to the battle, would not impart the ſpoils to the two hundred, who were faint and weary, Ἀγαπήσειν δὲ στρατιώτας γυναῖκας ἀπολαμβάνοντας ἔλεγον· and ſaid, that they ſhould love (that is, be well pleaſed) that they had received their wives ſafe again.

In ſome parity of ſenſe, John is called the Diſciple, ὃν ἠγάπα ὁ Ἰησοῦς, whom Jeſus loved; not that Jeſus loved him more than the reſt, with his eternal, infinite, ſaving love, but that he favoured him more with ſome outward kindneſs, and more intimate friendſhip and familiarity. And why? Becauſe John had promiſed that he would take care of Chriſts mother after his death. For thoſe words of our Saviour upon the Croſs to John, Behold thy Mother! and to his Mother, Behold thy Son! And that from thence John took her home; do carry a fair probability with them, that that was not the firſt time, that John heard of ſuch a matter, but that long before he had ſo promiſed.

Ἠγάπησά σε, I have loved thee, Eſa. LX. 10. is rendred רחמתיך I have had pity upon thee: which may here alſo agree very well, Jeſus had pity upon him.

VERS. XLVI.

Υἱὸς Τιμαίου Βαρτιμαῖος. Bartimeus, the ſon of Timeus.

SOME ſuſpect the Evangeliſt here guilty of a Soleciſm by making a Tautology: for it was neither neceſſary, as they think ſo to render the Syriac word in Greek: nor is it done ſo elſewhere in proper names of that nature. For it is not ſaid by any Evangeliſt, Bartholomeus, the ſon of Tholomeus. Bar Abbas, the ſon of Abbas. Bar Jeſus, the ſon of Jeſus: nor in the like names. True indeed; But

I. When the denomination is made from a common name, and not a proper, then it is not ſo ill ſounding to interpret the word: which is done once and again, Mark III. 17. Βοανεργές, ὅ ἐστιν, υἱοὶ βροντῆς· Boanerges, which is, The ſons of Thunder, Act. IV. 36. Βαρνάβας, ὅ ἐστιν, υἱὸς παρακλήσεως· Barnabas, which is, a ſon of Conſolation.

II. Bar Timai may be rendred otherwiſe then The ſon of Timeus: namely, either בר תימה A ſon of Admiration, or which is more proper, בר טימי A ſon of profit. The Targum in Eſter III. 8. ולמלכא לית ליה טימי מנהון To the King ariſeth no profit (Timai) from them. The Evangeliſt therefore deſervedly, that he might ſhew that this Bartimeus, was not named from this, or that, or ſome other Etymology, but from his fathers name, ſo interprets his name, Βαρτιμαῖος, υἱὸς Τιμαίου· Bartimeus, the ſon of Timeus.

III. Perhaps there was a Timeus of ſome more noted name in that age, either for ſome good report, or ſome bad: ſo that it might not be abſurd to the Jews that then converſed there, to ſay, This blind Bartimeus is the ſon of the ſo much famed Timeus. So it is unknown to us, who Alexander and Rufus were, Chap. XV. 21. But they were without doubt of moſt eminent fame either among the Diſciples, or among the Jews.

IV. What if תימא Thimai be the ſame with סימא Simai, Blind, from the uſe of ת Thau for ס Samech among the Chaldeans; ſo that Bartimeus the ſon of Timeus, might ſound no more than, The blind ſon of a blind Father.

CHAP. XI.

VERS. II.

Καὶ περιβλεψάμενος πάντα. And when he had looked round about upon all things.

COmpare Mark with the other Evangeliſts concerning the time of caſting out the Merchants out of the Temple, and it will appear that the word περιβλεψάμενος he looked about, denotes not a bare beholding or looking upon, but a beholding with reproof and correction, אוהרה Admonition, among the Jews.

VERS. XIII.

Οὐ γὰρ ἦν καιρὸς σύκων. For the time of figs was not yet.

SEE what we have ſaid at Matth. XXI. 19. The ſum is this.

I. The time of Figs was ſo far off, that the time of leaves was ſcarcely yet preſent.

II. The

II. The other Fig-trees in the Mount were of the common kind of Fig-trees: and on them were not leaves as yet to be seen. But that which Christ saw with leaves on it, and therefore went to it, was a Fig-tree of an extraordinary kind.

III. For there was a certain Fig-tree called בנורת שוח Benoth Shuach, which never wanted leaves, and never wanted Figs. For every year it bare fruit, but that fruit came not to full ripeness before the third year. And such we suppose was this Fig-tree.

VERS. XVI.

Καὶ οὐκ ἤφιεν ἵνα τις διενέγκῃ σκεῦος διὰ τοῦ ἱεροῦ. And would not suffer, that any should carry any Vessel through the Temple.

a B. b. Jevamon, fol. 6. 2. a WHAT is the Reverence of the Temple? That none go into the Mountain of the Temple, (or, the Court of the Gentiles) with his staff, and his shoes, with his purse, and dust upon his feet ולא יעשנו קפנדריא ורקוק And that none make it his common thorow-fare, nor make it a place of spitting.

b Megill. f. 28. 1. c Fol. 27. 2. The same thing is ordered concerning a Synagogue; yea concerning a Synagogue that is now laid waste, much more of one that flourisheth. לא עשין קפנדריא b A Synagogue now laid waste let not men make it a common passage. And, c His Disciples asked R. Eleazar ben Shammua, Whence hast thou lived so long? He answered, I never made a Synagogue a common thorow-fare.

It is therefore forbid by the Masters, that the Court of the Temple be not made a passage, for a shorter way. And was not this bridle sufficient, wherewith all might be kept back from carrying Vessels through the Temple? But the Castel of Antonia joyned to the Court; and there were Shops in the Court of the Gentiles, where many things were sold, and that prophane Vessels were brought hither, is scarcely to be denied. And these Vessels might be said to be carried διὰ τοῦ ἱεροῦ Through the Temple; although those that carried them went not through the whole Temple.

CHAP. XII.

VERS. I.

Ἀμπελῶνα ἐφύτευσεν ἄνθρωπος, &c. A certain man planted a Vineyard.

THE Priests and Pharisees knew, saith Matthew, that these things were spoken of them, Matth. XXI. 45. Nor is it any wonder. For the Jews boasted, that they were the Lords Vineyard; and they readily observed a wrong done to that Vineyard by any: but how far were they from taking notice, how unfruitful they were, and unthankful to the Lord of the Vineyard?

a Tanchum, fol. 54. 3. The a matter may be compared to a King that had a Vineyard; and there were three, who were enemies to it. What were they? One cut down the branches. The second cut off the bunches. And the third rooted up the Vines. That King is the King of Kings, the Blessed Lord. The Vineyard of the Lord is the House of Israel. The three enemies are Pharaoh, Nebuchadnezzar and Haman, &c.

Ἀμπελώνα. A Vineyard.

b Kilaim, cap. 4. hal. 5. If b a man plants one row of five Vines, the School of Schammai saith, that it is a Vineyard. But the School of Hillel saith, It is not a Vineyard, until there be two rows of Vines there.

Περιέθηκε φραγμόν. Set an hedge about it.

c Ibid. hal 3. c What is an hedge? Let it be ten hands bredths high. Less than so is not an hedge.

Ὤρυξεν ὑπολήνιον. Digged a place for the Wine fat.

d Ibid. חרון שהוא עמוק י׳ ורחב ד׳ : d Let the fat be ten hands bredths deep, and four broad.

Ὠκοδό-

Ὠκοδόμησε πύργον. Built a Tower.

שומרה שבכרם גבוהה י' ורחבה ד': e Let the watch houſe which is in the Vineyard, be ten high, and four broad. Cubits are to be underſtood. For Rambam ſaith, שומרה is a High place, where the Vine-dreſſer ſtands, to overlook the Vineyard. e Ibid. cap. 5. hal. 3.

Ἐξέδοτο αὐτὸν γεωργοῖς. Let it out to Husbandmen.

Ὁ ἐκδιδὺς ἀμπελῶνα αὐτῦ, &c. f He that lets out his Vineyard to a keeper בין באריסות בין בשמירו חנם Either as a γεωργὸς, An huſbandman, or as one to keep it gratis, and he enters into Covenant with him, to dig it, prune it, dreſs it at his own coſt; but he neglects it, and doth not ſo; he is guilty, as if he ſhould with his own hand lay the Vineyard waſte. f Maimon. in שכירות c. 2.

VERS. II.

Ἀπέστειλε πρὸς τὸς γεωργὸς τῷ καιρῷ. And at the ſeaſon he ſent to the husbandmen.

THAT is, In the fourth year after the firſt planting it: when it now was כרם רבעי A Vineyard of four years old. At leaſt before that year there was no profit of the fruits. כרם רבעי מציינין אותו בקורט ארמה g They paint, or note, a Vineyard of four years old by ſome turf, or clod, of earth, coloured, של עלה בחרסית and that uncircumciſed with clay. And ſepulchres with chalk. g Maaſar Sheni, cap. 5. hal. 1.

The Gloſs is this, On a Vineyard of four years old they paint ſome marks out of the turf of the Earth, that men may know, that it is a Vineyard of four years old, and eat not of it, becauſe it is holy, as the Lord ſaith (Levit. XIX. 24.) and the owners ought to eat the fruit of it at Jeruſalem, as the ſecond tithe. And an uncircumciſed Vineyard (that is, which was not yet four years old: See Levit. XIX. 23.) they mark with clay. הוא טיט השרוף that is, digeſted in fire. For the Prohibition of (a Vineyard) uncircumciſed, is greater than the Prohibition concerning that of four years old: for that of four years old is fit for eating, but that uncircumciſed is not admitted to any uſe. Therefore they marked not that by the Turf, leſt the mark might perhaps be defaced, and periſh, and men not ſeeing it might eat of it, &c.

VERS. IV.

Λιθοβολήσαντες ἐκεφαλαίωσε. At him they caſt ſtones, and wounded him in the head.

I. I See no need to wreſt the word ἐκεφαλαίωσε from its true and genuine ſenſe. Κεφαλαῖον ſignifies to reduce and gather into a certain ſum; as the Lexicons teach us; and why not in the ſame ſenſe in this place? They caſt ſtones at the ſervant, and deriding him made up the ſum with him: Saying perhaps this, or ſome ſuch thing to him, Do you come for fruit and rent? Behold this fruit? (caſting a ſtone at him) behold another fruit? (caſting another ſtone) and ſo many times together: and ſo they ſent him away ἠτιμωμένον, derided, and loaded with diſgrace.

II. But be it, that the word is to be tranſlated, as it is commonly rendred, They wounded him in the head: then this way of ſtoning is thus diſtinguiſhed from that, whereby they were ſlain who were ſtoned by the Sanhedrin. That was called Λιθοβολία ſtone-caſting: for it was the caſt of a ſtone indeed, but of one only, and that a very great one; and that upon the heart of the condemned perſon, when now he lay along upon his back. But this ſtoning was of many ſtones thrown out of the hand through the air, ſtriking him here and there and every where. The head of him that was ſtoned by the Sanhedrin was unhurt, and without any wound, but here, They caſt ſtones at him and wounded him in the head.

VERS. X.

Λίθον ὃν ἀπεδοκίμασε. The ſtone which the builders rejected.

THE Targum upon Pſalm, CXVIII. thus, טליא שביקו אריכליא The builders rejected the child. Either for אבן he read הבן or rendred it according to the Arabick Idiom, The ſon: ſo alſo R. Solomon. And verſ. 27. כפיתו טליא לנכסת הגא Bind the child to the Sacrifice of the ſolemnity with chains, until ye ſhall have ſacrificed him, and poured out his blood upon the horns of the Altar: ſaid Samuel the Prophet.

VERS. XVI.

Τίνος ἡ Εἰκὼν; Καίσαρος. Whose is this Image? Cesars.

I. THIS was a Cesars Peny. דינרא קיסראנה Denarius Cæsareanus. For Zuz among the Jews was also a peny, as we shewed elsewhere; but we scarce believe it was of the same form and inscription. h A certain Heathen sent to R. Judah the Prince דינרא קיסראנה A Cesarean Peny, and that on a certain festival day of the Heathens. Resh Lachish sat before him. R. Judah said, What shall I do? If I receive it, I shall consent (to their festival) If I receive it not, Enmity will rise against me. Resh Lachish answered, Take the peny, and while he looks upon you, cast it into the well, &c.

h Bab. Avod. Zar. fol. 6 2.

II. It was a silver peny, not a gold one. דינרין כתם משם שרי כסף Pence absolutely put are to be understood silver pence. Where the Glos is, Pence absolutely put are silver, until it is explained, that they are gold.

But now a gold peny was worth five and twenty silver pence. i When Turtle Doves and young Pigeons were sold at Jerusalem sometime for a gold peny, Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel said, By this Temple, I will not rest this night, unless they are sold for a silver peny. Where the Glos, A gold peny is worth five and twenty silver pence.

i Cherituth, cap. 1. hal. 7.

III. It was צורי a Roman peny, not פשוטי a Jerusalem: for this distinction they sometimes use. ווי פשוטי the Glos being witness, are ווי מדינה Jerusalem Zuzees. But more frequently, מטבע צורי and מטבע של מדינה Mony of Tzur, and mony of Jerusalem. מטבע צורי one may well render Tyrian mony. But hear the Aruch, where he had been treating of mony צורי of Tzur, at length he brings in this passage: R. Eliezer saith, Whersoever in the Scripture [צור Tzur] is written full, the Scripture speaks of the City Tyre: but where it is written defectively [צר without ו Vau] it speaks of Rome. Be it Tyrian or Roman mony, this held among the Masters. l Whereseever any thing is said of the silver mony של מדינה of Jerusalem, it is the eight part of the Tyrian mony.

l Bava Kama, fol. 36. 2. in Gloss.

Hence I should resolve that riddle, at which the Glosser himself sticks, if I may have leave to conjecture in a Jewish affair, after a doubting Jew. In the Tract now cited m, there is discourse concerning מעורת כוביורת ירושלמיות Jerusalem Cozbian monies. A riddle truly. Ben Cozbi indeed coined monies when he made an Insurrection against the Romans n: But whence is this called Jerusalem mony, when in the days of Ben Cozbi, Jerusalem lay buried in its own rubbish? If I may be the Resolver, it was so called, because it was of the same weight and value with the Jerusalem mony, and not with that of Tyre.

m Bava Kama, fol 97. 2.

n Hieros. Maasar Sheni, fol. 52 4.

The Jerusalem mony, say they, is the eighth part of the Tyrian. Here again some words of the Masters entangle me in a riddle. The Aruch saith, o A Peny and Zuz are the same. And elsewhere p, They call Pence, in the Gemaristick Language, Zuzim; which we observed at Chap. VI. vers. 37. Zuz was Jerusalem mony; how then was it the same with a Peny, which was Tyrian mony; when it was the eighth part only? And these words spoken by Rambam q do add a scruple over and above; דרינר ו' ווים A Peny contains six Zuzim. If he had said eight Zuzim, it had been without scruple. But what shall we say now?

o In זוז

q In Peah, cap. 8. hal. 7.

The former knot you may thus unty: that Zuz among the Jews is called also a Peny, a Jewish peny indeed, but different from the Roman: as the Scots have their Shilling, but much different from our English. But the second knot let him try to unty, that is at leisure.

IV. This mony was signed with the image of Cesar; but of the Jerusalem mony, thus the Jews write, whom you may believe, when you please. What r is the Jerusalem mony? David and Solomon were stamped on one side; and on the reverse ירושלם עיר הקודש Jerusalem the holy City. But the Glosser enquires, whether it were lawful to stamp the image of David and Solomon upon mony, which he scarcely thinks. He concludes therefore, that their names were only inscribed not their Effigies.

r Bava Kama, fol 97 2.

Upon s Abrahams mony were stamped on one side an old man, and an old woman; on the other, a young man and a young maid. On Josua's mony, on one side an Ox, on the other a Monoceros. On Davids mony, on one side a Staff and a Scrip; on the other a Tower. On Mardochai's mony, on one side Sackcloth and Ashes, on the other a Crown. Let the truth of this be upon the credit of the Authors.

VERS. XXVIII.

Ποία ἐστὶ πρώτη πασῶν ἐντολή; Which is the firſt Commandment of all?

IT is not ſeldom that this diſtinction occurs in the Rabbines, between תורה The Law, and מצוה The Precept: by the latter they underſtand ſome ſpecial, or greater rite (themſelves being judges) ſuch as, Circumciſion, The repeating of the Phylacteries, Keeping the Sabbath, &c. This queſtion propounded by the Scribe ſeems to reſpect the ſame: namely, whether thoſe great precepts (as they were eſteemed) and other Ceremonial precepts of that nature, ſuch as Sacrifices, Purifications, keeping Feſtivals, were the greateſt Precepts of the Law, or no; and if it were ſo, which among them was the firſt.

By his anſwer he ſeems to encline to the Negative, and to prefer the Moral Law. Whence Chriſt ſaith, That he was not far from the Kingdom of Heaven: And while he ſuits an anſwer to him from that very paſſage, which was the firſt in the reciting of the Phylacteries שמע ישראל Hear, O Iſrael, he directs the eyes, and the minds of thoſe that repeated them to the ſenſe and the marrow of the thing repeated, and that they reſt not in the bare work of repeating them.

But if he ſhould ſay,* הרי עלי *Behold I vow Wood, he ſhall not offer leſs than two pieces, of a cubit long, and bredth proportionable. None might by the Canon even now mentioned, enter into the Temple, no nor indeed into the Court of the Gentiles, with his purſe, therefore much leſs into the Court of the women; and yet ſcarce any entred, who carried no mony with him, to be offered to the Corban, whether in his hand, or in his boſom, or elſewhere, we do not define: ſo did this very poor woman, who for two mites purchaſed her ſelf an eternal fame, our Saviour himſelf ſetting a value upon the thing above all the gifts of them that offered.

THE a Eaſt gate of the Court of the Gentiles, had the Metropolis Shuſhan painted on it. And through this gate the High Prieſt went out to burn the red Cow. And, b All the Walls of that Court were high, except the Eaſt Wall; becauſe the Prieſt, when he burnt the red Cow, ſtood upon the top of Mount Olivet, and took his aim, and looked upon the gate of the Temple, in that time when he ſprinkled the blood. And, c The Prieſt ſtood with his face turned Weſtward, kills the Cow with his right hand, and receives the blood with the left, but ſprinkleth it with his right, and that ſeven times, directly towards the holy of Holies.

It is true indeed, from any Tract of Olivet, the Temple might be well ſeen: but the word Κατέναντι, over againſt, if it doth not direct to this very place, yet ſome place certainly in the ſame line: and it cannot but recal to our mind that action of the High Prieſt.

VERS. VIII.

Ἀρχὴ ὠδίνων ταῦτα. Theſe are the beginnings of ſorrows.

ESai. LXVI. 7, 8. Πρὶν τὴν ὠδῖνας τεκεῖν, πρὶν ἐλθεῖν τὸν πόνον τῆς ὠδῖνος ἐξέφυγε, καὶ ἔτεκεν ἄρσεν. Τίς ἤκουσε τοιοῦτο; &c. Before ſhe travailed ſhe brought forth, before the labour of pains came, ſhe was delivered, and brought forth a male. Who hath heard ſuch a thing? &c. Εἰ ὠδῖνε γῆ ἐν ἡμέρᾳ μιᾷ, ἢ καὶ ἐτέχθη ἔθνος εἰς ἅπαξ, ὅτι ὠδῖνε καὶ ἔτεκε Σιὼν τὰ παιδία αὐτῆς. Does the earth bring forth in one day, or is a Nation alſo brought forth at once? For Sion was in travail and brought forth her ſons.

The Prophet here ſays two things.

I. That Chriſt ſhould be born before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem. The Jews themſelves collect and acknowledge this out of this Propheſie. g It is in the Great Geneſis, a very antient book, thus R. Samuel bar Nahaman ſaid, Whence prove you, that in the day when the deſtruction of the Temple was, Meſſias was born? He anſwered, From this that is ſaid in the laſt Chapter of Eſaiah, Before the travailed, ſhe brought forth; before her bringing forth ſhall come, ſhe brought forth a male child. In the ſame hour that the deſtruction of the Temple was, Iſrael cryed out, as though ſhe were bringing forth. And Jonathan in the Chaldee tranſlation ſaid, Before her trouble came, ſhe was ſaved, and before pains of childbirth came upon her, Meſſiah was revealed. (In the Chaldee it is, יתגלי מלכא A King ſhall manifeſt himſelf.) g Hieron. a ſancta ſede, lib. 1. contra Judæos, cap. 2.

In

In like manner in the same Book: R. Samuel bar Nahaman said; It happened that Elias went by the way in the day, wherein the Destruction of the Temple was, and he heard a certain voice crying out and saying, The holy Temple is destroyed. Which when he heard, he imagined, how he could destroy the World; but travailing forward, he saw men plowing and sowing; to whom he said, God is angry with the World, and will destroy his house, and lead his children Captives to the Gentiles, and do you labour for temporal Victuals? And another voice was heard saying, Let them work, for the Saviour of Israel is born. And Elias said, where is he? And the voice said, In Bethlehem of Judah, &c. These words this Author speaks, and these words they speak.

II. As it is not without good reason gathered, that Christ shall be born before the destruction of the City, from that clause, Before she travailed, she brought forth; before her bringing forth came (πόνος τῆς ὠδῖνων the pangs of travail) she brought forth a male child: so also from that clause εἰ ἐτέχθη ἔθνος εἰς ἅπαξ, ὅτι ὠδίνε ἡ ἔτεκε Σιὼν, &c. Is a Nation brought forth at once, for Sion travailed and brought forth her children; is gathered as well, that the Gentiles were to be gathered and called to the faith, before that destruction; which our Saviour most plainly teacheth, ver. 10. But the Gospel must first be preached among all Nations. For how the Gentiles which should believe are called the Children of Sion, and the Children of the Church of Israel, every where in the Prophets, there is no need to shew, for every one knows it.

In this sense is the word ὠδίνων, pangs, or sorrows, in this place to be understood, and it agrees not only with the sense of the Prophet alledged, but with a most common phrase and opinion in the Nation concerning חבלי משיח The Sorrows of the Messiah, that is concerning the calamities which they expected would happen at the coming of the Messiah.

אמר עולא ייתי ולא איחמינינהו h Ulla saith, the Messias shall come, but I shall not see him, so also saith Rabba, Messias shall come, but I shall not see him. That is, he shall not be to be seen. Abai saith to Rabba, Why? משום חבלו של משיח Because of the sorrows of the Messias. It is a Tradition. His Disciples asked R. Eleazar, What may a man do to be delivered from the sorrows of Messias? Let him be conversant in the Law, and in the works of mercy. The Gloss is, חבלו That is the terrors and the sorrows, which shall be in his days. i He that feasts thrice on the Sabbath day, shall be delivered from three miseries, מחבלו של משיח From the sorrows of Messiah, from the judgment of Hell, and from the War of Gog and Magog. Where the Gloss is this, From the sorrows of Messias. For in that age wherein the Son of David shall come, there will be קטגוריא an accusation of the Scholars of the Wise men. חבלו לשון חבלי יולדת The word חבלו denotes such pains as women in child birth endure.

VERS. XXXII.

Περὶ δὲ τῆς ἡμέρας ἐκείνης, ἢ τῆς ὥρας οὐδεὶς οἶδεν. But of that day and hour knoweth no man.

OF what day and hour? That the discourse is of the day of the destruction of Jerusalem, is so evident, both by the Disciples question, and by the whole thread of Christs discourse, that it is a wonder, any should understand these words of the day and hour of the last judgment.

Two things are demanded of our Saviour, ver. 4. The one is, When shall these things be, that one stone shall not be left upon another? And the second is, What shall be the sign of this consummation? To the latter he answereth throughout the whole Chapter hitherto. To the former in the present words. He had said indeed in the verse before, Heaven and Earth shall pass away, &c. not for resolution to the question propounded, (for there was no enquiry at all concerning the dissolution of Heaven and Earth,) but for confirmation of the truth of thing, which he had related. As though he had said, ye ask when such an overthrow of the Temple shall happen; when it shall be, and what shall be the signs of it. I answer, These and those, and the other signs shall go before it; and these my words of the thing it self, to come to pass, and of the signs going before, are firmer than Heaven and Earth it self. But whereas ye enquire of the precise time, that is not to be enquired after, For of that day and hour knoweth no man.

We cannot but remember here, that even among the Beholders of the destruction of the Temple, there is a difference concerning the Day of the destruction; that that day and hour was so little known before the event, that even after the event they who saw the flames disagreed among themselves concerning the Day. Josephus, an eye witness, saw the burning of the Temple, and he ascribed it to the Tenth day of the month Ab, or Lous. For thus he, l The Temple perished the tenth day of the month Lous, (or August) a day

a day fatal to the Temple, as having been on that day conſumed in flames by the King of Babylon. Rabban Jochanan ben Zaccai ſaw the ſame conflagration, and he together with the whole Jewiſh Nation, aſcribes it to the ninth day of that month, not the tenth; yet ſo that he ſaith, If I had not lived in that age, I had not judged it, but to have happened on the tenth day. For as the Gloſs upon Maimonides [m] writes, It was the evening, when they ſet fire to it, and the Temple burnt until ſun-ſet the tenth day. In the Jeruſalem Talmud therefore Rabbi, and R. Joſua ben Levi faſted the ninth and tenth days. See alſo the Tract Bab. Taanith [n].

[n] Fol. 29. 1.

Οὐδὲ οἱ ἄγγελοι. Neither the Angels.

[o] Bab. Sanhedr. fol. 99. 1.

For o the day of Vengeance is in my heart, and the year of my redeemed cometh, Eſai. LXIII. 4. What means? The day of Vengeance is in my haert? R. Jochanan ſaith, I have revealed it to my heart, to my members I have not revealed it. R. Simeon ben Lachiſh ſaith, I have revealed it to my heart, למלאכי השרת לא גליתי but to the miniſtring Angels I have not revealed it. And Jalkut on that place thus: לבא לפומא לא גלי פומא למאן גלי My heart reveals it not to my mouth, to whom ſhould my mouth reveal it?

Οὐδὲ ὁ υἱός. Nor the Son.

Οὐδὲ ἄγγελοι, οὐδὲ υἱός, that is, Neither the Angels, nor the Meſſias. For in that ſenſe the word Υἱὸς, Son, is to be taken in this place, and elſewhere, very often. As in that paſſage, Joh. V. 19. The Son, that is, The Meſſias, can do nothing of himſelf, but what he ſees the Father do. ver. 20. The Father loveth the Meſſias, &c. ver. 26. He hath given to the Meſſias to have life in himſelf, &c. And that the word Son, is to be rendred in this ſenſe, appears from verſe 27. He hath given him authority alſo to execute judgment, becauſe he is the Son of man. Obſerve that, Becauſe he is the Son of man.

I. It is one thing to underſtand the Son of God barely and abſtractly for the ſecond perſon in the Holy Trinity; another to underſtand him for the Meſſias, or that ſecond perſon incarnate. To ſay that the ſecond Perſon in the Trinity knows not ſomething, is blaſphemous; to ſay ſo of the Meſſias, is not ſo, who nevertheleſs was the ſame with the ſecond Perſon in the Trinity. For although the ſecond Perſon, abſtractly conſidered according to his mere Diety, was co-equal with the Father, co-omnipotent, co-omniſcient, co-eternal with him, &c. Yet Meſſias, who was God-man, conſidered as Meſſias, was a ſervant and a meſſenger of the Father, and received commands and authority from the Father. And thoſe expreſſions, The Son can do nothing of himſelf, &c. will not in the leaſt ſerve the Arians turn; if you take them in this ſenſe, which you muſt neceſſarily do; Meſſias can do nothing of himſelf, becauſe he is a Servant and a Deputy.

II. We muſt diſtinguiſh between the execellencies, and perfections of Chriſt, which flowed from the Hypoſtatical union of the two natures, and thoſe which flowed from the donation and anoynting of the Holy Spirit. From the Hypoſtatical Union of the Natures flowed the infinite dignity of his Perſon, his impeccability, his infinite ſelf-ſufficiency to perform the Law, and to ſatisfie the divine juſtice. From the anoynting of the Spirit flowed, his Power of miracles, his fore-knowledg of things to come, and all kind of knowledg of Evangelic Myſteries. Thoſe rendred him a fit and perfect Redeemer; theſe a fit and perfect Miniſter of the Goſpel.

Now therefore the fore-knowledg of things to come, of which the diſcourſe here is, is to be numbred among thoſe things, which flowed from the anoynting of the Holy Spirit, and from immediate revelation; not from the Hypoſtatic Union of the Natures. So that thoſe things which were revealed by Chriſt to his Church, he had them from the revelation of the Spirit, not from that Union. Nor is it any derogation or detraction from the Dignity of his Perſon, that he ſaith, he knew not that day and hour of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem: yea it excellently agrees with his Office and Deputation, who being the Fathers Servant, Meſſenger, and Miniſter, followed the orders of the Father, and obeyed him in all things. The Son knoweth not, that is, It is not revealed to him from the Father, to reveal to the Church. Revel. I. 1. The Revelation of Jeſus Chriſt, which God gave to him.

We omit enquiring concerning the Knowledge of Chriſt, being now raiſed from death: whether, and how far, it exceeded his knowledg while yet he converſed on earth. It is without doubt, that being now raiſed from the dead, he merited all kind of Revelation (See Revel. V. 9. And they ſung a new ſong, ſaying, thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the ſeals thereof, for thou waſt ſlain, &c.) and that he converſing on earth before his death, acted with the vigor of the Holy Spirit, and of that unſpeakable holineſs which flowed from the Union of the Humane Nature with the Divine, the

Divine

Divine Nature in the mean time ſuſpending its infinite activity of Omnipotence. So that Chriſt might work miracles, and know things to come, in the ſame manner as the Prophets alſo did, namely, by the Holy Ghoſt, but in a larger meaſure; and might overcome the Devil not ſo much by the Omnipotence of the Divine Nature, as by the infinite holineſs of his Perſon, and of his obedience. So that if you either look upon him, as the Miniſter and Servant of God; or if you look upon the conſtitution, as I may ſo call it, and condition of his Perſon, Theſe words of his, of that day and hour knoweth not the Son alſo, carry nothing of incongruity along with them: yea, do excellently ſpeak out his ſubſtitution, as a Servant, and the conſtitution of his Perſon, as Θεάνθρωπος, God-man.

The reaſon, why the Divine Wiſdom would have the time of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem ſo concealed, is well known to it ſelf; but by men, ſince the time of it was unſearchable, the reaſon certainly is not eaſie to be ſearched. We may conjecture, that the time was hid, partly leſt the Godly might be terrified with the ſound of it, as 2 Theſ. II. 2. partly, that the Ungodly, and thoſe that would be ſecure, might be taken in the ſnares of their own ſecurity, as Mat. XXIV. 38. But let ſecret things belong to God.

Βάλανος, as all know, among the Greeks, is Glans, Maſte, or an Acorn: ſo alſo is תסתקא Piſtaca among the Talmudiſts. There are preſcribed by the Talmudiſts c various remedies for various diſeaſes: among others this: לברסכם ליתי בי פסתקא ורנישרר For a Pluriſie (or as others will have it, A certain diſeaſe of the head) Take to the quantity of the Maſte of Ammoniac. The Gloſs is, פיסתקא is the maſte of Cedar. The Aruch ſaith, פיסתקא is the grain of a fruit, which is called גלנרא Glans.

c Bab. Gittin, fol. 69. 1.

The word Νάρδος, Nard, is Hebrew from the word נרד Nerd, and the word פיסתקא is Syriac, from the word פיסתקא Piſtaca. So that the Oyntment might be called Unguentum Balaninum, Balanine oyntment: in the compoſition of which, Nard, and פיסתקא Maſte or Myrobalane were the chief ingredients.

Rabh ſaith,* דרבנין דרשחא ארישא If oyntment be upon the head of the Rabbins (The Gloſs is, the women poured oyntment upon the heads of the Scholars, and anoynted them) Rabh Papa ſaid to Abai, משחא דחפיפוחא תלמידין קאמר מר Does that Doctor ſpeak of the aromatic oyntment uſed in bridg-chambers? (The Gloſs is, Are the Rabbins ſuch, to be anoynted with ſuch oyntments?) He anſwered, יתמא O Orphan (that is, O thou unacquainted with the Cuſtoms) Did not thy Mother pour out oyntment for you (at thy wedding) *upon the heads of the Rabins. d Bab. Chetubb. fol. 17. 2.

From the Tradition produced, it may be asked, whether it were cuſtomary in Judea to wet the heads of the Rabbins with oyntments in the marriages of Virgins, as it was in Babylon? Or, whether it were ſo cuſtomary otherwiſe, to anoynt their heads; as that ſuch an anoynting at weddings, were not ſo memorable a matter, as it was in Babylon? Certainly in both places, however they anoynted mens heads for healths sake, it was accounted unfitting for Rabbins to ſmell of aromatical oyntments. e It is unde-

e Hieroſ. Berac. fol. 11. 2. cent, ſay the Jeruſalem Talmudiſts, for a Scholar of the Wiſe men to ſmell of ſpices. And you have the judgment of the Babylonians in this very place, when it is enquired among them, and that as it were with a certain kind of diſatisfaction, whether Rabbins be ſuch as that they ſhould be anoynted with aromatical oyntments, as the more nice ſort are wont to be anoynted. From this opinion every where received among them, you may more aptly underſtand, why the other Diſciples as well as Judas, did bear the laviſh of the oyntment with ſome indignation: He out of wicked covetouſneſs; but they partly as not willing that ſo precious a thing ſhould be loſt, and partly, as not liking ſo nice a cuſtom ſhould be uſed towards their Maſter, from which the Maſters of the Jews themſelves were ſo averſe. And our Saviour taking off the envy of what was done, applies this anoynting to his burial, both in his intention, and in the intention of the woman; that it might not ſeem to be done out of ſome delicate niceneſs.

II. It is not eaſie to reduce this ſum of three hundred pence to its proper value; partly becauſe a peny was twofold, a ſilver peny, and a gold one: partly, becauſe there was a double value and eſtimation of mony, namely that of Jeruſalem, and that of Tyre, as we obſerved before. Let theſe be ſilver (which we believe) which are of much leſs value than gold: and let them be Jeruſalem pence (which we alſo believe) which are cheaper than the Tyrian; yet they plainly ſpeak the great wealth of Magdalen, who poured out an oyntment of ſuch a value, when before ſhe had ſpent ſome ſuch other.

VER

VERS. XII.

Καὶ τῇ πρώτῃ ἡμέρᾳ τῶν ἀζύμων. And on the firſt day of unleavened bread.

SO Matth. Chap. XXVI. 17. and Luke, Chap. XXII. 7. And now let them tell me; who think that Chriſt indeed kept his Paſsover the fourteenth day, but the Jews not before the fifteenth, becauſe this year their Paſsover was transferred unto the fifteenth day, by reaſon of the following Sabbath: Let them tell me, I ſay, whether the Evangeliſts ſpeak according to the day preſcribed by Moſes, or according to the day preſcribed by the Maſters of the Traditions, and uſed by the Nation: If according to Moſes, then the fifteenth day was πρώτη Ἀζύμων, the firſt of Unleavened bread, Exod. XII. 15, 18. But if according to the manner of the Nation, then it was the fourteenth. And whether the Evangeliſts ſpeak according to this cuſtom, let us enquire briefly.

Sometime indeed the whole ſeven days feaſt was transferred to another month; and that not only from that Law, Numb. IX. but from other cauſes alſo; concerning which ſee the places quoted in the margin l. But when the time appointed for the feaſt occurred, the Lamb was always ſlain on the fourteenth day.

l Hieroſ. in Maaſar Sheni, fol 56. 3. & Maimon. in Kidduſh. Hodeſh, cap 4.

I. Let us begin with a ſtory, where an occaſion occurs, not very unlike that, for which they, of whom we ſpake, think the Paſsover this year was transferred; namely, becauſe of the following Sabbath. The ſtory is this. m "After the death of Shemaiah and Abta- "lion, the ſons of Betyra obtained the chief place: Hillel went up from Babylon to en- "quire concerning three doubts. When he was now at Jeruſalem, and the fourteenth "day of the firſt month fell out on the Sabbath; (obſerve that) it appeared not to the "ſons of Betyra, whether the Paſsover drove off the Sabbath, or no. Which when "Hillel had determined in many words, and had added moreover, that he had learnt this "from Shemaiah and Abtalion, they laid down their authority, and made Hillel preſident. "When they had choſen him Preſident, he derided them ſaying, What need have you of "this Babylonian? Did you not ſerve the two chief Men of the world, Shemaiah and Abta- "lion, who ſat among you? Theſe things which are already ſaid make enough to our purpoſe; but with the Readers leave, let us add the whole ſtory. "While he thus ſcof- "fed at them, he forgat a Tradition. For they ſaid, What is to be done with the peo- "ple, if they bring not their knives? He anſwered, I have heard this tradition, but I "have forgot. But let them alone, for although they are not Prophets, they are Pro- "phets ſons. Preſently every one, whoſe Paſsover was a Lamb, ſtuck his knife into the "fleece of it; and whoſe Paſsover was a Kid, hung his knife upon the horns of it.

m Hieroſ Peſachin, fol. 33. 1.

And now, let the impartial Reader judge between the reaſon which is given for the transferring the Paſsover this year unto the fifteenth day, namely, becauſe of the Sabbath following, that they might not be forced to abſtain from ſervile work for two days together; and the reaſon, for which it might with good reaſon be transferred that year, concerning which the ſtory is. The fourteenth day fell on a Sabbath, a ſcruple ariſeth, whether the Sabbath gives way to the Paſsover? Or the Paſsover to the Sabbath? The very chief men of the Sanhedrin, and the Oracles of Traditions are not able to reſolve the buſineſs. A great Article of Religion is tranſacting, and what is here to be done? O ye ſons of Betyra, transfer but the Paſsover unto the next day, and the knot is untied. Certainly, if this had been either uſual, or lawful they had provided, that the affairs of Religion, and their authority and fame, ſhould not have ſunk in this ſtrait. But that was not to be ſuffered.

II. Let us add a Tradition, which you may juſtly wonder at. n Five things, if they come in uncleanneſs, are not eaten in uncleanneſs: the ſheaf of firſt fruits, the two loaves, the Shew-bread, the Peace-offerings of the Congregation, and the Goats of the New-Moons. But הפסח שבא בטומאה נאכל בטומאה The Paſsover which comes in uncleanneſs, is eaten in uncleanneſs: becauſe it comes not originally, unleſs to be eaten.

n Peſachin, cap. 7. hal. 4.

Upon which Tradition thus Maimonides. The Lord ſaith, And there were ſome that were unclean by the Carkaſs of a man, (Numb. IX. 6.) and he determines of them, that they be put off from the Paſsover of the firſt month to the Paſsover of the ſecond. And the Tradition is, that it was thus determined, becauſe they were few. But if the whole Congregation ſhould have been unclean, or if the greateſt part of it ſhould have been unclean, yet they offer the Paſsover, though they are unclean. Therefore they ſay, Particular men are put off to the ſecond Paſſover, but the whole Congregation is not put off to the ſecond Paſsover. In like manner, All the oblations of the Congregation, they offer them in uncleanneſs, if the moſt are unclean; which we learn alſo from the Paſsover. For the Lord ſaith of the Paſsover, במועדו That it is to be offered in its ſet time, (Note that) and ſaith alſo, of the oblations of the Congregation, Ye ſhall do this to the Lord in your ſet times, and to them all he preſcribes a ſet time. Every thing therefore, to which a time is ſet, is alſo offered in uncleanneſs, if ſo be very many of the Congregation, or very many of the Prieſts be unclean.

o Hieros. Sotah, fol. 16. 3. We o find, that the Congregation makes their Paſsover in uncleanneſs, in that time, when moſt of them are unclean. And if known uncleanneſs be thus diſpenſed with, much more doubted uncleanneſs. But what need is there of ſuch diſpenſation? Could ye not put off the Paſsover, O ye Fathers of the Sanhedrin, for one or two days, that the people might be purified? By no means: for the Paſsover is to be offered במועדו In its ſet time, the fourteenth day, without any diſpenſation. For q In חמץ ומצה cap. 2. Maimonides, q From the words of the Scribes, they look for and rid away leaven in the beginning of the night of the fourteenth day, and that by the light of the Candle. For in the night time all are within their houſes, and a Candle is moſt proper for ſuch a ſearch. Therefore they do not appoint employments in the end of the thirteenth day, nor doth a wiſe Man begin to recite his Phylacteries in that time, leſt thereby by reaſon of his length he be hindred from ſeeking for leaven in its ſeaſon. And the ſame Author elſewhere,

And it was to be killed on the fourteenth day after noon, after the daily ſacrifice.*

And now, Reader, tell me what day the Evangeliſts call πρώτην Ἀζύμων The firſt day of unleavened bread: and whether it be any thing probable, that the Paſsover was ever transferred unto the fifteenth day? Much leſs is it probable, that Chriſt this year kept his Paſsover one day before the Paſsovers of the Jews.

For the Paſsover was not to be ſlain but in the Court, where the other ſacrifices were ſlain, as we heard juſt now from Maimonides; and ſee the Rubric of bringing in the t Peſach. cap. 5 hal. 5, 6. Lambs into the Court, and of ſlaying them t. And then tell me ſeriouſly, whither it be credible, that the Prieſts in the Temple, againſt the ſet decree of the Sanhedrin that year (as the opinion we contradict imports) would kill Chriſts one, only, ſingle Lamb; when by that decree it ought not to be killed before to morrow? When Chriſt ſaid to his Diſciples, Ye know, that after two days is the Paſsover; and when he Commanded them, Go ye, and prepare for us the Paſsover, it is a wonder they did not reply, True indeed, Sir, it ought to be after two days, but it is put off this year to a day later, ſo that now it is after three days. It is impoſſible therefore that we ſhould obey you now; for the Prieſts will not allow of killing before to morrow.

We have ſaid enough, I ſuppoſe, in this matter. But while I am ſpeaking of the day of the Paſsover, let me add a few words, although not to the buſineſs concerning which we have been treating; and they perhaps not unworthy of our conſideration.

u Peſach. cap. 8 *u He that mourns waſhes himſelf, and eats his Paſsover in the Even. x Hieroſ. Peſach. fol. 36 2. There x were Souldiers at Jeruſalem, who baptized themſelves, and eat their Paſsovers in the Even. A thing certainly to be noted, Proſelytes, the ſame day made Proſelytes, and eating the Paſsover; and that, as it ſeems, without Circumciſion, but admitted only by baptiſm.

The care of the School of Hillel in this caſe, did not ſo much repulſe a Proſelyte from eating the Paſsover, who was made a Proſelyte and baptized on the day of the Paſsover; as provided for the future, that ſuch an one in following years ſhould not obtrude himſelf to eat the Paſsover in uncleanneſs. For while he was in Heatheniſm, he contracted not uncleanneſs from the touch of a Sepulchre, but being made a Proſelyte he contracted uncleanneſs by it. Theſe are the words of the Gloſs.

Ἑτοιμάσωμέν ἵνα φάγῃς τὸ πάσχα. That we prepare, that thou mayeſt eat the Paſsover.

y Peſachim, cap. 8. hal. 2. For the Paſsovers were prepared by the ſervants for their Maſters. If y any ſay to his ſervant, Go and kill me the Paſsover, and he kills a Kid, let him eat of it: if he kill a Lamb, let him eat of it: if a Kid and a Lamb, let him eat of the former, &c.

VERS. XXVI.

Καὶ ὑμνήσαντες. And when they had ſung an Hymn.

I. WHAT [z] difference is there between the firſt Paſſover and the ſecond? (that is, The Paſſover of the firſt month, and of the ſecond, Numb. IX.) In the firſt, every one is bound under that Law, Leaven ſhall not be ſeen, nor found among you. In the ſecond, Leaven and unleavened bread may be with a man in his houſe. In the firſt, he is bound to an Hymn, when he eats the Paſſover. In the ſecond, he is not bound to an Hymn, when he eats it. In both, he is bound to an Hymn while he makes, or kills. Both are to be eaten roſt, and with unleavened bread, and bitter herbs, and both drive away the Sabbath. The Gemariſts aſk, Whence this is, that they are bound to an Hymn, while they eat the Paſſover? R. Jochanan in the name of R. Simeon ben Joſedek ſaith, The Scripture ſaith, You ſhall have a ſong, as in the night, when a Feaſt is kept (Eſa. XXX. 29.) The night which is ſet apart for a Feaſt, is bound to an Hymn: The night which is not ſet apart for a Feaſt, is not bound to an Hymn. The Gloſs writes thus, As ye are wont to ſing in the night, when a Feaſt is kept. But there is no night, wherein they are obliged to a ſong, beſides the night when the Paſſover is eaten. [z] Pſach. cap. 9 hal. 3.

II. That Hymn is called by the Rabbins the Hallel; and was from the beginning of Pſal. CXIII. to the end of Pſal. CXVIII. which they cut in two parts, and a part of it they repeated in the very middle of the banquet, and they reſerved a part to the end.

How far the former portion extended, is diſputed between the Schools of Shammai, and Hillel. That of Shammai ſaith, Unto the end of Pſal. CXIII. That of Hillel ſaith, Unto the end of Pſalm CXIV. But theſe things muſt not ſtop us. The Hymn which Chriſt now ſung with his Diſciples after meat, was the latter part. In which, as the Maſters of the Traditions obſerve, theſe five things are mentioned. a The going out of Egypt. The cutting in two of the Red Sea. The delivery of the Law. The Reſurrection of the dead, and the ſorrows of the Meſſias. The going out of Egypt, as it is written, When Iſrael went out of Egypt. The cutting in two of the Red Sea, as it is written, The Sea ſaw it and fled. The Delivery of the Law, as it is written, The Mountains leaped like Rams. The Reſurrection of the dead, as it is written, I will walk before the Lord in the Land of the living. And the ſorrows of the Meſſias, as it is written, Not unto us Lord, Not unto us. [a] Peſachin, fol. 118. 1.

Ἐξῆλθον εἰς τὸ ὄρος τῶν ἐλαιῶν. They went out to the Mount of Olives.

They were bound by the Traditional Canons to lodge within Jeruſalem. b On the firſt Paſſover every one is bound to lodge (טעון לינה) Alſo on the ſecond Paſſover he is bound to lodge. The Gloſs thus, He that keeps the Paſſover is bound to lodge in Jeruſalem the firſt night. But it is diſputed, whether it be the ſame night, wherein the Lamb is eaten: or the night firſt following the feaſt day. See the place: and let not the Lion of the Tribe of Judah be reſtrained in thoſe cobwebs. [b] Peſach. fol. 95 2.

SECT. XXXVI.

Ἀββᾶ ὁ πατήρ. Abba Father.

AS it is neceſſary to diſtinguiſh between the Hebrew and Chaldee Idiom in the words אבי Abi, and אבא Abba. So you may, I had almoſt ſaid, you muſt diſtinguiſh of their ſenſe. For the word אבי Abi, ſignifies indeed a natural Father, but withal a civil Father alſo, an Elder, a Maſter, a Doctor, a Magiſtrate: But the word אבא Abba, denotes only a natural Father, with which we comprehend alſo an adopting Father: yea, it denotes My Father.

שלא יאמר אדם לחבירו אבא גדול מאביך: c Let no man ſay to his neighbour אבא My Father is nobler than thy Father. d R. Chaija asked Rabh the ſon of his brother, when he came into the Land of Iſrael, אבא קיים Doth my Father live? And he anſwereth אמא קיימת And doth your Mother live? As if he ſhould have ſaid, You know your Mother is dead, ſo you may know your Father is dead. e Solomon ſaid, Obſerve ye מה פירש אבא what my Father ſaith? So in the Targum infinite times. [c] Bab. Sanhed. fol. 37. 1. [d] Aruch in אבא [e] Bathr. fol. 10. 2

And we may obſerve in the Holy Scriptures, whereſoever mention is made of a natural Father, the Targumiſts uſe the word אבא Abba: but when of a civil Father, they uſe another word.

I. Of

I. Of a natural Father.

Gen. XXII. 7, ויאמר אבי And he ſaid, Abi, my Father. The Targum reads ואמר אבא And ſaid, Abba, my Father.

Gen. XXVII. 34. ברכני גם אני אבי Bleſs me even me alſo אבי Abi, O my Father. The Targum reads, ברכני אוף לי אבא Bleſs me alſo, Abba, my Father.

Gen. XLVIII. 18. לא כן אבי Not ſo, Abi, my Father. Targum לא כדין אבא Not ſo, Abba, my Father.

Judg. XI. 36. אבי פתחת פיך Abi, my Father, if thou haſt opened thy mouth. Targum, אבא פתחת פומך Abba, my Father, if thou haſt opened thy mouth.

Eſa. VIII. 4. The Targum reads ידע עולימא למקרי אבא ואמא Before the child ſhall know to cry, Abba, my Father, and my Mother. See alſo the Targum upon Joſ. II. 13. and Judg. XIV. 16. and elſewhere very frequently.

II. Of a civil Father.

Gen. IV. 20, 21. אבי הוה יתיר He was, Abi, the Father of ſuch as dwell in Tents. ----- He was, Abi, the Father of ſuch as handle the Harp, &c. The Targum reads הוא הוה רבהון He was, Rabba, the Prince, or, the Maſter of them.

1 Sam. X. 12. ומי אביהם But who is, Abihem, their Father. Targum, ומן רבהון Who is their, Rab, Maſter, or, Prince.

2 Kings II. 12. אבי אבי Abi, Abi, my Father, my Father. The Targum, רבי רבי Rabbi, Rabbi.

2 Kings V. 13. ויאמרו אבי And they ſaid, Abi, my Father. The Targum, ואמרו מרי And they ſaid, Mari, my Lord.

2 Kings VI. 21. אכה אבי Abi, my Father, ſhall I ſmite them? Targum, אקטול רבי Rabbi, ſhall, &c.

Hence appears the reaſon of thoſe words of the Apoſtle, Rom. VIII. 15. Ἐλάβετε πνεῦμα υἱοθεσίας ἐν ᾧ κράζομεν, Ἀββᾶ ὁ Πατήρ. Ye have received the ſpirit of adoption, whereby we cry Abba, Father. And Gal. IV. 6. Becauſe ye are ſons, God hath ſent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father. It was one thing to call God אבי Father, that is, Lord, King, Teacher, Governor, &c. and another to call him אבא Abba, my Father. The doctrine of adoption in the proper ſenſe was altogether unknown to the Jewiſh Schools, (though they boaſted that the people of Iſrael alone were adopted by God above all other Nations:) and yet they called God אבי Father, and אבינו Our Father, that is, our God, Lord and King, &c. But ſince ye are ſons, ſaith the Apoſtle, ye cry אבא Abba, O my Father, in the proper and truly paternal ſenſe.

Thus Chriſt in this place, however under an unſpeakable agony, and compaſſed about on all ſides with anguiſhments, and with a very cloudy and darkſome providence: yet he acknowledges, invokes, and finds God אבא his Father, in a moſt ſweet ſenſe.

Κράζομεν Ἀββᾶ ὁ πατήρ· We cry Abba, Father. Did the Saints invoking God, and calling him Abba, add alſo Father? Did Chriſt alſo uſe the ſame addition of the Greek word πατήρ, Father, and did he repeat the word Ἀββᾶ, Abba, or אבי Abi? Father ſeems rather here to be added by Mark, and there alſo by St. Paul, for explication of the word Abba: and this is ſo much the more probable alſo, becauſe it is expreſſed ὁ Πατήρ, Father, and not ὦ Πάτερ, O Father, in the Vocative.

VERS. LI.

Περιβεβλημένος σινδόνα ἐπὶ γυμνῷ. Having a linnin cloth caſt about his naked body.

IT is well rendred by the Vulgar, Amictus Sindone, Cloathed in Sindon, or, fine linnin: for to that the words have reſpect: not that he had ſome linnin looſly and by chance caſt about him; but that the garment wherewith he always went clothed, was of Sindon, that is of linnin. Let us harken a little to the Talmudiſts.

ſ Menachoth, fol. 40. 1. 1

ſ The Rabbins deliver, סידון בציצית Sindon (linnin) with fringes, what of them? The School of Shammai abſolves; The School of Hillel binds. And the wiſe Men determine according to the School of Hillel. R. Eliezer ben R. Zadoc ſaith, Whoſoever wears Hyacinth (purple) in Jeruſalem, is among thoſe who make men admire. By Hyacinthinum, תכלת purple, they underſtand thoſe fringes that were to put them in mind of the Law, Numb. XV. And by סידון Sindon, linnin, is underſtood טלית A Cloak, or that garment which as it ſerves for cloathing the body, ſo it is doubly ſerviceable to Religion. For, 1. To this garment were ציצית The fringes faſtned, concerning which mention is made Numb. XV. 38. 2. With this garment they commonly covered their heads when they prayed. Hence that in the Gemariſts in the place quoted. טלית שמתכסה בו קטן ראשו ורובו Talith, or, the Cloak, whereby the boy covereth his head, and a great part of himſelf, if any one of elder years, goes forth forth cloathed with it in a more immodeſt manner, he is bound to wear fringes. And elſewhere, g The Prieſts who vail themſelves, when they go up into the pulpit, בטליתשאינו להם with a cloak which is not their own, &c.

g Pisbe Toſaphoth in Menachoth numer. 150.

But now it was cuſtomary to wear this cloak, in the Summer eſpecially, and in Jeruſalem for the moſt part, made of Sindon, or of linnin. And the queſtion between the Schools of Shammai, and Hillel aroſe hence, that when the fringes were woolen, and the cloak linnin, how would the ſuſpicion of wearing things of different ſorts be avoided? שרא ר' זירא לסרוניה R. Zeira looſed his Sindon. The Gloſs is, He looſed his fringes from his Sindon (that is, from his Talith which was of Sindon, linnin) becauſe it was of linnin, &c. h The Angel found Rabh Ketina דמיכסי סרינא cloathed in Sindon; and ſaid to him, O Ketina, Ketina, סרינא בקייטא Sindon in the Summer, וסרבלא בסיתוא And a ſhort cloak in the Winter.

h Ibid. fol. 11. 1.

You ſee that word which is ſpoke by the Evangeliſt ἐπὶ γυμνῷ About his naked body, carries an emphaſis: for it was moſt uſual to be cloathed with Sindon for an outer garment. What therefore muſt we ſay of this young man? I ſuſpect in the firſt place, that he was not a Diſciple of Jeſus, but that he now followed, as ſome curious looker on to ſee what this multitude would at laſt produce. And to ſuch a ſuſpicion they certainly do conſent, who think him to have been rouzed from his bed, and haſtily followed the rout with nothing but his ſhirt on, without any other cloaths. I ſuppoſe, ſecondly, St. Mark in the phraſe περιβεβλημένος σινδόνα having a Sindon caſt about him, ſpake according to the known and vulgar dialect of the Nation מיכסי סרינא or מתכסה סדין Cloathed with a Sindon. For none ſhall ever perſwade me, that he would uſe an Idiom any thing uncouth, or ſtrange to the Nation; and that when he uſed the very ſame phraſe in Greek, with that Jewiſh one, he intended not to propound the very ſame ſenſe. But now, you clearly ſee, they themſelves being our Teachers, what is the meaning of being clothed with a Sindon, with them; namely, to have a Talith or cloak made of linnin; that garment to which the fringes hung. I ſuppoſe, in the laſt place, that this young man, out of Religion, or ſuperſtition rather, more than ordinary, had put on his Sindon and nothing but that upon his naked body, neglecting his inner garment (commonly called חלוק Chaluk,) and indeed neglecting his body. For there were ſome amongſt the Jews that did ſo macerate their bodies, and afflict them with hunger and cold even above the ſevere rule of other Sects.

Joſephus in his own life, writes thus: "I was ſixteen years old, and I reſolved to make "trial of the inſtitution of the three Sects among us, the Phariſees, the Sadducees and "the Eſſenes: for I judged I ſhould be able very well to chooſe the beſt of them, if I "thorowly learned them all. Afflicting therefore and much tormenting my ſelf, I tried "them all. Καὶ μηδὲ τοῦτο ἐντὸς ἦν ἐμπειρίαν ἱκανὴν ἐμαυτῷ νομίσας εἶναι, &c. But judg-"ing with my ſelf, that it was not enough to have tried theſe Sects, and hearing of one "Banus, that lived in the Wilderneſs, that he uſed a garment διὰ δένδρων made of leaves, "or the bark of trees, and no food but what grew of its own accord, and often by day "and by night waſhing himſelf in cold water, I became a Follower of him, and for "three years abode with him.

And in that place in the Talmudiſts, which we but now produced, at that very ſtory of Rabh Ketina, wearing a Sindon in the Winter for his Talith, we have theſe words; The Religious in elder times, when they had wove three wings (of the Talith) they joyned תכלת The Purple, whereof the Fringes were made. But otherwiſe חסידים דמחמרי לנפשייהו They are Religious who impoſe upon themſelves things heavier than ordinary. And immediately follows the ſtory of the Angel and Ketina, who did ſo. There were ſome who heaped up upon themſelves burthens and yokes of Religion above the common rule; and that this is to be underſtood by מחמרי לנפשייהו ſuch as laid upon themſelves heavier things than ordinary, both the practice of ſome Jews perſwade, and the word it ſelf ſpeaks it, being uſed by the Gemariſts in the ſame ſenſe elſewhere.

Such we ſuppoſe was this young man (as Joſephus was, when a young man, of whom before) who, when others armed themſelves againſt the cold with a double garment, namely חלוק An inner garment, and טלית a Talith, or Cloak, he clothed himſelf with a ſingle garment, and that of Sindon, or linnin, and under the ſhew of ſome more auſtere Religion; neglecting the ordinary cuſtom, and care of himſelf.

The thing taken in the ſenſe which we propound, ſpeaks the furious madneſs of this moſt wicked rout ſo much the more, in as much as they ſpared not a man, and he a young man, bearing moſt evident marks of a more ſevere Religion.

VERS. LVI.

Ἴσαι αἱ μαρτυρίαι οὐκ ἦσαν. Their witneſs agreed not together.

THE Traditional Canons in theſe caſes divide teſtimonies into three parts.

I. There was עדות בטולה A vain teſtimony: which being heard, there is no more enquiry made from that witneſs, there is no more uſe made of him, but he is ſet aſide, as ſpeaking nothing to the buſineſs.

II. There was עדות קיימת A ſtanding teſtimony, (for let me ſo turn it here) which although it proved not the matter without doubt, yet it was not rejected by the Judges, but admitted to examination by הזמה Citation, that is, others being admitted to try to diſprove it, if they could.

III. There was the Teſtimony כשרבריהם מכוונים of the words of them that agreed, or, fitted together. (this alſo was עדות קיימת A ſtanding evidence) when the words of two witneſſes agreed, and were to the ſame purpoſe. Μαρτυρία ἴση, An even evidence.

[c] Cap. 5 hal. 3, 4. Of theſe ſee the Tract Sanhedrin. Where alſo diſcourſe is had concerning exact ſearch and examination of the Witneſſes by בדיקות and חקירות and הזמה Inquiſition, and Scrutiny and Citation: by which curious diſquiſition, if they had examined the witneſſes that babbled, and barked againſt Chriſt, Oh! the unſpeakable and infinite innocence of the moſt Bleſſed Jeſus, which envy and madneſs it ſelf, never ſo much ſworn together againſt his life, could have faſtned any crime upon!

It is ſaid verſ. 55. Ἐζήτουν κατὰ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ μαρτυρίαν· They ſought for witneſs againſt Chriſt. This is neither equal, O Fathers of the Sanhedrin, nor agreeable to your rule. דיני

[d] Sanhedr. c. 4. נפשות פותחין לזכות ואין פותחין לחובה d In judgments about the life of any man, they begin firſt to tranſact about quitting the party, who is tryed, and they begin not with thoſe things which make for his condemnation. Whether the Sanhedrin now followed that Canon in their ſcrutiny about Chriſts caſe, let them look to it: by their whole proceſs it ſufficiently appears, whither their diſquiſition tended. And let it be granted, that they pretended ſome colour of juſtice and mercy, and permitted that any who would might come forth ללמד עליו זכות and teſtifie ſomething in his behalf; Where was any ſuch now to be found? When all his Diſciples turned their backs upon him, and the Fathers of the Traditions had provided, that whoſoever ſhould confeſs him to be Chriſt ſhould be ſtruck with the thunder of their excommunication, Joh. IX, 22.

CHAP. XV.

VERS. I.

Ἐπὶ τὸ πρωὶ συμβούλιον ποιήσαντες, οἱ ὅλον τὸ Συνέδριον. Early in the morning they held a Conſultation, and the whole Council.

[a] Maimon. Sanhedr. cap. 3. AT a what time do the Judges ſit in judgment? The leſſer Sanhedrin and the Bench of Three ſit after morning prayers are ended, until the end of the ſixth hour. But the great Sanhedrin ſits after the morning daily ſacrifice to the afternoon daily ſacrifice. And on Sabbaths, and feaſt days (as this day was that is here ſpoken of) it ſat in Bethmidraſh (or the Chappel) in the Court of the Gentiles.

The Sanhedrin of one and ſeventy Elders, it is not neceſſary, that they all ſit in their place which is in the Temple. But when it is neceſſary, that all meet together, let all meet together. Ὅλον τὸ συνέδριον· The whole Council.

But in other times, he that hath buſineſs of his own, let him attend his own buſineſs, and then return. With this Proviſo, that nothing be wanting of the number of three and twenty upon the Bench continually during the whole time of the Seſſion (συμβούλιον, the Conſultation.) If any muſt go out, let him look round, whether his Collegues be three and twenty: if they be, let him go out: but if not, let him wait till another enter in.

VERS.

VERS. VI.

Κατὰ δὲ τὴν ἑορτὴν ἀπέλυεν, &c. At the feaſt he releaſed, &c.

THE Syriac reads בכל עדנא and ſo the Arab, פי כל עיד Every feaſt. Beza, ſingulis feſtis, At each of the feaſts, which pleaſes me not at all. For it is plainly ſaid by Pilate himſelf, That I ſhould releaſe unto you one at the Paſſover, Joh. XVIII. 39. And the releaſing of a priſoner ſuites not ſo well to the other feaſts, as to the Paſſover. Becauſe the Paſſover carries with it the memory of the Releaſe of the people out of Egypt: but other feaſts had other reſpects. Κατὰ τὴν ἑορτὴν, I would render by way of paraphraſe, According to the nature and quality of the feaſt, which was a monument of releaſe.

The words עדנא and עיד here and there uſed by the Syrian, and the Arab for feaſt, and eſpecially עיד remind me of that Diſputation of the Gemariſts upon the ſecond word in the Tract Avodah Zarah; namely, whether it be to be writ אידיהן or עידיהן whereby is denoted a feaſt day of the Heathens.

Βαραββᾶς· Barabbas.

LET us mention alſo with him a very famous rogue in the Talmudiſts בן דינאי Ben Dinai, whoſe name alſo was Eleazar. Of whom they have this paſſage worthy of Chronological obſervation. b From the time that murtherers were multiplied the beheading the red Cow ceaſed; namely, from the time that Eleazar Ben Dinai came; who was alſo called Tichinnah ben Periſhah: but again they called him, בן הרצחן The ſon of a murtherer. Of him mention is made elſewhere c, where it is written בן רונא Ben Donai. See alſo בן נצר Ben Nezer the King of the Robbers d.

b Sotah, fol. 47. 1.

c Chetubh. fol. 27. 1. And Kelim, fol. 12. 2.

d Chetubh. fol. 51. 2.

VERS. XXI.

Ἐρχόμενον ἀπ' ἀγροῦ. Coming out of the Country, or, field.

מביאים עצים מן השדה: e They bring wood out of the field (on a Feaſt day) either bound together: or, מן הקרפף from ſome place fenced round, or ſcattered. The Gloſs there is, They bring wood on a feaſt day out of the field, which is within the limits of the Sabbath, if it be bound together on the Eve of the feaſt day, &c. קרפף is a place watched and fenced in every way. And Rambam writes, Rabbi Joſe ſaith, If there be a door in קרפף ſuch a fenced place, although it be diſtant from the City, almoſt two thouſand cubits, which are the limits of the Sabbath, one may bring wood thence.

e Betſah, fol. 31. 1.

It may be conceived, that Simon the Cyrenean, came out of the field thus loaded with wood; and you may conceive that he had given occaſion to the Souldiers or Executioners, why they would lay the Croſs upon him, namely, becauſe they ſaw that he was a ſtrong bearer, and inſtead of one burthen, they laid this other upon him to bear.

VERS. XXV.

Ἦν δὲ ὥρα τρίτη, καὶ ἐσταύρωσαν αὐτόν· And it was the third hour, and they crucified him.

BUT John ſaith, Chap. XIX. 14. Ἦν δὲ παρασκευὴ τοῦ πάσχα, ὥρα δὲ ὡσεὶ ἕκτη. And it was the preparation of the Paſſover, and about the ſixth hour: namely, when Pilate delivered him to be crucified. From the former clauſe, It was the preparation of the Paſſover, hath ſprung that opinion, of which we have ſaid ſomething before, concerning the transferring of the eating of the Lamb this year to the fifteenth day. For they think by The preparation of the Paſſover, is to be underſtood the preparation of the Lamb, or for the eating of the Lamb. For which interpretation they think that makes, which is ſaid by the ſame John, Chap. XVIII. 28. They would not go into the Judgment Hall, leſt they ſhould be defiled, but that they might eat the Paſſover. And hence it is confidently concluded by them, that however Chriſt eat his Lamb the day before, yet the Jews were to eat theirs this very day.

We will diſcourſe firſt of the day, as it here occurs under the name of Παρασκευὴ τοῦ πάσχα, The preparation of the Paſſover; and then of the hour.

I. Every

I. Every Iſraelite was bound, within that ſeven days ſolemnity, after the Lamb was eaten, to theſe two things. 1. To appear before the Lord in the Court, and that with a Sacrifice. 2. To ſolemn joy and mirth, and that alſo with Sacrifices. The former was called by the Jews ראייה Appearance. The latter חגיגה Chagigah, The Feſtival.

f Chagigah, c. 1. hal. 1. הכל חייבין בראייה f All are bound to appear, except deaf and dumb, fools, young children, &c. And a little after, The School of Shammai ſaith, Let the appearance be with two ſilver pieces of mony (ראייה בשתי כסף) And the Chagigah be with a Meah of Silver (וחגיגה מעה כסף) The School of Hillel ſaith, Let the Appearance be with a Meah of Silver, and the Chagigah with two pieces of Silver. The Gloſs writes thus, All are bound to make their Appearance from that precept, All thy Males ſhall appear, &c. (Exod. XXXIII. 17.) And it is neceſſary that they appear in the Court in the Feaſt. He that appears, when he placeth himſelf in the Court, Let him bring a burnt offering, which is by no means to be of leſs price than two peices of ſilver, that is of two Meahs of Silver. They are bound alſo to the Peace offerings of the Chagigah, by that Law, וחגתם אותו חג לה' Ye ſhall keep it a Feaſt to the Lord (Exod. XII. 14.) Rambam upon the place thus; ſaith the Lord, let them not appear before me empty, Deut. XVI. 16. That is, קרבן עולה Let him bring an oblation of a burnt Sacrifice in his hand, when he goes up to the Feaſt. And thoſe burnt Sacrifices are called עולות ראייה Burnt Sacrifices of Appearance, and alſo ראייה Appearance, without the addition of the word, Burnt Sacrifice. And the Chagigah, from thence becauſe the Lord ſaith, Ye ſhall keep it a Feaſt to the Lord. It means this שיביא קרבן שלמים That a man bring Peace offerings, and theſe Peace offerings are called Chagigah.

II. Of theſe two, namely, The Appearance and the Chagihah, the Chagigah was the greater and more famous. For

g Chagigah, fol. 2. 2. Firſt, Certain perſons were obliged to the Chagigah, who were not obliged to the Appearance. g He that indeed is not deaf, but yet is dumb, is not obliged to Appearance; but yet he is obliged לשמחה to rejoyce. It is true ſome of the Gemariſts diſtinguiſh between חגיגה Chagigah, and שמחה Rejoycing. h But one Gloſſer upon the place

h Fol. 5. 2. alledged כי קאמר דמחייב בשמחה וכו' That which he ſaith of Rejoycing obtains alſo of the Chagigah. And another ſaith, He is bound לשמחה to Rejoycing, namely to rejoyce in the Feaſt; as it is written, And thou ſhalt rejoyce in thy Feaſt. And they ſay elſewhere, that that rejoycing is over the Peace offerings, namely, in eating fleſh.

Secondly, Appearance was not tyed ſo ſtrictly to the firſt day, but the Chagigah was tyed to it. עולות נדרים ונדבות במועד באות ביט אינן באות Burnt ſacrifices by vow and free will-offerings are offered on the common days of the Feaſt, they are not offered on a Feaſt day: וראייה באה אפיל ביט But the burnt ſacrifices of Appearance may be offered alſo on a Feaſt day: and when they are offered, let them not be offered but מן החולין out of common cattle: ושלמי שמחה But the Peace offerings of Rejoycing alſo out of the Tithes. חגיגה יום טוב ראשון של פסח The Chagigah of the firſt Feaſt day of the Paſsover, the School of Shammai ſaith, let it be of (Cholin) common cattle: the School of Hillel ſaith, let it be of the Tithes. What is it, that it teaches of the Chagigah of the firſt Feaſt day of the Paſsover? Rabh Iſhai ſaith, חגיגת ט' אין The Chagigah of the fifteenth day is ſo: חגיג יד' לא The Chagigah of the fourteenth, not. The Gloſs is, The burnt-offerings of Appearance were not offered the firſt day of the Feaſt, although they were due to the Feaſt, becauſe compenſation might be made by them the day following.

The Chagigah of the firſt Feaſt day was without doubt due; although it had fleſh enough otherways. For as it was ſaid a little before, They offered Peace-offerings on that Feaſt-day לפי שיש בהם צורך למאכל הריוט becauſe they had need of them for private food: and although there was food enough, yet the Chagigah was to be offered, as the due of the day.

The Chagigah of the fourteenth day was this, בשהיתה חבורת פסח מרובה When any Φρατρία, company was numerous, they joyned the Chagigah alſo with the Paſchal Lamb, that they might eat the Paſsover even till they were filled. But now the Chagigah of that firſt day was not but of common cattle: but the Chagigah of the fourteenth day might alſo be of the Tithes.

It was a greater matter to offer of common cattle (or Cholin) than of the Tithes or the Firſt born; for they were owing to the Lord by right; but to offer the Cholin, was the part of further devotion and free-will.

That therefore which John ſaith, That the Jews would not go into the Judgment-Hall, leſt they ſhould be polluted, but that they might eat the Paſsover, is to be underſtood of that Chagigah, of the fifteenth day, not of the Paſchal Lamb: for that alſo is called the Paſsover, Deut. XVI. 2. Thou ſhalt ſacrifice the Paſsover to the Lord of thy flocks and of thy herds. Of thy flocks; this indeed by vertue of that precept, Exod. XII. 3. But what have we to do with herds? Of thy herds, ſaith R. Solomon, for the Chagigah. And Aben Ezra ſaith, Of thy Flocks, according to the Duty of the Paſsover; Of thy thy Herds, for the Peace offerings, and produceth that 2 Chron. XXX. 24. and XXXV. 8. The Targum of Jonathan writes, Ye ſhall kill the Paſsover before the Lord your God, between the Eves, and your ſheep and Oxen on the morrow, in that very day, in joy of the Feaſt.

In one Gloſſer, i mention is made of פסח קטן The leſs Paſsover, by which if he underſtands not the Paſsover of the ſecond month, which is very uſually called by them, פסח שני The ſecond Paſsover, or the Paſsover of the ſecond month, inſtruct me what he means by it. However this matter is clear in Moſes, that Oxen or the ſacrifices offered after the Lamb eaten, are called alſo the Paſsover as well as the Lamb it ſelf. i Ad Chabig. fol. 17. 2.

And no wonder, when the Lamb was the very leaſt part of the Joy, and there were ſeven Feaſt days after he was eaten: and when the Lamb was a thing rubbing up the remembrance of affliction, rather than denoting gladneſs and making merry. For the unleavened bread was marked out by the Holy Scripture under that very notion, and ſo alſo the bitter herbs, which were things that belonged to the Lamb. But how much of the ſolemnity of the Feaſt is attributed to the Chagigah, and the other Sacrifices after that, it would be too much to mention, ſince it occurs every where.

Hear the author of the Aruch concerning the Chagigah of Pentecoſt. The word חג Chag denotes dancing, and clapping hands for joy. In the Syriac Language it is חיגא Chigah: and ſo in the Scripture יחוגו וינועו כשיכור (Pſal. CVII. 27. The interlinear Verſion reads They went in a round, and moved themſelvs like a drunken man) And from this root it is that they eat and drink, and dance, or make holy day. And the Sacrifice of the Chagigah, which they were bound to bring on a Feaſt day, is that concerning which the Scripture ſaith ועשית חג שבועות And thou ſhalt make חג Chag a Solemnity of weeks to the Lord thy God, a free-will-offering of thy hand, &c. Deut. XVI. 10.

And now tell me, whence received that Feaſt its denomination that it ſhould be called חג The Feaſt of weeks? Not from the offering of the loaves of firſt-fruits, but from the Chagigah, and the feaſting on the Chagigah. The ſame is to be ſaid of the Feaſt of the Paſsover. So that John ſaid nothing ſtrange to the ears of Jews, when he ſaid, They went not into the Judgement Hall, leſt they might be polluted, but that they might eat the Paſsover; poynting with his finger to the Chagigah, and not to the Lamb eaten indeed the day before.

The word Paſsover might ſound to the ſame ſenſe in thoſe words of his alſo, It was the Preparation of the Paſsover, and about the ſixth hour. It was the Preparation to the Chagigah, and not to the Lamb. But I ſuſpect ſomething more may be underſtood, namely, that on that day both food was prepared, and minds for the mirth of the whole Feaſt. So that the Paſsover denotes τὴν ἑορτὴν, The Feaſt, not this or that particular appendage to the Feaſt. The burnt Sacrifices which were offered in the Appearance כולה לגבוה they all became Gods, as the Maſters ſay truly; and he who offered them, carried not back the leaſt part of them with him. But the Sacrifices of the Chagigah, whether they were oxen, or ſheep, the greateſt part of them returned to them that offered them; and with them, they and their friends made ſolemn and joyful feaſtings, while they tarried at Jeruſalem. So that the oblation of theſe the firſt day of the Feaſt, was Παρασκευὴ τὸ πάσχα, The Preparation of the Paſsover; and Παρασκευὴ τῆς Πεντηκοστῆς, The Preparation of Pentecoſt, and Παρασκευὴ τῆς Σκηνοπηγίας, The preparation of the Feaſt of Tabernacles. That is, the Day and manner of preparing food for the following mirth of the Feaſt. In the ſame ſenſe was παρασκευὴ, The Preparation of the Sabbath, namely, The preparation of food and things neceſſary to the Sabbath. Of which we ſhall ſpeak at Verſ. 42.

Having thus diſpatched theſe things, let us now come to the hour it ſelf. It was the Preparation of the Paſsover, ſaith John, and about the ſixth hour, when Pilate delivered Chriſt to be crucified. And it was the third hour, ſaith Mark, and they crucified him.

It is diſputed by the Gemariſts, l how far the evidences of two men may agree and conſent, whereof one ſaith, This I ſaw done in that hour; and the other ſaith, I ſaw it done another hour. One ſaith, the ſecond hour, another, the third, עדותן קיימה Their Teſtimony conſiſt together. One ſaith, The third hour, another, the fifth עדותן בטילה Their Teſtimony is vain; as R. Meir ſaith. But ſaith R. Judah, Their Teſtimony conſiſts toge her. But if one ſaith, The fifth hour, another, the ſeventh hour, their teſtimony is vain; becauſe in the fifth hour, the Sun is in the Eaſt part of Heaven; in the ſeventh, in the Weſt part. They diſpute largely concerning this matter in the place alledged, and concerning evidences differing in words, nevertheleſs as to the thing it ſelf they conclude, that both may be true, becauſe witneſſes may be deceived in the computation of hours. Which to conclude concerning the Evangeliſts were impious and blaſphemous. But there is one ſuppoſes the Copiers were deceived in their tranſcription, and would have the computation of John corrected into ἦν δὲ ὥρα ὡσεὶ τρίτη And it was about the third hour. Too bodily, and indeed without any reaſon. For it is neither credible, l In Bab. Petſach. fol. 11. 2.

nor poſſible indeed, that thoſe things which went before our Saviours crucifixion ſhould be done בחלת שעי קמיתא (to uſe the words of the Talmudiſts m) in the three firſt hours of the day. The Harmony therefore of the Evangeliſts is to be fetched elſewhere?

m Sanhedr. fol. 105. 2.

I. Let us repeat that out of Maimonides; The great Sanhedrin ſat from the morning dayly Sacrifice until the afternoon daily Sacrifice. But now when the morning dayly Sacrifice was at the third hour, the Sanhedrin ſat not before that hour. Take heed therefore Thou, that wouldſt have the words of John, And it was about the ſixth hour, to be changed into , And it was about the third hour, leſt thou becomeſt guilty of a great Soleciſm. For Pilate could not deliver Chriſt to be crucified about the third hour, when the Sanhedrin ſat not before the Third hour, and Chriſt was not yet delivered to Pilate.

But you will ſay, The words of Mark do obſcure theſe things much more. For if the Sanhedrin that delivered up Chriſt met not together before the third hour, one can no way ſay, that they crucified him the third hour.

We do here propound two things for the explanation of this matter.

Let the firſt be taken from the day it ſelf, and from the hour it ſelf. That day was the Preparation of the Paſsover, a day of high ſolemnity, and when it behoved the Prieſts, and the other Fathers of the Sanhedrin, to be preſent at the third hour in the Temple, and to offer their Chagigahs, that were preparative to the whole ſeven days feſtivity: but they employed themſelves in another thing, namely this. You may obſerve, that he ſaith not, It was the third hour, when; but It was the third hour, And they crucified him. That is, When the third hour now was, and was paſſed, yet they omitted not to proſecute his crucifixion, when indeed, according to the manner of the Feaſt, and the obligation of Religion, they ought to have been employed otherwiſe. I indeed ſhould rather ſit down ſatisfied with this interpretation, than to accuſe the holy Text as depraved, or to deprave it more with my amendment. But Secondly, There is another ſenſe alſo not to be deſpiſed, if our judgment is any thing, which we fetch from a cuſtom uſual in the Sanhedrin, but from which they now ſwerved. n They are treating concerning a guilty perſon condemned to hanging; with whom they deal in this proceſs משהין אותו עד סמוך לשקיעת החמה They tarry until Sunſet approach וגומרין את דינו וממיתין אותו And then they finiſh his judgment, and put him to death. Note that, They finiſh not his judgment until Sunſet draw near. If you ask the reaſon, a more general one may be given, which reſpected all perſons condemned to dye; and a more ſpecial one, which reſpected him which was to be hanged.

n Sanhedr. fol. 46. 2.

I. There was that which is called by the Talmudiſts עינוי הדין The affliction of judgment: by which Phraſe they underſtand not judgment that is not juſt, but when he that is condemned, after judgment paſt, is not preſently put to death. לגמריה לדינא o If you finiſh his judgment on the Sabbath (mark that) and put him to death on the firſt day of the week נמצא אתה מענה את דינו You afflict his judgment. Where the Gloſs is, As long as his judgment is not finiſhed, it is not the affliction of judgment, becauſe he expects every hour to be abſolved. But when judgment is ended, he expects death, &c. Therefore they delayed but little between the finiſhing of judgment, and execution.

o Sanhedr. fol. 35. 1.

II. As to thoſe that were to be hanged משהין אותו את גמר דינו They delayed the finiſhing his judgment, and they hanged him not in the morning, leſt they might grow ſlack about his burial, and might fall into forgetfulneſs, and might ſin againſt the Law, (Deut. XXI. 23.) but near Sunſet, that they might preſently bury him. So the Gloſs. They put him to death not ſooner for this reaſon: they finiſhed not his judgment ſooner for the reaſon above ſaid.

And now let us reſume the words of Mark, And it was the third hour, and they crucified him. The Sanhedrin uſed not to finiſh the judgment of hanging, until they were now ready to riſe up and depart from the Council and Bench, after the Mincha, the day now inclining toward Sunſet: but theſe men finiſhed the Judgment of Jeſus, and haſtened him to the Croſs, when they firſt came into the Court at the third hour, at the time of the dayly ſacrifice; which was very unuſual, and different from the cuſtom.

VERS. XXXIV.

Ἐλωΐ, Ἐλωΐ. Eloi, Eloi.

IN Matthew it is אלי אלי Eli, Eli in the very ſame Syllables of Pſal. XXII. 1. Mark according to the preſent dialect (namely, the Chaldee) uſeth the pronunciation of the word אלהא or at leaſt according to the pronunciation of the word אלהים Ἤλωΐ, Eloi, Judg. V. 5. in the LXX.

VERS. XLII.

Παρασκευή, ὅ ἐστι, προσάββατον. The Preparation, that is, the day before the Sabbath.

YOU will ask, whether any day going before the Sabbath was called Paraſceue, The Preparation. Among the Hebrews indeed it is commonly ſaid ערב השבת The Eve of the Sabbath. But be it granted: whence is it called, The Preparation? Either that they prepared themſelves for the Sabbath? or rather, that they prepared proviſions to be eaten on the Sabbath? And that by the Law, On the ſixt day they ſhall prepare, &c. Whatſoever ye will bake, bake to day; and whatſoever ye will ſeeth, ſeeth to day, &c. Exod. XVI. 5, 23. Hence הכנה that is, Preparation, is a very uſual word with them in this ſenſe חול מכין לשבת וחול מכין ליו״ט p A common day prepares for the Sabbath, and a common day prepares for a feaſt day. q But thoſe reaſons do not hold good לאסור הכנה to forbid the Preparation, while as yet there remains much of the day. הכנה παρασκευή, Preparation.

p Maimon. in Jom tobh c. 1. q Gloſs Ibid. in cap. 6.

But you will ſay, If a Feaſt day prepares not for the Sabbath, which Maimonides ſaith, ſuch an Interpretation will not ſuit with the words, which we are now handling, that it ſhould be called The Preparation, in reſpect of proviſions prepared for the Sabbath, on that day. Let the Maſters themſelves anſwer.

יום טוב שחל להיות ערב שבת: r On a feaſt day, which happens on a Sabbath Eve, let not, a man in the beginning ſeeth food after the Feaſt day for the Sabbath day, but let him ſeeth for the Feaſt day, and if any remains, let it be reſerved for the Sabbath. But עושה תבשיל (according to the letter, Let him make a boyling, but the ſenſe is) Let him prepare food on the Eve of the Feaſt day, and let him depend upon it for the Sabbath. The School of Shammai ſaith שני תבשילין A twofold food: that of Hillel ſaith One food.

r Bab. Jom tobh, fol. 15. 1.

Maimonides ſpeaks plainer. s "On a Feaſt day, that falls in with a Sabbath Eve, "they do not bake nor ſeeth on the Feaſt day what they eat on the Sabbath. And this "prohibition is from the words of the Scribes: namely, That none ſeeth on a Feaſt day "for a common day: for this is arguing a majori ad minus, from the greater to the "leſs: if a man ſeeth not for the Sabbath day much leſs for a common day. But if "he provides food on the Eve of the Feaſt day, on which he may depend, (שמומך "עליו) then if he bake or ſeeth on the Feaſt day for the Sabbath, it is permitted: and "that, on which he depends, is called עירוב תבשילין The mixing of food. And why "it is called עירוב Mixing? (συναμίξις A mingling together) Namely, as that mixing "which they make concerning the Courts or the Veſteries, on the Sabbath Eve, is for "acknowledgment, that is, that they ſhould not think, that it is lawful to carry any "thing from place to place on the Sabbath: So this food is for acknowledgment and re-"membrance, that they ſhould not think or imagine that it is lawful to bake any thing "on a Feaſt day, which is not eaten that day: therefore this food is called עירובי "תבשילין the mixing of food.

s Jom. tobh, cap. 6.

Of עירובי חצירות the mixing of Courts we ſpeak 2 Cor. X. 16. The ſum of the matter is this; many families dwelt by one common Court: now therefore when it was not lawful to carry out any thing on the Sabbath מרשות לרשות from a place which was of one right, and condition, to a place which was of another; therefore it was not lawful for any of thoſe families to carry out any thing out of his houſe into the Court joyning to his door, and on the contrary; All partook of the communion and mixture of the right, and that by eating together of that food, which was brought together by them all, and then it was lawful. So in this caſe, whereof we are now treating. Since it was not lawful by the Canons of the Scribes, to prepare any food on a Feaſt day for the Sabbath that followed on the morrow: and ſince of neceſſity ſomething was to be prepared for the Sabbath, they mollified the rigor of the Canon thus; that firſt ſome food ſhould be prepared on the Feaſt day, which was עירוב a mixture as it were of right; and depending upon this thus prepared, they might prepare any thing for the morrow Sabbath.

Of עידובי תבשילין the mixture of foods, mention occurs in the Talmudists infinite times, and these things which have been spoke concerning them, afford not a little light to the clause, which we are now handling, and to others, where the word Prepanation occurs; and make those things plainer, which we have said concerning the Preparation of the Passover; namely, that it denoteth not either the preparation of the Paschal Lamb, nor the preparation of the people to eat the Lamb; but the preparation of meats to be eaten in the Pasover week. Nor in this place, if it be aplyed to the Sabbath, doth it denote any other thing than the preparation of food for the Sabbath now approaching. So that that day, wherein Christ was crucified, was a double preparation in the double sense alledged. Namely, the whole day, but especially from the third hour was The Preparation of the Passover, or of the whole week following; and the Evening of the day was the Preparation of the Sabbath following on the morrow.

Of that Sabbath John saith, which we cannot let pass, that μεγάλη ἦν ἡ ἡμέρα ἐκείνη τοῦ Σαββάτου. That the day of that Sabbath was a great day, Chap. XIX. 31. For it was the day of the peoples appearance in the Temple; it was the day of the offering of the sheaf of firstfruits; and I ask, whether before that day Christs persecuters had offered their Chagigahs?

VERS. XLIII.

Εὐσχήμων βουλευτής. An honourable Councellor.

THE Vulgar reads, Nobilis Decurio, A noble Officer. Erasmus, Honestus Senator, An honourable Senator. Beza, Honoratus Senator, An honourable Senator. The Talmud may serve here instead of a Lexicon.

t Bab. Joma, fol. 8. 2. Was it t the Chamber פרהודרין Πρεσβέων, of the chief Men? Was it not the Chamber בולווטי βουλευτῶν, of the Councellors? First it was called לשכת בולווטי The Chamber of the Councellors: but when the high priesthood was brought with mony, and yearly changed כפרהודרין הללו as the Πρέσβεις the cheif Councellors of the King are yearly changed, thence it was called לשכת פרהודרין The Chamber πρεσβέων of the Proedri Chief Men. The Glos is, בולווטי לשון שרים βουλευταὶ Councellors, denotes Princes. True indeed and hence, בולווטיא ופגניא u Noble men and common Persons are contradistinguished. But should one not understand those Princes and Nobles in the proper sense of the word βουλευταὶ, that is, Councellors? For who sees not that the word is Greek? and so the Aruch לשון יון הוא It is a Greek word.

u Hieros. Schab. fol. 13. 3.

Which fixeth our eyes faster upon the words of the Glos at the Gemara in the place alledged, From the beginning, in the days of Simeon the Just, who lived a greater while, they called it לשכת בולווטי The Chamber βουλευτῶν, of the Councellors. What? Did the Greek Language so flourish at Jerusalem in the times of Simeon the Just; that, a Chamber in the Temple should be called by a Greek name? If that Simeon be he who met Aleander the Great, which the Talmudists suppose, x then some reason appears for it, but if not, enquire further. However that was the Chamber of the High Priest, as appears often in the Talmudists, not that he always lived there, nor that once in the year he resorted thither; but because it was that place, where he sate with the Councel of the Priests, and consulted concerning the publick service, and affairs of the Temple. Hence in the Jerusalem writers mention is made of שמעון בולווטא Simeon the Councellor. And in this sense is that to be taken, if I mistake not, which occurs once and again in the Babylonian Talmudists, concerning בני כהנים הגדולים The Sons of the high Priest, deciding several things; and בית דין של כהנים The house of Judgment of the Priests. y

y Chetub. cap. 1.

Hence we think Joseph of Arimathea was called with good reason βουλευτὴν, A Councellor, because he was a Priest, and one of that Sacerdotal Bench לשכת בולווטי פירוש חכמי עצרה It was called the Chamber βουλευτῶν, saith the Aruch, that is, of Councellors.

VERS. II.

Καὶ λίαν πρωΐ, &c. And very early in the morning, &c.

THE diſtinction of the Twilight among the Rabbins was this.

I. אילתא דשחרא· The hinde of the morning: the firſt appearance of light. b R. Chaiia Rabb, and R. Firſt, It goes forward by degrees, and by little and little, but by how much the more it ſhall go forward, by ſo much the more it ſhall encreaſe. b Hieroſ. Berach. fol. 2. 3.

It was at that time that Chriſt aroſe; namely, in the firſt morning; as may be gathered from the words of Matthew. And to this the title of the two and twentieth Pſalm ſeems to have reſpect, על אילת השחר See alſo Revel. XXII. 16. I am the bright and morning Star. And now you may imagine the women went out of their houſes towards the Sepulchre.

II. משיכיר בין תכלת ללבן When one may diſtinguiſh between purple colour and white. c From what time do they recite their Phylacterical prayers in the morning? From that time, that one may diſtinguiſh between purple colour and white. R. Eliezer ſaith, Between purple colour and green. Before this time was *Obſcurum adhuc cœptæ lucis. IV. בנץ החמה Sunriſe. e From the hinde of the morning going forth, until the Eaſt begins to lighten; and from the time the Eaſt begins to lighten, until Sun riſe, &c. e Hieroſ. in the place before.

According to theſe four parts of time, one might not improperly ſuit the four Phraſes of the Evangeliſts. According to the firſt, Matthews, τῇ ἐπιφωσκούσῃ· As it began to dawn. According to the ſecond, Johns, Πρωΐ σκοτίας ἔτι οὔσης· Early in the morning when it was yet dark. To the third, Lukes, Ὄρθρου βαθέως· Very early in the morning. To the fourth, Marks, Λίαν πρωΐ· Very early in the morning, and yet, Ἀνατείλαντι τῷ ἡλίῳ. At the riſing of the Sun.

For the woman came twice to the Sepulchre, as John teacheth: by whom the other Evangeliſts are to be explained. Which being well conſidered, the reconciling them together is very eaſie.

VERS. XIII.

Οὐδὲ ἐκείνοις ἐπίστευσαν· Neither believed they them.

THAT in the verſes immediately going before the diſcourſe is of the two Diſciples going to Emmaus, is without all controverſie. And then, how do theſe things conſiſt with that relation in Luke, who ſaith, That they two returning to Jeruſalem, found the Eleven gathered together, and thoſe that were with them, who ſaid, The Lord is riſen indeed, and hath appeared to Simon? Luke XXIV. 23, 34. The word Λέγοντας, ſaying, evidently makes thoſe to be the words τῶν ἑνδεκα, of the Eleven, and of thoſe that were gathered together with them. Which when you read the Verſions you would ſcarcely ſuſpect. For when that word is rendred by the Syriac, בר אמרין by the Arabic והם יקולון by the Vulgar, Dicentes; by the Italian, Dicendo; by the French, Diſans; by the Engliſh, Saying; who, I pray, would take it in another ſenſe, than that thoſe two, that returned from Emmaus, ſaid The Lord is riſen indeed, &c. But in the Original Greek, when it is the accuſative caſe, it is plainly to be referred to the Eleven Diſciples, and thoſe that were together with them. As if they had diſcourſed among themſelves of the appearance made to Peter, either before, or now in the very acceſs of thoſe two coming from Emmaus. And yet ſaith this our Evangeliſt, that when thoſe two had related the whole buſineſs buſineſs, they gave credit, no not to them. So that according to Luke, they believed Chriſt was riſen and had appeared to Simon, before they told their ſtory; but according to Mark, they believed it not, no not when they had told it.

The reconciling therefore of the Evangeliſts is to be fetched thence, that thoſe words pronounced by the Eleven, Ὄντως ἠγέρθη ὁ Κύριος ὄντως, &c. The Lord is riſen indeed, &c, doth not manifeſt their abſolute confeſſion of the Reſurrection of Chriſt, but a conjectural reaſon of the ſudden and unexpected return of Peter.

I believe that Peter was going with Cleophas into Galilee, and that being moved with the words of Chriſt told him by the women, Say to his Diſciples and Peter, I go before you into Galilee. Think with your ſelf, how doubtful Peter was, and how he fluctuated within himſelf, after his threefold denial, and how he gaſped to ſee the Lord again, if he were riſen, and to caſt himſelf an humble ſupplicant at his feet. When therefore he heard theſe things from the women (and he had heard it indeed from Chriſt himſelf, while he was yet alive, that when he aroſe, he would go before them into Galilee) and when the reſt were very little moved with the report of his Reſurrection, nor as yet ſtirred from that place, he will try a journy into Galilee, and Alphæus with him. Which when it was well known to the reſt, and ſaw him return ſo ſoon, and ſo unexpectedly, Certainly, ſay they, the Lord is riſen, and hath appeared to Peter, otherwiſe he had not ſo ſoon come back again. And yet when he and Cleopas open the whole matter, they do not yet believe even them.

l Bereſh. Rabba, §. 13.

And the parallel words of Matthew, Chap. XXVIII. do ſufficiently prove this to be the ſenſe of the phraſe πάσῃ κτίσει, every creature, in this place: that which in Mark is, Κηρύξατε πάσῃ τῇ κτίσει. Preach to every creature, in that place in Matthew is, Μαθητεύσατε πάντα τὰ ἔθνη. Diſciple all Nations; as thoſe words alſo of S. Paul, Coloſſ. I. 23. In the ſame ſenſe you muſt of neceſſity underſtand the ſame phraſe, Rom. VIII. 22. Where, if you take the whole paſſage concerning the Gentiles breathing after the Evangelical liberty of the Sons of God, you render the ſenſe very eaſie, and very agreeable to the mind of the Apoſtle, and to the ſignification of the word κτίσις, Creature, or Creation. When they who render it otherwiſe, daſh upon, I know not what, rough and knotty ſenſe. Let me, although tis out of my road, thus paraphraſe the whole place.

DIVINE PROVIDENCE

ARCHBISHOP

CANTERBURY:

PRIMATE of all ENGLAND, &c.

May it pleaſe your Grace,

HAVING at length finiſhed (in ſuch a manner as it is) this undertaking of mine upon the four Evangeliſts; Religion, Gratitude and Duty require it from me, to commemorate and recognize the infinite mercy of God toward me, in bringing me thus far, continuing my life, preſerving to me that ſtrength of Eye-ſight, vigor both of body and mind to and in ſo great a degree of old age. To all which the ſame Divine mercy hath added this great benefit, that it hath indulged me your Grace's Compaſſion, Favour, and Patronage. This hath not a little ſweetned all the reſt, ſecuring to me ſo much leiſure for Books, tranquility in my Studies, the ſettlement of my Family, and an eaſie condition of life. Without this, my mind bent toward ſtudies muſt have wanted its opportunities: I muſt have been to ſeek for leiſure, retirement, and a quiet ſeat. The bloſſomings of theſe my labours (if now there be any thing in them that is valuable) muſt have withered in their firſt putting out, if by the Divine favour the dew of your Grace's favour had not watered them.

Your Grace may have forgotten (for you are not wont to write your good turns in marble) what great things you did for me in my ſtreights: what kindneſs and good will I then found from you, what induſtry of doing me good; even to admiration. However, they muſt never ſlip out of my remembrance and acknowledgment, till I have forgot my ſelf, and remember no more what I am. But ſince your humanity hath been ſuch, as cannot be fully ſpoken out, let me comprize the whole matter in this ſhort compendium; that my Family had periſhed, if God's mercy by the means of your compaſſion had not ſaved it.

What ſhall I render to the Lord for all his benefits, and what to your Grace for ſo great an one? But can ſuch an one as I think of making returns to God or you? Let God himſelf the Father of mercies (when I cannot) become your reward: and by an addition of his mercy make me capable of rendring him my ſelf. Grant that I might be wholly His, and He yours. I pray that he would long preſerve, protect, and direct your Grace, and at length make you everlaſtingly happy. This from the heart and without ceaſing is the prayer of,

Moſt Reverend Father,

Your Grace's moſt humble and moſt devoted Servant,

SECT. I.

Some Hiſtorical Paſſages concerning the Territories of Herod, &c.

BEFORE we make any particular enquiries into the Countries mentioned Luke III. 1. it will not be amiſs to dip into Hiſtory a little more generally.

a Auguſtus Ceſar received Herod's Sons Alexander and Ariſtobulus, upon their arrival at Rome, with all the kindneſs imaginable, καὶ δίδωσιν Ἡρῴδῃ τὴν Βασιλείαν ὅτῳ βούλοιτο βεβαίων τῆς ἐξ αὐτοῦ γεγονότων; granting a power to Herod to eſtabliſh the Kingdom in which of his Sons he pleaſed: Καὶ χώραν ἐπὶ τούτοις τε Τραχῶνα, καὶ Βαταναίαν, καὶ Αὐρανίτιν: yea and moreover, gave him the Region of Trachonitis, Batanea, and Abranitis. We find Perea (peculiarly ſo called) not mention'd in this place, when yet it was moſt aſſuredly under Herod's juriſdiction; how elſe could he have built Herodium, which was in the extreme confines of Perea, Southward, where he himſelf was buried? a Joſeph. Antiqu. lib. 15. cap. 13.

Neither indeed doth St. Luke ſay any thing of Perea, even then when he mentions the Tetrarchy of Herod Antipas, under whoſe juriſdiction Joſephus tells us, was both Perea and Galilee. Ἐγένετο γὰρ τούτῳ [Ἀντίπᾳ] ὅτε Περαία καὶ Γαλιλαία, b Perea and Galilee were both under Antipas, b De Bell. lib. 2. cap. 9.

Why Joſephus ſhould not mention Perea when he is ſpeaking of the Fathers Kingdom, or why St. Luke ſhould omit it, when he inſtances the Tetrarchy of the Son, that being ſo unqueſtionably within his juriſdiction; I confeſs is ſomething ſtrange to me: nor could I paſs it without ſome remarque.

The ſame Joſephus tells us this of the Tetrarchy of Philip: Βαταναία τε καὶ Τραχὼν, &c. c Batanea alſo and Trachonitis, Auranitis, and ſome parts of Zeno's Houſe, about Jamnia; yielding the profits of one hundred talents, were under Philip's Government. And again, τότε δὲ καὶ Φίλιππος τελευτᾷ τὸν βίον, εἰκοστῷ μὲν ἐνιαυτῷ τοῦ Τιβερίου Ἀρχῆς. d Then died Philip, in the twentieth year of the Reign of Tiberius, when he himſelf had governed for ſeven and thirty years, over Trachonitis, Gaulonitis, and the Country of the Bataneans. Here we ſee Auranitis is not mentioned, but Gaulonitis is; and in St. Luke, neither Batenea, nor Gaulonitis, nor Auranitis; but inſtead of them, Iturea. There is a Chronological diſ- c De Exid. lib. 2. cap. 9. d Antiq. lib. 18. cap. 6.

ficulty in these words of Josephus, which is not easily solved; but this is not the business of this Treatise.

It is hard to say whether this Ζήνωνος οἶκος House of Zenon, have any relation with Zenodorus the robber. Josephus in the place above quoted, mentions him, saying, That Augustus was the more willing to put Batanea, Trachonitis, and Auranitis under the Government of Herod the Great, that he might the more effectually suppress the Thefts and Rapines committed by one Zenodorus and the Trachonites. [e] Strabo also speaks of this Zenodorus, telling us, That there were few Robberies committed now; κατελυθέντων τῶν περὶ Ζηνόδωρον τὸν λῃστὴν, The Robbers of Zenodorus party being cut off.

[e] Strab. lib. 15.

But if the name should be writ in the mothert ongue, בית ציונן Beth Zenun, it might signifie a place or region of cold; and so denote some Country adjacent to the Snows of Lebanon; or some part טור חלגא the mountain of Snow; which I rather believe.

SECT. 2.

Whether Perea may not also be called Galilee.

I. ALthough the whole Transjordanine Country might justly enough be called Περαία, Perea; for this very reason; because it was πέραν τοῦ Ἰορδάνου, on the other side Jordan: yet, generally speaking, the Country is distinguisht, and that is peculiarly called Perea; which was the Kingdom of Schon, the dwelling afterwards of the Reubenites, and part of the Tribe of Gad.

Hence that of Ptolomey, That Ἀπ' Ἀνατολῶν τοῦ ποτ' Ἰορδάνου, From the East of the River Jordan; there are only these Cities reckoned up by him.

Κοσμᾶ. Cosmos.
Λιβίας. Livias.
Καλλιῤῥόη. Callirrhoe. Of old Lasha.
Γάζωρος. Gazorus.
Ἐπικαιρᾶ. Epicerus.

Other places that were beyond Jordan, he mentions under other districts; as some under Celosyria, others under Batanea.

That which we are now enquiring about is, whether the Transjordanine Country was ever called Galilee. The rise of this question is, because our Evangelist mentions the whole Tetrarchy of Herod, under the name of Galilee, when as Perea was a great part of it. I incline much to the affirmative, for these Reasons: And first, I suppose that the upper part of the Country beyond Jordan might be called Galilee.

1. From Matth. IV. 15. ὁδὸν θαλάσσης πέραν τοῦ Ἰορδάνου, Γαλιλαία τῶν ἐθνῶν, By the way of the Sea beyond Jordan, Galilee of the Gentiles. Are not those places beyond the Sea of Gennesaret, called in this place Galilee of the Gentiles, in distinction to Galilee properly so called, on this side Jordan?

2. Judas who moved the Sedition against the Roman Tax, is by Gamaliel called Judas of Galilee, Acts V. 37. who yet by Josephus is called Γαυλονίτης ἀνὴρ ἐκ πόλεως ὄνομα Γαμάλα, a Gaulonite of the City of Gamala. Now it is well enough known, that Gaulona and Gamala were beyond Jordan.

[a] Antiq. l. b. 18. cap. 1.

II. I suppose Perea, properly so called, to have gone also under the name of Galilee, for these Reasons:

1. The whole Land of Canaan, both that beyond, and that on this side Jordan, was under the jurisdiction of Herod the Great. So that divide this whole Country into four Tetrarchies, the first Judea; the second, Samaria; both which were under the Government of Pilate; the third, Iturea and Trachonitis, under Philip; the fourth will be Galilee on this side, and Perea beyond Jordan. Whereas therefore St. Luke, in the division of the Tetrarchies, names only Galilee, as that which belonged to Herod; it is manifest he includes Perea under that of Galilee, and speaks of it as a known, and commonly received thing.

2. In Luke XVII. 11. It is said of Jesus, That as he went to Jerusalem, he passed through the midst of Samaria and Galilee. One would have thought it had been proper to have said, through the midst of Galilee and Samaria. For when he went from Jerusalem to his own Country, he then passed through Samaria, and so into Galilee; but going from home to Jerusalem, he in his passage went through Galilee, and then through Samaria: But now it is very certain that in that journey he did pass through Perea, having first gone through the Samaritan Country. Whence it is very probable that Perea is called by our Evangelist in this place, Galilee; in the very same manner as he had also included it in the mention of Galilee, Luke III. 1.

3. In that Tragical Feast wherein the last mess was the Head of John Baptist, those who who then were treated by Herod, are called the great eſtates of Galilee, Mark VI. 21. Now that Supper was kept in the Palace Herodium which was in the very extreme parts of Perea toward the South, and therefore ſurely thoſe great Eſtates of Galilee that were with him, muſt be no other than the Great Eſtates of Perea.

4. There is mention גלילות הירדן of Geliloth of Jordan, Joſh. XXII. 11. when the paſſage was concerning Perea: whence that Country might well take its name of Galilee.

SECT. III.

Some things in general concerning the Country beyond Jordan.

AS to the Tetrarchies of Herod and Philip: this I ſuppoſe we may determine without prejudice or queſtion, that nothing was within their juriſdiction, but what was within the confines of the Land of Iſrael, properly ſo called. (As to what may be objected concerning Iturea, we ſhall conſider in its own place.) Whiles we are therefore looking into theſe Countries, our main buſineſs will be with what was beyond Jordan; for that on this ſide the River, was only Galilee, about which we ſhall not much trouble our ſelves, becauſe there is no difficulty concerning it.

The Trans-jordanine Country, if I miſtake not, from geateſt Antiquity, is divided in that ſtory, Gen. XIV. 5. Chedorlaomer and the Kings that were with him, ſmote the Rephaims in Aſhtaroth-Karnaim, and the Zuzims in Ham, and the Emims in Shaveh Kiriathaim, and the Horites in Mount Seir.

Theſe two things we may apprehend from this paſſage: 1. That the Country of Baſhan was inhabited by the Rephaims; Perea (another part of the Land beyond Jordan) by the Zuzims, Moab by the Emims. 2. That Aſhtaroth-Karnaim, Ham, and Shaveh Kiriathaim, are not every one the names of whole Countries, but particular places in thoſe Countries; perhaps where the ſeveral fights were, or where the people of that Country had been ſubdued.

As to Aſhtaroth-Karnaim, there is little doubt but that was in the Kingdom of Baſhan, the larger Region being called Aſtaroth, Karnaim is added in a diſtinguiſhing limited ſenſe: [Deuter. I. 4. Og the King of Baſhan which dwelt at Aſhtaroth in Edrei.]

Of the place it ſelf the Jewiſh Doctors thus: עד כ אמה יושב אדם בצל סוכה At twenty Cubits a Man ſits in the ſhadow of his tent (viz. in the Feaſt of Tabernacles) he does not ſit in the ſhadow of his Tabernacle beyond twenty cubits, but in the ſhadow of its ſides. [That is, if the roof or cover of his Tabernacle be above twenty cubits high.] Abai ſaith unto him, if therefore any one ſhall pitch a Tabernacle in Aſhtaroth-Karnaim, is not the Tabernacle ſo alſo? Gloſſe. Aſhtaroth Karnaim were two great Mountains, with a Valley between; and by reaſon of the height and ſhadow of thoſe Mountains, the Sun never ſhone upon the Valley. [a] Succah. fol. 2. 1.

Why the Samaritan Copy ſhould uſe here עפינית קרנית Aphinith Karnaiah, inſtead of Aſhtaroth Karnaim, eſpecially when it retains the word Aſhtaroth elſewhere, is not eaſie to ſay, unleſs it ſhould have ſome relation to עפין Boughes; as a place thick and ſhady with Boughes. But ſuch is the confuſion of the guttural Letters in the Samaritan Language, that we can determine nothing poſitively.

That the Zuzims inhabited Perea, as it is diſtinguiſht from the Country of Baſhan, may be evident from the progreſs of the Conquerour; for, whereas it is plain that the Rephaims dwelt in Baſhan, and the Emims in the Country of Moab, Deuter. II. 10, 11. It is manifeſt that the Zuzims who were conquered after the Rephaims, and before the Emims, lay in a Country between both, and that was Perea.

And hence are thoſe to be corrected, that would correct the reading here, and inſtead of הזוזים בהם the Zuzims in Ham, would render it, the Zuzims with them. So the Gr. Vulg. &c. As if the Zuzims were amongſt the Rephaims, when they were diſtinguiſht both in Nation and dwelling. The Samaritan we may be ſure took בהם for no other than a place, when it renders it בלישה In Liſhah.

When the Iſraelites went out of Ægypt into that Land, the whole Trans-jordanine Region was divided into theſe two Seigniories, the Kingdom of Sehon, and the Kingdom of Og. That of Sehon was Perea, ſtrictly ſo called now; That of Og was all the reſt under the name of Baſhan. But, after the return of Iſrael from Babylon, Baſhan was ſo ſub-divided, that Batanea, or Baſhon, was only a part of it, the reſt going under the name of Trachonitis, Auranitis, and, if you will, Gualonites too, for we meet with that diſtinction alſo in Joſephus b. To give therefore all theſe Countries at this time their proper bounds and limits, if it does not exceed all humane skill and wit, I am ſure it doth mine. [b] Lib. de Excid. 3. cap. 4.

So that all we can do in this matter, is only to propound a few things of these places thus divided, as far as conjecture may carry us, which we submit fairly to the fair and candid judgment of the Reader. Let us therefore begin with Trachonitis.

SECT. IV.

TRACHONITIS.

ARGOB mentioned Deuter. III. 14. is by the Targumists called מרכונא Trachona. And so Jonath. 1 Kings IV. 13. the Samaritan hath it ריגובאה Rigobaah, which seems akin to רגב Regab, amongst the Talmudists.

a Menacoth, fol. 85. 2. a Tekoah hath the preeminence for Oyl: Abba Saul saith, שניה לה רגב בעבר הירדן the next to that is Regab beyond Jordan.

b De Bell. Sacr. lib. 10. cap. 9. Gul. Tyrius would derive the name from Dragons. For so he: It b (Trachonitis) seems to have taken its name from Dragons. Those hidden passages and windings under-ground, with which this Country abounds, are called Dragons. Indeed, almost all the people of this Country, have their dwellings in Dens and Caves; and in these kind of Dragons.

Other things might be offered as to the signification of the word: but we are looking after the situation of the place, not the Etymology of the name. And the first things to be enquired into, as to its situation, is, whether it extended in longitude from the South to the North, or from the West to the East. The reason of our enquiry is partly upon the account of Auranitis, which we are to speak of presently, and partly those words in Josephus c ὡρίζετο ἡ αὐτὴ Βαταναίᾳ τῇ Τραχωνίτιδι· Batanea was bounded with Trachonitis. How so? Either that Batanea lay between Perea and Trachonitis, extending it self from the West toward the East, or between Trachonitis and Galilee, strictly so called, extending it self in length from the South toward the North: which last I presume most probable; and so we place Trachonitis in the extreme parts of the Trans-jordanine Country toward the East. And both which, upon these reasons taken together.

c Antiqu. lib. 17. cap. 2.

1. The Gemarists describing the circumference of the Land from the North, do mention תרנגולא עילאה דלמעלה מן קיסרין וטרכונא וכו' Tarnegola [or Gabara] the upper, which is above Cesarea [Philippi] and Trachona which extends to Bozrah d: where the extension of Trachona, must not be understood of its reaching to some Bozrah in those Northern borders; but to some Bozrah or Bosorrah in the confines of Perea e: and so it supposes the Country extending it self from the North toward the South.

d Hieros. Shevith, fol. 36. 3.

e Antiqu. lib. 12. cap. 12.

2. f Βαταναίας χώρας, Of the Province of Batanea; East of which is Saccea, and here under the Hill Alsadamus, are the Trachonite Arabians. Behold here the Trachonites living East of Batanea.

f Ptol. cap. 15. toward the end.

3. g Ἥτε Γαμαλιτικὴ καὶ Γαυλονίτις, Βαταναία τε καὶ Τραχωνίτις· The Country of Gamala, and Gaulonitis, and Batanea, and Trachonitis. But were not Gamalitica it self and Gaulonitis within Batanea? right; but by this distinction he divides between that Batanea that was nearer Galilee, and that that was further off. That Country that lay nearest, from those noted Towns, of Golan, and Gamala, he calls Gaulonitis, and Gamalitica; and that which was further off, he calls by its own name of Batanea, and what lies still yond that, Trachonitis.

g Joseph. de excid. lib. 3. cap. 4.

There was a time when all that whole Country which now is distinguisht into these severals, had one general name of Bashan: which word, how it came to change into Bathan, or Batanea; as also with the Targumists and Samaritane, into Bathnin and Mathnin, any one indifferently skilled in the Syrian Tongue will easily discern.

SECT. V.

AURANITIS.

THAT Auranitis took its denomination from Hauran, hardly any one will question, especially that observes אשר אל גבול חורן, Ezek. XLVII. 16. to be rendered by the Gr. Interp. Ἃ ἐστιν ἐπάνω τῆς ὀρέων Αὐρανίτιδος; which are upon the borders of Auranitis.

Hauran is reckoned up amongst those Hills, at the top of which, by lifting up some flaming Torches, they were wont to give notice of the new year.

h Rosh hashanah, cap. 2. Hal. 2. a Where did they hold up those lights? מהר המשחה לסרטבא From Mount Olivet to Sartaba. ופסרטבא לגרופינא And from Sartaba to Gryphena. ומגרופינא לחורן And from Gryphena to Hauran. ומחורן לבית בלתין And from Hauran to Beth Baltin. And from Beth Baltin, he that held up the light there, did not depart, but waved it hither and thither, up and down, till he saw the lights kindled throughout the whole Captivity.

The

The Gemariſt quæries, What is Beth Baltin? Rabh ſaith it is Biram. What is the Captivity? Rabh Joſeph ſaith it is Pombeditha. Gloſſe. The ſenſe of it is this: That Biram is in the Land of Iſrael. How? Is Biram the ſame with Beth Baltin, and yet is Biram within the Land of Iſrael? When in the Jeruſalem Gemara, Rabh Honna ſaith, When we came hither, we went up to the top of Beth Baltin, and diſcerned the Palm-trees in Babylon. If this be true, the Geographers are to conſider whether there can be any proſpect of Babylon from the Land of Iſrael. In their ſenſe it may be true enough, who commonly by the name of Babylon, underſtand all thoſe Countries into which the Babyloniſh Captivity were carried; not only Chaldea, but Meſopotamia alſo, and Aſſyria: So that bounding the Land of Iſrael with the River Euphrates, (which indeed the Holy Scriptures themſelves do) they make it contiguous with Meſopotamia, the River only between; and they place Beth Baltin not far from the bank on this ſide the River.

The Gemariſts acknowledge that Lights were lifted up upon ſome Hills between thoſe which they had mentioned, but theſe were the moſt known and celebrated, and therefore they named them only. Now it is probable enough that Mount Hauran gave the denomination to the whole Country Auranitis, which we are now upon: Perhaps there might be ſome part of Antilibanus, called Hauran, either from the Syriac word חור Havar, which ſignifies white; or from the Hebrew word חור Hor, a Cave. It may well enough agree either way, the Hill being white with Snow, and hollow with the ſubterranean paſſages that were there.

However, it is plain enough from the place in Ezekiel before quoted, that Hauran was ſituated in the very extreme parts of the Land, toward the North, and from thence the Country as it had its ſituation there, ſo had its name Auranitis. Gul. Tyrius a (by what authority I cannot tell) placeth it near the Sea of Genneſaret Subitò enim tranſcurſâ regione Auranitide quæ ſecus Mare Tyberiadis eſt, &c. The Country of Auranitis being ſuddenly run through, which is by the Sea of Tiberias, &c.

a Lib. 22. 26.

And that the River Orontes [Springing between Libanus and Antilibanus near Heliopilis, as Pliny b hath it; took its name from Hauran, the word it ſelf ſeems to aſſure us. Although ſome quoted by Euſtath. in Dionyſ. Περιηγ. do apprehend it to be a Latine name. Ἄλλοι δέ φάσιν (ſaith he) ὅτι Καῖσαρ Τιβέριῳ ἐκ Δεξιονίῳ αὐτὸν Ὀρόντην μετανόμασεν, ὃ σημαίνει Ἀνατολικόν· As if Orontes were the ſame with Orientalis, The Eaſtern. But what that ἐκ Δεξιονίῳ ſhould mean is a little difficult. Orontes was of old called Typhon, as Strabo c tells us.

b Lib. 5. cap. 22.

c Lib. 16.

SECT. VI.

ITUREA.

THE Reader muſt excuſe me if I make a narrower ſearch into the ſituation of Iturea, although Barradius may confidently enough have told him (upon his own truſt meerly, as far as I can learn) That the Country is in the Tribe of Nepthali, at the foot of Mount Libanus. Perhaps he hath followed Borchard, who himſelf writes only upon the credit of Jacobus de Vitriaco: Scias regionem Decapolin quàm variè in Scripturis denominari, &c. You muſt know the Region of Decapolis hath ſeveral names in Scripture. Sometimes it is called Iturea, ſometimes Trachonitis; ſometimes the plain of Libanus, ſometimes the Land of Moab: in one place Gabul, in another place Galilee of the Gentiles, and the upper Galilee; but every where it is all one and the ſame Country. Thus he confuſedly enough.

a Pliny places ſome Nation or other, called by the name of the Itureans, in Cyrriſtica of Syria: Et inde Cyrriſtica, &c. Next that is Cyrriſtica, the Irneates, the Gindareni, the Gabeni, two Tetrarchies, which are called Granii Comatitæ, the Emiſenes, the Hylatæ, a Nation of the Itureans, and thoſe of them alſo called the Betarreni, the Mariamitani, &c.

a Lib. 5. 23.

b After Macra, is Marſyas, wherein are ſome hilly places, on one of which ſtands Chalcis a Garriſon of Marſyas. The beginning of it is Laodicea, about Libanus. Τὰ μὲν ὄρεινὰ ἔχουσι πάντες Ἰτυραῖοί τε καὶ Ἄραβες, κακοῆθες πάνυ γένος· The Itureans and Arabs hold all the Mountanous places, a very miſchievous ſort of people, all of them.

b Strabo, lib. 16.

c Σιλεπτοῦσαι δ' οὖν [Δαβίδ] καὶ ὅτι Ἰδουμαίους, καὶ Ἀμμωνίτας, καὶ Μωαβίτας, καὶ Ἰτυραίους, καὶ Ναβαταίους, καὶ Ναβδαίους· David made war with the Edomites, the Ammonites, the Moabites, the Itureans, the Nabbathites and Nabdites, He had ſaid before, That he had ſubdued the Syrians dwelling by Euphrates and Commagene, καὶ τοὺς ἐν Γαλλαδηνῇ Ἀσυρίους καὶ Φοινίκας, the Aſſyrians and Phenicians that were in Galladene.

c Eupolemus in Euſeb. Præpar. Evangel. lib. 9. cap. 30.

d Secus Mare Galilææ viam carpentes, &c. Taking the way by the Sea of Galilee, we entred Phenice, and leaving Paneas, which is Ceſarea Philippi, on the right hand, we came to Iturea.

d Gul. Tyr. de bell. Sacro lib. 9. cap. 15.

e Rex pertranſiens agrum Sydonenſem, &c. The King paſſing through the Country of Sidon, and going up ſome hilly places, which lay between ours and the enemies borders, he came

e Ibid. lib. 21. cap. 11.

came to a place every way accomodated with all neceſſaries, a fruitful ſoil, and well watered; the name of it Meſſahara. Going thence into the Valley called Bacar, he found the Land which hath been ſaid to flow with Milk and Honey. Some are of opinion, that this Country was of old called Iturea. But long before that, viz. in the days of the Kings of Iſrael, it was called the Grove of Libanus.

Where at length ſhall find this Iturea? Had Philip any part of his Tetrarchy within Cyrriſtica, Chalcidice of Syria? And yet, if you believe either Pliny or Strabo, there were the Itureans. I ſuſpect there is ſomething coucht in the Etymology of the word, that may as much puzzle as the ſituation of the place.

If Bacar, as it is deſcribed by Tyrius, be indeed Iturea, it may be derived from חיתור Hittur, which ſignifies wealth; or from עטור which denotes crowning, eſpecially when the Country its ſelf is crowned with ſo much plenty. It is a notion familiar enough amongſt the Talmudick Authors.

Indeed, if I could believe that Iturea were the ſame with Decapolis, then I would ſuppoſe the word עשר Ten, might have been altered by the change of ש Shin into ת Thau, according to the Syriack manner; but I neither can believe that, nor have I ever met with ſuch a change made in that word, but rather that it would go into ס, Samech.

May it not therefore be derived from חיתורי Hitture, diggings; becauſe of the Caves and hollows under-ground? So that the Itureі might ſignifie the ſame with Troglodyte, thoſe that dwell in Caverns and holes. And ſo the Troglodytes which were on the North of Iſrael, are diſtinguiſht from thoſe that were on the South, viz. the Horites in Edom. Now that theſe Countries of which we are treatiug, were peculiarly noted for Caves and Dens; and they not only numerous, but ſome very ſtrange and wonderful, Strabo, Joſephus, Tyrius and others do abundantly teſtifie.

f Strab. lib. 16. f Ὑπέρκειται δὲ αὐτῆς [Δαμάσκου] δύο λεγόμενοι Τραχῶνες· There are beyond Damaſcus two Mountains called Trachones. Afterward; Toward Arabia and Iturea, there are ſome cragged Hills, famous for large and deep Caves; one of which was capable of receiving four thouſand men in it. But that was a prodigious Cave of Zedechiah's, whereever it was, that was XVIII. miles ſpace; at leaſt if thoſe things be true which are related concerning it g.

g Bemidbar rab. fol. 211. 2.

There was a Cave beyond Jordan, about XVI. miles from Tiberias, that was three ſtories high; had a lower, a middle, and an upper Dining-room h. Which indeed was fortified, and held a Garriſon of Souldiers in it.

h Gul. Tyr. lib. 22. 15.

So that we may, not without reaſon, conjecture the Iturea of which we now ſpeak, might be ſo called from חיתורי Chitture, ſuch kind of diggings under ground. And that Pliny and Strabo when the talk of the Nation of the Itureans in Cyrriſtica and Chalcis, do not place the Country of Iturea there; only hinted that the Troglodytes, who dwelt in Dens and Caves were there.

Iturea therefore, mentioned by our Evangeliſt was in the Country beyond Jordan, viz. Batanea, and Auranitis or Auranitis alone, as may appear out of Joſephus, compared with this our Evangeliſt. For St. Luke ſaith, That Philip was Tetrarch of Iturea and Trachonitis: Joſephus, That he was Tetrarch of Trachonitis, Batanea, aud Auranitis: Either therefore Auranitis and Batanea in Joſephus, is the Iturea in St. Luke, or elſe Batanea in Joſephus is confounded with Trachonitis mentioned in St. Luke, and Auranitis alone is Iturea. For that paſſage in Joſephus i ought to be taken notice of: Δωρεῖται δ' Ἀγρίππᾳ τὴν Φιλίππου Τετραρχίαν, καὶ Βαταναίαν, προσθεὶς αὐτῇ Τραχωνίτην σὺν Ἀβίλλᾳ· Cæſar inveſts Agrippa with the Tetrarchy that Philip had, and Batanea, adding moreover Trachonitis with Abella. Where it is obſervable, that there is mention of the Tetrachy of Philip diſtinct from Batanea and Trachonitis; And what is that? certainly Auranitis in Joſephus, and perhaps Iturea in St. Luke.

SECT. VII.

ABILENE.

Joſephus in the words before quoted, ſpeaking of Abella, adds this paſſage; Λυσανίᾳ δὲ αὕτη ἐτετράρχει, that had been the Tetrarchy of Lyſanias. So alſo Ptol. Ἄβιλα ἐπικληθεῖσα Λυσανίου, Abila that bore the name of Lyſanias: and he reckons this up among the Cities of Celo-Syria under theſe degrees:

Heliopolis	68.	40.	33.	40.
Abila.	68.	45.	33.	20.

Pliny a ſpeaks of Abila in that Country: Paneas in quâ Cæſarea, cum ſupra dicto fonte [viz. cap. 15.] Abila, Arca, Ampeloeſſa, Gabo.

a Nat. Hiſt. lib. 5. cap. 18.

It is

It is not without cauſe diſtinguiſht by its relation to Iſſanias, becauſe in one place or another, there were ſeveral Abila's or Abella's: for the Hebrew word אבל Abel, goes into that termination in the Greek; and there were many places of that name.

Abel Shittim, where the Iſraelites pitcht their Tents immediately after they had paſſed the River Jordan, in Joſephus b is called Ἄβιλα Abila, diſtant from Jordan threeſcore furlongs: which he alſo mentions with Julias c אבל מחולה Περαίαν, in Perea. There is alſo Abel Meholah, and Abel beth Maacah, &c.

b Antiq. lib. 5. cap. 1. c De Exid. lib. 2. 22.

Near this ſound comes אבלם קליקאי d Abelas of the Cilicians. The very word אבילין Abilene is in Vajicra Rabba e ותפול שבא יתקחם The Sabeans fell upon them, and took them away, Job I. 15. R. Abin bar Cahna ſaith, יצאו מכפר קריינוס They came out of Caphar Karinus, והלכו את כל האבילין and they went through all Abilene, and came to מגדל צבעיא Migdol Zabaiah, and there dyed.

SECT. VIII.

2 Sam. XX. 18. diſcuſſt.

AMongſt all the Cities and Countries that bear the name of Abel, the moſt celebrated is that in 2 Sam. XX. made famous by the Hiſtory of a fooliſh Sheba and a wiſe Woman. The Woman's expreſſion is not a little wreſted and tortured by Interpreters. דבר ידברו בראשונה לאמור שאול ישאלו באבל וכן התמו: They were wont to ſpeak in old time, ſaying, they ſhall ſurely ask counſel at Abel; and ſo they ended the matter.

The Greek Verſion hath more perplext it: Λόγον ελάλησαν ἐν πρώτοις λέγοντες, ἐρωτηθήσεται ἐρωτηθὲν ἐν τῇ Ἀβὲλ καὶ ἐν Δὰν εἰ ἐξέλιπον ἃ ἔθεντο οἱ πιστοὶ τοῦ Ἰσραήλ· Ἐρωτῶντες ἐπερωτήσουσιν ἐν Ἀβέλ, καὶ οὕτως εἰ ἐξέλιπον· The Latine Interpreter renders it thus: They ſpake a word in former days, ſaying, asking he was asked in Abel, and in Dan, if thoſe things have failed which the faithful of Iſrael laid up. Asking they will ask in Abel, and ſo if they have failed.

If any one can make any tolerable ſenſe of theſe words, he would do well to teach others how to do it too; eſpecially let them tell the reaſon why Dan ſhould be added here. It is true Dan and Abel beth Maacah are mentioned together as not very diſtant from one another, 1 King. XV. 20. And if we do by the words underſtand their neighborhood to one another, I ſee nothing elſe that can be pickt out of them.

However, both the Roman and Alexandrian Edition agree in this reading, which have the preference of all other Editions of the Greek Verſion. And let them now who are for correcting the Hebrew Bibles by the Greek, ſay whether they are for having them corrected here: only let them give me leave to enjoy the Hebrew Text as we now have it.

The Hebrew makes the ſenſe plain if the firſt words דאר ידברו בראשונה be but rightly applied, namely to Sheba and his party ſpeaking; When Sheba and his followers come hither, they at firſt certainly ſaid thus, that they would ask Abel of its peace, or on whoſe ſide it was וכן התמו and ſo they made the matter intire, or made a ſhow of their own integrity. For that that Ioab was chiefly to be ſatisfied in, was, that this City had not taken part with the Conſpirators, which is directly done, if we admit this ſenſe and interpretation of the words. This prudent Woman aſſures him that thoſe of Abel had by no means invited Sheba and his fellow Rebels into their Town, or by any conſent with them in their Rebellions would ever willingly have admitted them, but that they were miſerably deceived by their fawning and falſe words, whiles they only pretended to enquire about the peace and well being of that City. And that you may know more effectually that all this is true which I now affirm to you, we will immediately throw you the head of Sheba over our wall.

SAREPTA.

I. Zarephath, Obad. ver. 20. where. II. Sepharad. where. III. The ſituation of Sarepta.

SECT. I.

Zarephath. Obad. verſ. 20. where.

SAREPTA in the Story of Elijah, 1 King. XVII. is written in Hebrew צרפת Tzarephath, and with the ſame Letters in Obad verſ. 20. and therefore it may be reaſonably enquired whether it be one and the ſame place. Indeed, there would hardly be any doubt in it, but that the Jews ordinarily by צרפת underſtand France, and by ספרד Sepharad, which by the Prophet is uſed in the very ſame verſe, Spain. The words of the Prophet are very variouſly rendered, and yet in all that variety, nothing hinders but that Zarephath there may be underſtood of the Zarephath mentioned in the Kings. For, whether the paſſage concern the Captivity's being detained in Zarephath, or the Captivity's poſſeſſing the Land to Zarephath (for in that variety chiefly, the words are expounded) in either ſenſe, it may well enough be, that the Sarepta that belongs to Zidon, may be the ſcene of the affair. As to the former, if we compare but that paſſage concerning Tyre, the Siſter of Sidon, Amos I. 9. and withal the potency and dominion of the Sidonians, it may not be improbable but that the Iſraelites might be captived in Sarepta of Sidon. And as to the latter, whereas in the verſ. immediately before, the diſcourſe is of the poſſeſſion of the Mount of Eſau, of the Fields of Ephraim, Samaria, and Gilead, and then there is mention of poſſeſſing the Land of Canaan, as far as Zarephath; who would ſeek Zarephath in France, and not in ſome neighbouring place, according to all the reſt of the places their named, which were all very near. Let me add moreover, that whereas there is mention of poſſeſſing the Land of the Canaanites even unto Zarephath, the Greek Interpreters will tell you who thoſe Canaanites were, that are diſtinguiſht from the reſt of the Nations in the Land of Canaan, viz. the Phenicians, Joſh. V. 1. And by the Kings of the Hittites mentioned 1 Kings X. 29. and 2 Kings VII. 6. I would likewiſe ſuppoſe the Βασιλεῖς Φοινίκης Phenician Kings.

SECT. II.

SEPHARAD. Where.

THE Italian Interpreter for Sepharad, retains Zarphath: For ſo he, Et i transferiti de queſto eſercito de figlioli de Iſrael, che ſono de Chenahanei, in fino a Zarphath, & i transferiti di Jeruſalem, che sono in Zarphath, &c. Whether too warily, or too unwarily he hath thus done, let him look to that himſelf.

The Greek hath Ἐφραθὰ Ephratha, with which the Arabian Interpreter agrees. But the Syriack with the Targumiſt, Spain. The vulgar, Boſphorus, confuſedly, beſides that it makes the prepoſition ב a radical Letter: And yet Nobilius hath this paſſage. St. Jerom tells us, the other Interpreters agreed with the Hebrew word Sepharad, which he rendered Boſphorus. If he means that all agreed in acknowledging the word Sepharad, he tells us no news: but who agreed with his word Boſphorus?

I muſt confeſs, Sepharad is not a place ſo obvious as Zarephath, nor can any thing be offered in it, but conjecture only: and if I might be allowed my gueſs; I would look for Sepharad in Edom, rather than in Spain: and that becauſe Obadiah propheſies againſt the Edomites, properly ſo called. Whereas therefore he tells us, That the Captivity of Iſrael in Sarepta of the Phenicians ſhall poſſeſs the Land of the Canaanities: It is probable he means by the Captivity in Sepharad, thoſe Captives in Edom, who ſhall poſſeſs the Cities of the South. The Zarphathani, or Sareptani were of the North, the Sepharadeni of the South: amongſt the [a] Ἐρεμβοὶ Erembi, Οὓς εἰκὸς λέγειν τὺς τρωγλοδύτας Ἄραβας, Whom you may rightly call the Troglodyte Arabs, ſaith Strabo, [b] That is, probably the Horims in Mount Seir; for I ſuſpect Horim, by ill uſe, might form it ſelf into Eremb.

[a] Hom. Odyſſ. δ'.

If

If we consider that the Jews do generally by Edom, understand the Roman Empire, and indeed all the Christian Nations in the West, we shall easily perceive why they fix these places Zarephath, and Sepharad so far from Palestine. For Obadiah prophesying against the Edomites, properly so called, the Jews change the scene and persons, according to the vulgar construction of Edom, which they had received amongst themselves.

SECT. III.

The situation of Sarepta.

[a] INDE [à Tyro] Euhydra, ac Sarepta, & Ornithon oppida. Et Sidon artifex vitri Thebarumque Bœotiarum parens. From Tyre is Euhydra, and Sarepta, and Ornithon, certain Towns so called: Sidon where Glass is made, and from whence sprung the Beotian Thebes. [a] Plin. lib. 5. cap. 19.

Borchard. A Tyro ad tres leucas admodum breves, &c. About three very short leagues from Tyre, the River Eleutherus runs into the Sea; About two leagues from that River is Sarepta: About two leagues from Sarepta is Sidon. Sarepta at this time doth not consist of above eight Houses, though the ruines do still say it was once a brave Town.

Some would have Zarephath signifie as much as a place of melting; from boiling and melting metals, but especially Glass.

b Between Acon and Tyre there is a shoare all spread over with little hillocks of sand; φέρων τ' ὑαλίτιν ἄμμον, that bears a glassey sand: the Glass indeed is not cast here, but being carried to Sidon, there it is made fusile, &c. [b] Strabo, lib. 16.

CHAP. III.

NAIN. Luk. VII. 11.

I. Concerning Naim near Tabor, shewn to strangers. II. Concerning Nain in Josephus and the Rabbins. III. The Greek Version of עין גנים Eugannim.

SECT. I.

Concerning Naim near Tabor, shewn to strangers.

IN the Alexandrian Copy עין Ijon is Νάιν Nain, 1 Kings XV. 20. In the Roman, it is Αἰν Ain. So Hazar-Enan Numb. XXXIV. 9. in the Roman Copy is Ἀσερνάιν Arsenain, in the Alexandrian, Ασερνάιν Asernain; neither of them agrees with our Nain. For it is very absurd to conceive that our Saviour ever was at Hazar-Enan the utmost borders of the Land toward Syria; nor can we suppose him in Ijon, that seeming to be according to the order of the places as they are ranked in the Text above quoted, either beyond Dan, or in the extreamest borders of the Land on that side.

As to our Nain, Borchard saith thus, A Nazareth duabus leucis, &c. Two leagues from Nazareth, not much above one from Mount Tabor, Southward is Mount Hermon the less, on the North side of which is the City Nain; at whose Gates Jesus recovered a Widows Son from death, as we read, Luke VII. So also Breidenbach: So some Tables as to the situation of Hermon near Tabor, and the situation of Naim near Hermon.

I am well enough satisfied that they should place Naim in the Tribe of Issachar, if there be no mistake among them as to Mount Tabor. For whereas Tabor is indeed the very utmost border of Issachar, Northward, Jos. XIX. 22. [a] It must needs be that what is beyond that, Southward, a league or two, should be reckoned within that Tribe. But I much suspect the Tabor mentioned by them, and that which is now shewn to Travellers, is not the true Tabor: nor do I much question but that Hermon of which they talk, is made out of a mistake, and misconstruction of Psal. LXXXIX. 12. Tabor and Hermon shall rejoice in thy Name. My scruple as to Mount Tabor, ariseth hence; because [a] Joseph. Antiq. lib. 5. cap. 1.

that Tabor which is ſhewn to ſtrangers, as our Country-man Biddulph, and another acquaintance of mine own, who were on the top of it, do deſcribe it, does not at all agree with the deſcription Joſephus gives us of the true Mount Tabor. Our Country-man tells us, It is an hill not very ſteep, nor very high, nor very large; but a round beautiful hill, &c. On the contrary, b Ἰταβύριον ὄρος τὸ μὲν ὕψος ἐστὶ τριάκοντα σταδίους ἀνέχει, μέλις θεόσδατον κ᾽ τὸ θεοπέδιον κλιμα, πεδίον δ᾽ ὅσον ἡ κορυφὴ, σταδίων ἓξ κ᾽ εἴκοσι· Mount Tabor is in height thirty furlongs, very difficult of aſcent on the North-ſide; the top is a great plain of about ſix and twenty furlongs.

b Joſeph. de excid. lib. 4. cap. 6.

The Perſian Interpreter inſtead of Nain hath נאבלם Nabelis, that is, Neapolis, which is alſo Sychem: but for what reaſon I know not. Nor do I ſuppoſe that it was conceived by any one Expoſitor, that the Widow's Son whom Chriſt raiſed from death, was a Samaritan; he was indeed upon the borders of Samaria, but at a great diſtance from Sychar.

SECT. II.

Concerning the Nain in Joſephus and the Rabbins.

THE a Darſhanim (Expoſitors) upon Bereſh. rabb. ſpeak of a certain place called נעים Naim, upon this occaſion. Iſſachar is a bony (or ſtrong) Aſs, [Gen. XLIX. 14.] It is ſpoken of Iſſachar's Country. For as an Aſs is low before and behind, and high in the middle; ſo is it in the Tribe of Iſſachar; it is a Valley here and a Valley there, and hilly otherwhere; it couches between two borders. Theſe are the two valleys, בקעת פסלן the Valley of Piſſan, and the Valley of Jezreel. And he ſaw that reſt was good, ו תנעם this is Tinaam: And the Land, that it was pleaſant ו נעים this is Naim.

a Sect. 58.

We have here by the way a taſt of thoſe allegorical and far-fetcht ways of expounding the Scriptures, wherein theſe egregious Commentators do ſo much pleaſe and value themſelves. However, we are thus far beholding to them, that they have given us to underſtand, that there was a Naim in the Tribe of Iſſachar, called ſo from the pleaſantneſs of its ſituation (as indeed Tinaam bears the ſame derivation) which we have ſome reaſon to judge was the ſame Naim with ours in the Evangeliſt, and that in Joſephus.

b It was uſual for the Galileans, coming up to the holy City to the Feaſts, to take their journey through the Samaritans Country, ᾗ τότε κάθοδον αὐτοῖς κώμης τῆς Νάϊς λεγομένης· And then their way lay through a Town called Nais. (I confeſs the Greek expreſſions are ſomething perplext; but it is no great matter.) It happened that ſome of the Samaritans and inhabitants of the great plain, fought with them, and killed a great number.

b Antiq. lib. 20. cap. 5.

You may think he repeats the very ſame Story, though differing in ſome circumſtances c. There was another fight betwixt the Galileans and Samaritans; κ᾽ ἐν Γέμαις κωμήν ἥτις ἐν τῷ μεγάλῳ Πεδίῳ κεῖται τῆς Σαμαρείτιδος· For hard by a Town called Gema ſituated in the great plain of Samaria, multitudes of Jews going up to the Feaſt there was a certain Galilean ſlain.

c In Lib. 2. de excid. cap. 21.

It is not much worth our examining whether they be one and the ſame ſtory with the other, or whether this Gema be the ſame Town with Naim; but this we may gather hence, That Naim was in the extreme borders of Iſſachar, touching upon the Samaritan Country, and Gema in the extreme borders of Samaria that were next adjoining to Iſſachar. And when the Galileans went down from Naim, a Town in Iſſachar, into the great plain of Samaria, the firſt Town in their way is Gema, there the enemy meets and fights them: if at leaſt Gema and Naim be not one and the ſame place.

SECT. III.

ENGANNIM.

THere is a great inclination in me to believe, that Naim is the ſame with Engannim, mentioned Joſh. XIX. 21. and Chap. XXI. 29. For, I. Both of them were within the Tribe of Iſſachar; Engannim, as the H. Scriptures, and Naim as the Jewiſh Doctors tell us; and why we ſhould not take their word in ſuch a thing as this, I know no reaſon. II. Both of them ſignifie pleaſantneſs: Naim in the very Etymon implies pleaſantneſs: and Engannim, a Fountain and Gardens. III. The Engannim mentioned Joſ. XXI. 29. in 1 Chron. VI. 73. is ענם Anem. Now if you tranſpoſe the Letters (as is done in חרם and סרח) it will be נעם Naim. IV. Let me add, That Engannim (if there be any credit to thoſe guides, that commonly ſhew theſe places to Travellers) lies directly in the way, going from Galilee to Jeruſalem; and ſo, as is very evident, was our Naim. Of this place, thus our Country-man Biddulph: a Town, commonly called Jenine, of old Engannim: exceedingly pleaſant, abounding with waters and gardens, and delightſome walks.

Why

Why the LXX should render עין גנים Engannim by πηγὴ γραμμάτων a fountain of letters, Jos. XXI. 29. let those that are more learned search out. It is true the Children of Issachar are celebrated for their skill in computing the times, 1 Chron. XII. 32. where the Targumist; They were skilled in calculating the beginnings of the Years, the Calends of the Months, and the intercalation both of Years and Months סופיסטין במולרא רסידרי Sophists [skilful] in new Moons אינדולוגין במוליא וכוכביא Astrologers [conversant] about Planets and Stars, &c.

If we would include the Levites that dwelt amongst the Tribe of Issachar, under the general name of Issachar, then might Engannim (being a Levitical City) be an Academy for that kind of Mathematical learning; but in both we are very uncertain. Nor is it less obscure that the same Greek Interpreter hath instead of Remeth, Engannim, Enhaddah, and Bethpazes rendered, Ῥεμμὰς καὶ Ἰεὼν, καὶ Τομμὰν, καὶ Αἰμερὲκ, καὶ Βηρσάφης· Remmas, and Jeon, and Tomman, and Æmerec, and Bersaphes, Jos. XIX. 21.

EMMAUS. Luk. XXIV.

I. Several things about its name and place. II. Its situation. III. Some Story of it. Also of Timnath, and Mount Gilead, Judg. VII. 3.

SECT. I.

Several things about its name and place.

WE have spoken something already concerning Emmaus in our Choragraphical Century, Chap. 45. let us add some few things in this place.

I. It was distant from Jerusalem, as appears both from our Evangelist, and Josephus [a], about threescore furlongs. By account of common miles, Seven and a half: Eight of the Jewish. What copy therefore of Josephus must the Learned Beza have by him, who thus speaks upon the place? Ἑξήκοντα sixty, so the Syriac hath it and indeed all copies: so that here is either a mistake in the number, or else it is ill written in Josephus [b]; thirty furlongs. Our Josephus plainly hath it, χωρίον ὁ καλεῖται μὲν Ἀμμαοῦς, ἀπέχει δὲ τῆς Ἱεροσολύμων σταδίους ἑξήκοντα· A Town called Emmaus distant from Jerusalem threescore furlongs.

[a] De Excid. lib. 7. cap. 27.

[b] Lib. de Bell. Jud. 7. cap. 27.

II. The Syriac, Arabic, and Persia Interpreters write the name in the Evangelist with an ע at the beginning; the Syriac and Persian עמאוס. So also the Syriac, in 1 Macc. III. 40. But the Arabic עמואס, the Talmudists אמאוס with א in the beginning. Indeed in Talm. Bab. in Erachim, fol. 10. 1. it is writen עימאוס; but in the Misnaioth printed by themselves it is אמאוס. So it is in Succah. fol. 51. 1.

III. Josephus commonly renders Chammoth of Tiberias (a place so called from the Hot-Baths) by Ἀμμαοὺς, Ammaus; but whether our Emmaus ought to have this derivation is a question. There were indeed at Emmaus noted waters; but we can hardly suppose they were warm, if we consider but the usual writing of the word amongst the Talmudists.

[c] Rabban Johanan ben Zacchai had five Disciples, who while he lived sate always with him, but when he died they retired to Jasne. But R. Eliezer ben Erech betook himself to his Wife לאמאוס at Emmaus, מים יפים ונוה יפה a place of pleasant waters, and pleasant dwelling. There is something in this little Story that might not be unworthy our enquiry, as to the Scholastical History of the Jews; viz. where Rabban Johanan should make his abode, if not in Jabneh? for that is the place they commonly allot to him: But this is not a place to dispute of such matters.

[c] Midras Coheleth, fol. 101. 2.

[d] Pervenerunt Nicopolim, &c. They came to Nicopolis: Now Nicopolis is a City in Palestine. This the Book of the Gospel calls Emmaus; while it was yet a Village. There through the plenty of good waters, and all necessary provisions, they enjoyed a good comfortable night.

[d] Gul. Tyr. lib. 7. cap. 24.

This Author, upon this occasion, quotes some passages out of Sozomen, in the sixth Book of the Tripartite History, which are in his fifth Book, Chap. 20. wherein the waters at Emmaus are celebrated not only for their plenty, but as they were wonderfully wholesome and medicinal. For thus he: There is a City in Paleſtine which now hath the name of Nicopolis, of which the Holy Goſpel makes mention, as of a Village (for then it was ſo) ὡς Ἐμμαοῦς ἀπεσαμβλύνει and calls it Emma. The Romans, having ſackt Jeruſalem, and gained an entire victory over the Jews, from the event of that War, gave this Town the name of Nicopolis. Before the City near the road (where our Saviour after he had ariſen from the dead, walking with Cleophas, made as if he was haſtening to another Town) there is a certain Medicinal Spring, wherein not only men that are ſick, being waſht, are cured, but other ſort of Animals alſo, of whatſoever diſeaſes they are afflicted with. The report is, that Chriſt as he was once going that way with his Diſciples, turned aſide to that fountain, and having waſht his feet in it, the waters have ever ſince retained an healing quality and vertue in them.

We leave the credit of the Story to the relater of it: only one thing we may obſerve from the hint he gives us, that it is no wonder if in the Evangeliſts time, Emmaus was but a little Village, whenas not long before it had been burnt and deſtroyed by Varus. Nor is it more ſtrange that its antient name Emmaus, ſhould change into Nicopolis, when the place it ſelf, became a Roman Colony f.

SECT. II.

Its ſituation.

PTOLOMEY tells us ſomething of its ſituation by its degrees, ſaying, Emmaus, 65. 45. 31. 45.

As to the vicinage of Countries or places adjacent; thus the Jeruſalem Sheviith a: מבית חורון ועד אמאוס הר From Beth-horon to Emmaus it is hilly. מאמאוס ועד לוד שפלה From Emmaus to Lydda it is Champagne, and from Lydda to the Sea is Valley.

a Fol. 38. 4.

If you would hear Ptolomey more largely, thus he writes:

Jamnia	65.	40.	32.	0.
Lydda	66.	0.	32.	0.
Antipatris	66.	20.	32.	0.
Emmaus	65.	45.	31.	45.
Jeruſalem	66.	0.	31.	40.

Although this account of the diſtance betwixt Jeruſalem and Emmaus, doth not very well agree, with what our Evangeliſt, and Joſephus have ſaid; yet may we learn, from the places named along with it, in what quarter of the Heaven it was ſituated. To all which we may add that of Joſephus Antiq. lib. 12. cap. 11. and 1 Maccab. IV. Judas Maccabeus engages with Gorgias near Emmaus: the Gorgians fly, and the Maccabeans purſue μέχρι Γαδάρων, καὶ τῶν πεδίων τῆς Ἰδουμαίας καὶ Ἀζώτου, καὶ Ἰαμνείας, As far as Gadaron (Gezer) to the plains of Edom, Azotus, and Jamnia.

I therefore recite this paſſage, that it may appear that Emmaus, lay toward Galilee, although from Jeruſalem it inclined alſo Weſtward: For whereas, conſidering the latitude of Galilee extending it ſelf from Weſt to Eaſt, there muſt of neceſſity be ſeveral Roads from Jeruſalem to this or that part of it: So this through Emmaus was one; through Beth Horon another; through Antipatris a third; if at leaſt this laſt did not fall in with that of Emmaus. That paſſage in Gul. Tyr. makes me think it might; who, deſcribing the Encampings and journeyings of the Croyſade Army, tells us, b Relictis a dextrâ, &c. Leaving the Maritime Towns, Antipatris and Joppe, on the right, they paſſed through Eleutheria, and came to Lydda, which is Dioſpolis. And Cap. 24. From whence, taking guides along with them, perſons well skilled in thoſe places, they came to Nicopolis: Which is the ſame with Emmaus.

b Lib. 2. cap. 22.

From all which, we may reaſonably preſume that the two Diſciples were going to Emmaus, not as to the utmoſt limit of their journey, but as that lay in their way toward Galilee.

SECT. III.

Some Story of it. Alſo of Timnath and Mount Gilead, Jud. VII. 3.

TO what Tribe Emmaus belonged would be ſomething hard to determine, becauſe of the ſituation of Bethoron, which was in Ephraim, Joſh. XVI. But that the Talmudiſts do clearly enough ſay it was not in the Samaritan Country.

a Erachin, fol. 10. 1. and Succab, fol. 51. 1. a They were Servants of the Prieſts, ſaith R. Meir. But R. Joſe ſaith, They were of the Family of Beth Pegarim, and Beth Zippory, in Emmaus, who had placed their Daughters in Marriage with the Prieſts.

The

The diſcourſe is about the Muſicians in the Temple, and the diſpute is, whether they were Levites, or Iſraelites, particularly natives of Emmaus, and of thoſe two Families who for their purity were thought worthy to be taken into the affinity and blood of the Prieſts themſelves. And this paſſage indeed puts it out of all queſtion that Emmaus was not within the Tribe of Ephraim; becauſe it would be ridiculous to ſuppoſe that either Samaritan Women ſhould be joyned in Marriage with the Prieſts, or that Samaritan Men ſhould be admitted to play on the Inſtruments in the Temple. Emmaus therefore muſt be placed in the Tribe of Benjamin, which, what it was called before, is not eaſie to gueſs.

I conceive there is mention made of this place, in Spihra b. R. Akibah ſaid; I asked Rabban Gamaliel, and R. Joſhua באטלם של אמאוס in the ſhambles of Emmaus, when they went to receive the Beaſt to make a Feaſt for their Son, &c. Now Rabban Gamaliel, and R. Joſhua were both of Jafneh; ſo that by conſidering the ſituation of Jafne we may more confidently believe, that they were in the Emmaus we are ſpeaking of. We have the ſame paſſage in Maccoth, fol. 14. 1. b Fol. 9. 4.

It was one of the larger Cities: For ſo Joſephus ſpeaks of it; c Καὶ τέτταρας πόλεις Ἡγεμονίζειν Κάσιος, ὧν ἦσαν αἱ δυνατώταται Γόφνα καὶ Ἐμμαοῦς, πρὸς ταύταις δὲ Λυδδα καὶ Θαμνᾶ. Caſſius diſfranchiſed four Cities, the greateſt of which was Gophna and Emmaus: and next to theſe was Lydda and Thamna. c Antiqu. lib. 14. cap. 18.

d Under the diſpoſition of the Duke of Paleſtine amongſt the reſt, was Ala Antana of the Dromedaries of Admatha; where Pancirole notes that Admatha in St. Jerom in his Hebrew places, is called Ammata. This, by the agreeableneſs of ſound may ſeem to be our Emmaus, unleſs more probably at this time it bore the name of Nicopolis. d Notitia Imper. Orient.

When I take notice that Chammath חמת or the Baths of Tiberias, are commonly in the Greek rendered Ἀμμαοῦς: and withal, that our Emmaus was much celebrated for famous Waters: I cannot forget the waters of Nephtoa, or the Fountain of Etam, from whence water was conveighed by Pipes into the Temple. This was in the ſame quarter from Jeruſalem with our Emmaus: So that our Ἐμμαοῦς may as well be derived from אמת Ammath, a Channel of waters, as well as the other Ἀμμαοῦς from חמת Chammath, the warm Baths. But this I leave to the Reader's judgment.

In memory of this place let us record a Story out of Sigeverts Chronicle in the Reigns of Theodoſius and Valentinianus. Hoc tempore in caſtello Judeæ Emmaus, &c. At this time in a Garriſon in Judea called Emmaus, there was a perfect Child born. From the Navel upward, he was divided, ſo that he had two Breaſts, and two Heads, either of which had their proper ſenſes belonging to them: The one eat when the other did not: the one ſlept when the other was awake. Sometime they ſlept both together; they plaid one with another: they both wept, and would ſtrike one another. They lived near two years; and after one had died, the other ſurvived about four days.

If this two headed Child was the iſſue of a Jew, then might that queſtion be ſolved, which is propounded, Menacoth, fol. 37. 1. מי שיש לו שני ראשים If any one ſhould have two heads באיזה מהן מניח תפילין on which of the Foreheads ſhould the Phylacteries be bound? No mean ſcruple indeed. But let us have from the Gloſſator as conſiderable a Story: Aſmodeus produced from under the pavement before Solomon, a Man with two heads. He Marries a Wife, and begot Children like himſelf, with two heads, and like his Wife with one. When the Patrimony comes to be divided, he that had two heads requires a double portion; and the cauſe was brought before Solomon to be decided by him.

As to that Thamna or Timnath which Joſephus in the place above quoted makes mention of, it is diſputed in Sotah, fol. 17. 1. where Rabh aſſerts, that there were two Timnaths, one in Judea, and the other that of Samſon. We all know of a third of that name, Joſua's Timnath, viz. Timnath-Serah in Mount Ephraim where Joſua was buried, Joſ. XXIV. 30. Here give the Rabbins a little play, and let them trifle by tranſpoſing the names of סרח Serah and חרס Cheres, and from thence ground a fiction that the image of the Sun was fixed upon the Sepulchre of Joſua, in remembrance of the Sun's miraculous ſtanding ſtill by his word. This is like them. Nor indeed is that of a much better mould, which the LXX add, ἐκεῖ ἔθηκαν μετ' αὐτοῦ εἰς τὸ μνῆμα, &c. There they put into the monument with him, the ſtone-knives, with which he circumciſed the Children of Iſrael in Galgal, when he brought them out of Egypt, as the Lord had commanded them. Were theſe, think you, in the Hebrew Text once, and have they ſlipt out ſince? Do they not rather ſavour of the Samaritan gloſs, or the Jewiſh tradition?

They recede from the Hebrew Text in the ſame Story, but ſomething more tolerably when they render מצפון להר נעש on the North-ſide of the Hill Gaaſh: Ἀπὸ βορρᾶ τοῦ ὄρους τοῦ Γαλααδ, From the North-ſide of the Hill Galaad: where, as far as I am able to judge, they do not paraphraſe ill, though they do not render it to the Letter. Let us conſider that obſcure paſſage which hath ſo much vext Interpreters in Jud. VII. 3. Proclaim now in the ears of the people, ſaying, whoſoever is fearful and afraid, ישב יצפר מהר גלעד

let him return early from Mount Gilead. The place where this thing was acted was either in or very near the vale of Jezreel, distant from Mount Gilead beyond Jordan, twenty or thirty miles; and therefore how could these Gideonites depart from Mount Gilead? I am not ignorant what some do alledge toward the untying this knot, viz. that it should be taken thus, Whoever be of Mount Gilead let them return. The Targumist to this sense; Whosoever is fearful, let him return, ויתבחר מטורא רגלעד and let choice be made out of Mount Gilead. i. e. Let the Gileadites be chosen. But whether his meaning was, that the Gileadites should be chosen to remain because they are not afraid; or be chosen to return because they were; I shall not reckon it worth the while to enquire.

But may not Mount Gilead in this place, be understood of the Hill Gaash? It is certain, the situation agrees well enough, and perhaps there is no great difference in the name.

Whence that Mount Gilead beyond Jordan first had its name, is not unknown; namely, from that heap of stones set up by Jacob for a witness of the Covenant betwixt him and Laban, Gen. XXXI.

We read of something not unlike it, set up by Josua near Shechem, in testimony of the Covenant betwixt the people and God, Jos. XXIV. 26. Now therefore, who can doubt but that Josua was buried near Shechem? For when that place was particularly bequeathed and set out by Jacob, for his Son Joseph; who of the whole stock and lineage of Joseph could justlier inherit that part of the Country than Josua?

He was buried on the North-side of the Hill Gaash, in his own ground. Might not that Hill be also called Gilead, upon the account of that Pillar of Witness that was built there a little from Sichem? whence the foot of the Hill, and the Hill it self beginning to rise (if it were Northward, which we suppose, then it) might very well reach not far from that place where this matter of Gideon was transacted. For, whereas the field wherein the Battel was, was within the Tribe of Manasseh, contiguous to Mount Ephraim, and Gideon proclaims that whosoever were afraid should depart from Mount Gilead; we can perhaps think of no proper sense wherein this Mount Gilead can be taken, than that that part of Mount Ephraim was so called from the Pillar of Testimony placed on the South-side of it, when the common name for it was the Hill Gaash.

CHAP. I.

VERS. I.

Ἐπειδήπερ πολλοὶ ἐπεχείρησαν, &c. Foraſmuch as many have taken in hand, &c.

WHEREAS it was ſeveral years after the Aſcenſion of our Lord, before the four Books of the Holy Goſpel were committed to writing, the Apoſtles, the Seventy Diſciples, and other Miniſters of the Word in the mean time every where diſperſing the glad tydings; no wonder if many pious and greedy Auditors had for their own memory ſake, and the good of others, noted in their own private Table-books as much as they were capable of carrying from the Sermons and Diſcourſes they ſo frequently heard. Nor is it more ſtrange if ſome of theſe ſhould from their own collections, compile and publiſh now and then ſome Commentaries, or ſhort Hiſtories of the paſſages they had met with. They might take in hand to ſet forth in order a declaration of thoſe things. Which, however they might perform out of very good intentions, and a faithful impartial Pen; yet were theſe writings far from commencing an infallible Canon, or eternal unalterable rule of the Chriſtian Faith.

It was not in the power of theſe kind of writers either to ſelect what the Divine Wiſdom would have ſelected for the Holy Canon, or to declare thoſe things in that ſtile, wherein the Holy Spirit would have them declared, to whom he was neither the guide in the action, nor the director of their Pen.

Our Evangeliſt therefore takes care to weigh ſuch kind of writings, in ſuch a balance, as that it may appear they are neither rejected by him as falſe or heretical, nor yet received as Divine and Canonical. Not the firſt, becauſe he tells us they had written καθὼς παρέδοσαν, even thoſe very things, which the heavenly Preachers had delivered to them.

them. Not the latter, for to those Writings he opposeth, that he himself was παρηκολουθηκὼς ἄνωθεν, One that had perfect understanding of things from above. Of which we shall consider in its proper place.

Ἀναταξάσθαι διήγησιν. To set forth in order a Declaration.

A kind of phrase not much unlike, what was so familiar amongst the Jews סדר הגדה An orderly Narration: saying, that that was more peculiarly applied by them to the Commemoration of the passover. And yet it is used in a larger sense too, לסדר אגדה a which you way render, who was the Ἀναπάσων διήγησιν, He who set forth in order a declaration.

a Succah. fol. 53 1.

Περὶ τῶν πεπληροφορημένων, &c. Of those things which are more surely believed amongst us, &c.

Let us recollect what the unbelieving Jews think and say of the Actions, Miracles, and Doctrine of Christ, and then we shall find it more agreeable to render this clause, of those things which are most surely believed amongst us, according to what Erasmus, Beza, our own English Translators, and others have rendered it, than with the Vulgar, Quæ in nobis completæ sunt rerum; of the things which are fulfilled amongst us. They had said, this deceiver seduceth the people, those wonders he did were by the power of magick; But we do most surely believe those things which he did and taught.

VERS. II.

Οἱ ἀπ' ἀρχῆς αὐτόπται καὶ ὑπηρέται, &c. Who from the beginning were eye witnesses and Ministers of the Word, &c.

IF ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, from the beginning, have reference to the time wherein Christ publisht the Gospel upon Earth, as no one need to doubt; then there is little distinction to be made between αὐτόπται and ὑπηρέται, Eye-witnesses and Ministers; for who from that time had been made a Minister of the Word, that had not been an eye-witness, and seen Christ himself? So that we may easily conjecture who are these αὐτόπται and ὑπηρέται here, viz. the Apostles, the Seventy Disciples and others that filled up the number of the Hundred and Twenty mentioned Acts I. 15.

It is said of Mnason, that he was Ἀρχαίῳ μαθητὴς, an old Disciple, Acts XXI. 16. It may be supposed of him that he had been a Disciple ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, from the beginning; that is, from the very time wherein Christ himself publisht his glad tidings. Those words ἀφ' ἡμερῶν ἀρχαίων, a good while ago, Acts XV. 7. ought to be understood also in this sense.

VERS. III.

Παρηκολουθηκότι ἄνωθεν πᾶσιν. Having had perfect understanding of things from the very first.

THIS is not indeed ill rendered, having understood these things from the very first: but it may perhaps be better, having attained to an understanding of these things from above, from heaven it self. So ἄνωθεν, from above, signifies ἐξουρανόθεν, from heaven, Joh. III. 3. 31. & Chap. XIX. 11. James I. 17. & III. 17, &c. For,

I. This Version includes the other, for he that hath a perfect understanding of these things from above, or by Divine inspiration, did understand them from the beginning.

II. Take notice of the distinction that is in Josephus b Δεῖ τὸν ἄλλοις παραδίδοντα, &c. He that undertakes to give a true relation of things to others ought himself to know them first very accurately, ἢ παρηκολουθηκότα τοῖς γεγονόσι, ἢ παρὰ τῶν εἰδότων πυνθανόμενον, having either very diligently observed them himself, or learnt by enquiry from others. We see he opposeth τὸν παρηκολουθηκότα to τῷ πυνθανομένῳ. Now if St. Luke had writ his History as he had learnt from others (as they wrote whom he instances in Vers. I.) then he had been amongst the πυνθανομένους those that had learned from others; not the παρηκολουθηκότας nor could he promise more than they might do of whom he said πολλοὶ ἐπεχείρησαν, &c. That many had taken in hand, &c.

Κράτιστε Θεόφιλε. Moſt excellent Theophilus.

There is one gueſſes, this moſt excellent Theophilus, to have been an Antiochian; another thinks he may be a Roman: but it is very uncertain either who or whence he was. There was one Theophilus amongſt the Jews, at that very time probably, when St. Luke wrote his Goſpel; but I do not think this was he. Joſephus c mentions him. King Agrippa removing Jeſus the Son of Gamaliel from the High-prieſthood, ἔδωκεν αὐτὴν Ματθίᾳ τῷ Θεοφίλου· He gave it to Matthias the Son of Theophilus: Καθ' ὃν ὁ πρὸς Ῥωμαίους πόλεμος Ἰουδαίοις ἔλαβεν ἀρχήν· In whoſe time the Jewiſh War begun.

c Antiqu. lib. 20. cap. 8.

VERS. V.

Ἐξ ἐφημερίας Ἀβιά. Of the courſe of Abiah.

THEY are very little verſed in the Holy Scriptures, and leſs in the Jewiſh learning, that could imagine this Zachary to have been the High-Prieſt, when he is ſaid to have been but of the eight courſe, and to have attained this turn of attendance by lot.

As to the inſtitution of the Courſes under the firſt Temple, there is no need to ſay any thing, becauſe every one hath it before him 1 Chron. XXIV. But under the ſecond Temple there was indeed ſome difference, not as to the order of their courſes, but as to their Heads and Families. Of which thing the Talmudiſts treat largely, and indeed not altogether from the purpoſe: Let them comment in my ſtead.

I. d Four משמרות or courſes of Prieſts went up out of Babylon, Jedaiah, Harim, Paſhur, and Immer. [Ezr. II. 36, &c.] The Prophets who were converſant amongſt them at that time, obliged them, that if Jehojarib himſelf ſhould come up from the captivity, that he ſhould not thruſt out the courſe that preceded him, but be, as it were, an appendix to it. The Prophets come forth and caſt in four and twenty lots into the Urne; Jedaiah comes and having drawn five, himſelf was the ſixth. Harim comes, and having drawn five, himſelf was the ſixth. Paſhur comes, and having drawn five, himſelf was the ſixth. Immer comes, and having drawn five, himſelf was the ſixth. It was agreed amongſt them, that if Jehojarib himſelf ſhould return out of Captivity, he ſhould not exclude the foregoing courſe, but be, as it were, an Appendix to it. The heads of the courſes ſtand forth, and divide themſelves into the Houſes of their Fathers, &c. We have the ſame thing in Bab. Erachin e.

d Hieroſ. Taanith, fol. 68. 1.

If theſe things be true (and indeed by comparing them with the place in Ezra, before quoted, we may believe they are not much amiſs) then the Ἐφημερία τοῦ Ἀβιά, the courſe of Abiah, both here and Nehem. XII. 17. muſt not ſo much be underſtood of the Stock or Race of Abijah, as, that that courſe, retained the name of Abijah ſtill: For though there were four and twenty Claſſes made up of the four only named, yet did they retain both their antient order, and antient names too. If therefore Jehojarib, i. e. his courſe ſhould come up out of Babylon (which however did not happen) it was provided, that he ſhould not diſturb the fixt and ſtated order, by intruding into the firſt place; but retaining the name of Jehojarib in the firſt Claſſe, which conſiſted now of thoſe of Jedaiah, Ἐφημερία, his courſe, ſhould be diſtributed amongſt thoſe orders.

e Fol. 12. 2.

II. f The Rabbins have a tradition: there were XXIV courſes of Prieſts in the Land of Iſrael, and XII courſes in Jericho. What? XII in Jericho? This would encreaſe the number too much. No, but there were twelve of thoſe in Jericho; that when the time came about, that any Courſe ſhould go up to Jeruſalem, half a Courſe went up from the Land of Iſrael, and half a courſe from Jericho, that by them might come a ſupply both of water, and food to their brethren that were at Jeruſalem.

f Bab. Taanith, fol. 27. 1.

Gloſſe. When the time came that any Courſe ſhould go up to Jeruſalem, it divided it ſelf, that half of it ſhould go to Jeruſalem, and half of it to Jericho, that they might ſupply their brethren with water and food, &c.

III. As to the circulation of theſe courſes or turns, we may gueſs ſomething of it from Gloſſ. in Midras Coheleth g. The Midras it ſelf hath theſe words. It is R. Chaija's Tradition: It is written, שבע שבתות תמימות תהיינה Seven Weeks, ſhall be compleat, i. e. between the Paſſover and Pentecoſt, Levit. XXIII. 15. But when are they ſo? בזמן שאין ישוע ושכניה ביניהם when Joſhuah and Shecaniah do not interfere.

g Fol. 82. 4.

Where the Gloſſe from another Author hath it thus: When the Calends of the Month Niſan fall in with the Sabbath, then does the Paſſover fall in with the Sabbath too; and then let them begin to number from the going out of the Sabbath, and the weeks will be compleat according to the days of the Creation. He takes an inſtance from Joſhua and Shecaniah. For there were XXIV Courſes, which took their turns alternately every Sabbath: Amongſt which Joſhua was the ninth, and Shecaniah the tenth. On the firſt week of the Month Niſan, Jehojarib was the firſt Courſe, on the ſecond week, Jedaiah. שבת של פסח וכו' on the Paſchal week, all the Courſes attended together. The ſix weeks to that Sabbath, that immediately preceded the Pentecoſt, there miniſtred ſix Courſes, Harim, Seorim, Malchijah, Mijamin, Hakkos, Abiah. In the Sabbath that precedes the Pentecoſt, Joſua enters, but does not attend till after Pentecoſt. Behold Joſua and Shechaniah come not between the Paſsover and Pentecoſt: for if Joſua was between the Paſsover and Pentecoſt, the weeks would not be compleat according to the days of the Creation.

He adds a great deal more, but I confeſs it is beyond my reach: Such is that that immediately follows: They are not compleat as the days of the Creation כיוצא למנות מג עך נאו for we may number from three to three, or from five to five, and ſo Joſua and Shechaniah will enter [upon their courſe] before the Pentecoſt. For behold, the Sabbath before Niſan let it be Jehojarib's turn ויהיו ו שבועות עך הפסח and let there be ſeven weeks to the Paſsover, &c. which muſt either be ſome fault in the Printer, or a riddle to me, that I cannot tell what to make of.

However, by the whole ſeries of the diſcourſe it appears, that the beginning of the double circulation of the Courſes, was with the twofold beginning of the year, Niſan and Tiſri: as alſo that all the Courſes performed their miniſtry together in the Feaſts. As to the Paſsover indeed here is mention only, but we do not want for authorities to make it out, that as they did ſo then, ſo alſo at the Feaſts of Pentecoſt, and Tabernacles. Let Jehojarib therefore begin the firſt Courſe in the beginning of the month Niſan; and (remembring, that all the Courſes together performed their Service at the Paſsover and Pentecoſt) the Courſes will all have run out in half the year; for ſo (taking in thoſe two Feaſts) ſix and twenty weeks are ſpent off. Then let Jehojarib begin again with the Month Tiſri, and ſuppoſe all the Courſes jointly miniſtring at the Feaſt of Tabernacles, and they will have finiſht their round (excepting one week over) by the Month Niſan again: which gap of that one week how it is filled up, as alſo the intercalar Month when it happened, would be too much for us to diſcuſs in this place.

IV. The Courſe of Bilgah is put out of its juſt order, and thrown into the laſt place, if that be true which we meet with in Jeruſalem Succah h. They ſay, All that went into the Mountain of the Temple, made their entry on the right hand, and went out at the left; but Biljah went toward the South, becauſe of the apoſtacy of his Daughter Mary: for ſhe went and married a certain Souldier of the Kingdom of the Grecians. He came and ſtruck the top of the Altar, ſaying, לוקום לוקים O Wolf, Wolf, thou that devoureſt all the good things of Iſrael, and yet in a time of ſtreights helpeſt them not. There are alſo that ſay, that the reaſon why this was thus ordered, was becauſe Bilgah's Courſe was once neglected, when it came about to them to have gone up to have performed their miniſtry: Bilgah therefore was always amongſt thoſe that went out, as Isbab was amongſt thoſe that came in; having caſt that Courſe out of their order.

h Fol. 51. 4.

V. i על כל משמר ומשמר היה מעמד בירושל For every Courſe, there was a Stationary Aſſembly of Prieſts, Levites, and Iſraelites at Jeruſalem. When the time came wherein the Courſe muſt go up, the Prieſts and the Levites went up to Jeruſalem; but the Iſraelites that were within that Courſe, all met within their own Cities, and read the Hiſtory of the Creation, Gen. I. The Stationary men faſting four days in that week; viz. from the ſecond to the fifth.

i Taanith, cap. 4. hal. 2.

Gloſſe. There was a Stationary Aſſembly מעמד for every Courſe ſtated and placed in Jeruſalem, who ſhould aſſiſt in the Sacrifices of their brethren: beſides theſe that were ſtated in Jeruſalem, there was a Stationary Aſſembly in every City. There was the ſtation of Prieſts, Levites and Iſraelites at Jeruſalem; the Prieſts of the Courſe, went up to Jeruſalem to their Service, the Levites to their Singing; and of all the Stations there were ſome appointed and ſettled at Jeruſalem, that were to aſſiſt at the Sacrifices of their Brethren. The reſt aſſembled in their own Cities, poured out Prayers that the Sacrifices of their Brethren might be accepted; Faſting, and bringing forth the Book of the Law on their Faſt-day, &c. So the gloſſe hath it.

The reaſon of this Inſtitution, as to Stationary Men, is given us in the Miſhnah, כי היאך קרבנו של אדם קרב והוא אינו עומד על גבו For how could every mans offering be made, if he himſelf were not preſent? Now whereas the daily ſacrifice, and ſome other offerings were made for all Iſrael, and it was not poſſible that all Iſrael ſhould be preſent, theſe Stationaries were inſtituted, who in the ſtead of all Iſrael ſhould put their hands upon the daily Sacrifice, and ſhould be preſent at the other Offerings that were offered for all Iſrael. And while theſe were performing this at Jeruſalem, there were other Stationaries in every Courſe, who by Prayers and Faſting in their own Cities, helpt forward, as much as they could, the Services of their Brethren that were at Jeruſalem.

k Jerus. fol. 5. 2.

k The Children of Iſrael lay on their hands, but the Gentiles do not. The Men of Iſrael lay on their hands, but the Women do not. R. Joſe ſaith, Abba Eliezer ſaid to me, we had once a Calf for a Peace-offering: and bringing it into the Court of the Women, the Women put their hands upon it: not that this belonged to the Women ſo to do, אלא מפני נחת רוחות רוחות שיל נשים but that the Womens ſpirits might be appeaſed. A remarkable thing.

The Prieſts throughout all the Courſes, grew into a prodigious number, if that be true in Jeruſalem Taanith l. R. Zeora in the name of Rabh Honnah ſaid, that the leaſt of all the Courſes brought forth Eighty five thouſand branches of Prieſts. A thing not to be credited. l Fol. 69. 1.

Καὶ ἡ γυνὴ αὐτῦ ἐκ τῶν Θυγατέρων Ἀαρών. And his Wife was of the Daughters of Aaron.

In the Talmudiſts כוהנת a Prieſteſs, viz. one born of the lineage of Prieſts. It was lawful for a Prieſt to marry a Leviteſs, or indeed a Daughter of Iſrael m. But it was moſt commendable of all, to marry one of the Prieſts line. Hence that Story in Taanith ubi ſupr. Fouſcore pair of Brethren-Prieſts, took to Wife fourſcore pair of Siſter-Priſteſſes in Gophne, all in one night. m Kiddaſhin, cap. 4. hal. 1.

There was hardly any thing among the Jews, with greater care and caution lookt after, than the marrying of their Prieſts, viz. that the Wives they took, ſhould not by any means ſtain and defile their Prieſtly blood: and that all things which were fit for their eating ſhould be hallowed. Hence that uſual phraſe for an excellent Woman דוגנת להנשא לכהונה She deſerves to marry with a Prieſt.

n Joſephus ſpeaks much of this care Ὅπως τὸ γένος τῶν Ἱερέων ἄμικτον καὶ καθαρὸν διαμένῃ. That the whole prieſtly Generation might be preſerved pure and unblended. n Joſeph. cont. Appion. lib. 1. pag. mihi 918.

Ἐλισαβέθ. Elizabeth.

VERS. VI.

Ἐν πάσαις ταῖς ἐντολαῖς, καὶ δικαιώμασι, &c. In all the Commandments and Ordinances, &c.

So Numb. XXXVI. 13. Αὗται αἱ ἐντολαὶ καὶ τὰ δικαιώματα, Theſe are the Commandments and judgments. It would perhaps ſeem a little too fine and curious, to reſtrain the ἐντολαὶ to the Decalogue or Ten Commandments, and the δικαιώματα to the Ceremonial and judicial Laws, though this does not wholly want foundation. It is certain the precepts delivered after the Decalogue, from Exod. XXI. to Chap. XXIV. are called δικαιώματα, judgments, or ordinances, Exod. XXI. 1. & XXIV. 3.

The Vulgar can hardly give any good account, why he ſhould render δικαιώματα by juſtifications; much leſs, the followers of that Tranſlation, why they ſhould from thence fetch an Argument for juſtification upon obſervation of the Commands, when the commands and inſtitutions of men, are by foreign Authors called δικαιώματα, nay the corrupt cuſtoms that had been wickedly taken up have the ſame word, 1 Sam. II. 13. Καὶ τὸ δικαίωμα τῦ ἱερέως πρὸς τὸν λαόν, &c. The Prieſts cuſtom with the people was, &c. 2 Kings XVII. 8. Καὶ ἐπορεύθησαν τοῖς δικαιώμασι τῶν ἐθνῶν, &c. And walked in the Statutes of the Heathen.

The word δικαιώματα is frequently rendered by thoſe Interpreters from חוקים and חוקות which to wave all other inſtances may abundantly appear from Pſalm CXIX. and the very things which the Jews ſpeak of the Hebrew word, obtain alſo in the Greek.

a Perhaps Satan and the Gentiles will queſtion with Iſrael what this or that Command means, and what ſhould be the reaſon of it; the anſwer that ought to be made in this caſe is, חוקה הוא It is ordained, it is a Law given by God, and it becomes not thee to cavil. a R. Solomon in Numb. XIX.

b את חקתי תשמרו Ye ſhall obſerve my ſtatutes. That is, even thoſe which Satan and the Nations of the World do cavil at. Such are thoſe Laws about eating Swines fleſh; heterogeneous cloathing, the neareſt Kinſman's putting off the Shoe, the cleanſing of the Leper, and the ſcape Goat. If perhaps it ſhould be ſaid that theſe precepts are vain and needleſs, the Text ſaith, I am the Lord. I the Lord have ordained theſe things and it doth not become thee to diſpute them. They are δικαιώματα juſt and equal, deriving their equity from the authority of him that ordained them. b Joma, fol. 67. 2.

VERS. VIII.

Ἐν τῇ τάξει τῆς ἐφημερίας. In the order of his courſe.

a THE heads of the Courſes ſtood forth, and divided themſelves into ſo many Houſes of Fathers. In one Courſe perhaps there were five, ſix ſeven, eight, or nine Houſes of Fathers: of the Courſe wherein there were but five Houſes of Fathers, there were three of them a Hieroſ. Taanith, ubi ſupr.

them miniſtred three days, and two, four days: If ſix, then five ſerved five days, and one, two days: If ſeven, then every one attended their day: If eight, then ſix waited ſix days, and two one day: If nine, then five waited five days, and four, the other two.

Take the whole order of their daily attendance from Gloſſ. in Tamid. Cap. 6. The great Altar, or the Altar of Sacrifice, goes before the leſſer, or that of incenſe. The leſſer Altar goes before the pieces of Wood, or the laying on the Wood upon the fire of the great Altar: The laying on the Wood goes before the ſweeping the inner Altar, or that of the incenſe: The ſweeping of the inner Altar goes before the ſnuffing of the Lamps: The ſnuffing of the Lamps goes before the ſprinkling of the blood of the daily Sacrifice: the ſprinkling of the blood of the daily Sacrifice goes before the ſnuffing of the two other Lamps: The ſnuffing of the two other Lamps goes before the Incenſe: The Incenſe goes before the laying on the parts of the Sacrifice upon the Altar: The laying on the parts, goes before the Mincha: The Mincha goes before the meal, or the two loaves of the Chief Prieſt: The two loaves of the Chief Prieſt go before the Drink-offering: The Drink-offering before the additional Sacrifices. So Abba Saul. But a little after. The Wiſe-men ſay, the blood of the Sacrifice is ſprinkled; then the Lamps ſnuffed; then the Incenſe; then the ſnuffing of the two other Lamps: and this is the tradition according to the Wiſe-men.

VERS. IX.

Κατὰ τὸ ἔθος τῆς ἱερατείας ἔλαχε, &c. According to the cuſtom of the Prieſts Office, his lot was, &c.

a Tamid. cap. 3. hal. 1. a THE Ruler of the Temple ſaith בואו והפיסו come ye and caſt your lots, that it may be determined who ſhall kill the Sacrifice, who ſprinkle the blood, who ſweep the inner Altar, who cleanſe the Candleſtick, who carry the parts of the Sacrifice to the aſcent of the Altar; the head, the leg, the two ſhoulders, the tail of the back-bone, the other leg, the breaſt, the gulet, the two ſides, the entrails, the flower, the two loaves, and the wine. וכר מי שוכה He hath it to whom it happens by lot.

b Joma, fol. 25. 1. b The room Gazith (in which the lots were caſt) was in the form of a large Hall: the caſting of the lots was on the Eaſt-ſide of it, ſome Elder ſitting on the Weſt. (i. e. Some Elder of the Sanhedrim, that inſtructed them in the cuſtom and manner of caſting the lot.) The Prieſts ſtood about in a circle, and the Ruler coming ſnatcht off a Cap from the head of this or that perſon, and by that they underſtood where the lot was to begin.

c Gloſſ. ibid. fol. 22. 1. c "They ſtood in a circle, and the Ruler coming, ſnatches off a Cap from the head of "this or that man; from him the lot begins to be reckoned, every one lifting up his "finger at each number: The Ruler alſo ſaith, in whomſoever the number ends, he ob- "tains this or that Office by lot, and he declares the number. e. g. There is it may be "the number, one hundred, or threeſcore, according to the multitude of the Prieſts "ſtanding round. He begins to reckon from the perſon whoſe Cap he ſnatcht off, and "numbers round, till the whole number is run out; now in whomſoever the number "terminate, he obtains that Office about which the lot was concerned. And ſo it is in "all the lots.

I will not enquire at preſent, whether this caſting of lots was every day, or whether for the whole week, wherein ſuch or ſuch a Courſe performed its attendance. It ſeems that at this time the number, whatever it was, for the choice of one to burn Incenſe, ended in our Zachary; whoſe work and buſineſs in this Office, let it not be thought tedious to the Reader to take an account of, in theſe following paſſages.

d Tamid. cap. 5. hal. 4. d מי שוכה בקטורת "He whoſe lot it was to burn incenſe, took a Veſſel containing "the quantity of three Cabs; in the midſt of which there was a Cenſer full and heaped "up with Incenſe: over which there was a cover.

e Halac. 5. e מי שוכה במחתה "He to whom the lot fell of the Veſſel wherein the coals were "to be taken up, takes it and goes up to the top of the Altar, there ſtirring the fire "about, takes out ſome of the hotteſt coals, and going down pours them out into a "golden Veſſel.

f Halac. 6. f "When they had come from hence to the ſpace between the Altar and the Porch of "the Temple, one of them tinkles a little Bell, by which, if any of the Prieſts be with- "out doors, he knows that his brethren the Prieſts are about to worſhip, ſo that he "makes all ſpeed and enters in. The Levite knows his brethren the Levites are begin- "ning to ſing, ſo he makes haſt and enters in too. Then the chief head or ruler of the "courſe for that time, ſets all the unclean in the Eaſt-gate of the Court, that they "may be ſprinkled with blood.

g "When

g "When they were about to go up the ſteps of the Porch, thoſe whoſe lot it was to "ſweep off the aſhes from the inner Altar, and the Candleſtick, went up firſt: He "that was to ſweep the Altar went in firſt, takes the Veſſel, worſhips, and goes out. g Cap. 6. Hal. 1.

h "He who by lot had the veſſel for gathering up the coals, placeth them upon the "inner Altar, lays them all about to the brim of the Veſſel, then worſhips and goes "out. h Halac. 2.

i "He who was to burn the Incenſe, takes the Cenſer from the midſt of the Veſſel "wherein it was, and gives it to one ſtanding by. If any incenſe had been ſcattered in "the Veſſel, he gives it him into his hand: ſcatters the incenſe upon the coals and goes "out. He does not burn the incenſe till the Ruler bids him do it. i Halac. 3.

VERS. X.

Καὶ πᾶν τὸ πλῆθος τοῦ λαοῦ ἦν προσευχόμενον ἔξω. The whole multitude of the people were praying without.

WHEN the Prieſt went in unto the Holy place to burn incenſe, notice was given to all by the ſound of a little Bell, that the time of Prayer was now: as hath been already noted.

I. As many as were in the Court where the Altar was, retired from between the Temple and the Altar, and withdrew themſelves lower. a פורשין מבין אולם למזבח בשעת הקטרת They drew off from the ſpace that was between the Porch and the Altar, while the Incenſe was burning. a Joma, fol. 44. 1.

b R. Joſe ſaith, "That in five circumſtances the ſpace between the Porch and the Al- "tar, is equal to the Temple it ſelf. For no one comes thither bare-headed, diſturbed "with Wine, or with hands and feet unwaſht. And as they withdraw themſelves from "the Temple it ſelf in the time of Incenſe, ſo do they the ſame at that time from the "ſpace that is between the Porch and the Altar. b Bemidb. rab. fol. 244. 3.

II. In the other Courts they were not bound to retire, or change their place; but in all they gave themſelves to Prayer, and that in deep ſilence. c The Fathers ordained Prayers in the time of the daily ſacrifice. And of what kind ſoever the prayers were, whether their Phylacterical ones alone, or their Phylacterical in conjunction with others, or others without their Phylacterical, ſtill they uttered them very ſilently. d He that repeats his prayers in that ſilent manner that he does not hear himſelf, he does his duty. But R. Joſe would have it, that he repeats his prayers ſo, that the ſound of his own voice may reach his own ears. To this deep ſilence in the time of Incenſe and Prayers, that paſſage ſeems to allude, Revel. VIII. 1, 3. c Beracoth, fol. 26. 1. d Ibid. cap. 2; hal. 3.

When the Incenſe and Prayers were ended, the parts of the Sacrifice were laid upon the Altar, and then the Levites begin their Pſalmody, and the Prieſts their ſounding the Trumpet.

VERS. XI.

Ὤφθη δὲ αὐτῷ ἄγγελος κυρίου. There appeared unto him an Angel of the Lord.

IT might be a reaſonable doubt, whether ever there had appeared an Angel in the Temple; even in the firſt, when elſewhere, the appearance of Angels was ſo very familiar; much leſs in the ſecond when every thing of that nature, had ſo perfectly ceaſed, till now that the Goſpel began to dawn and ſhine out.

What we find related a concerning Simeon the Juſt; how for thoſe forty years wherein he had ſerv'd as High-Prieſt, he had ſeen an Angel clothed in white, coming into the Holy place, on the day of expiation, and going out again: only his laſt year he ſaw him come in, but did not ſee him go out again; which gave him to underſtand that he was to dye that year: We may ſuppoſe this invented rather for the honour of the man, than that any ſuch thing happened for the greater ſolemnity of the day. a Ritroſ. Joma, fol. 42. 3.

b It is a tradition. The Table [of the Shew-bread] was on the North-ſide, diſtant from the wall two cubits and an half. The Candleſtick on the South, diſtant fom the wall two cubits and an half. The Altar [of Incenſe] placed in the middle, and drawn out a little toward the Eaſt. b Bab. Joma, fol. 33. 2.

So that the Angel ſtanding on the right ſide of the Altar, ſtood on the North-ſide: on which ſide if there were an entrance into the Holy of holies, as R. Chaninah thinks c, then we may ſuppoſe the Angel by a very ſudden and unexpected appearance came out from the Holy of holies himſelf. c Joma, fol. 59. 1.

VERS.

VERS. XV.

Οἶνον καὶ Σίκερα. Neither Wine nor ſtrong Drink.

THAT is, If the Jews may be our Interpreters properly enough, neither new nor old Wine, Numb. VI. 3, יין ושכר מין Greek, Ἀπ' οἴνου καὶ σίκερος ἁγνισθήσεται, from wine and ſtrong drink. Targum, מחסר חרת ועתיק יור he ſhall ſeparate himſelf fom wine new and old. So Deut. XIV. 26.

[a] Bemidb. rab. fol. 240. 3. a R. Joſe of Galilee ſaith; why doth the Scripture double it יין ושכר Wine and ſtrong drink? For is not wine ſtrong drink, and ſtrong drink wine? שכר is Wine no doubt, Numb. XXVIII. 7. Thou ſhalt cauſe the ſtrong wine to be poured out before the Lord. שכר ליהוה Greek, σίκερος Κυρίῳ. Targum, נסך דחמר עתיק a drink-offering of old wine.

Whiles I a little more narrowly conſider that ſevere interdiction, by which the Nazarite was forbidden, the total uſe of the Vine, not only that he ſhould not drink of the Wine, but not ſo much as taſte of the Grape, not the pulp nor ſtone of the Grape, no not the bark of the Vine: I cannot but call to mind,

[b] Sanhedr. fol. 70. 1. Bemidb. rab. fol. 140. 2. & fol. 238. 4, &c. I. Whether the Vine might not be the Tree in Paradiſe, that had been forbidden to Adam, by the taſting of which he ſinned. The Jewiſh Doctors poſitively affirm this without any ſcruple b.

II. Whether that Law about the Nazarites had not ſome reference to Adam while he was under that prohibition, in the ſtate of innocency. For if the bodily and legal uncleanneſſes, about which there are ſuch ſtrict precepts, Numb. V. eſpecially the Leproſie the greateſt of all uncleanneſſes, did excellently decipher the ſtate and nature of Sin: Might not the Laws about Nazarites which concerned the greateſt purities in a moſt pure Religion, [Lam. IV. 7.] be ſomething in commemoration of the ſtate of man before his fall?

There was, as the Doctors call it, the יין מצוה the wine of command; which they were bound by precept to drink. Such was that wine of the tithes, Deut. XII. 17, 18. that was commanded to be drunk at Jeruſalem; and the Cup of Wine to be drunk at the Paſsover: What muſt the Nazarite do in this caſe? If he drink he violates the command of his order: if he do not drink, he breaks the command about tithes, and the Laws of his Fathers. יתרץ אליהו Let Elias untie this knot when he comes.

VERS. XVII.

Ἐν πνεύματι καὶ δυνάμει Ἠλίου. In the ſpirit and power of Elias.

I. THE Baptiſt is Elias, as our Saviour was David, that is, the Antitype, Malach. IV. 5. Hoſe. III. 5, &c. It is leſs wonder that the Jews, from the words of Malachi, ſhould expect the perſonal coming of Elijah, ſince there are not a few Chriſtians that would be looking for the ſame thing: Although they have an Angel in this place interpreting it otherwiſe, and our bleſſed Saviour elſewhere himſelf, Matth. XI. 14. This is Elias that was for to come. But they miſunderſtood the phraſe of the great and dreadful day of the Lord; as alſo were deceived into the miſtake by the Greek Verſion, that Elias muſt come before the laſt judgment.

II. It is not ſaid by the Prophet Malachy, behold I will ſend you Elijah the Tiſhbite, but Elijah the Prophet; which perhaps might be better rendered, Behold I ſend you a Prophet Elijah. And I may confidently ſay, it would not be ſo wide from the ſenſe and meaning of Malachy, as the Greek Interpreter, who by a prodigious daringneſs, in favour of the Jewiſh traditions have rendered it Ἰδοὺ ἐγὼ ἀποστελῶ ὑμῖν Ἠλίαν τὸν Θεσβίτην· I ſend you Elijah the Tiſhbite.

III. If I miſtake not, Elias the Prophet is but twice mentioned (I mean in thoſe very terms) throughout the whole Book of God: once in this place in Malachy: the other in 2 Chron. XXI. 12. And in both thoſe places, I believe it is not meant Elijah the Tiſhbite in his own perſon, but ſome one in the ſpirit and power of him. That the words in Malachy ſhould be ſo underſtood, both the Angel and our Saviour teach us; and it ſeems very proper to be ſo taken in that place in the Chronicles.

IV. That great prophet that lived in Ahab's days, is called the Tiſhbite throughout the whole Story of him, and not the Prophet. Nor is he called the Prophet, Luke IV. 25. (where yet it is ſaid Elizeus the Prophet:) Nor by St. James, Chap. V. 17. for the very word תשבי Tiſhbi, which is his Epithet, ſufficiently aſſerts his Prophetick Dignity, when it denotes no other than a Converter. Whence can we better derive the Etymology? to which indeed the Prophet Malachy ſeems to have alluded, Behold I ſend you Elijah the Prophet והשיב and he ſhall turn, &c.

V. But

V. But be it ſo that he might be called Tiſhbite from the City Toſhab, as the Targum and other Rabbins would have it (which yet is very far fetcht) that very thing might evince that it is not he himſelf that is meant by Malachy, but ſome other, becauſe he does not mention the Tiſhbite; but a Prophet Elias, that is, a Prophet in the ſpirit of Elias.

So among the Talmudiſts, any one skilled in ſigns and languages is called Mordecai, viz. becauſe he is like him who lived in the days of Ahaſuerus. Menacoth, fol. 64. 2. and the Gloſſe, ibid.

Ἐπιστρέψαι καρδίας πατέρων ἐπὶ τέκνα. To turn the hearts of the Fathers to the Children.

John came ἐν δυνάμει in the power of Elias, not that power by which he wrought miracles; [for John wrought none, Joh. X. 41.] but in the power of Elias turning the hearts of men, &c. Elias turned many of the Children of Iſrael toward the Lord their God, 1 Kings XVIII. So did John, who over and above, turned the hearts of the Fathers toward their Children. Which, what it ſhould mean is ſomething dark and unintelligible. You will hardly allow the Jewiſh gloſs upon this place, who do ſo greatly miſtake about the perſon, and who will allow nothing of good to be done by the Elias they expect, but within the compaſs of Iſrael. But are not the Gentiles to be converted? They in the Prophets dialect are the Children of Zion, of Jeruſalem, of the Jewiſh Church, nothing more frequent. And in this ſenſe are the words of Malachy we are now handling, to be underſtood. Elias the Baptiſt, will turn the hearts of the Jews toward the Gentiles and of the Gentiles toward the Jews. This was indeed the great work of the Goſpel to bring over the Jew and Gentile into mutual embraces through the acknowledgment of Chriſt. Which John moſt happily begun, who came that all men through him might believe, Joh. I. 7. Yea and the Roman Souldiers did believe as well as the Jews, Luke III. 14.

Ἀπειθεῖς ἐν φρονήσει δικαίων. The diſobedient to the wiſdom of the juſt.

The Greek in Malachy hath it, Καρδίαν ἀνθρώπου πρὸς τὸν πλησίον αὐτοῦ, The heart of a man toward his neighbour. The words of the Prophet having been varied, the Angel varies too, but to a more proper ſenſe: For the Gentiles were not to be turned to the Jews, as ſuch, or to the Religion of the Jews, but to God, in the wiſdom of the juſt. The Children to the Fathers. The phraſe Fathers, according to the Jewiſh ſtate at that time was of doubtful ſound, and had ſomething of danger init; for by that word, generally at that time was meant nothing elſe but the Fathers of Traditions, to whom, God forbid any ſhould be turned, to thoſe Fathers in the folly of Traditions, but to God in the wiſdom of the juſt.

VERS. XVIII.

Ἐγὼ γάρ εἰμι πρεσβύτης. For I am an old man.

IF ſo old a man, why then was he not ſequeſtred from the ſervice of the Temple by the Law of Superannuation? Numb. IV. 3. & VIII. 24, 25. Hear what the Rabbins ſay in this caſe.

a "There is ſomething that is lawful in the Prieſts, that is unlawful in the Levites: "and there is ſomething lawful in the Levites, that is unlawful in the Prieſts. The Rab- "bins deliver, that the Prieſts upon any blemiſh are unfit, as for their years they are "not unfit; the Levites for their years may be unfit, but by reaſon of blemiſh are not. "From that which is ſaid, that at the age of fifty years they ſhall ceaſe waiting, we "learn that years may make the Levites unfit. Perhaps the Prieſts alſo are made unfit "through years: And indeed does it not ſeem in equity that if the Levites whom a "blemiſh doth not make unfit, ſhould yet be made unfit by ſuperannuation? ſhould not "much more the Prieſts be made unfit by ſuperannuation, when even a ſpot or blemiſh "will make them unfit? But the Text ſaith, this is the Law of the Levites; not, this "is the Law of the Prieſts. The Rabbins deliver, that what time a Prieſt comes to "maturity, till he grow old he is fit to miniſter: and yet a ſpot or blemiſh makes him "unfit. The Levite from his thirtieth to his fiftieth year, is fit for ſervice; but being "ſuperannuated he becomes unfit. How muſt this be underſtood concerning the Le- "vites? To wit, for that time wherein the Ark was in the Wilderneſs; But at Shiloh, "and in the Temple, they were not rendered unfit, unleſs through the defect of their "voice a.

VERS. XXI.

Ἐθαύμαζον ἐν τῷ χρονίζειν. They wondered that he tarried ſo long.

THere is ſomething told of this kind of Simeon the juſt; concerning whom we have made ſome mention already.

a Hieroſ. Joma, fol. 43. 2.

a "The High-Prieſt made a ſhort prayer in the Holy place. He would not be long "in Prayer, leſt he ſhould occaſion any fear in the people. There is a Story of one "that tarried a long while at it, and the people were ready to have entred in up- "on him. They ſay it was Simeon the juſt. They ſay unto him, why didſt thou tarry "ſo long? He anſwered them, ſaying, I have been praying for the Temple of your God, "that it be not deſtroyed: They anſwered him again, However, it was not well for you "to tarry ſo long.

VERS. XXII.

Ἦν διανεύων. He beckoned unto them.

THere is alſo ἐνένευον, verſ. 62. they made ſigns. חרש רומו ונרמו the deaf and dumb man, διανεύει αὐτοῖς. ἦν ἐνεύων αὐτῷ, he nods to them and they nod to him a. The Talmudiſts diſtinguiſh the judgments given by a dumb man into הרכנת ראש the nodding of the head; and רמיות חרש the dumb mans making ſigns.

a Gittim. cap. cap. 5. Hal. 7.

b Maimon. in Geruſhim, cap. 2.

b If any perſon be dumb, and yet hath his underſtanding, ſhould they ſay to him, may we write a bill of divorce to thy wife, וחרכין בראשו and he nod with his head, they make the experiment upon him three times, &c. And a little after, אין סוכין על רמיות חרש they do not much rely upon the ſigns of the deaf and dumb man. For, as it is in the ſame place, אין רין מי שנשתתק כרין חרש the dumb perſon, and the deaf and dumb differ. Gloſs. The one can hear and not ſpeak, the other can neither hear nor ſpeak.

Amongſt the Doctors the חרש the deaf and dumb perſon, is commonly lookt upon as one made ſo by ſome fit of Palſie or Apoplexy, by which the intellectuals are generally affected; whence the deaf and dumb are, according to the traditional Canons, deprived of ſeveral offices and priviledges, of which others are capable.

This caſe therefore of Zachary might have occaſioned a conſiderable queſtion whether he ought not to have been ſequeſtred from his miniſtry, and deprived of all the priviledges of his Prieſthood, becauſe he had been ſtruck deaf and dumb, but that it happened to him in ſo ſignal and extraordinary a way.

VERS. XXIV.

Περιέκρυβεν ἑαυτὴν μῆνας πέντε. She hid her ſelf five months.

SHE hid her ſelf five Months, ſaying, Thus hath the Lord dealt with me, in the days wherein he looked on me, to take away my reproach among men.

She was big with child, it is plain, becauſe God had looked on her and taken away her reproach among men. She hid her ſelf, becauſe the Lord had dealt ſo with her, till he had taken away her reproach: giving her ſo remarkable a Son, one who was to be ſo ſtrict a Nazarite, and ſo famous a Prophet. Leſt therefore ſhe ſhould any way defile her ſelf by going up and down, and thereby contract any uncleanneſs upon the Nazarite in her womb, ſhe withdraws and ſequeſters her ſelf, from all common converſation. Conſult Judg. XIII. 4.

There were ſeveral amongſt the Jews, that were wont to take upon them the Sect of the Nazarites by their own voluntary vow. [Three hundred at once in the days of Jannæus the King, came together to Simeon ben Shetah. a] But there were but two only ſet apart by divine appointment, Sampſon and the Baptiſt. Whom the ſame divine appointment deſigning to preſerve untoucht from all kind of pollution even in their Mothers Wombs, directed that the Mothers themſelves ſhould keep themſelves as diſtant as might be from all manner of defilement whatſoever. Elizabeth obeys, and for the whole time wherein ſhe bore the Child within her, ſhe hid her ſelf, for her more effectual avoiding all kind of uncleanneſſes; although it is true we have the mention but of five months, by reaſon of the Story of the ſixth month which was to be immediately related, Verſ. 26.

VERS. XXVI.

Ὁ Ἄγγελος Γαβριήλ. The Angel Gabriel.

R. Simeon ben Lachiſh ſaith, a The names of Angels went up by the hand of Iſrael out of Babylon. For before, it is ſaid, Then flew one of the Seraphims unto me; the Seraphims ſtood before him, [Iſai. VI.] but afterward, the man Gabriel, [Dan. IX. 21.] and Michael your Prince, [Dan. X. 21. a Hieroſ. Roſh haſhanah, fol. 56. 4.

The Angel calls Zachary back to Dan. IX. where the prediction concerning the coming of the Meſſiah, was foretold by Gabriel.

VERS. XXIX.

Διεταράχθη, &c. Was troubled, &c.

I. IT was very rare and unuſual for men to ſalute any Women. At leaſt if that be true in Kiddnſhin a. Rabh Judah the Preſident of the Academy of Pombeditha, went to Rabh Nachman Rector of the Academy of Neharde, and after ſome talk amongſt themſelves, ſaith Rabh Nachman, let my Daughter Doneg bring ſome drink, that we may drink together. Saith the other, Samuel ſaith, we muſt not uſe the miniſtry of a Woman: But this is a little Girl, ſaith Nachman. The other anſwers, but Samuel ſaith, we ought not to uſe the miniſtry of any Woman at all. Wilt thou pleaſe ſaith Nachman, to ſalute Lelith my Wife? But ſaith he, Samuel ſaith, the voice of a Woman is filthy nakedneſs. But ſaith Nachman, thou maiſt ſalute her by a meſſenger. To whom the other, Samuel ſaith, they do not ſalute any Woman. Thou maiſt ſalute her, ſaith Nachman, by a proxie, her Husband.. But Samuel ſaith, ſaith he again, they do not ſalute a Woman at all. a Fol. 70. 1.

II. It was ſtill much more rare and unuſual to give ſuch a kind of Salutation as this Χαῖρε κεχαριτωμένη, Hail thou that art highly favoured בת חמורות or אשת חמורות: By which title Gabriel had ſaluted Daniel of old: with this exception, that it was terror enough ſo much as to ſee an Angel.

VERS. XXXII.

Υἱὸς ὑψίστου κληθήσεται. Shall be called the Son of the higheſt.

THAT is, he ſhall be called the Meſſiah: for Meſſiah, and the Son of God, are convertible terms. Whether the Angel expreſt it by בר עליון or בר גבוה is uncertain. It is certain that both theſe words were very much in uſe in that Nation. עליון very commonly in uſe in the Holy Scriptures, גבוה more frequently in Talmudick Authors. As to the former, we may take notice of that paſſage in Roſh Haſhanah a.

The Kingdom of the Greeks made a ſevere decree, that the name of God ſhould not ſo much as be mentioned amongſt the Jews. But when the Kingdom of the Aſmoneans prevailed and overcame them, they decreed, that they ſhould mention the name of God even in their writings of contracts: for ſo they wrote בשנת כו וכך ליוחנן כג לאל עליון In the year N. or N. of Johanan the High-Prieſt of the High God. a Fol. 18. 2.

But גבוה is much more in uſe amongſt the Talmudiſts.

VERS. XXXV.

Πνεῦμα ἅγιον ἐπελεύσεται ἐπὶ σε, &c. The Holy Ghoſt ſhall come upon thee, &c.

I. THIS Verſe is the Angel's gloſs upon that famed Prophecy, Behold a Virgin ſhall conceive and bring forth. The veracity of which, Mary not queſtioning, believing further that ſhe her ſelf was that Virgin deſigned, and yet being utterly ignorant of the manner how ſo great a thing ſhould be brought about, ſhe only asks, How ſhall this be, &c? Doubtleſs ſhe took the Prophecy in its proper ſenſe, as ſpeaking of a Virgin untoucht. She knew nothing then, nor probably any part of the Nation at that time ſo much as once thought of that ſenſe, by which the Jews have now for a great while diſguiſed that place and the word עלמה vity of the Messiah, is not to be as other creatures in the world, but shall be begot without Carnal Copulation, and therefore no one hath mentioned his Father, as who must be hid from the knowledge of men, till himself shall come and reveal him. And upon Genes. Ye have said, saith the Lord, we are Orphans, bereaved of our Father; such an one shall your redeemer be whom I shall give you. So upon Zachary, Behold my servant whose name is of the branch: And out of Psal. CX. Thou art a Priest after the order of Melchizedech: He, saith R. Berachiah, delivers the same things. And R. Simeon Ben Jochai upon Genes. more plainly, viz. That the Spirit, by the impulse of a mighty power, shall come forth of the Womb though shut up, that will become a mighty Prince, the King Messiah. So he.

VERS. XXXVI.

Συνειληφμὰ υἱὸν ἐν γήρᾳ αὐτῆς. Hath also conceived a Son in her old age.

THE Angel teaches to what purpose it was, that Women either barren before, or considerably stricken in years, should be enabled to conceive and bring forth, viz. to make way for the easier belief of the Conception of a Virgin. If they either beside or beyond nature conceive a Child, this may be some ground of belief that a Virgin, contrary to Nature, may do so too. So Abraham by Faith saw Christ's day, as born of a pure Virgin, in the birth of his own Son Isaac of his old and barren Wife Sarah.

VERS. XXXIX.

Ἐπορεύθη εἰς τὴν ὀρεινὴν, &c. She went into the hill Country, &c.

THAT is, to Hebron, Jos. XXI. 11. For though it is true indeed, the Priests after the return from Babylon, were not all disposed and placed in all those very same dwellings they had possest before the Captivity; yet is it probable that Zachary, who was of the seed of Aaron, being here said to dwell in the hill Country of Judah, might have his House in Hebron, which is more peculiarly said to be the City of Aaron's offspring.

VERS. XLI.

Ἐσκίρτησε. The Babe leaped in her Womb.

SO the Seventy, Gen. XXV. 22. Ἐσκίρτων τὰ παιδία ἐν αὐτῇ, The Children leaped in her womb. Psal. CXIV. 4. τὰ ὄρη ἐσκίρτησαν, the Mountains skipped. That which is added by Elizabeth, Vers. 44. Ἐσκίρτησεν ἐν ἀγαλλιάσει· The babe leaped in the womb for joy, signifies the manner of the thing not the cause: q. d. it leaped with vehement exultation. For John while he was an Embryo in the Womb, knew no more what was then done, than Jacob and Esau when they were in Rebecca's Womb, knew what was determined concerning them.

[a] At the Red Sea, even the infants sung in the wombs of their Mothers, as it is said ממקור ישראל Psal. LXVIII. where the Targum to the same sense, Exalt the Lord עבריא במעי אימון ye infants in the bowels of your Mothers, of the seed of Israel. Let them enjoy their Hyperboles.

[a] Hieros. Sotah, fol. 2. 3.

Questionless Elizabeth had learnt from her Husband, that the Child she went with, was designed as the fore-runner of the Messiah, but she did not yet know, of what sort of Woman the Messiah must be born, till this leaping of the infant in her womb became some token to her.

VERS. LIX.

Καὶ ἐκάλουν αὐτό. And they called it, &c.

I. THE Circumciſer ſaid a, Bleſſed be the Lord our God, who hath ſanctified us by his precepts, and hath given us the Law of Circumciſion. The Father of the infant ſaid who hath ſanctified us by his precepts, and hath commanded us to enter the Child into the Covenant of Abraham our Father. But where was Zachary's tongue for this ſervice?

a Schaar. fol. 137. 2.

II. God at the ſame time inſtituted Circumciſion, and changed the names of Abraham and Sarah: hence the cuſtom of giving names to their Children at the time of their Circumciſion.

III. Amongſt the ſeveral accounts why this or that name was given to the Sons, this was one that chiefly obtained, viz. for the honour of ſome perſon whom they eſteemed they gave the Child his name. Which ſeems to have guided them in this caſe here when Zachary himſelf being dumb, could not make his mind known to them. Mahli the Son of Muſhi, hath the name of Mahli given him, who was his Uncle, the Brother of Muſhi his Father, 1 Chron. XXIII. 21, 23.

b R. Nathan ſaid, I once went to the Iſlands of the Sea, and there came to me a Woman, whoſe firſt born had died by Circumciſion, ſo alſo her ſecond Son. She brought the third to me. I bad her wait a little till the blood might aſſwage. She waited a little, and then Circumciſed him, and he lived: They called him therefore by my name נתן בבלי Nathan of Babylon. See alſo Jeruſalem Jevamoth c.

b Cholin. fol. 47. 2.

c Fol. 7. 4.

d There was a certain Family at Jeruſalem, that were wont to die about the eighteenth year of their age: They made the matter known to R. Johanan ben Zacchai, who ſaid, perhaps you are of Elie's Lineage, concerning whom it is ſaid, The increaſe of thine Houſe ſhall die in the flower of their age. Go ye and be diligent in the ſtudy of the Law, and ye ſhall live. They went and gave diligent heed to the Law, and lived. They called themſelves therefore משפחת יוחנן The Family of Johanan, after his name.

d Bab. Jevam. fol. 105. 1.

It is diſputed in the ſame Tract e, whether the Son begot by a Brother's raiſing up ſeed to his Brother, ſhould not be called after the name of him that is deceaſed; for inſtance, if one dies without a Son, and his name be Joſeph, or Johanan, whether the Son that is born to this man's Brother, taking his Brother's Widow to Wife, ſhould not have the name after him that firſt had her, and be called Joſeph, or Johanan. Otherwiſe, indeed it was very ſeldom that the Son bore the name of the Father, as is evident both in the Holy Scriptures, and the Rabinical Writers. It cannot be denied but that ſometimes this was done, but ſo very rarely, that we may eaſily believe the reaſon why the Friends of Zachary would have given the Child his own name, was meerly, either becauſe they could by no means learn, what he himſelf deſigned to call him; or elſe in honour to him, however he lay under that divine ſtroke at preſent, as to be both deaf and dumb.

e Fol. 24. 1.

VERS. LXXVIII.

Ἀνατολὴ ἐξ ὕψους. The day-ſpring from on high.

I Would readily have rendred it the branch from on high, but for what follows, to give light, &c.

I. It is known and obſerved by all that צמח is by the Seventy rendred Ἀνατολή, Jerem. XXIII. 5. Zech. III. 8. & VI. 12. Now every one knows, that צמח ſignifies a branch: And as to the word Ἀνατολὴ.

II. There is Ἀνατολὴ ἄγρου, as well as Ἀνατολὴ ἀγροῦ, Ezek. XVI. 7. Καθὼς ἡ ἀνατολὴ τοῦ ἀγροῦ· As the bud (or ſpring) of the the field, Ibid. cap. XVII. 10. σὺν τοῖς βότρυσι ἀνατολῆς αὐτῆς ξηρανθήσεται· It ſhall wither in the clod where it grows.

And well may Chriſt indeed in this ſenſe be ſaid to be the Ἀνατολὴ ἐξ ὕψους, the branch or ſpring from on high, in oppoſition to that branch from below, by which mankind was undone, viz. the forbidden Tree in Paradiſe.

VERS. LXXX.

Ἐν ταῖς ἐρήμοις. In the deſarts.

WHether John was an Eremite in the ſenſe as it is now commonly taken, we may enquire and judge by theſe two things: I. Whether there was ever any Eremite in this ſenſe among the Jews. II. Whe he abſented himſelf from the Synagogues, from the Feasts at Jerusalem, and to this may be added, whether he retired and withdrew himself from the society of mankind: If he absented from the Synagogues, he must have been accounted שכן רע a wicked neighbour a. If from the Feasts, he transgressed the command, Exod. XXIII. 17. If from the society of mankind; what agreeableness was there in this? It seems very incongruous, that he that was born for this end, to turn the disobedient, &c. should withdraw himself from all society and converse with them. Nothing would perswade me sooner that John was indeed an anchoret, than that which he himself saith, that he did not know Jesus, Joh. I. 31. whereas he was so very near akin to him. One might think, surely he must have layen hid in some Den or Cave of the Earth, when for the space of almost thirty years wherein he had lived, he had had no society with Jesus, so near a kinsman of his, nay not so much as in the least to know him. But if this were so, how came he to know, and so humbly refuse him when he offered himself to be baptized by him? Matth. III. 14. And this, before he was instructed who he was by the descent of the Holy Ghost upon him, Joh. I. 33.

a Maimon. Tephil. cap. 8.

From this question may arise two more.

I. Whether John appeared or acted under the notion of a Prophet, before his entrance into the thirteenth year of his age? I am apt to think he did not, and hence I suppose it is said concerning him, that he was in the deserts, that is, he was amongst the Rusticks and common rank of Men, as a Man of no note or quality himself, till he made himself publick under the notion and authority of a Prophet.

II. Whether he might not well know his Kinsman Jesus in all this time, and admire his incomparable sanctity, and yet be ignorant that he was the Messiah? Yea and when he modestly repulsed him from his Baptism, was it, that he acknowledged him for the Messiah? (which agrees not with Joh. I. 33.) or, not rather, that by reason of his admirable holiness, he saw that he was above him?

Ἕως ἡμέρας ἀναδείξεως. Till the day of his shewing unto Israel.

John was unquestionably כהן מיוחס a Priest by birth, and being arrived at the thirtieth year of his age, according to the custom of that Nation, he was after examination of the great Council, to have been admitted into the Priestly Office, but that God had commissioned him another way.

b Middoth, cap. 5. hal. 4.

b In the room Gazith the great Council of Israel sate, and judged concerning the Priesthood. The Priest in whom any blemish was found, being cloathed, and veiled in black, went out and was dismist: but if he had no blemish, he was cloathed and veiled in white, and going in ministred and gave his attendance with the rest of the Priests his Brethren. And they made a gawdy day, when there were no blemish found in the Seed of Aaron the Priest.

CHAP. II.

VERS. I.

Παρὰ Καίσαρος Αὐγούστου. From Cæsar Augustus.

THE New Testament mentions nothing of the Roman Government, but as now reduced under a Monarchical form. When that head which had been mortally wounded, in the expulsion of the Tarquins, was healed and restored again in the Cesars, Rev. XIII 3. All the world wondered, saith St. John, and well they might, to see Monarchy, that had for so many hundred years been antiquated and quite dead, should now flourish again more vigorously and splendidly than ever.

But whence the Epocha or beginning of this Government should take its date is something difficult to determine. The foundations of it, as they were laid by Julius Cesar, so did they seem overturned, and erased again in the death he met with in the Senate-house, It was again restored, and indeed perfected by Augustus; but to what year of Augustus should we reckon it? I would lay it in his one and thirtieth, the very year wherein our Saviour was born. Of this year Dion Cassius lib. 55. speaks thus.

Πληρωθείσης δὴ οἱ ἤδη τῆς τείτης δεκαετίας, τὴν ἡγεμονίαν τὸ τέταρτον ἐκδιαδεὶς δὶς τὸν ἐπτὰ ἄρξατο· The third decennium (or term of ten years) having now run out, and a fourth beginning ning, he being forced to it, undertook the Government. Obſerve the force of the word ἀναγκασθείς. Then was Auguſtus conſtrained, or compelled to take the Empire upon him. The Senate, the people, and as it ſhould ſeem, the whole Republick, with one conſent, ſubmitting themſelves entirely to a Monarchical form of Government, did even conſtrain the Emperour Auguſtus (who for ſome time ſtiffly refuſed it) to take the reins into his hands.

I am not ignorant that the computation of Auguſtus his Reign, might reaſonably enough commence from his Battel and victory at Actium; nor do the Gemariſts count amiſs, when they tell us that the Roman Empire took its beginning in the days of Cleopatra. [a] And you may if you pleaſe call that a Monarchical Government, in oppoſition to the Triumvirate, which at that battel breathed its laſt. But that certainly, was the pure and abſolute Monarchy, which the Senate and the Common-wealth did agree and conſent together to ſet up.

[a] Avodah. Zaah, fol. 8. 2.

Ἀπογράφεσθαι. Should be taxed.

The Vulgar, and other Latin Copies read, ut deſcriberetur, ſhould be deſcribed, which, according to the letter might be underſtood of the ſetting out the whole bounds of the Empire, according to its various and diſtinct Provinces. Only that Æthicus tells us this had been done before; whoſe words ſince they concern ſo great and noble a Monument of antiquity, may not prove tedious to the Reader, to be tranſcribed in this place.

Julius Cæſar Biſſextilis rationis inventor, &c. Julius Ceſar the firſt inventer of the Biſſextile account, a man ſingularly inſtructed in all divine and humane affairs, in the time of his Conſul-ſhip, by a decree of the Senate procured that the whole Roman juriſdiction, ſhould be meaſured out, by men of greateſt skill, and moſt ſeen in all the attainments of Philoſophy. So that Julius Ceſar, and M. Antony being Conſuls, the world began to be meaſured.

That is, from the Conſulſhip of Ceſar above mentioned, to the Conſulſhip of Auguſtus the third time, and Craſſus; the ſpace of One and twenty years, five months, and eight days, all the Eaſt was ſurveighed by Zenodoxus.

From the Conſulſhip likewiſe of Julius Ceſar and M. Antony, to the Conſulſhip of Saturnius and Cinna, the ſpace of two and thirty years, one month, and ten days, the South was meaſured out by Polyclitus; ſo that in two and thirty years time, the whole world was ſurveighed, and a report of it given in unto the Senate.

Thus he: Though ſomething obſcurely in the accounts of the Conſuls; as alſo in his ſilence about the Weſt; which things I muſt not ſtand to enquire into at this time. This only we may obſerve, that Julius Ceſar was Conſul with Antony A. U. C. 710. And that the ſurveigh of the Roman Empire being two and thirty years in finiſhing, ended A. V. C. 742. that is, twelve years before the Nativity of our Saviour.

Let us in the mean time gueſs what courſe was taken in this ſurveigh: I. It is very probable, they drew out ſome Geographical Tables, wherein all the Countries were delineated, and laid down before them in one view. II. That theſe Tables or Maps were illuſtrated by Commentaries, in which were ſet down the deſcription of the Countries, the names of places, the account of diſtances, and whatever might be neceſſary to a compleat knowlede of the whole bounds of that Empire. That ſome ſuch thing was done by Auguſtus his own hand ſo far as concerned Italy, ſeems hinted by a paſſage in Pliny b, Quâ in re præfari neceſſarium eſt Authorem nos Divum Auguſtum ſecuturos, deſcriptionemq; ab eo factam, Italiæ totius in regiones XI. In which thing, we muſt tell before hand, that we intend to follow Auguſtus, and the deſcription he made of all Italy, dividing it into XI Countries.

[b] Lib. 3. cap. 5.

And now, after this Surveigh of Lands and Regions, what could be wanting, to the full knowledge of the Empire, but a ſtrict account of the people, their Patrimony and Eſtates? and this was Auguſtus his care to do.

c Recepit & morum legumque regimen æque perpetuum. &c. He took upon him the Government both of their manners and Laws, and both perpetual. By which right, though without the title of Cenſor, he laid a tax upon the people three times. The firſt and third with his Collegue, the ſecond alone. The firſt, with his Collegue, M. Agrippa. The third, with his Collegue Tiberius. The ſecond, by himſelf alone: and this was the Tax, our Evangeliſt makes mention of, in this place.

[c] Sutton. In Octaviano. cap. 27.

VERS.

VERS. II.

Αὕτη ἡ ἀπογραφὴ πρώτη ἐγένετο, &c. This taxing was first made, &c.

NOT the first taxing under Augustus, but the first that was made under Cyrenius. For there was another taxing under him, upon the occasion of which the Sedition was raised by Judas the Gaulonite. Of this Tax of ours Dion Cassius seems to make mention, the times agreeing well enough, though the agreement in other things is more hardly reducible.

a Lib. 55. a Αὐτὸς δὲ ἀπογραφὰς πρῶτ ἐν τῇ Ἰταλίᾳ κατοικούντων, &c. He began a tax upon those that dwelt in Italy, and were worth two hundred Sesterces: sparing the poorer sort, and those that lived beyond the Countries of Italy, to avoid tumults.

If those that lived out of Italy were not taxed, how does this agree, with the Tax our Evangelist speaks of? unless you will distinguish. In one sense, they were not taxed, that is, as to their Estates, they were not to pay any thing: but in another sense they were; that is, as to taking account of their names, that they might swear their allegeance, and subjection to the Roman Empire. As to this, let the more learned judge.

VERS. IV.

Διὰ τὸ εἶναι αὐτὸν ἐξ οἴκου καὶ πατριᾶς Δαβίδ. Because he was of the House and Lineage of David.

WE read in the Evangelists of two Families that were of the Stock and Line of David; and the Talmudick Authors mention a third. The Family of Jacob the Father of Joseph, the Family of Eli the Father of Mary, and the Family of Hillel, the President of the Sanhedrin, והיה מזרע דוד מן שפטיה בן אביטל who was of the seed of David, of Shephatiah the Son Abital a.

a Jchas. fol. 19. 2.

I do not say that all these met at this time in Bethlehem. It is indeed remark't of Joseph that he was of the House of David; partly because he was to be the reputed (though he was not the real) Father of Christ; and partly also, that the occasion might be related, that brought Mary to Bethlehem, where the Messiah was to be born. But it may be considered, whether Cyrenius being now to take an estimate of the people, might not on purpose and out of policy summon together all that were of David's Stock, from whence he might have heard the Jews Messiah was to spring, to judge whether some danger might not arise from thence.

VERS. VII.

Οὐκ ἦν αὐτοῖς τόπος ἐν τῷ καταλύματι. There was no room for them in the Inn.

FRom hence it appears that neither Joseph nor his Father Jacob had any House of their own here, no nor Eli neither, wherein to entertain his Daughter Mary ready to lye-in. And yet we find, that two years after the birth of Christ, Joseph and Mary his Wife lived there in an hired House, till they fled into Egypt.

a Midrasch. Echah. fol. 48. 3. a A certain Arabian said to a certain Jew, the Redeemer of the Jews is born; saith the Jew to him; what is his name? Menahem, saith the other. And what the name of his Father? Hezekiah. But where dwell they? בבירת ערבא ברביתלחם יהודה In Birath Arba in Bethlehem Judah. He shall deserve many thanks, that will but tell us what this Birath Arba is. The Gloss tells us, no other than that this Birath Arba was a place in Bethlehem, which any one knows from the words themselves. But what, or what kind of place was it? בירה Birah indeed is a Palace, or Castle; but what should ערבא Arba be? A man had better hold his tongue than conjecture vainly and to no purpose; otherwise, I might quote that in Sotah b, ערבא וערבא דערבא which speaks concerning a promise, or a surety for the performance of the Law. But I forbear.

VERS. VIII.

Καὶ ποιμένες ἦσαν — ἀγραυλοῦντες, &c. And there were Shepherds — keeping watch over their flock, &c.

a Schabb. fol. 45. 2. & Betzah. fol. 40. 1. אילו תן מדבריות These are the sheep of the wilderness; viz. those which go out to pasture, about the time of the Passover and are fed in the fields, וננסוכות ברביעה ראשונה and return home upon the first rain.

b Which

b Which is the firſt rain? It begins on the third of the month Marheſhvan. The middle rain is on the ſeventh: The laſt is the ſeventeenth. So R. Meir. But R. Judah ſaith, on the ſeventh, ſeventeenth, and one and twentieth. b Nedarim, fol. 63. 1. & Taanith, fol. 6. 1.

The Spring coming on, they drove their Beaſts into Wilderneſſes, or champagne grounds, where they fed them the whole Summer, keeping watch over them night and day, that they might not be empaired, either by Thieves or ravenous Beaſts. They had for this purpoſe מגדל נוצרים their Tower to watch in, or elſe צריפין certain ſmall Cottages erected for this very end, as we have obſerved elſewhere. Now in the month Marheſhvan, which is part of our October, and part of November; the Winter coming on, they betook themſelves home again with the Flocks and the Herds.

VERS. XIII.

Πλῆθος στρατιᾶς οὐρανίου αἰνούντων. A multitude of the heavenly hoſt praiſing God.

THE Targumiſt upon Ezek. I. 24. משריתא מלאכי מרומא An hoſt of Angels from above. So in 1 Kings XIX. 11, 12. משריתא מלאכי רוחא An hoſt of the Angels of the wind. An hoſt of the Angels of commotion. An hoſt of the Angels of fire: And after the hoſt of the Angels of fire, קל חמשבחין בחשו the voice of the ſilent Singers.

VERS. XIV.

Δόξα ἐν ὑψίστοις Θεῷ, &c. Glory to God in the higheſt.

WE may very well underſtand this Angelick Hymn, if εὐδοκία ἐν ἀνθρώποις, good will toward men, be taken for the ſubject, and the reſt of the words, for the predicate. The good will of God toward men, is glory to God in the higheſt, and peace on Earth. Καὶ, And, is put between Δόξα and Εἰρήνη, Glory and Peace, not between them and εὐδοκία, good will.

But now this εὐδοκία, or good will of God toward men, being ſo wonderfully made known in the birth of the Meſſiah, how highly it conduced to the glory of God, would be needleſs to ſhew: and how it introduced peace on the Earth, the Apoſtle himſelf ſhews from the effect, Epheſ. II. 14. Coloſſ. I. 20. and ſeveral other places.

VERS. XXI.

Καὶ ὅτε ἐπλήσθησαν ἡμέραι ὀκτὼ τοῦ περιτεμεῖν, &c. And when eight days were accompliſhed, for the Circumciſion of the Child.

THE diſciples of R. Simeon ben Jochai asked him, why the Law ordained Circumciſion on the eighth day? To wit, leſt while all others were rejoycing, the Parents of the Infant ſhould be ſad. The Circumciſion therefore is deferred, till the Woman in Child-bed hath got over her uncleanneſs. For as it is expreſt a little before, The Woman that brings forth a man-child, is prohibited her Husband the ſpace of ſeven days; but on the ſeventh day, at the coming in of the evening, which begins the eighth day, טובלת ומותרת לבעלה ſhe waſheth her ſelf, and is allowed to go in unto her Husband. If ſhe came nigh him within the ſeven days ſhe made him unclean. On the eighth day therefore, Joſeph addreſſeth himſelf to make proviſion for his Wife, and to take care about the Circumciſion of the Child. a Peſikta, fol. 16. 3.

VERS. XXII.

Ὅτε ἐπλήσθησαν αἱ ἡμέραι τοῦ καθαρισμοῦ, &c. When the days of her purification was accompliſhed, &c.

R. Aſai ſaith, כל שאמו טמאה לידה The Child whoſe Mother is unclean by Child-bearing, is Circumciſed the eighth day; but he whoſe Mother is not unclean by Child-bearing is not circumciſed the eighth day. a Schabb. fol. 135. 1.

You will ask probably what Mother that is, that is not unclean by Child-bearing. Let the Gloſs upon this place make the Anſwer. She whoſe Child is cut out of her womb. As alſo a Gentile Woman, who is brought to bed to day, and the next day becomes a Proſelyte; her Child is not deferred till the eighth day, but is Circumciſed ſtreight-way. And the Rabbins a little after: One takes an handmaid big with child, and while ſhe is with him, brings forth: her Child is Circumciſed the eighth day. But if he takes a ſerving-maid, and with her a child newly born, that Child is Circumciſed the firſt day.

They

They did not account an Heathen Woman unclean by Child-bearing, becauſe ſhe was not yet under the Law that concerned uncleanneſs. Hence on the other ſide, Mary was unclean at her bearing a Child, becauſe ſhe was under the Law: So Chriſt was Circumciſed becauſe born under the Law.

II. After ſeven days the Woman muſt continue for three and thirty days ברמי טהרה in the blood of her purifying, Levit. XII. 4. where the Greek ἐν αἵματι ἀκαθαρσίᾳ αὐτῆς; in her unclean blood; far enough from the mind of Moſes. And the Alexandrian M.S. much wider ſtill: Τεσσαρακοντα ἡμέρας καὶ δέκα καθίσει ἐν ἱματίῳ ἀκαθαρσίᾳ· She ſhall ſit thirty and ten days in an unclean garment.

Peſikta as before Col. 4. It is written ברמי טהרה In the blood of her purifying. אפילו שופעת דם כנהר טהורה Though ſhe iſſue blood like a ſtond, yet is ſhe clean. Nor doth ſhe defile any thing by touching it, but what is Holy. For ſeven days immediately after ſhe is brought to bed, ſhe lies ברמי טומאתה in the blood of her uncleanneſs; but the three and thirty days following, ברמי טהרה in the blood of her purifying.

Παραστῆσαι τῷ Κυρίῳ. To preſent him to the Lord.

I. This was done to the firſt-born; but not to the Children, that were born afterward; nor was this done to the firſt-born, unleſs בכור לכהן the firſt-born were fit for the Prieſt. For in Becoroth a, they diſtinguiſh betwixt בכור לנחלה a firſt-born fit for inheritance, and בכור לכהן a firſt-born fit for the Prieſt. That is, if the firſt-born ſhould be any ways maimed, or defective in any of his parts, or had any kind of ſpot or blemiſh in him, this laid no bar for his inheriting, and yet made him unfit and uncapable of being conſecrated to God.

a Cap. 8. hal. 1.

II. The firſtborn was to be redeemed immediately after the thirtieth day from his birth. b Every one is bound to redeem his firſt-born with five ſhekels, after he is thirty days old, as it is ſaid, from a month old ſhalt thou redeem, Numb. XVIII. 16. Not that the price of that redemption was always paid exactly upon the thirtieth day, but that then exactly it became due. Hence in that Treatiſe newly quoted, c If the Child die within the thirty days, and the Father hath paid the price of his redemption before-hand, the Prieſt muſt reſtore it: but if he die after the thirty days are paſt, and the Father hath not paid the price of his redemption, let him pay it. Where we find the price of redemption ſuppoſed as paid either before or after the thirty days.

c Fol. 49. 1.

III. The Women that were to be purified were placed in the Eaſt-gate of the Court, called Nicanor's Gate, and were ſprinkled with blood d.

d Tamid cap. 5. hal. 6.

There ſtood Mary for her purifying: and there probably Chriſt was placed, that he might be preſented before the Lord, preſented to the Prieſt.

VERS. XXIV.

Ζεῦγος τρυγόνων, &c. A pair of Turtle Doves, &c.

I. a תורים גדולים The Turtles were older, and of a larger ſize: Pigeons, leſs, and younger. For it is ſaid of Pigeons, two young Pigeons, but not ſo of Turtles.

a Cholin. fol. 22. 2.

This was called קרבן עני the offering of the poor; which if a rich man offered, לא יצא he did not do his duty. And when the Doctors ſpeak ſo often of קרבן עולה ויורד an offering riſing or falling, it hath reſpect to this. For the offering of the richer ſort was a Lamb; but if his hand could not reach to a Lamb, then he offered a pair of Turtles, or Pigeons. ואם דל הוא But if he was poor, he offered the tenth part of an Ephah, therefore is the oblation ſaid to be riſing or falling b.

b Peſikta, fol. fol. 7. 4.

c Idem. fol. 3. 4.

c King Agrippa came one day to offer a thouſand burnt offerings, but a certain poor man prevented him with two Turtle Doves. So alſo, when one would have offered a Bullock, there was a poor man prevented him with an handful of Herbs. We have the ſtory at large in Vajicra rabb. d.

d Fol. 108. 2.

II. Of the two Turtle Doves, or young Pigeons, one was to be offered as a burnt-offering, the other as a ſin-offering. But as to the particular appointment of the one for the burnt-offering, the other for the ſin-offering, that is which ſhould be which, it is diſputed among the Doctors, whether it lay in the breaſt of him or her that offered it or the Prieſts to determine it e.

e Joma, fol. 4. 1.

By the way we may obſerve, that the bleſſed Virgin offers a ſin-offering for her ſelf. Now, what the meaning and deſign of a ſin-offering was, is evident from Levit. IV. & V.

VERS. XXV.

Συμέων. ὁ Ἄνθρωπος δίκαιος καὶ εὐλαβής. Simeon. The same man was just and devout.

I. SImeon the just, שמעון הצדיק of whom the Jewish Histories tell so many and great things, hath nothing to do here. For as it is certain that Simeon died long before: So as it very uncertain whether he deserved the title of just so well as our Simeon did. a Δίκαιος ἐπικληθεὶς διὰ τε τὸ περὶ Θεὸν εὐσεβὲς, καὶ τὸ περὶ τὰς ὁμοφύλους εὔνουν· He was called just both for his Piety toward God, and his Charity toward his Countrymen. Grant he was so, yet is it a far greater testimony that is given of our Simeon.

a Joseph. Antiq. lib. 12. cap. 2.

II. Rabban Simeon, the Son of Hillel, was alive, and at Jerusalem, in those very times wherein our Evangelist wrote, his Father Hillel also, still living: whom the Son succeeded, upon the decease of the Father, as President of the Council. But as to him, there is nothing famous concerning him, amongst Jewish Authors, but his bare name. b Rabban Simeon the Son of old Hillel, a Prince of Israel, as his Father had been. As you may see in cap. 1. Schabb. לא נזכר במשנה There is no mention of him in Mishneh. He was therefore no Father of Traditions, neither were there any things recited from him in the Mishneh, Which indeed was very extraordinary: but how it should come to pass I cannot tell. Whether he had a sounder apprehension of things, or was not well seen in Traditions, or was this very Simeon, the Evangelist mentions, and so looked higher than the mere Traditions of men. This is all the hindrance, that Rabban Simeon lived a great while after the birth of our Saviour, and had a Son Gamaliel, whom he bred up a Pharisee.

b Juchas. fol. 66. 2.

Προσδεκόμενος παράκλησιν τοῦ Ἰσραὴλ. Waiting for the consolation of Israel.

That is, believing the consolation of Israel was nigh at hand. The whole Nation waited for the consolation of Israel, insomuch that there was nothing more common with them than to swear by the desire they had of seeing it.

c R. Judah ben Tabbai said, אראה בנחמה So let me see the consolation [of Israel] if I have not put to death a false witness. Simeon ben Shetah saith to him, so let me see the consolation, if thou hast not shed innocent blood.

VERS. XXV.

Καὶ σοῦ δὲ αὐτῆς τὴν ψυχὴν, &c. Yea and a sword shall pierce through thine own soul also.

THY soul, i. e. thy life. It is a prediction, that the Blessed Virgin should suffer Martyrdom. This Child of thine shall be set for a sign which shall be spoken against, neither shalt thou escape in the contradiction that shall be given him, for thou shalt dye by the sword. Epiphanius gives some countenance to this exposition.

a Ἤτοι ἀπέθανεν ἡ ἁγία Παρθένος, &c. Whether the Holy Virgin died and was buried, her death was crowned with infinite honour, she made a most chaste end, and the crown of her virginity was given her: ἤτοι ἀνῃρέθη, καθὼς γέγραπται, καὶ τὴν ψυχὴν αὐτῆς διελεύσεται ῥομφαία, or whether she was put to death, (as it is written, a sword shall pass through thine own soul) she is possest of glory and a crown amongst the Martyrs.

VERS. XXXVI.

Ἄννα προφῆτις θυγάτηρ Φανουὴλ ἐκ φυλῆς Ἀσήρ. Anna a Propheteſs, the Daughter of Phanuel of the Tribe of Aser.

THere were therefore Prophets at this time among the people. It is not to be denied that at this time there were; that is, when the morning of the Gospel began to dawn; but for four hundred years past, there had been one that had deserved that name, however the Jews vainly enough had honoured the memories of some with that title; which we shall not meddle with at this present. But was this Anna accounted a Propheteſs by the Jews? if so, whence that Proverbial expression out of Galilee ariseth no

Prophet, Joh. VII. 52. She was certainly a Galilean, and for that very reason probably, it is here remark't, that she was of the Tribe of Aser.

What think we of that passage in Vajierah rabba, fol. 174. 4. and Bemidbar rabb. fol. 250. 4. נתון בצפון יבא ויבנה את בה שהוא מלך המשיח שהוא נתון בדרום The King Messiah, who is placed on the North, shall come and build the House of the Sanctuary, which is placed on the South. Doth not this savour something of Christ's coming out of Galilee?

VERS. XXXVII.

Οὐκ ἀφίστατο ἀπὸ τοῦ Ἱεροῦ. Departed not from the Temple.

I. IT may be doubted whether any Women ever discharged any office in the Temple: Some think they did. But that which they alledge out of 1 Sam. II. 22. concerning the Women that assembled at the door of the Tabernacle of the Congregation, is quite another thing from any publick ministring, if we will admit the Targumist and the Rabbins for Expositors. So Exod. XXVIII. 8. נשים הצובאות Women assembling by troops at the door of the Tabernacle of the Congregation. The Targumists both here and in the place newly quoted have it, נמיא דאתין לצלאה Women that came to pray. The Greek Interpreters read it צבאות for צובאות for they render it Νηστευουσῶν αἳ ἐνήστευσαν. And by the same boldness or blindness, wholly left out that clause 1 Sam. II. 22. And how they lay with the Women that assembled at the door of the Tabernacle of the Congregation.

It is apparent that Women were wont to come from other parts to the Tabernacle for devotion's sake, not to perform any ministry. So this Anna, by birth of the Tribe of Aser, had changed her native soil, and fixt her abode at Jerusalem, partly, for devotion, that she might be the more at leisure for praying in the Temple, and partly as a Propheteſs, that she might utter her Propheſies in the great Metropolis.

II. She departed not from the Temple, that is, not in the stated times of Prayer: according as it is commanded Aaron and his Sons, Levit. X. 7. Ye shall not go out from the door of the Tabernacle. Where Siphra, fol. 24. 2. לא בשעת עבודה not in the time of their ministry.

VERS. XLII.

Καὶ ὅτε ἐγένετο ἐτῶν δώδεκα. And when he was twelve years old.

a Chetubb. fol. 50. a LET a man deal gently with his Son, till he come to be twelve years old מנאן ואילך יורך עמו לחיו but from that time, let him descend with him into his way of living. That is, let him diligently, and with severity (if need be) keep him close to that way, rule, or art, by which he may get his living.

b Joma, fol. 82. 1. b At twelve years old they were wont to inure Children to fasting, מעת לעת from time to time, or משעה לשעה from hour to hour, that they might be accustomed to it, and so be capable of fasting upon the day of attonement.

Christ being now twelve years old יורך לחיו applies himself to his proper work, ἐν τοῖς τοῦ πατρὸς εἶναι, to be about his Fathers business.

c Ignat. Mart. Epist. ad Magnes. c Σολομὼν δωδεκαετὴς κρίσιν ὅτι ταῖς γυναιξὶν ἐποιήσατο· Solomon when twelve years old, judged between the two Women.

d Shemoth rabb. d R. Chama saith, that Moses when he was twelve years old, was taken from his Fathers House.

VERS. XLIII.

Καὶ τελειωσάντων τὰς ἡμέρας. And when they had fulfilled the days.

HEre ariseth a question, whether it was lawful to depart from Jerusalem, before the seven days were ended. If not, why did Peter and Cleophas go away on the third day? if they might, how then is that precept to be understood, about eating the unleavened bread throughout the whole seven days.

I. It is controverted amongst the Doctors about that passage, Deut. XVI. 6, 7. thou shalt sacrifice the Passover at the even, at the going down of the Son, —and thou shalt turn in the morning, and go into thy tents. Whether it be lawful, after they had eaten the Lamb, to go every one to his own House. This is denied, and that not without reason. For as it is in the Glos a, On the day of the Feast (that is, the first day of the seven) the sabbatical limits forbad it. For on the Feast day, no man ought to exceed the bounds of a Sabbath days journey. That therefore (say they) that is said, thou shalt go into into thy tents, is to be thus understood, thou shalt go into thy tents that are without the walls of Jerusalem; but, by no means, into thine own house.

II. Was it lawful then, to return home on the second day of the Feast? No it was not. For on that day was the general appearance in the Court, and presentment of their offerings. And this seems hinted by R. Elhanani in another Gloss upon the place newly cited. There were two reasons (saith he) of their lodging in Jerusalem, the one because of the Feast day, the other because of the קרבן or Offering.

III. It was not unlawful to depart on the third day, if necessity of affairs required it. But as in many other cases the Doctors were wont to speak, so might it be said in this יתך משובח it was much more commendable for them to abide in Jerusalem, till all the seven days were ended; and that especially because of the last day, which was a Festival or Holy-day.

b R. Jose the Galilean saith, שלוש מצוות נוהגות ברגל There are three things commanded to be done in the Feast: 1. חגיגה The Chagigah. 2. ראיה The appearance in the Court. 3. שמחה The rejoycing. The Chagigah, or the Peace-offerings were on the first day: The appearance in the Court, was on the second day: The rejoycing might be on any day. b Pesikta, fol. 75. 3.

IV. In Moed Katon, a Treatise that discourseth on things lawful, or not lawful to be done in the intermedials of the Feast, or in those days of the Feast that were not kept holy; in the very entrance of that Discourse, there are several things allowed, which plainly argue absence and distance from Jerusalem.

As to eating unleavened bread, the precept indeed was indispensible, neither that any thing leavened should be eaten, nor that any leaven should be found in their Houses, for seven days together; but no one would say that this command was restrained only to Jerusalem. It is said in Jerusalem Kiddushin, פסחן של נשים רשות c The Womens Passover is arbitrary. That is, the Womens appearance at Jerusalem at the Passover was at pleasure. But let them not say that eating unleavened bread was arbitrary, or at the Womens pleasure: for although they sate at home, and did not go to Jerusalem to the Passover, yet did they abstain from leven in their own Houses. מצה נאכלה בכל מושב The unleavened bread was eaten in every house. c Fol. 61. 3. d Hitrof. Megillah, fol. 74. 3

VI. It seems from the very phraseology τελειωσάντων τὰς ἡμέρας, that Joseph and Mary continued at Jerusalem all the seven days; which was indeed generally done by others, for devotion's sake. And then think what numerous companies of people must be going away to this or that Country, yea particularly how great a crowd might be journeying together with Joseph and Mary toward Galilee. So that it may be less strange, if Jesus had not been within his Parents sight, though he had been among the crowd; nor that though they did not see him, yet that they should not suspect his absence.

VERS. XLIV.

Ἦλθον ἡμέρας ὁδόν. They went a days journey.

THE first ordinary days journey from Jerusalem toward Galilee, was to Neapolis, of old called Sichem, distant thirty miles. But was this the days journey that Joseph and the company that travailed along with him, made at this time? The place where Christ was first mist by his Parents, is commonly shewed at this day to Travailers, much nearer Jerusalem, by the name of Beere, but ten miles from that City. You may believe those that shew it, as you think fit.

VERS. XLVI.

I. שבתי דינין שם a There are three Courts of Judicature in the Temple: one in the gate of the Court of the Gentiles; another in the gate of the Court of Israel; a third in the room Gazith. a Sanhedr cap. 11. hal. 2.

There was also a Synagogue in the Temple, which must be observed. b The High-Priest came to read (those places which were to be read on the day of attonement.) The Chazan of the Synagogue, takes the Book and gives it to the Ruler of the Synagogue, the Ruler to the Sagan, the Sagan to the High-Priest, &c. Where the gloss. There was a Synagogue near the Court, in the Mountain of the Temple. b Joma, fol. 68. 2.

In which of these places Christ was found sitting amongst the Doctors, let those tell us, that undertake to shew the place where his Parents first missed him.

II. It is not easie to say what place he could be admitted to, amongst the Doctors, especially when that custom obtained, which is mentioned: c The Rabbins have a Tradition, c Megillah, fol. 21. 1.

tion, that from the days of Moſes, to Rabban Gamaliels, they were inſtructed in the Law, ſtanding. But when Rabban Gamaliel dyed, the world languiſht, ſo that they learnt the Law, ſitting. d Whence alſo that tradition, that ſince the death of Rabban Gamaliel, the glory of the Law was eclipſed.

f Ibid. fol. 27. 2.

Whether on the naked floor might be a queſtion, if there were place for it, but we let that paſs at this preſent. For this cuſtom of ſitting prevailed after the death of Gamaliel, who took the Chair many years after this, that we are now upon. The great Hillel poſſeſt the Seat at this time, or if he was newly dead, his Son Simeon ſucceeded him; ſo that it was the Diſciples part in this age to ſtand, not to ſit in the preſence of their Doctors. How therefore ſhould it be ſaid of Chriſt, that he was ſitting among the Doctors? let the following clauſe ſolve the difficulty.

Καὶ ἐπερωτῶντα αὐτὸς. And asking them queſtions.

It was both lawful and cuſtomary for the Diſciples, or any that were preſent, publickly to enquire either of the Doctor that was then reading, or indeed the whole conſiſtory, about any doubtful matter, wherein he was not well ſatisfied. Take but two ſtories out of many others, that may illuſtrate this matter.

g R. Judah ordained R. Levi ben Suſi, for a Doctor to the Simonians. They made him a great chair, and placed him in it. Then propounded queſtions to him [occaſioned from Deut. XXV. 9.] גרמת ובמה היאך חולצת if the Brothers Wife ſhould have her hands cut off, how ſhould ſhe looſe the ſhooe of her Husbands Brother? רקקה דם מהו If ſhe ſhould ſpit blood what then? Moſt profound queſtions certainly! ſuch as require a moſt cunning ſophiſter to unriddle them.

The Diſciple ſtood forth, and askt Rabban Gamaliel* [then Preſident of the Sanhedrin] of what kind is Evening Prayer? He anſwers, חובה *It is a thing of duty. But behold, ſaith the other, R. h Hieroſ. Taanith, fol. 67. 4.

i In Bab. Beracoth, fol. 27. 2.

This we tranſcribed the larglier, not only for proof of what we ſaid, of the Diſciples asking the Doctors Queſtions in the Court, but that the Reader might have a little ſight of the manner of that Court, and how there were many, not only of the Diſciples of the wiſe, but others too that flockt thither.

II. We may further add: k In a City where there are not two great wiſe men, one fit to teach and inſtruct in the whole Law, the other whoknows how to hear, and ask, and anſwer, they do not conſtitute a Sanhedrin, although there were a thouſand Iſraelites there, &c. l In a City, where there are not two that may ſpeak, and one that may hear, they do not conſtitute a Sanhedrin. Akibah, and Simeon the Temanite. דן לפניהם בקרקע He judged before them, ſitting on the ground. By him who hears, they mean one skillful in the Traditions, that can propound queſtions, and anſwer every queſtion propounded. Such an one was Simeon the Temanite, who though he was a man of that learning, yet not being promoted to become one of the Elders, he ſate upon the ground; that is, not on any of the benches of the Fathers of of the Sanhedrin; but בספסלים on one of the ſeats that were near the ground; for they ſpeak theſe things, as done in the times after the death of Gamaliel. There is nothing abſurd therefore in it, if we ſhould ſuppoſe Chriſt gotten into the very Sanhedrin it ſelf: Thither Joſeph and his Mother might come, and ſeeking him might find him on the benches of the Fathers of the Council for that time, they having found him ſo capable both to propound queſtions and anſwer them. For it is plain they did admit of others, for other reaſons, to ſit ſometimes in their ſeats [m]. And it is leſs wonder if they ſuffer him to ſit amongſt them being but twelve years of age, whenas they promoted R. Eleazar ben Azariah to the Preſidency it ſelf, when he was but ſixteen n. But if it was in a lower Court, it is ſtill leſs wonder if he ſate amongſt them. But that which might be chiefly enquired is, whether Chriſt ſate amongſt them as one of their diſciples? this indeed is hardly credible.

VERS. II.

Ἐπ' Ἀρχιερέων Ἄννα καὶ Καϊάφα. Annas and Caiphas being High-Prieſts.

אין ממנין שני כהנים גדולים באחת a They do conſtitute two High-Prieſts at one time. True indeed but they promoted a סגן Sagan, together with an High-Prieſt.

[a] Hieroſal. Sanhedr. fol. 29. 1.

וה למעלה לכן כמו שני למלך b The Sagan, as to his degree, was the ſame to the High-Prieſt, as he that was next or ſecond to the King.

[b] Juchaſin. fol. 57. 1. out of Rambam.

They ſubſtituted indeed on the Veſpers of the day of expiation, another Prieſt to the High-Prieſt, that ſhould be in readineſs, to perform the office for the day, if any uncleanneſs ſhould by chance have befallen the High-Prieſt c.

d It is ſtoried of Ben Elam of Zipporim, that when a Gonorrhea had ſeized the High-Prieſt, on the day of expiation he went in and performed the Office for that day. And another ſtory of Simeon ben Kamith, that, as he was walking with the King on the Veſpers of the day of expiation, his Garments were toucht with another's ſpittle; ſo that Judah his Brother went in and miniſtred. On that day the Mother of them, ſaw her two Sons High-Prieſts.

[c] Joma, cap. 1; [d] Hieroſ. Horaioth, fol. 47. 4.

It is, not without reaſon, controverted whether the Sagan were the ſame with this deputed Prieſt; the Jews themſelves diſpute it. I would be on the negative part; for the Sagan was not ſo much the Vice-High-Prieſt, as (if I may ſo ſpeak) one ſet over the Prieſts. The ſame with ממונה the ruler of the Temple; of whom we have ſuch frequent mention amongſt the Doctors: upon him chiefly did the care and charge of the Service of the Temple lye.

אמר להם הממונה e The ruler of the Temple ſaith to them, go out and ſee, if it be time to ſlay the Sacrifice. אמר להם הממונה The Ruler ſaith, come and caſt your lots, who ſhall ſlay the Sacrifice, who ſhall ſprinkle the blood, &c. The gloſs is, ממונה הוא סגן The Ruler is the Sagan.

Caiaphas therefore was the High-Prieſt, and Annas the Sagan, or Ruler of the Temple. who, for his independent dignity is called Ἀρχιερεύς, or High-Prieſt, as well as Caiaphas; and ſeems therefore to be named firſt, becauſe he was the others Father-in-law.

Now the queſtion is, whether by the Sons of the chief Prieſts be meant, the Sons of the Fathers of Courſes, or the Fathers of Courſes themſelves, or the Sons of the High-Prieſt and the Sagan, where the High-Prieſt in that Court was like נשיא the Prince in the Sanhedrin, and the Sagan אב בית דין the Father of the Sanhedrin.

VERS. V.

Πᾶσα φάραγξ πληρωθήσε, &c. Every valley ſhall be filled.

THE Jews have a Tradition that ſome ſuch thing was done, by the cloud that led Iſrael in the Wilderneſs. Inſtead of many inſtances take the Targumiſt upon Cant. II. 6. There was a cloud went before them, three days journey למכנא טוריא ולמר לי מישריא to take down the hills, and raiſe the valleyes. It ſlew all fiery Serpents in the Wilderneſs, and all Scorpions: and found out for them a fit place to lodge in.

What the meaning of the Prophet in this paſſage was, Chriſtians well enough underſtand: the Jews apply it to levelling and making the ways plain for Iſrael's return out of Captivity, for this was the main thing they expected from the Meſſiah, viz. to bring back the Captivity of Iſrael.

VERS. VIII.

Ἐκ τῶν λίθων τούτων ἐγεῖραι τέκνα τῷ Ἀβραάμ. Of theſe ſtones to raiſe up Children unto Abraham.

WE do not ſay the Baptiſt played with the ſound of thoſe two words בניא Banaia, and אבניא Abanaia. He does certainly with great ſcorn deride the vain confidence and glorying of that Nation (amongſt whom nothing was more ready, and uſual in their mouths, than to boaſt that they were the Children of Abraham) when he tells them, that they were ſuch Children of Abraham, that God could raiſe as good as they, from thoſe very ſtones.

VERS. XI.

IT would be no ſenſe to ſay, he that hath two Coats, let him give to him that hath not two; but to him that hath none. For it was eſteemed for Religion by ſome, to weare but one ſingle Coat or Garment. Of which more elſewhere.

Where the Gloſs hath it, יתורא too much, that is πλέον παρὰ τὸ διατεταγμένον, More than that which is appointed them. And the Father of *R. VERS. XXIII.

Ὢν ὡς ἐνομίζετο Ἰωσήφ. Being (as was ſuppoſed) the Son of Joſeph.

A Parable. r There was a certain Orphaneſs brought by a certain אפיטרופוס Epitropus, or Foſter-father, an honeſt good man. At length he would place her in Marriage. A ſcribe is called to write a bill of her dower, Saith he to the girl, what is thy name? N. ſaith ſhe. What the name of thy Father? She held her peace. To whom her Foſter-father, why doſt thou not ſpeak? Becauſe, ſaith ſhe, I know no other Father but thee. שהמגדל נקרא אב ולא המוליך: He that educateh the child is called a Father, not he that begets it. Note that Joſeph, having been taught by the Angel, and well ſatisfied in Mary, whom he had eſpouſed, had owned Jeſus for his Son from his firſt birth; he had redeemed him as his firſt-born, he had cheriſht him in his childhood, educated him in his youth, and therefore no wonder if Joſeph be called his Father, and he was ſuppoſed to be his Son. r Schemoth rabba, fol. 160. 4.

II. Let us conſider what might have been the judgment of the Sanhedrin in this caſe, only from this ſtory. s There came a certain Woman to Jeruſalem, with a child, brought thither upon ſhoulders. She brought this child up, and he afterward had the carnal knowledge of her. They are brought before the Sanhedrin, and the Sanhedrin judged them to be ſtoned to death: לא מפני בנה ודאי אלא מפני שכרוך אחריה not becauſe he was undoubtedly her Son, but becauſe he had wholly adhered to her. s Kidduſhin, fol. 80. 1.

Now ſuppoſe we that the bleſſed Jeſus had come to the Sanhedrin upon the deceaſe of Joſeph, requiring his Stock and Goods as his heir: Had he not in all equity obtained them as his Son? Not that he was beyond all doubt and queſtion his Son, but that he had adhered to him wholly from his cradle, was brought up by him as his Son, and always ſo acknowledged.

III. The Doctors ſpeak of one Joſeph a Carpenter t. שאר אבנימוס הגרדי וכו u Abnimus Gardieus askt the Rabbins of bleſſed memory, whence the earth was firſt created? they anſwer him, there is no one ſkilled in theſe matters, אלא לך לעיר אבנא יוסק הבנאי but go thou to Joſeph the Architect. He went and found him ſtanding upon the rafters. t Sect. 13. of the ſame Treatiſe. u Shemoth rabba, fol. 128. 4.

It is equally obſcure who this Joſeph the Carpenter, and who this Abnimus was, although as to this laſt, he is very frequently mentioned in thoſe Authors. They ſay, w That Abnimus, and Balaam were two the greateſt Philoſophers in the whole world. Only this we read of him, x That there was a very great familiarity betwixt him and R. Meir. w Bereſh. rabba. fol. 73. 4. x Midr. Ruth. fol. 43. 2.

Τοῦ Ἡλί. Which was the Son of Heli.

I. There is neither need, nor reaſon, nor indeed any foundation at all for us to frame, I know not what, marriages, and the taking of Brothers Wives, to remove a ſcruple in this place, wherein there is really no ſcruple in the leaſt.

1. Joſeph

1. Joſeph is not here called the Son of Heli, but Jeſus is ſo; for the word Jeſus, viz. בן, not בר, muſt be underſtood, and muſt be always added in the Reader's mind to every race in this Genealogy, after this manner. Jeſus (as was ſuppoſed) the Son of Joſeph, and ſo the Son of Heli, and of Matthat, yea and at length, the Son of Adam, and the Son of God. For it was very little the buſineſs of the Evangeliſt either to draw Joſeph's Pedigree from Adam, or indeed, to ſhew that Adam was the Son of God: which not only ſounds ſomething harſhly, but in this place very enormouſly, I may almoſt add, blaſphemouſly too. For when St Luke, Verſ. 22. had made a voice from Heaven declaring that Jeſus was the Son of God, do we think the ſame Evangeliſt, would in the ſame breath pronounce Adam the Son of God too? So that this very thing teacheth us what the Evangeliſt propounded to himſelf in the framing of this Genealogy, which was, to ſhew that this Jeſus who had newly received that great teſtimony from Heaven, this is my Son, was the very ſame that had been promiſed to Adam by the ſeed of the Woman. And for this reaſon hath he drawn his Pedigree on the Mother's ſide, who was the Daughter of Heli, and this too, as high as Adam to whom this Jeſus was promiſed. In the cloſe of the Genealogy he teacheth in what ſenſe, the former part of it ſhould be taken: viz. that Jeſus, not Joſeph, ſhould be called the Son of Heli, and conſequently that the ſame Jeſus, not Adam, ſhould be called the Son of God; indeed in every link of this chain, this ſtill ſhould be underſtood, Jeſus the Son of Matthat, Jeſus the Son of Levi, Jeſus the Son of Melchi, and ſo of the reſt.

And thus the Genealogical ſtile agrees with that of Moſes, Geneſ. XXXVI. 2. אהליבמה בת ענה בת צבעון: Which words, if you ſhould render, Aholibamah the Daughter of Anah, the Daughter of Zibeon, you emaſculate Anah, and make a Woman of him, who was a Man, and the Father of Aholibamah, Verſ. 24, 25.

2. Suppoſe it could be granted that Joſeph might be called the Son of Heli (which yet ought not to be) yet would not this be any great ſoleciſme, that his Son-in-law, ſhould become the Husband of Mary his own Daughter. He was but his Son by Law, by the Marriage of Joſeph's Mother, not by Nature and Generation.

y T. Hieroſ. Chagigah, fo. 77. 4. y There is a diſcourſe of a certain perſon, who in his ſleep ſaw the puniſhment of the damned. Amongſt the reſt חמא מרים בת עלי בצלים which I would render thus, but ſhall willingly ſtand corrected, if under a miſtake. He ſaw Mary the Daughter of Heli amongſt the ſhades. R. Lazar ben Joſah ſaith, תליא בהושי ביוויא That ſhe hung by the glandles of her breaſts. R. Joſah bar Haninah ſaith, צירא חרעא גניהום קביע באורנה That the great bar of Hell's gate hung at her ear.

If this be the true rendring of the words, which I have reaſon to believe it is, then thus far at leaſt it agrees with our Evangeliſt, that Mary was the Daughter of Heli; and queſtionleſs all the reſt is added in reproach of the bleſſed Virgin, the Mother of our Lord: whom they often vilifie elſewhere under the name of Sardah.

VERS. XXVII.

Τοῦ Ῥησὰ, τοῦ Ζοροβάβελ, τοῦ Σαλαθιὴλ, τοῦ Νηρί. The ſon of Rheſa, the ſon of Zorobabel, the ſon of Salathiel, the ſon of Neri.

I. THAT Pedaiah the Father of Zorobabel, 1 Chron. III. 19. is omitted here, is agreeable with Ezra V. 2. Hagg. I. 1, &c. but why it ſhould be omitted, either here or there, is not ſo eaſie to gueſs.

II. As to the variation of the names both here and 1 Chron. III. this is not unworthy our obſervation. That Zorobabel and his Sons, were carried out of Babylon into Judea; and poſſibly they might change their names, when they changed the place of their dwelling. It was not very ſafe for him to be known commonly by the name of Zorobabel in Babylon, when the import of that name was, the winnowing of Babel; ſo that he was there more generally called Sheſhbazzar. But he might ſecurely reſume the name in Judea, when Cyrus, and Darius had now fanned and ſifted Babylon. So his two Sons Meſhullam and Hananiah, could not properly be called, one of them Abiud, the glory of my Father, and the other Rheſa, a Prince, while they were in Babylon, but in Judea, they were names fit and ſuitable enough.

III. Of the variation of names here, and in Matth. I. I have already ſpoken in that place. To wit, that Neri was indeed the Father of Salathiel; though St. Matthew ſaith, Jechoniah (who died childleſs, Jerem. XXII. 30.) begat him: not that he was his Son by nature, but was his heir in ſucceſſion.

VERS.

VERS. XXXVI.

Τ῀ Καϊνὰν. The son of Cainan.

I Will not launch widely out into a controversie that hath been sufficiently bandied already. I shall dispatch as briefly as I may, what may seem most satisfactory in this matter.

I. There is no doubt, and indeed there are none but will grant, that the Evangelist hath herein followed the Greek Version. This in Genes. XI. 12, 13. relates it in this manner: Καὶ ἔζησεν Ἀρφαξὰδ ἑκατὸν τριακονταπέντε ἔτη καὶ ἐγέννησε τὸν Καϊνᾶν, &c. Arphaxad lived an hundred and five and thirty years, and begat Cainan; and Cainan lived an hundred and thirty years, and begat Salah: And Cainan lived, after he had begot Salah, three hundred and thirty years.

Consulting z about this matter, I cannot but observe of this Author, that he partly follows the Greek Version, in adding to Arphaxad an hundred years, and partly not, when he omits Cainan: for so he, Ἀρφαξὰδ δ' ἐτέκνωσε Σαλὰ ὢν ἐτῶν ρλε. Arphaxad when he was an hundred and thirty five years of age, begot Salah. Nor can I but wonder at him that translates him, that he should of his own head insert, Arphaxad was an hundred and thirty five years old, and begat a son named Cainan. Cainan was an hundred and thirty years old and begat Salah. When there is not one syllable of Cainan in Theophilus. A very faithful Interpreter indeed!

z Theophil. ad Autolych. lib. 3.

1. I cannot be perswaded by any arguments, that this passage concerning Cainan was in Moses his Text, or indeed in any Hebrew Copies which the Seventy used; but that it was certainly added by the Interpreters themselves, partly, because no reason can be given how it should ever come to be left out of the Hebrew Text; and partly because there may be a probable reason given, why it should be added in the Greek: especially when nothing was more usual with them, than to add of their own, according to their own will and pleasure.

Huic uni forsan poteram succumbere culpæ.

I might perhaps acknowledge this one slip, and be apt to believe that Cainan had once a place in the original, but by I know not what fate or misfortune left now out; but that I find an hundred such kind of additions, in the Greek Version, which the Hebrew Text will by no means own, nor any probable reason given to bear with it. Let us take our instances only from proper names, because our business at present is with a proper name.

Gen. X. 2. Ἐλισὰ, Elisa is added among the sons of Japhet. And Vers. 22. Καϊνὰν, another Cainan among the sons of Shem.

Gen. XLVI. 20. Five Grand-children added to the sons of Joseph, Malach. IV. 5. The Tisbite.

Exod. I. 11. Ὼν, the City On, is added to Pithon, and Raamses.

2 Sam. XX. 18. the City Dan is added to Abel. Not to mention several other names of places in the Book of Josua.

Now, should I believe that these names ever were in the Hebrew Copy? when as some of them are put there without any reason; some of them against all reason (particularly Dan being joyned with Abel, and the Grand-children of Joseph) and all of them with no foundation at all.

II. I question not but the Interpreters, whoever they were, engaged themselves in this undertaking, with something of a partial mind, and as they made no great Conscience of imposing upon the Gentiles, so they made it their Religion to favour their own side: And according to this ill temperament and disposition of mind, so did they manage their Version; either adding, or curtailing at pleasure, blindly, lazily and audaciously enough: sometimes giving a very foreign sense, sometimes a contrary, oftentimes none: And this, frequently to patronize their own Traditions, or to avoid some offence they think might be in the Original, or for the credit and safety of their own Nation. The tokens of all which, it would not be difficult to instance in very great numbers, would I apply my self to it: but it is the last only that is my business at this time.

a Hierosol. Megill. fol. 71 4. Bab. Megillah, fol. 9. 1. Massech. Sopherim, cap. 1.

III. It is a known story of the thirteen places which the Talmudists tell us were altered by the Seventy two Elders, when they writ out the Law (I would suppose in Hebrew) for Ptolomey. They are reckoned up a, and we have the mention of them sprinkled up and down b; as also, c where it is intimated as if eighten places had been altered.

b In Bereshith. rab. fol. 10. 3. and fol. 12. 4. and fol. 41. 4. and fol. 110. 1.

Now if we will consult the Glosses upon those places, they will tell us that these alterations were made, some of them, lest the sacred Text should be cavill'd at; others, c Shemoth, rab. fol. 123. 1.

that the honour and peace of the Nation might be ſecured. It is eaſie therefore to imagine that the ſame things were done by thoſe that turned the whole Bible. The thing it ſelf ſpeaks it.

Let us add, for example's ſake, thoſe five ſouls which they add to the Family of Jacob: numbering up five Grand-children of Joſeph, who as yet were not in being, nay ſeven, according to their account, Geneſ. XLVI. 27. Υἱοὶ τῷ Ἰωσὴφ οἱ γενόμενοι αὐτῷ ἐν γῇ Αἰγύπτῳ ψυχαὶ ἐννέα· Children that were born to Joſeph in the Land of Egypt, even nine ſouls.

Now, which copy do we think it is moſt reaſonable to believe, the Greek, or the Hebrew? and as to the queſtion, whether theſe five, added in the Greek, were antiently in Moſes his Text, but either ſince loſt by the careleſſneſs of the Tranſcribers, or raſed out by the bold hand of the Jews, let reaſon and the nature of the thing judge. For if Machir, Gilead, Sutelah, Tahan and Eden, were with Joſeph, when Jacob with his Family went down into Egypt (and if they were not, why are they numbred amongſt thoſe that went down?) then muſt Manaſſeh at the age of nine years, or ten at moſt, be a Grand-father; Ephraim at eight or nine. Can I believe that Moſes would relate ſuch things as theſe? I rather wonder with what kind of Forehead the Interpreters could impoſe ſuch incredible ſtories upon the Gentiles, as if it were poſſible they ſhould be believed.

IV. It is plain enough to any one that diligently conſiders the Greek Verſion throughout, that it was compoſed by different hands, who greatly varied from one another both in ſtile and wit. So that this Book was more learnedly rendred than that, the Greek reading more elegant in this Book than in that, and the Verſion in this Book, comes nearer the Hebrew than in that: And yet in the whole, there is ſomething of the Jewiſh craft, favouring and patronizing the Affairs of that Nation. There is ſomething of this nature in the matters now in hand, the addition of Cainan, and the five ſouls to the Seventy that went down into Egypt.

How mightily the Jewiſh Nation valued themſelves beyond all the reſt of mankind, eſteeming thoſe Seventy ſouls that went down with Jacob into Egypt, beyond the Seventy Nations of the world; he that is ſo great a ſtranger in the Jewiſh Affairs and Writings, that he is yet to learn, let him take theſe few inſtances, for it would be needleſs to add more.

d Zohar. in Exod. Col. 22. d Seventy ſouls went down with Jacob into Egypt, that they might reſtore the Seventy Families diſperſed by the confuſion of tongues. For thoſe Seventy ſouls were equal to all the Families of the whole world. And he that would be ruling over them, is as if he would uſurp a tyranny over the whole World.

e Targ. in Cantic. IV. 10. e How good is thy love toward me O thou Congregation of Iſrael? משבעין אומיא It is more than that of the Seventy Nations.

f Bemidb. rab. fol. 210. 3. f The Holy bleſſed God created Seventy Nations, but he found no pleaſure in any of them, ſave Iſrael only.

g Bereſh. rab. fol. 43. 2. g Saith Abraham to God, Didſt thou not raiſe up ſeventy Nations unto Noah? God ſaith unto him, I will raiſe up that Nation unto thee, of whom it is written, how great a Nation is it? The Gloſs is: That peculiar people, יתירה על ע אומות excelling all the Seventy Nations, that holy Nation: as the holy language excells all the ſeventy languages.

There are numberleſs paſſages of that kind: Now, when this arrogant Doctrine and vain-gloryiny, if familiarly known amongſt the Gentiles, could not but ſtir up a great deal of hatred, and conſequently danger to the Jews, I ſhould rather think the Interpreters might make ſuch additions as theſe, through the caution and cunning of avoiding the danger they apprehend, than that ever they were originally in the Text of Moſes. To wit, by adding another Cainan, and five ſouls to thoſe Seventy in Jacobs retinue, they took care that the Gentiles ſhould not in the Greek Bibles find exactly the Seventy Nations in Gen. X. but ſeventy two (or ſeventy three if we reckon Ἐλισά, Eliſa alſo) as alſo not Seventy, but Seventy five ſouls that went down into Egypt.

It was the ſame kind of craft they uſed in that Verſion Deuter. XXXII. 8. whence that compariſon between the Seventy Souls, and the Seventy Nations took its riſe. Moſes hath it thus, When the moſt high, divided the Nations, when he ſeparated the Sons of Adam, he ſet the bounds of the people למספר בני ישראל according to the number of the Children of Iſrael. But they render it thus, Ἔστησεν ὅρια ἐθνῶν κατὰ ἀριθμὸν ἀγγέλων θεοῦ· He ſet the bounds of the Nations, according to the number of the Angels of God. A ſenſe indeed moſt foreign from that of Moſes, yet what ſerved to obſcure his meaning ſo far as might avoid any danger that might ariſe from the knowledge of it. Making the paſſage it ſelf ſo unintelligible that it needs an Oedipus to unridle it: unleſs they ſhould allude to the Jewiſh Tradition (which I do a little ſuſpect) concerning the Seventy Angels ſet over the Seventy Nations of the world.

V. But

V. But now if this Verſion be ſo uncertain, and differs ſo much from the original, how comes it to paſs that the Evangeliſts and Apoſtles ſhould follow it ſo exactly, and that even in ſome places, where it does ſo widely differ from the Hebrew fountain?

Anſw. I. It pleaſed God to allot the Cenſers of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, to ſacred uſe, becauſe they were ſo ordained and deſigned by the firſt owners. So doth it pleaſe the Holy Ghoſt to determine that Verſion to his own uſe, being ſo primarily ordained by the firſt Authors. The minds indeed of the Interpreters, were not perhaps very ſincere in the Verſion they made, as who deſigned the defence and ſupport of ſome odd things: So neither were the hearts of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram ſincere at all, but very perverſe in offering their Incenſe; but ſo long as their Incenſe had been dedicated to ſacred uſe, it pleaſed God to make their Cenſers holy. So the Greek Verſion deſigned for ſacred uſe, as deſigned for the Holy Bible; it was ſo kept and made uſe of by the Holy Ghoſt.

II. Whereas the New Teſtment was to be wrote in Greek, and come into the hands chiefly of the Gentiles, it was moſt agreeable, I may ſay, moſt neceſſary for them to follow the Greek Copies, as being what the Gentiles were only capable of conſulting; that ſo they examining the Hiſtories and quotations that were brought out of the Old Teſtament, might find them agreeing with, and not contradicting them. For inſtance, when they conſult their Greek Bibles for the names from David backward to Adam and there find Cainan the Son of Arphaxad. If St. Luke ſhould not alſo have inſerted it, how readily might they have called his veracity in queſtion, as to the other part of the Genealogy, which had been extracted out of Tables and Regiſters, not ſo familiarly known?

III. If there be any credit to be given to that Story of Greek Verſion which we meet with in Ariſteas and Joſephus, then we may alſo believe that paſſage in it, which we may find in Ariſteas. Καλῶς ἂν ἀνεγνώσθη, &c. When the Volumes of the Law had been read through, the Prieſts, and interpreters, and Elders, and Governours of the City, and all the Princes of the people ſtanding by, ſaid, ἐπεὶ καλῶς καὶ ὁσίως διερμηνεύεται, &c. Forasmuch as this Interpretation, is rightly, religiouſly, and in every thing ſo very accurately finiſhed, it is fit that all things ſhould continue as they are, and no alteration ſhould be made. When all had by acclamations given their approbation to theſe things, Demetrius commanded διαστεῖλαι καθὼς ἔθος αὐτοῖς ἐστιν, &c. that according to their cuſtom, they ſhould imprecate Curſes upon any that ſhould by addition, or alteration, or diminution, ever make any change in it. This they did well in, that all things might be kept intire and inviolate for ever.

If this paſſage be true, it might be no light matter to the Jew when quoting any thing in Greek, out of the Old Teſtament, to depart in the leaſt from the Greek Verſion; and indeed it is ſomething a wonder, that after this, they ſhould ever dare to undertake any other. But ſuppoſing there were any credit to be had to this paſſage, were the ſacred Pen-men any way concerned in theſe Curſes and Imprecations? who ſaith they were? But however, who will not ſay, that this was enough for them to ſtop the mouths of the cavilling Jews, that they, following the Greek Verſion had often departed from the truth of the original, to avoid that Anathema, at leaſt if there were any truth in it?

Object. But the clauſe that is before us (to omit many others) is abſolutely falſe; for, there was neither any Cainan the Son of Arphaxad, nor was Jeſus the Son of any Cainan that was born after the flood.

Anſw. I. There could be nothing more falſe as to the thing it ſelf, than that of the Apoſtle, when he calleth the preaching of the Goſpel μωρίαν, fooliſhneſs, 1 Cor. I. 21. and yet according to the common conceptions of fooliſh men, nothing more true. So neither was this true in it ſelf, that is aſſerted here, but only ſo in the opinion of thoſe for whoſe ſake the Evangeliſt writes. Nor yet, is it the deſign of the Holy Ghoſt to indulge them in any thing that was not true, but only would not lay a ſtumbling-block at preſent before them. I am made all things to all men, that I might gain ſome.

II. There is ſome parallel with this of St. Luke, that in the Old Teſtament, 1 Chron. I. 36. The ſons of Eliphaz, Teman and Omar, Zephi and Gatam, Timnah and Amalek. Where, it is equally falſe that Timnah was the Son of Eliphaz, as it is that Cainan was the Son of Arphaxad. But far, far be it from me to ſay that the Holy Ghoſt was either deceived himſelf, or would deceive others! Timnah was not a man but a Woman, not the Son of Eliphaz, but his Concubine, not Amaleck's Brother but his Mother, Gen. XXXVI. 12. Only the Holy Ghoſt teacheth us by this ſhortneſs of ſpeech to recur to the original ſtory from whence theſe things are taken and there conſult the determinate explication of the whole matter: which is frequently done by the ſame Holy Spirit, ſpeaking very briefly in Stories well known before.

The Gentiles have no reaſon to Cavil with the Evangeliſt in this matter, for he agrees well enough with their Bibles; And if the Jews, or we our ſelves ſhould find fault, he may defend him from the common uſage of the Holy Ghoſt, in whom it is no rare and unuſual thing, in the recital of ſtories and paſſages well enough known before, to vary from the original, and yet without any deſign of deceiving, or ſuſpition of being himſelf deceived; but according to that Majeſty and Authority that belongs to him, dictating and referring the Reader to the primitive ſtory, from whence he may ſettle and determine the ſtate of the matter, and inquire into the reaſons of the variation. St. Stephen imitates this very cuſtom while he is ſpeaking about the burial of the Patriarchs, Acts VII. 15,16. being well enough underſtood by his Jewiſh Auditory, though giving but ſhort hints in a ſtory ſo well known.

III. It is one thing to dictate from himſelf, and another thing to quote what is dictated from others, as our Evangeliſt in this place doth. And whenas he did without all queſtion write in behalf of the Gentiles, being the companion of him who was the great Apoſtle of the Gentiles, what ſhould hinder his alledging according to what had been dictated in their Bibles?

When the Apoſtle names the Magicians of Egypt, Jannes and Jambres, 2 Tim. III. 9. he doth not deliver it for a certain thing, or upon his credit aſſure them, that theſe were their very names, but alledgeth only what had been delivered by others, what had been the common tradition amongſt them, well enough known to Timothy, a thing about which neither he nor any other would ſtart any controverſie. h h See Menacath fol. 85. 1. Targ. Jonath. Exod. I. Aruch. in יוחנו and Numenius in Euſeb. præparat. Evangel. lib. 8. cap. 8.

So when the Apoſtle Jude ſpeaks of Michael contending with the Devil about the body of Moſes, he doth not deliver it for a certain and authentick thing, and yet is not to be charged with any falſhood, becauſe he hoth not dictate of his own, but only appeals to ſomething that had been told by others, uſing an argument with the Jews, fetcht from their own Books and Traditions.

IV. As it is very proper and even neceſſary toward the underſtanding ſome ſentences and ſchemes of ſpeech in the New Teſtament, to enquire in what manner they were underſtood by thoſe that heard them from the mouth of him that ſpoke them, or thoſe to whom they were written: So let us make a little ſearch here, as to the matter now in hand. When this Goſpel firſt appeared in publick amongſt the Jews and Gentiles; the Gentiles could not complain that the Evangeliſt had followed their Copies; if the Jews found fault, they had wherewithal to anſwer and ſatisfie themſelves. And that particularly as to this name of Cainan being inſerted, as alſo the five ſouls being added to the retinue of Jacob: The learned amongſt them knew from whence he had it: for what reaſon this addition had been made in the Greek Verſion, and that St. Luke had faithfully tranſcribed it thence: So that if there were any fault, let them lay the blame upon the firſt Authors, and not him that tranſcribed it.

V. To conclude: Before the Bible had been tranſlated for Ptolomy (as is ſuppoſed) into the Greek tongue, there were an infinite number of Copies in the Hebrew. In Paleſtine, Babylon, Egypt, even every where in every Synagogue: and it is a marvellous thing that in no antiquity there ſhould not be in the leaſt hint or mention of ſo much as one Hebrew Copy amongſt all theſe, that agrees with the Greek Verſion. We have various Editions of that Verſion which they call the Septuagint, and thoſe, pretty much diſagreeing among themſelves, but who hath ever heard or ſeen one Hebrew Copy, that hath in every thing agreed with any one of them? The Interpreters have ſtill abounded in their own ſenſe, not very ſtrictly obliging themſelves to the Hebrew Text.

CHAP. IV.

VERS. I.

Ἦγετο ἐν τῷ πνεύματι. Was led by the Spirit.

IN St. Matthew it is Ἀνήχθη ὑπὸ τοῦ πνεύματος, was led up of the Spirit. By which I would ſuppoſe our Saviour caught up the Holy Spirit into the air, and ſo carryed into the Wilderneſs. The reaſons of this conjecture are, I. Becauſe we read of the like thing done to Philip, Acts VIII. 39, 40. The ſame alſo is ſuppoſed concerning Elijah, 1 Kings XVIII. 12. and 2 Kings II. 16. II. It is probable the Devil alſo might ſnatch Jeſus up into the air, having this occaſion, to pretend himſelf no other than the Holy Ghoſt who had caught him up and brought him already into the Wilderneſs: and under der this notion he might require that worſhip from him, as if he himſelf was indeed the Holy Ghoſt. III. We muſt not paſs by the method St. Luke takes in deſcribing the order of the temptations, ſomewhat different from that of St. Matthew. The temptation upon the pinnacle of the Temple is mentioned by St. Matthew, and that moſt truly, the ſecond in order; but in St. Luke it is reckoned the third; adding, That when the Devil had ended all his temptation he departed from him for a ſeaſon. But now, according to St. Luke, how did Chriſt get down from the pinnacle again? He tells us, That he was carried up thither by the Devil, and there (according to his method in the ſtory) the temptation was ended; How then did Chriſt get down again? Obſerve but what follows; Καὶ ὑπέστρεψεν ὁ Ἰησοῦς ἐν τῇ δυνάμει τοῦ πνεύματος εἰς τὴν Γαλιλαίαν, Jeſus returned in the power of the Spirit into Galilee; and then joyn the ſtories, as they are joyned in St. Luke. The Devil ſet him on the pinnacle of the Temple, and there urgeth him to caſt himſelf down; but when he could not perſwade him, he leaves him ſtanding on the pinnacle, and all the temptation was ended; Jeſus by the power of the Spirit returning into Galilee. May we not ſuppoſe that the Evangeliſt would by this give us to underſtand that Chriſt, after the temptation was ended, was carried through the air by the Holy Ghoſt into Galilee, as he had been caught up before by him, and been brought into the Wilderneſs, yea and under that pretenſe, or upon that occaſion, by the Devil himſelf had been ſnatcht up to the pinnacle of the Temple and to a very high Mountain?

VERS. II.

Ἡμέρας τεσσεράκοντα. Forty days, &c.

MOSES in his dealings with God, faſted forty days, three times one after another. It was ſufficient for Chriſt, having withal ſo great a conflict with the Devil, to do it but once. Moſes his firſt quadrageſimal, was Exod. XXIV. 18. His ſecond time was after he had deſtroyed the golden Calf, Deut. X. 10. The third was after the Tables of the Law had been made anew, Exod. XXXIV. 28. About that very time of the year wherein Moſes ended his laſt forty-days Faſt, Chriſt began his, viz. about the middle of the Month Tiſri, and how long he continued it on in the Month Marheſhvan, it is not difficult to apprehend.

VERS. V.

Ἐν στιγμῇ χρόνου. In a moment of time:

רגע In momento. So the vulgar. Now what quantity of time a moment contains, if it be worth the while to enquire, the Doctors tell us.

במה רגע How much is a moment? אחד ושמונת אלפים ושמונה מאות ופח מחמשת רבוא It is the fifty eight thouſand, eight hundredth, eighty eighth part of an hour. Very accurately calculated truly! [a] [a] Beracoth, fol. 7. 1.

VERS. XIII.

Ἀπέστη ἀπ' αὐτοῦ ἄχρι καιροῦ. He departed from him for a ſeaſon.

THE Devil had now found by experience, how much in vain it was for him to attempt our Saviour by ſuggeſtions, or thoſe kinds of allurements, by which he inveigles mankind, and therefore watches for an opportunity of trying his arts upon him ſome other way: which at laſt he doth, both by himſelf and by his inſtruments. And when that ſeaſon drew near, and the Devil returned to his proper buſineſs, we find there is mention made of Satan entring into Judas, and that now the Prince of this world cometh, Joh. XIV. 30.

VERS. XVI.

Ἀνέστη ἀναγνῶναι. He ſtood up to read.

THat we may frame the better judgment of this action of our Saviour's, let us a little look into the cuſtoms of the Synagogue.

I. They read ſtanding up. Piske הראש: and Rabbenu Aſher, [b] They do not read in the Law, otherwiſe than ſtanding up. Nay it is unlawful for him that readeth, to lean upon any thing. Whence comes it that he that readeth in the Law is bound to ſtand up? Rabh Abhu ſaith, Becauſe the Scripture ſaith, do thou ſtand by me. Nor ought any one to lean any [b] In Megillah, cap. 3.

any way, as it is in the Jeruſalem. R. Samuel bar Iſaac, going into a Synagogue he found one expounding, and leaning againſt a pillar. He ſaith to him, This is not lawful: For as the Law was given with reverence, ſo are we to handle it with reverence too.

They preferred the Law above the Prophets, and the Law and the Prophets above the Hagiographa, or Holy c Writings. They yielded that honour to the Prophets, that even they ſhould not be read but ſtanding up. Whence that is particular, which they ſay concerning the Book of Eſther. d A man may read out of the Book of Eſther, either ſtanding or ſitting. But not ſo out of the Law. Chriſt in this, followed the cuſtoms of the Synagogue, in thatwhile he read the Law he ſtood up, while he taught it he ſate down.

c See Gloſſ. in Sanhed. 115 1.

d Megill, fol. 21. 2.

II. He that read in the Prophets was called מפטיר Maphtir; and was appointed to that office by the ruler of the Synagogue.

e Rabh Bibai was a great man לעיין במילי שמיא in taking care of the things of God. And Mar was a great man לעיין במילי מתא in taking care of the things of the Town. The Gloſs is: Of the things of God, that is, about the Collectors of the Alms, and the diſtribution of it, וסדר מתרגמנין ומפטירין and the ordering of thoſe that were to expound, and read the Prophets.

e Kiddushin, fol. 76. 2.

It is probable that Chriſt did at this time offer himſelf as a Maphtir, one that would read in the Prophets, and preach upon what he read; not before hand appointed to it by the Ruler of the Synagogue, but rather, approved on when he had offered himſelf. For thoſe of Nazareth had heard of ſome miracles he had wrought at Capernaum, verſ. 23. and therefore no wonder if they were very deſirous to hear ſomething from him anſwerable to thoſe great things he had done.

III. Piske הראש f He that reads in the Prophets, ought not to read leſs than one and twenty verſes. Here our Saviour doth not ſeem to have obſerved the cuſtom of the Synagogue, for he read but two verſes. And yet he did nothing but what was both allowable and uſual: that is worth our taking notice of, which we meet with, אם הורה בשבת תורגמן או דרוש g If any one expound or preach on the Sabbath day, they read out of the Prophets, three, or five, or ſeven verſes, and are not ſo careful to read juſt one and twenty.

f In Megillah, Artic. 22.

g Maſſechet Soferim, cap. 13.

If there be an Interpreter or expounding on the Sabbath day: was there not always one on every Sabbath day? So that neither Moſes nor the Prophets might be read, unleſs one ſtood by that could expound? It ſeems abundantly evident both from the Traditions and the rules that concerned ſuch an one.

These words therefore אם הוה בשבת תורגמן או דרוש I would underſtand in ſuch a ſenſe; If either the Interpreter ſhould in his Expoſition, enlarge himſelf into a Sermon, or any other ſhould preach, &c. For the Interpreter did ſometimes Comment and Preach upon what they read. And probably Chriſt did at this time both read and properly interpreted.

h Jalkut Rubeni, fol. 80.

h Joſe the Maonite expounded in the Synagogue of Maon. Hear O ye Prieſts, harken O Houſe of Iſrael, and give ye ear O Houſe of the King, Hoſ. V. 1. He ſaid, The Holy bleſſed God, is about to ſnatch away the Prieſts and ſet them in judgment, ſaying unto them, Why have ye not laboured in the Law? Have you not had the uſe and enjoyment of four and twenty portions belonging to the Prieſts? They ſay unto him, They have not given us any thing. Harken O ye Houſe of Iſrael, Why have you not given thoſe four and twenty portions to the Prieſts, which I have commanded you in the Law? They anſwer him, Becauſe of thoſe who are of the houſe of the Prince, who devour all themſelves. Give ear O houſe of the King, for judgment is toward you; For to you I have ſaid, that this ſhould be the rule concerning the Prieſts; To you therefore and over you is it turned a rule of judgment. Rabbi [the Prince] heard this and was diſpleaſed with it.

Jalkut Sapheim, cap. 13.

i After theſe things did King Ahaſhuerus promote Hamon the Son of Hammadetha. Rabh Joſeph expounded it בתר פתנמיא האולין רבו מלכא After theſe things, the King promoted Hamon of Hammadetha the Agagite, the ſon of Cuza, the ſon of Aphlet, the ſon of Dio, the ſon of Diaſot, the ſon Paros, the ſon of Nidan, the ſon of Baalkan, &c. See loc. and compare it with the Targumiſt upon Eſther, Chap. III. 1.

l Megill. fol. 21. 1. m Maſſech. Soph. cap. 14.

k A reader in the Prophet שמע פורס עלי enlargeth upon Shema [the manner and form of the thing we have l] he paſſeth before the Ark, and liſteth up his hands, (that is, in order to give him bleſſing) but if he be a child, his Father or his Maſter doth theſe things in his ſtead, &c. But the Gloſs tells us, That theſe things are to be underſtood of an ordinary reader of the Prophets: מי שרגיל למפטיר Now Chriſt was an extraordinary Reader. However, he read here, which he hid not do in any other Synagogue; for this was the Synagogue to which he belonged, and he read as a member of that Synagogue.

VERS.

VERS. XVII.

Καὶ ἐπεδόθη αὐτῷ βιβλίον Ἡσαΐου. And there was delivered unto him the Book of Esaias.

I. THE Minister of the Church kept the sacred Books in his custody, and brought them out to be read, when they met together in the Synagogue.

m The High-Priest came to read (on the day of expiation) חזן הכנסת The Minister of the Synagogue, takes the Book of the Law, and giveth it to the Ruler of the Synagogue, &c. Where the Gloss is, חזן הכנסת שמש the Chazan of the Synagogue, that is, the ὑπηρέτης, the Minister. From him did our Saviour receive the Book, and to him he returned it again. m Joma, fol. 68. 2.

II. If it be askt whether he received the Book of the Prophet Isaiah by it self, or joyned with the other Prophets, it is not easie to determine it. We may gather something from what vulgarly obtained amongst them.

n The Rabbins deliver; Let a man frame the Law, and the Prophets, and the Holy Writings into one volume. They are the words of R. Meir. But R. Judah saith, Let the Law be apart, by it self: the Book of the Prophets by it self: and the Book of the Holy Writings by it self. o And the Wise-men say, Every Book by it self. n Bava bathra fol. 13. 2. o See the Tract Sopherim, cap. 3.

But we may ask, if every Prophet was by himself? Isaiah by himself, Jeremiah by himself, &c. It is probable they were: For so they sometimes divided the Law into single Quintanes, or fifth parts.

All know what title the Books of the Law do bear in the front of the Hebrew Bibles, viz. חמשה חומשי תורה The five Quintanes of the Law. Genesis is חומש ראשון the first Quintane: Exodus is חומש שני the second Quintane; and so of the rest. Concerning the dividing of every of these quintanes into particular Volumes, consult the Tract Sopherim, in the place already quoted.

גוללין ספר תורה במטפחת חומשין p They fold up the Book of the Law in the cloth of the Quintanes, and the Quintanes in the cloth of the Prophets and Hagiographa; but they do not fold up the Prophets and Hagiographa in the cloth of the Quintanes, nor the Quintanes in the cloth of the Law. And a little after, They lay the Law על חומשין upon the Quintanes, and the Quintanes upon the Prophets and Hagiographa, but not the Prophets and Hagiographa upon the Quintanes, nor the Quintanes upon the Law. That is, not any one single Quintane, upon all the Quintanes made up into one Volume. So the Gloss hath it; A Quintane, that is, A Book of the Law, in which there is only one Quintane. p Megill. fol. 27. 1.

Seeing therefore that the Book of the Law was sometimes divided in this manner into distinct Books, we may judge as well, that the greater Prophets might be thus divided also, and the twelve lesser made up into one Volume. Hence perhaps that passage: q The Reader of the Prophet might skip from one Text to another; אין מדלגין מנביא לנביא but he might not skip from Prophet to Prophet: but in the twelve Prophets it was lawful. For they were all made up in one Volume ready to his hand; and so were not the greater Prophets. q Megill. fol. 24. 1.

Give me leave therefore to conjecture that on that Sabbath wherein these things were transacted in the Synagogue at Nazareth, that Section which was to be read in the Prophets, was according to the Rubrick in the Prophet Isaiah; and upon that account the Minister of the Synagogue, delivered that Book to our Saviour when he stood up to read.

Καὶ ἀναπτύξας τὸ βιβλίον εὗρε τὸν τόπον, &c. And when he had opened the Book he found the place, &c.

In the Talmudick Language I would render it thus גולל ות ספרא אשבח ית דוכמא or גולל את הספר in Hebrew, unroling the Book. But then how should we render πτύξας τὸ βιβλίον, Vers. 20? Even in the very same words גולל את הספר roling up the Book.

r The High-Priest after the reading of the Law גולל ספר תורה ומניחו בחיקו Πτύξας τὸ βιβλίον τῷ νόμῳ, roling, or folding up the Book, puts it into his bosom: And yet r Joma, cap. 7. hal. 1.

s It is said, אין גוללין ספר תורה בציבור (which we must not render they do not fold up, but) they do not unfold, or unrol the Book of the Law in the Synagogue. s Fol. 70. 1.

גוללין נביא ברבים t They unrol a Prophet in the Congregation, but they do not unrol the Law in the Congregation. That is, as the Gloss hath it, גולל ספר מענין לענין u They unrol from one place or passage, to another passage in another place. So they were wont to do in the Prophets but not in the Law. And upon this account was it permitted for the Reader to skip in the Prophet from one place to another, because it was permitted them to unrol the Prophet, either a single Prophet, or the twelve lesser, in the Synagogue; but as to the Law, it was not allowed them so to do. t Massech. Sopherim. cap. 11. u Megill. fol. 32. 1.

x Megil. fol. 24. 1.

And they put the question, עד במה הוא מדלג x How far may he skip? כדי שלא יפסוק התורגמן So that he that Interprets do not break off. The Glosis is, Let him not skip from the place he reads, unless that he may גוללי הספר unrol the Book, and be ready to read the place to which he skips, when the Interpreter ceaseth.

And because it was not lawful for him so to unrol the Law in the Synagogue. On the Kalends of the month Tebeth, if it proved to be the Sabbath day, they brought three Books of the Law and read in one of them, the place for the Sabbath, in another, that for the Kalends, in the third, that for the Feast of dedication y.

The words therefore of our Evangelist ἀναπτύξας τὸ βιβλίον to me seem not barely to mean, that that he unfolded, or opened the Book, but that, being opened he unrolled it from folio to folio, till he had found the place he designed to Read and Expound. Which, though it was not the Section appointed by the Rubrick for the day: yet did not Christ much recede from the custom of the Synagogue, which allowed the Reader to skip from one place to another.

VERS. XXIII.

Ἰατρὲ θεράπευσον σεαυτόν. Physician, heal thy self.

YOU will say unto me this Proverb: Physician, heal thy self. I would express it thus in the Jerusalem language אסיא אסי יתך : אתון מחיליז לי מתלאדין.

z Bereh. rab. sect 23 & Tanchum, fol. 4. 2. אסיא אסי ית חגרתך z Physician, heal thine own lameness.

VERS. XXV.

Ὅτε ἐκλείσθη ὁ οὐρανὸς ἐπὶ ἔτη τρία, καὶ μῆνας ἕξ. When the heavens were shut up three years and six months.

THIS number of three years and six months is much used both in the Holy Scriptures, and in Jewish Writings; concerning which, we have more largely discoursed in another place. And although both in the one and the other, it is not seldom used allusively only, yet in this place I can see nothing hinder why it should not be taken according to the letter in its proper number, however indeed there will be no small difficulty to reduce it to its just account. That there was no rain for three years together is evident enough from 1 Kings XVII. &c. But whence comes this addition of six months?

Elijah said to Ahab, as the Lord God of Israel liveth, before whom I stand, there shall not be dew nor rain these years, but according to my word; אם יהיה השנים האלה If there shall be these years. These words include three years at the least, because he saith, שנים Years, in the plural, and not שנתים Years, in the Dual.

And Chap. XVIII. The word of the Lord came to Elijah in the third year, saying, Go shew thy self unto Ahab, and I will send rain upon the earth. In the third year, where then shall we find the six Months?

I. Doubtless both our Saviour, and his Apostle St. James, Chap. V. vers. 17. in adding six months, do speak according to the known and received opinion of that Nation; which is also done elsewhere sometimes, in Historical matters in the New Testament.

a See Hierosol. Sotah, fol. 18 3. and Tit. Bava. kama, fol 92. 1.

St. Stephen tells us, Acts VII. 16. that the bones of the twelve Patriarchs were carried over from Egypt, and buried in Sichem, when Holy Writ mentions only the bones and burial of Joseph. Wherein he speaks according to the vulgar opinion of the Nation a.

Again Vers. 30. he tells us, That Moses was forty years old when he fled into the Land of Midian, and that he tarried there forty years more; when Moses himself mentions nothing of this circumstance: This he speaks agreeably to the opinion of that people b.

b See Bereh. rab. sect. 100.

II. Neither our Saviour, nor St. James say that Elijah shut up the Heavens three years and six months; but Christ tells us, That the Heaven was shut up, in the days of Elias, three years and six months. And St. James, That Elias prayed that it might not rain, and it rained not upon the Earth by the space of three years and six months.

May I therefore have leave to distinguish in this manner. Elijah shut up the Heaven for three years, that there might be no rain, as in the Book of Kings. And there was no rain for three years and a half, as our Saviour and St. James relate.

III. The words of Menander in Josephus, may help a little toward the untying this knot. c Μέμνηται δὲ τῆς ἀνομβρίας ταύτης καὶ Μένανδρος ἐν ταῖς Ἰθωβάλου τοῦ Τυρίων Βασιλέως πραξέσιν. Ἀβροχία τε ἐπ' αὐτὴ ἐγένετο ἀπὸ τοῦ Ὑπερβερεταίου μηνὸς ἕως τοῦ ἐρχομένου ἔτους Ὑπερβερεταίου. Menander also makes mention of this drought in the acts of Ithobalus King of Tyre, saying: There was no rain from the month of October, to the month of October the year following.

c Antiqu. lib. 8. cap. 7.

It

It is true, he ſhortens the ſpace of this drought, by making it continue but one year; but however, having placed the beginning of it in the Month of October, gives us a key, that opens us a way into things more inward and ſecret.

IV. Conſider the diſtinction of the former and the latter rain יורה ומלקוש Deut. XI. 14. Jerem. V. 24. Joel II. 23.

d The Rabbins deliver יורה במרחש ומלקיש בנוסן The former is in the Month Marheſhvan, the latter, in the Month Niſan. d Taanith, fol. 6. 1.

The Targumiſt in Joel II. 23. Who hath given you the firſt rain in ſeaſon ומקישא בירה ניסן and the latter, in the month Niſan. See alſo our Note upon Chap. II. verſ. 8.

R. Solomon upon Deut. XI. differs a little, but we are not ſolicitous above the order, which ſhould be the firſt either that in the Month Marheſhvan, or that in the Month Niſan; that which makes to our purpoſe is, that rains were at thoſe ſtated times, and for the reſt of the year generally there was no rain.

V. Thoſe ſix Months mentioned by our Saviour and St. James muſt be accounted before the beginning of the three years, and not tackt to the end of them, as is very evident from this, that it is ſaid, The third year, Elijah ſhewed himſelf to Ahab, &c.

In the beginning therefore of thoſe three years, we believe Elijah ſhut up Heaven, upon the approach of that time wherein the rains were wont to fall in the Month of Marheſhvan, and opened Heaven again the ſame Month at the end of three years. Nor is it nothing that Menander ſpeaks of the Ἀβροχία, the drought, taking its beginning in the Month October, which in part anſwers to the Jews Marheſhvan; For conſult that paſſage Chap. XVIII. Ahab ſaid unto Obadiah, Go into the land unto all the fountains and all the vallies, perhaps we may find graſs to ſave the Horſes alive. No one will ſay this ſearch was made in Winter but in the Summer: not before, or in the Month Niſan, when the rains were wont to fall, for what hay or graſs could be expected at that time? but when the year grew on to the Summer, then was it a ſeaſonable time to enquire after hay and graſs. Reckon therefore the time of Ahab's and Obadiah's progreſs in this ſearch: the time, wherein Elijah and Obadiah meeting together, Ahab fell in with them: the time, wherein the Iſraelites and the Prophets of Baal were gathered together at Mount Carmel; when Elijah ſacrificed there, and the followers of Baal were killed; and certainly it will be more probable that the unlocking of the Heavens, and the fall of the rains happened in that uſual and ordinary ſeaſon, the Month Marheſhvan than any other part of the year. Three years agone, in that month when the rains were expected, according to the common ſeaſon of the year, Elijah ſhut Heaven up, that it ſhould not rain; and now at the cloſe of three years, when the ſeaſon for thoſe rains recurred, he unlocks the Heavens, and the rains fall abundantly.

VI. Now, go back from Marheſhvan, the Month wherein the Prophet lockt up Heaven, to the Month Niſan preceeding, and thoſe ſix Months between they were alſo without rain according to the ordinary courſe of the year and climate. In the Month Niſan it rained, the reſt of the year to Marheſhvan, it was fair and held up: when that Month came, the rains were expected, but Elijah had ſhut the Heavens up, and they remained ſhut up for the ſpace of three years enſuing. So that, though he did not ſhut up Heaven above the ſpace of three years, yet there was no rain for three years and ſix months.

VERS. XXVII.

Νεεμὰν ὁ Σύρος. Naaman the Syrian.

THeſe inſtances galled thoſe of Nazareth upon a twofold account.

I. That they looked upon themſelves as vilified by theſe examples; eſpecially if we conſider the occaſion upon which our Saviour brought them. Thou haſt wrought miracles in Capernaum, do ſomething alſo here, in thine own City. No, you are unworthy of it, as Iſrael of old was unworthy of the Prophets Elijah and Eliſha, who were therefore ſent amongſt the Gentiles.

II. That by theſe inſtances he plainly intimated the calling of the Gentiles, than which nothing could be more grating in the year of the Jews. Elijah was ſent to a Heathen Woman, and an Heathen Man was ſent to Eliſha: and both of them were turned from Heatheniſm to the true Religion. Thoſe words therefore of Naaman, 2 Kings V. 17, 18. I would thus render, Thy ſervant will henceforth offer neither Burnt-offering, nor Sacrifice to ſtrange Gods, but unto Jehovah. And concerning this thing the Lord pardon thy ſervant (viz. concerning my former Idolatry) that when my Maſter went into the houſe of Rimmon to worſhip there, and leaned on my hand, I alſo bowed my ſelf in the houſe of Rimmon; for that I bowed my ſelf in the houſe of Rimmon the Lord pardon thy ſervant concerning this thing.

VERS. XXIX.

Εἰς τὸ κατακρημνίσαι αὐτὸν. That they might caſt him down headlong.

BY what authority, or by what legal proceſs could thoſe of Nazareth do this? There was indeed a Court of Judicature conſiſting of three men, becauſe there was a Synagogue, but it was not in the power of that Court to decree any thing in capital matters. It may be askt whether that licenſe that was permitted the קנאין the Zelots, extended thus far: e He that ſteals the conſecrated diſhes, and curſeth by a Conjurer, (that is curſeth God in the name of an Idol) and goes in to an Heathen Woman (that is, openly, as Zimri, Numb. XXV. 6.) קנאין פוגעין בו the Zelots ſlay him. And the Prieſt that miniſters in his uncleanneſs, his brethren the Prieſts beat out his brains with clubs. But doth this licenſe of the Zelot belong to all perſons upon all occaſions? When Nathaniel ſaid, Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth? He does not ſeem there to reflect ſo much upon the ſmallneſs and inſignificancy of the Town, as the looſeneſs and pravity of its manners.

Ἐν τῷ εἶναι αὐτὸν ἐν μιᾷ τῶν πόλεων, καὶ ἰδοὺ ἀνὴρ πλήρης λέπρας. When he was in a certain City, behold a man full of Leproſie.

g THE walled Cities are more holy than the land of Iſrael in general שמשלחין מתוכן המצורעים becauſe they caſt out the Leprous from them. Which muſt be underſtood (if we allow of the Rabbins for Interpreters) of Cities that had been walled from the days of Joſua. If this City which the Evangeliſt here mentions, were of that number, no Leper would have been ſuffered in it, unleſs abſolved from his uncleanneſs by the Prieſt. For the Leproſie remained after that abſolution, and the ſick man was not healed, but reſtored to the Church. That the man is here ſaid to be πλήρης λέπρας, full of Leproſie; the paſſage may not impertinently be compared with Levit. XIII. 12, 13. g Kelim, cap. 1. hal. 7.

Whether he had been purified by the Prieſt before or no; however, Chriſt ſends him to the Prieſt, to offer what was required from the Leper that was cleanſed. The Law of Moſes hardly ſuppoſeth the Leper healed, when he was made clean. It is a queſtion indeed whether the Diſeaſe was ever cureable, but by a miracle. And therefore is this man ſent to the Temple, to ſhew himſelf to the Prieſt, and offer εἰς τὸ μαρτύριον αὐτοῖς, for a teſtimony unto them, verſ. 14. That is, that he might bear witneſs, that the Leproſie, an incurable diſeaſe, was now healed by miracle as formerly it had been in Miriam and Naaman, and ſo there was now a great Prophet ariſen in Iſrael.

CHAP. VI.

VERS. I.

Ἐν σαββάτῳ δευτεροπρώτῳ. On the ſecond Sabbath after the firſt.

I Have ſpoken to this already, in notes upon Matth. XII. Let me add a few things in this place.

It is a controverſie amongſt the Jewiſh Doctors, and the Baitheuſeans, about the expoſition of theſe words that concern the offering of the ſheaf of the firſt fruits; ממחרת השבת On the morrow of the Sabbath, Levit. XXIII. 10, 11.

Gloſs. a The Baithuſeans deſired that the firſt day of the Paſsover ſhould be on the Sabbath, that the offering of the ſheaf might fall on the firſt day of the week: And that the Feaſt of Pentecoſt might alſo fall on the firſt day of the week: For they interpreted thoſe a In Roſh haſhanah, fol. 22. 2.

words יניפנו מממחרת השבת the Prieſt ſhall wave the ſheaf on the morrow of the Sabbath, as if the ſenſe of them were on the morrow of the Sabbath of the Creation.

Againſt this the Rabbins diſpute, with one conſent, and indeed truly enough affirming that by the morrow after the Sabbath muſt be underſtood the morrow after a ſabbatical day, or after the firſt day of the Feaſt. So the Targumiſt, Siphra, Solomon, Menatiem, &c. So alſo the Greek Verſion. We may ſee their Arguments b. The principal Argument is that of Rabban Johanan diſputing with a Baithuſean, in the place laſt quoted. One Scripture (ſaith he) ſaith, you ſhall number fifty days, (that is, from the day wherein you offer your ſheaf, unto Pentecoſt) Levit. XXIII. 16. Another Scripture ſaith, ye ſhall count ſeven Sabbaths, Levit. XXIII. 14. Deut. XVI. 9. נאם ביט שחל להיות בשבת This, if the firſt day of the Feaſt happen on the Sabbath. נאם ביט שחל להיות באמצע שבת That, if the firſt day of the Feaſt happen in the middle of the week.

b In Siphra, and Peſikta, and Menacoth, fol. 65. 1.

His meaning is this: If the firſt day of the Seven-days Feaſt of the Paſsover happen on the Sabbath, then, the ſheaf being offered the next day after, the Feaſt of Pentecoſt will fall on the next day after the ſeventh Sabbath. But if that firſt day happen in the middle of the week, then from the offering of the ſheaf the next day, we muſt not count ſeven Sabbaths, but fifty days.

For inſtance: ſuppoſe we, the Lamb eaten on the third day of the Jewiſh week which with us is Tueſday: Wedneſday was the firſt day of the Feaſt, and on Thurſday the ſheaf was offered; then on Thurſday again, accounting fifty days, is the Feaſt of Pentecoſt. Here Seven Sabbaths come between, and four days after the laſt Sabbath, before the Pentecoſt. Where, numbring by Sabbaths ſhortens the ſpace of time, but numbring by fifty days, fixes the matter beyond ſcruple. And at once it concludes theſe two things: I. That the offering of the ſheaf was not reſtrained to the next day after the Sabbath, but to the day after the ſabbatical day, viz. the firſt day of the Feaſt. II. That the day of Pentecoſt was not reſtrained to the firſt day of the week, as the Baithuſeans would have it, but might fall on any day of the week.

What ſhould be the Baithuſeans reaſon why they ſo earneſtly contended to reduce the day of Pentecoſt always to the morrow after the Sabbath, or the firſt day of the week, is not eaſie to comprehend. Perhaps he that diſputes the matter with Rabban Johanan gives ſome hint of it, when he tells us, Our maſter Moſes loved Iſrael, and knowing שעצרת יום א' that the Feaſt of Pentecoſt ſhould be but for one day, did therefore appoint it, on the morrow after the Sabbath, that Iſrael might rejoyce two days together.

Whatever the reaſon was, it is certain they miſunderſtood that phraſe ממחרת השבת as to the offering the ſheaf, the morrow after the Sabbath, when it was to be underſtood of the morrow after a Sabbatical day. And ſo the Greek Verſion, Καὶ ἀνοίσει τὸ δρᾶγμα ἔναντι Κυρίου δεκτὸν ὑμῖν· τῇ ἐπαύριον τῆς σαββατης, And he ſhall offer the ſheaf before the Lord to be accepted for you, on the morrow after the firſt day of the Feaſt.

Let us take an inſtance of this in the laſt Paſsover our Saviour kept.

The Paſchal Lamb was eaten on the fifth day of the week, our Thurſday; The firſt day of the Feaſt was the ſixth day of the week, our Friday; the day on which our Lord was Crucified. The day declining towards night (about the time that our Lord was buried) they went out that were deputed by the Sanhedrin to reap the ſheaf: and on the morrow (that is their Sabbath) whiles our Saviour ſlept in the grave, they offered that ſheaf. That day therefore was the δευτέρα or the ſecond day, and from thence they counted the weeks to Pentecoſt. The Sabbaths that came between, taking their name from that δευτέρα, that ſecond day. The firſt Sabbath after that was δευτεροπρῶτον, the firſt Sabbath after the ſecond day; and the next Sabbath after that was δευτεροδεύτερον, the ſecond Sabbath after the ſecond day, and ſo of the reſt.

c The firſt day of the Paſsover is called the Sabbath, and they counted after that שבע שבתות המיוחסין אליו ſeven Sabbaths that had relation to that. Note that המיוחסין That had relation or alliance.

c Famoam in Adaroth, fol. 22. 1.

VERS. XII.

Ἐν τῇ προσευχῇ τοῦ Θεοῦ. In Prayer to God. Or, In the Prayer of God.

COmpare this kind of phraſe with what is ſaid, d R. Johanan in the name of R. Joſe ſaith, מנין שהברה מתפלל How doth it appear that the Holy bleſſed God doth pray? From thence that it is ſaid, I will bring them to my holy mountain and make them joyful in the houſe of my prayer בבית תפלתי It is not ſaid, of their prayer, but תפלתי of my prayer. Whence it follows, that the Holy bleſſed God doth pray. But how doth he pray? Saith Rabh Zutra bar Tobijah; Rabh ſaith; Let it be my good pleaſure that my mercy overcome my wrath. תפלחם לא נאמר d Beracoth, fol. 7. 1.

עשה לו הקבה סוכה והוה מתפלל בתוכה e The Holy Bleſſed God made him a Tabernacle and prayed in it: as it is ſaid, his Tabernacle is in Salem, and his dwelling place in Zion. Now, what doth he ſay, when he prayeth? יהי רצון שיראה בבנין ביתי Let it be my good pleaſure, that I may ſee my dwelling place built. e Berach. Rabb. fol. 63. 3.

I cannot but laugh at their triflings, and yet withal obſerve the opinion that Nation had, and compare it with this phraſe, Προσευχὴ τοῦ Θεοῦ, The prayer of God. They will have it that God prays not by way of ſupplication, but authority: So let it be. Thus our Bleſſed Lord ſometimes, Πάτερ θέλω, Father I will, Joh. XVII. 24. Whether the phraſe in this place ſhould be thus interpreted, I do not determine.

VERS. XXXVIII.

Whence is hinted that there were two* עשרתות decimaries (or tithing meaſures) in the Temple: אחד גריש One heapt up, ואחד מחוק the other ſtricken off. The heaped up, was that by which they meaſured all their bread corn for holy uſes. [כל המנחות.] That which was ſtricken off, was that whereby they meaſured the cakes, or the High-Prieſts loaves. g All the meaſures in the Temple were heaped up, beſides that of the High-Prieſts. Now the Gloſs giving the reaſon why this was not heaped up as well as the other, tells us, It was becauſe he was to divide the flower into two tenths; if therefore the meaſure was heaped up, ſome of the fine flower would ſpill upon the ground, as he moved it this way and that way in dividing it. f See Menacoth, fol. 87. g Ibid. fol. 50. 1.

h Rabb Papa askt מלא חפניו The filling of the Prieſts hand, whereof we have mention, מחוקות או ורושות Was it by the meaſure ſtricken off, or heaped up? R. Aba ſaith to Rabb Iſhai, the filling of the Prieſts hand, of which we have mention, was neither by the meaſures ſtricken off nor heaped up, אלא מצופות but by meaſures floating over. h Joma, fol. 48. 1.

II. Every one may obſerve our Evangeliſt in his repetition of this Sermon upon the Mount, doth omit many things that are ſet down in St. Matthew; thoſe eſpecially that have relation to the dictates and gloſſes of the Scribes and Phariſees, about Man-ſlaughter, Oaths, Divorces, &c. or their cuſtoms in their Prayers, Faſts, and Alms, &c. Writing for the Service of the Gentiles, he paſſeth over what reſpected the Jews.

CHAP. VII.

VERS. II.

Ὃς ἦν αὐτῷ ἔντιμος. Who was dear unto him.

SO was Tabi to his Maſter Rabban Gamaliel: of whom we meet with ſeveral things up and down, particularly that in Beracoth, fol. 16. 2. When his ſervant Tabi was dead, he received conſolations for him. His diſciples ſay unto him, Maſter, thou haſt taught us, that they do not uſe to receive conſolations for their ſervants; He anſwered them ſaying, my ſervant Tabi, was not as other ſervants, he was moſt upright.

VERS. V.

Τὴν συναγωγὴν αὐτὸς ᾠκοδόμησεν ἡμῖν. He he hath built us a Synagogue.

I. IT was no unuſual thing for one ſingle man to build a Synagogue at his own charge. a If any man build an Houſe, and afterward conſecrate it to a Synagogue, it is of the nature of a Synagogue. Gloſs. b Any one that builds a Synagogue, and gives it to his fellow-Citizens, &c. a Kitſur Piske הראש in Megillah, Artic. 41. b In Rabbenu Aſher, ibid. fol. 37. 2.

And the Doctors in that Treatiſe c diſpute much upon this queſtion, whether it be lawful to ſell a Synagogue, or to alienate it to any civil uſe: and amongſt the reſt, they ſuppoſe ſome one building a Synagogue, but would at laſt reſerve it to his own proper uſe. c Megillah, cap. 4.

II. They

II. They had no ſcruple as to a Gentile building it, ſince the holineſs of the place conſiſted not ſo much in the building, as in its being ſet apart, and dedicated to holy uſe, of which we have ſome inſtance in Herod's building the Temple. Such an one had this Centurion approved himſelf toward the Jewiſh Nation, that concerning his liberty, and devotion in being at the charges of building, they found no reaſon to move any ſcruple.

k Bereſh. rabb. ſect. 100. k Jacob ſaid to his Sons, beware ye יגע ערל במטתי שלא that no uncircumciſed perſon touch my Bed, leſt he drive away thence the divine preſence.

VERS. XXXVII.

Γυνὴ ἁμαρτωλὸς. A Woman that was a ſinner.

I. WOmen of an ill name amongſt the Jews were ſuch as theſe:

l Chetub. fol. 72. 1. l She who tranſgreſſeth the Law of Moſes, and the Jewiſh Law. The Gloſs is, The Jewiſh Law, that is, what the Daughters of Iſrael follow, though it be not written.

Who is ſhe that tranſgreſſeth the Law of Moſes? She that gives her husband to eat of what is not yet tithed. She that ſuffers his embraces while her Menſtrua are upon her. She that doth not ſet apart a loaf of bread for her ſelf. She that voweth, and doth not perform her vow.

How doth ſhe tranſgreſs the Jewiſh Law? If ſhe appears abroad with her head uncovered. If ſhe ſpin in the ſtreets. If ſhe talk with every one ſhe meets. Abba Saul ſaith, If ſhe curſe her Children. R. Tarphon ſaith, If ſhe be loud and clamorous. The Gloſs is, If ſhe deſire coition with her husband within doors, ſo very loud that her neighbours may hear her.

Maimon, upon the place: If when ſhe is ſpinning in the ſtreet, ſhe makes her arms ſo naked that men may ſee them. If ſhe hang either Roſes, or Myrtle, or a Pomegranate, or any ſuch thing either at her eyes or cheeks. If ſhe play with young men. If ſhe curſe her husbands father in the preſence of her husband, &c.

II. How-

II. However, I preſume the word ἁμαρτωλὸς, ſinner ſounds ſomething worſe than all this, which alſo is commonly conjectured of this Woman, viz. that ſhe was actually an Adultereſs, and every way a lewd Woman. It is well known what the word חטאים ſinners, ſignifies in the Old Teſtament, and what ἁμαρτωλοὶ, ſinners, in the New.

VERS. XXXVIII.

Καὶ ϛᾶσα ὀπίσω παρὰ τοὺς πόδας αὐτοῦ ὀπίσω. And ſtood at his feet behind him.

SHE waſhed his feet as they lay ſtretcht out behind him: of which poſture we treat more largely in our Notes upon Joh. XII.

VERS. XLVII.

Ὅτι ἠγάπησε πολύ. For ſhe loved much.

IF we conſider theſe two or three things we ſhall quickly underſtand the force and deſign of the word ὅτι, for, &c.

I. That this was not the firſt time when this Woman betook her ſelf to our Saviour nor is this the firſt of her receiving remiſſion of her ſins. It is ſuppoſed, and that not without good reaſon, that this was Mary Magdalen. If ſo, then had her ſeven devils been caſt out of her before; and at that time her ſins had been forgiven her, our Lord at once indulging to her the cure both of her body and her mind. She therefore having been obliged by ſo great a mercy, in gratitude and devotion now throws her ſelf at the feet of Chriſt. She had obtained remiſſion of her ſins before this action: And from thence came this action, not from this action her forgiveneſs.

II. Otherwiſe the ſimilitude which our Saviour propounds about forgiving the debt, would not be to be the purpoſe at all. The debt is not releaſed becauſe the debtor loves his creditor, but the debtor loves becauſe his debt is forgiven him. Remiſſion goes before, and love follows.

III. Chriſt doth not ſay, ſhe hath waſhed my feet with her tears, and wiped them with the hairs of her head, and anointed me with oyntment ϛ χάριν ἀφέωνται αἱ ἁμαρτίαι, therefore her ſins are forgiven; but ϛ χάριν λέγω σοι ἀφέωνται, &c. For this cauſe I ſay unto thee, her ſins are forgiven her. He tells Simon this that he might ſatisfie the murmuring Phariſee. "Perhaps, Simon, thou wondereſt within thy ſelf, that ſince this "hath been ſo lewd a Woman, I ſhould ſo much as ſuffer her to touch me, but I muſt "tell thee that it is very evident even from this obſequiouſneſs of hers, and the good "offices ſhe hath done to me, that her ſins are forgiven her: She could never have given "theſe teſtimonies and fruits of her gratitude, and devotion, if ſhe had ſtill remained "in her guilt, and not been looſed from her ſins.

CHAP. VIII.

VERS. II.

Μαρία ἡ καλουμένη Μαγδαληνή. Mary, called Magdalene.

WHence ſhould ſhe have this name?

I. We have obſerved above in our Notes upon Matth. XXVII. 56. that there is mention made in the Talmudick Authors of מרים מגדלא שיער נשיא Maria Magdilaſeen Naſhaia, the Daughter of Maria a plaiter of Womens hair; who, they ſay was the Wife of פפוס Papus ben Juda, but an Adultereſs. They make this Papus co-temporary with Rabban Gamaliel (he of Jaſneh) and R. Joſhua a; and with R. Akibah b: who all lived both before and after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem: So that the times do not very much diſagree. And probable it is, that the Gemariſts retained ſome memory of our Mary Magdalene in the word מגדלא Magdila.

a Hieroſ. Bava batra, fol. 15. 1. b Gloſs, in Schabb. fol. 104. 2.

II. We further obſerve in our Notes upon Joh. XII. that there was a certain Town near Jeruſalem called Magdala, of a very ill fame, which perhaps was Bethany it ſelf; or be it it ſome other, yet might our Mary (if ſhe was the Siſter of Lazarus) not unfitly be called called Magdalene, either as ſhe might have lived there ſome time, being there married, or have imitated the whoriſh cuſtoms of that place. But I am apt to think that Bethany it ſelf might go under the name of Magdala.

Ἀφ' ἧς δαιμόνια ἑπτὰ ἐξεληλύθει. Out of whom went ſeven devils.

As to the number ſeven, we contend not, when there is hardly any thing more uſual than to put this certain number for an uncertain. Our difficulty is, whether theſe words are to be taken according to their letter, or according to the Jewiſh ſenſe who were wont to call vices by the name of Devils: as, An evil affection is Satan c. Drunkeneſs by new wine is a devil. d If this Mary be the ſame with the Woman that was a ſinner in the foregoing Chapter, as is believed, then by devils ſeems to be underſtood the vices ſhe was addicted to; eſpecially when both the Phariſee and Evangeliſt call her a ſinner, rather than Demoniack. But this we leave at the choice of the Reader.

c Gloſs in Joma, fol. 67. 2. d Gittin. fol. 17. 2, &c.

VERS. III.

Χουζᾶ. The Wife of Chuſa.

WE meet with ſuch a name in Haman's Genealogy. e The King promoted Haman the Hammadethite, the Agathite בן כוזא the Son of Chuza, &c. The Targumiſt, Eſth. 5. reckoning up the ſame Genealogy mentions not this name, and differs in others. Only this let us take notice of by the way, That Chuza is a name in the Family of Hamon the Edomite, and this Chuza here was in the Family of Herod, who himſelf was of the blood of the Edomites.

VERS. XVIII.

Ὃς γὰρ ἂν ἔχῃ δοθήσεται αὐτῷ. To him that hath ſhall be given.

GOD's f meaſure is not like the meaſure of fleſh and blood. The meaſure of fleſh and blood is this: An empty veſſel is receptive, but a full one can take in no more. But God's meaſure is this, The full veſſel is receptive of more, but the empty veſſel receives nothing; according as it is ſaid אם שמיע תשמע If hearing thou wilt hear; that is, if thou heareſt thou ſhalt hear, if thou doſt not hear thou ſhalt not hear. The Gloſs is, If thou accuſtom thy ſelf to hear, then thou ſhalt hear, and learn and add. That is not much unlike, g God doth not give wiſdom, but to him with whom is wiſdom already.

CHAP. IX.

VERS. III.

Μήτε ἀνὰ δύο χιτῶνας ἔχειν. Neither have two coats apiece.

EITHER my computation of times very much deceives me, or the Winter was now coming on when the Apoſtles were ſent forth, and yet Chriſt forbids that they ſhould be clothed with a double garment. It was not much that that they ſhould be forbid to take money or proviſion for their journey, becauſe they were to have their food adminiſtred to them, as the reward of their preaching the Goſpel. But to ſtrive with the cold and winter without ſufficient clothing ſeems ſomething hard.

I. It was not an unuſual thing in that Nation that ſome, out of a more Religious ſeverity, did cloth themſelves but with a ſingle garment: of which thing we have already ſpoken in Notes upon Mark XIV. 51. to which probably that paſſage may have ſome reference: a R. Joſe ſaith, Let my portion be מחתי בחולי מעיים with thoſe who dye of the diſeaſe in their bowels: for, ſaith Mar, Very many righteous men dye of the diſeaſe in their bowels, viz. a diſeaſe contracted by the auſterities of their life, both as to food and clothing. And ſo it is ſaid particularly of the Prieſts.

b The Prieſts walkt barefoot upon the pavement, they uſed water and were not clad אלא בגד אחד but with a ſingle garment. And from this cuſtom, their natural vigor languiſhed, and their bowels grew infirm.

b Gloſs. in Shekalim, cap. 5.

For

For this very reaſon was there a Phyſician appointed in the Temple, upon whom the charge lay of remedying this evil. Whom we might not unfitly call the Bowel-Doctor.

Now it may be enquired whether our Lord from this example preſcribed this ſeverity to his Apoſtles, not allowing them more than a ſingle garment, when this journeying of theirs to Preach the Goſpel was a Winters work. For they returned from this journey a little before the Paſſover. Compare the 10*th. Verſ.* of this Chapter, and ſo on, with Joh. VI. 4. and ſo on. But let us a little enlarge upon this ſubject.

In both the Talmuds, c there are reckoned up eighteen ſeveral garments wherewith the Jew is clothed from head to foot, amongſt the reſt two ſhoes, two buskins. &c. but thoſe which are more properly called garments, and which are put upon the body, are reckoned theſe: c Hieroſ. Talm. fol. 15. 4 & Bab. Sanhed. fol. 120. 1.

1. מקטורן Mactoren which word is variouſly rendered by ſeveral men. By the Gloſs מגטורל I ſuppoſe a Mantle: By Aruch מעיל a Cloake; by others, an Hood. In the Gloſs upon Bava bathra c it is made the ſame with Talith. c Fol. 57. 2.

d Reſh Lachiſh went to Bozrah, and ſeeing ſome Iſraelites eating of fruits that had not been tithed, forbad them. Coming before R. Jonathan, he ſaith to him אר מקטורן עלך ויהל even while thy Mactoren, or Cloak is upon thee, go and recal thy prohibition. d Aboda Zara, fol. 58. 2.

2. קולבין שהל פשתן Kolbin of thread. Which the Babylonians call קלבוס Kolbos. The ordinary Jewiſh garment was טליתא Talith, the outward garment, and חלוק Chaluk, the inward. But in the place quoted is no mention of Talith in ſo many ſyllables at all; but inſtead of it קולבין, a Greek word for an Hebrew one קולבין that is Κολόβιον, a Coat.

e Speaking of the Scribes, Moreover they wore garments diſtinguiſht by the Phylacteries, which were certain borders of purple. Ἀλλ' ἐπὶ δὲ στολαῖς, εἴτ' οὖν ἀμπεχόνας οἱ τοιοῦτοι ἀνεβάλλοντο, ἢ Δαλματικὰς εἴτ' οὖν Κολοβίωνας, &c. They uſed long robes or a certain ſort of garment which we may call Dalmaticks, or Kolobia, which were wove in with large borders of purple. e Epiphan. lib. 1. cap. 15.

That he means the טליתא Talith, the thing it ſelf declares; for thoſe borders of purple were no other than ציצית the Zuzith, certain skirts, hung and ſewed on to the Talith.

3. חלוק שהל עמר A Woolen ſhirt, the inward garment. Whence the Gloſs. חלוק קמישא על בשרו The Chaluk was the ſhirt upon his skin. Hence that boaſt of R. Jose, That the roof of his houſe, had not throughout his whole life, ſeen what was within that ſhirt of his. f Schab. fol. 113. 2.

II. And now the queſtion returns, viz. whether by thoſe δύο χιτῶνας in the place before us ſhould be meant, thoſe two kinds of garments, the Talith and the Chaluk, that is that they ſhould take but one of them; or thoſe two kinds doubled; that is, that they ſhould take but one of each. Whether our Saviour bound them to take but one of thoſe garments, or whether he forbad them taking two of each.

I conceive he might bind them to take but one of thoſe garments: for, although χιτῶν when joyned with ἱμάτιον may be applied to ſome particular garment, yet, when it is not ſo joyned, it may ſignifie only clothing in general. When our Lord commands them μὴ ἐνδύσασθαι δύο χιτῶνας not to put on two coats g. The foregoing words may beſt explain what he means by it: for when he cuts them ſhort of other parts of garments and neceſſaries, ſuch as a ſcrip, a ſtaff, and ſandals, we may reaſonably ſuppoſe he would cut them ſhort of one of the ordinary garments, either the Talith or the Chaluk. g Mat. VI. 9.

This may ſeem ſomething ſevere, that he ſhould ſend them out in the Winter time half naked: But, 1. This well enough became that Providence which he was determined in a more peculiar manner to exert toward them, as may be gathered from Luke XXII. 35. and to the charge of which he would commit them. Of ſuch a kind and nature was his Providence in preſerving them, as was ſhewn toward the Iſraelites in the Wilderneſs, which ſuffered not their garments to wax old, which kept their bodies from decay and diſeaſes, and their feet unhurt by all their travel. 2. It ſuited well enough with the mean and low eſtate of that Kingdom of Heaven, and the Meſſiah, which the Apoſtles were to Preach up and propagate, ſo that from the view of the firſt publiſhers, the Jews might learn to frame a right judgment concerning both the Meſſiah and his Kingdom, viz. they might learn to believe in the Meſſiah, when they ſhould obſerve him capable ſo wondrouſly to protect his meſſengers, though ſurrounded with ſuch numberleſs inconveniences of life: and might further be taught, not to expect a pompous Kingdom, when they ſee the propagators of it, of ſo mean a degree and quality.

The words of the Baptiſt h ὁ ἔχων δύο χιτῶνας μεταδότω, He that hath two coats let him impart, &c. may be alſo underſtood in this ſence, that he that hath both the Talith and the Chaluk, may give to him that is naked and hath neither, either the one or the other. h Luke III. 11.

VERS. VIII.

Ὅτι προφήτης τὶς τῶν ἀρχαίων ἀνέστη. That one of the old Prophets was riſen again.

SO is the expreſſion again Verſ. 19. in which ſenſe the ὁ προφήτης, that Prophet muſt be taken. John I. 21, 25. that is, ὁ προφήτης τὶς τῶν ἀρχαίων ὃς ἀνέστη, one of the old Prophets that is riſen again.

Although they lookt for no other Prophet (excepting Elias only) before the appearing of the Meſſiah, yet doth it ſeem that they had an opinion that ſome of the antient Prophets ſhould riſe again, and that the time was now at hand wherein they ſhould ſo do; and that becauſe they made ſuch frequent mention of it in their common talk, that ſome one of the old Prophets were riſen again.

VERS. XXX.

Μωσῆς καὶ Ἠλίας. Moſes and Elias.

THE Jews have a fiction that Moſes ſhall come with Elias, when Elias himſelf comes.

i Debarim rabbi, fol. 293. 4. i The Holy Bleſſed God ſaid to Moſes, As thou haſt given thy life for Iſrael in this world, ſo in the ages to come, when I ſhall bring Elias the Prophet amongſt them שניכם באין כאחת you two ſhall come together.

But the riſe and foundation of this opinion is very ridiculous indeed, having its firſt ground from Nahum I. 3. יהוה בסופה ובסערה דרכו But Moſes when an infant was thrown into בסופה Exod. II. And Elias went up into Heaven בסערה 2 Kings II. This it is for ſuch as theſe to allegorize the Holy Scriptures!

They alſo feign that Moſes was raiſed up at the ſame time with Samuel by the Witch of Endor.

k Yalkut rabbi, fol. 19. 3. k Samuel thought that day had been the day of judgment, and therefore he raiſed Moſes along with himſelf.

l Debarim, fol. 93. 1. l Moſes did not dye [for the juſt dye not] but went up into the higheſt, to miniſter before God.

VERS. XXXI.

Ἔλεγον τὴν ἔξοδον αὐτοῦ. They ſpake of his deceaſe.

THE French and the Italian Tranſlation do render this word Ἔξοδον too looſely. The French, Diſſoyent ſur leiſſue; the Italian, Dicevane il ſucceſſo ſuo. And I wiſh the Engliſh have not done it too narrowly: They ſpake of his deceaſe. It were better, they ſpake of his departure. For the aſcent of Chriſt into Heaven, was as well his Ἔξοδος as his death; nay I may ſay more, if at leaſt in the word Exodus, there be any alluſion to the Iſraelites going out of Egypt. For that was in victory and triumph, as alſo the aſcent of Chriſt into Heaven was.

There is no queſtion but they did indeed diſcourſe with him about his death and the manner of it, viz. his crucifixion; whereas Moſes and Elias themſelves did depart without any pain or anguiſh; but I ſhould think however, that there is more contained in that word; and that the expreſſion ἀναλήψεως αὐτοῦ, the time of his receiving up, Verſ. 51. hath ſome reference to ἔξοδον αὐτοῦ his departure.

We meet with the word ἔξοδος in the Greek Verſion, Prov. XXX. 12. There is a generation accounteth it ſelf righteous, τὴν δὲ ἔξοδον αὐτοῦ οὐκ ἀπένιψεν, but yet hath not waſhed its going out: obſcurely enough indeed, and beſide the Text. They read it ומיציאתו when in the original it is ומצאתו and yet is not waſhed from its filthineſs.

VERS. LI.

Ἐν τῷ συμπληροῦσθαι τὰς ἡμέρας τῆς ἀναλήψεως αὐτοῦ. When the time was come that he ſhould be received up.

IT is a difficulty amongſt ſome why there ſhould be any mention τῆς ἀναλήψεως, of his receiving up, when there is no mention of his death. But let it be only granted that under that expreſſion ἔξοδον αὐτοῦ is included the aſcenſion of Chriſt, and then the difficulty is ſolved: The Evangeliſt ſeeming from thence to calculate. Moſes and Elias had ſpoken of his departure out of this world; that is, of his final departure, when he took leave of it at his aſcenſion into heaven: And from thence forward, till the time

ſhould come wherein he ſhould be received up, he ſtedfaſtly ſet his face toward Jeruſalem, reſolving with himſelf to be preſent at all the Feaſts that ſhould precede his ἀνάλυψιν, or receiving up.

He goes therefore to the Feaſt of Tabernacles, and what he did there, we have it told us John VII. After ten weeks or thereabout, he went up to the Feaſt of Dedication, Chap. XIII. 22. and Joh. X. 22. and at length to the laſt Feaſt of all, his own Paſsover, Chap. XVII. 11.

VERS. LII.

Εἰς κώμην Σαμαρειτῶν. Into a Village of the Samaritans.

IT may be a queſtion whether the Jews in their journeying to and from Jeruſalem would ordinarily deign to lodge in any of the Samaritan Towns. But if neceſſity ſhould at any time compel them to betake themſelves into any of their Inns, we muſt know that nothing but their mere hatred to the Nation could forbid them. For, m Their land was clean, their waters were clean, their dwellings were clean, and their roads were clean. So that there could be no offenſe or danger of uncleanneſs in their dwelling, and ſo long as the Samaritans in moſt things came the neareſt the Jewiſh Religion of all others, there was leſs danger of being defiled either in their meats, or beds, or tables, &c.

m Hieroſ. Avod. Zarah, fol. 44. 4.

VERS. LV.

Οὐκ οἴδατε οἵου πνεύματός ἐστε ὑμεῖς. Ye know not what manner of ſpirit ye are of.

WHat Elias once did to thoſe of Samaria, the Sons of Zebedee had an ambition to imitate in this place; dreaming (as it ſhould ſeem) that there were thoſe thunders and lightnings in their very name Boanarges, that ſhould break out at pleaſure for the death and deſtruction of thoſe that provoked them. But, could you not ſee O ye Sons of Zebedee, how careful and tender your maſter was from the very bottom of his ſoul, about the lives and well-being of mankind? How he healed the ſick, cured thoſe that were poſſeſt with Devils, and raiſed the dead: and will you be breathing ſlaughter and fire, and no leſs deſtruction to the Town, than what had happened to Sodom? Alas! you do not know, or have not conſidered what kind of ſpirit and temper becomes the Apoſtles of the Meſſiah.

VERS. LX.

Ἄφες τοὺς νεκροὺς θάψαι τοὺς ἑαυτῶν νεκρούς. Let the dead bury their dead.

THE Jews accounted of the Gentiles as no other than dead. n עמי הארצות אינן חיים the people of the earth (that is, the Gentiles) do not live. And as the Gentiles, ſo even amongſt themſelves, theſe four ſorts are ſo eſteemed. o ארבע הן חשובין כמתים Theſe four are accounted as dead, the blind, the leproſe, the poor, and the childleſs.

CHAP. X.

VERS. I.

Ἑβδομήκοντα. Seventy.

WHY the Vulgar ſhould have ſeventy and two, they themſelves, I ſuppoſe are able to give no very good reaſon. Much leſs the Interpreter of Titus Boſtrenſis when in the Greek Copy before him he ſaw only ἑβδομήκοντα, why he ſhould render Septuaginta duos, ſeventy two, who can tell?

Aben Ezra upon the ſtory of Eldad and Medad a hath this paſſage: The wiſe men ſay, that Moſes took ſix out of every tribe, and the whole number amounted to ſeventy and two: but whereas the Lord had commanded only ſeventy, the odd two were laid aſide. Now if God laid aſide two of thoſe who had been enrolled, and endowed with the Holy Spirit, a Numb. XI.

that ſo there might be the juſt number of ſeventy only, we can hardly imagine why our Saviour ſhould add two, to make it LXXII and not LXX. d It was ſaid to Moſes at Mount Sinai, Go up thou and Aaron, and Nadab and Abihu, and ſeventy of the Elders of Iſrael: ſo will the holy bleſſed God ordain to himſelf in the world to come ישיבה של זקנים משלו a counſel of Elders of his own people. Now the number of this Conſiſtory, the Doctors determine to be no other than ſeventy. A Council of Seventy two was never heard of amongſt the Jews, but once only at Jabneh.

d Vajicra rabba, fol. 178 1.

a Jadaim, cap. 3. hal. 3. a R. Simeon ben Azzai ſaith אני מפי עב זקנ מקובל I receiv'd it from the mouths of the LXXII Elders, on the day when they made R. Eliezar ben Azariah one of the Sanhedrin. Nor did they then remove Rabban Gamaliel, although he had diſpleas'd them.

VERS. III.

Ὡς ἄρνας ἐν μέσῳ λύκων. As lambs among wolves.

b Mat. X. c Fol. 17. 3. IT is added in another Evangeliſt, b Be ye wiſe as ſerpents, &c. with which we may compare that in Midr. Schir. c The holy bleſſed God ſaith concerning Iſrael אצלי הם חמימים כיונים Thoſe that belong to me are ſimple as Doves, אבל באה הם ערומים כנחשים but amongſt the Nations of the world, they are ſubtle as ſerpents.

VERS. IV.

Μηδένα κατὰ τὴν ὁδὸν ἀσπάσησθε. Salute no man by the way.

d 2 King. IV. 29. I. WE have a paſſage ſomething like this elſewhere: d If thou meet any man ſalute him not; that is, (as is commonly expounded) do not hinder thy journey by diſcourſing with any in the way. But the ſame reaſon doth not hold in this place; the buſineſs of theſe Diſciples not requiring ſuch mighty expedition. They were commanded out two by two to this or the other place or City where Chriſt himſelf was to come in perſon; nor was it neceſſary they ſhould run in ſo great haſt, that they ſhould make no ſtay in the way. Only having appointed them to ſuch and ſuch places, their buſineſs indeed lay no where but in thoſe very places to which they had been particularly ſent, to proclaim the coming of Chriſt there, and not to be telling it in the way. The twelve Apoſtles that were ſent, their buſineſs was to declare the coming of the Kingdom of Heaven, theſe, the coming of the King himſelf. No wonder therefore if the Apoſtles were not forbidden to ſalute any in the way, for their Province was where ever they came, to tell the world that the Kingdom of Heaven was come; but theſe were only to give notice that the Meſſiah was coming, and that, in thoſe places only to which he was to come, and not to any whom they ſhould meet curſorily in the way.

II. It was a very uſual thing in that Nation upon ſome accounts not to ſalute any in the way, no not any perſon at all. e He that is mourning for the dead, let him not ſalute any perſon, for the firſt ſeven days of his mourning. a If thirteen faſts had been celebrated by order of the Sanhedrin for the imploring of rain, and yet no rain had fallen, then they diminiſh from their buſineſs, and from building, and from planting, and from eſpouſals and marriage ובשאלת שלום בין אדם לחבירו and from ſaluting each other, as men under the rebukes of heaven. That is, they abſtain'd from all theſe things. b חבירים אין שאלת שלום ביניהם The Religious do not uſe to ſalute one another; but if any of the common people do at any time ſalute them, they return it בשפה רפה וכובד ראש in a very low voice, with all gravity, veiling themſelves, and ſitting in the poſture of mourners or excommunicate perſons.

b Ibid. fol. 14. 2.

Whether that of the Apoſtle, Salute one another with an holy kiſs, might not have ſome reference to this uſage, might be a matter for our enquiry if there were place for it, but I forbear.

What therefore doth our Saviour intend by this prohibition, Salute no man by the way? would he imitate this Jewiſh cuſtom, that he would have them taken for mourners every where?

I. He would have all that belong'd to him, conformable to himſelf, that every one from the quality of the meſſengers, might in ſome meaſure judg what he was that ſent them; as we have already hinted concerning the twelve Apoſtles. He himſelf was a man of ſorrows, and if his meſſengers do repreſent ſome ſuch thing either in their looks or behaviour, the people might the eaſilier gueſs, what kind of perſon he was that commiſſion'd them.

II. Chriſt had a twofold end in deſigning them to the places, to which he in his own perſon had determin'd to come: namely, that thither all perſons ſhould aſſemble themſelves to his Doctrine for the healing of their ſouls: and that thoſe that were diſeaſed might be gather'd thither, in order to a cure. Now it was very fit and convenient, that the the behaviour of thoſe that were to aſſemble the people to theſe ends, ſhould be mournful and ſolemn, to teſtifie the fellow-feeling they had with the afflicted and miſerable.

VERS. VIII.

Ἐσθίετε τὰ παρατιθέμενα ὑμῖν. Eat ſuch things as are ſet before you.

THE Traditional Canons were ſo very preciſe and curious, about not eating unleſs what were clean, what had been duly tythed, and from which the Trumah had been duly ſeparated, that it might be almoſt a wonder, the ſtrict Traditioniſts ſhould not be famiſht, if they liv'd and fed only by Canon. c Let not the חבר the religious ſerve at the table of a laick, unleſs all things be rightly prepared and decimated. c Hieroſ. Demai, fol. 22. 4.

From the irkſomneſs and perplexity of this niceneſs doth our Saviour acquit and abſolve his followers, partly that he might introduce the Goſpel-liberty; partly alſo conſulting the neceſſity of his Diſciples, who, if they had been bound up to that ſtrictneſs in meats, what could they do, when their converſe was to lye chiefly amongſt perſons perfectly unknown to them.

VERS. XVIII.

Ἐθεώρουν τὸν Σατανᾶν, &c. I beheld Satan, &c.

Lucifer falling from heaven, Iſa. XIV. 12. is the King of Babylon diveſted of his Throne and Dominion. So is Satan in this place. The word ἐθεώρουν, I beheld, I would refer it to this very time. When I ſent you forth, I ſaw Satans fall at hand, that he ſhould be immediately deſpoil'd of his power and tyranny. For when the Meſſiah had determin'd to exhibit himſelf, and in order thereunto, to ſend out ſo numerous a multitude of perſons that ſhould publiſh his appearance, it was abſolutely neceſſary, and it could not otherwiſe be, but that the power of Satan ſhould ſink, and his government be ſhaken.

It is probable theſe LXX Diſciples were ſent out upon the approach of the Feaſt of Tabernacles, and when there now remain'd about half a year to the death of Chriſt. In which interval of time, Chriſt ſhew'd himſelf more openly, both by the preaching of theſe perſons, and alſo in his own perſonal exhibition of himſelf than before he had done. All which things determining in his death, whoſe death was alſo the death of Satan, might give him a very juſt occaſion of ſaying, I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven, thrown out of his throne and kingdom. Compare Revel. XII. 8. where heaven is to be interpreted the Church.

VERS. XXV.

Καὶ ἰδοὺ Νομικός τις ἀνέστη. Behold a certain Lawyer ſtood up.

Sect. Some few notes concerning the Jewiſh Doctors.

THE word Νομικὸς we meet with in Mat. XXII. 35. where the Syr. hath it ספרא a Scribe. So Luk. VII. 30. as alſo in this place, and Chap. XI. 45. nor without reaſon, when he in St. Matthew εἷς ἐξ αὐτῶν νομικὸς, one of them which was a Lawyer is ſaid to be Mark XII. 28. Εἷς τῶν Γραμματέων one of the Scribes.

However, there ſeems ſome difficulty from a paſſage in our Evangeliſt, a where, Οὐαὶ ὑμῖν Γραμματεῖς, woe unto you Scribes, and Ἀποκριθεὶς δέ τις τῶν νομικῶν, Then anſwer'd one of the Lawyers, ſeems to make ſome diſtinction betwixt them. As to this we ſhall make ſome remarks in its proper place. In the mean time, let it not ſeem tedious to the Reader, if we diſcourſe ſome things concerning the Doctors of the Law, with the various claſſes and orders of them, that we may the better judg of that ſort of men, which we have ſo frequent mention of in the Holy Scriptures. And, a Chap. XI. 44, 45.

I. It is not unknown how the name Scribe was a general title given to all the learned part of that Nation, as it is oppos'd to בור the rude and illiterate perſon b. If two perſons eat together שניהם סופרים and are both Scribes, they each of them ſay grace ſingly for themſelves, אבל אחר סופר ואחר בור but if one of them be a Scribe, and the other an illiterate perſon, the Scribe ſaith grace, and it ſufficeth for the other that is unlearned. b Beracoth, fol. 45. 2.

Indeed the firſt original of the word סופרים did more peculiarly ſignifie the numberers. נקראו ראשונים סופרים The ancients were call'd סופרים (numberers) becauſe they number'd all the letters of the Law, for they ſaid ו Vau in נחון Levit. XI. 42. is the middle letter in the whole Book of the Law. The Gloſs gives another reaſon out of the Jeruſ. Talm. namely, becauſe they number'd all the points and contents of the Law as the forty principal ſervile works ſave one, &c. e Kidduſh. fol. 30. 1.

Should

Should we indeed grant that the first original of the word had such narrow bounds as this, yet does not this hinder, but that it afterward enlarg'd it self so far as to denote any person learned in the Law, and every Doctor of it: nay, that it extended it self even to טלמדי תינוקות the Schoolmasters that taught children: if not to the very לבלרין Libellarii, those whose business it was to write out bills of divorce, and forms of Contracts, &c. of which two there is mention made, amongst the ten sorts, whereof if none should happen to be in a City, it was not fit for any disciple of the wise to abide in it b.

b Sanhedr. fol. 17. 2.

II. That the fathers of the Sanhedrin were more emphatically call'd the Scribes, it is so well known, that it needs no confirmation. That passage in the Evangelist sufficiently shews it. c The Scribes and Pharisees sit in Moses chair: that is, on the Legislative bench, or in the Sanhedrin: where also the Sadducees that were of that Council are called Scribes. And the Scribes are distinguisht there from the Pharisees, not that they were not Scribes, but because all the Scribes there were not Pharisees.

c Mat. XXIII. 1.

III. There was a certain degree of Doctors or Scribes that were in the Sanhedrin, but were not members of it, these are commonly called הרנים לפני חכמים those who gave judgment in the presence of the wise men ראויין לחוראה fit for the office of Legislators, but not yet admitted. Such were Simeon ben Azzai, and Simeon ben Zumah d. Such also was Simeon the Temanite, of whom we have made mention elsewhere out of Sanhedr. fol. 22. מן לפני הם בקרקע he judg'd in the presence of the Sanhedrin sitting upon the ground. He did not sit on the bench with the fathers, as not being one of their number, but on the seats below, nearer the ground; him the fathers consulted in difficult matters. A shadow of which we have in England of the Judges, men learned in the Laws, who have their seats in our house of Lords.

d Horaioth. fol. 2. 2.

He that was particularly call'd the חכם the wise man, whether he was of the number of the fathers, or only of these kind of Judges, I shall not at present dispute, but leave the Reader to judg from this story. e Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel was the נשיא the President of the Sanhedrin: R. Meir was חכם Chacam or the wise man, and R. Nathan אב בר the vice governour. Now when Rabban Simeon had decreed something that disparag'd R. Meir, and R. Nathan. Saith R. Meir to R. Nathan אני חכם I am the Chacam or the wise man: And thou art the vice-president: Let us remove Rabban Simeon from the Presidency, then thou wilt be the President, and I the Vice-president.

e Horaioth. fol. 13. 2.

There is nothing more common, and yet nothing more difficult than that saying, the School of Hillel saith so and so, and the School of Schammai so, ואומרים וחכמים but the wise men say otherwise. It is very obscure who these wise men should be. If we should say the Sanhedrin; it is plain that one part of it consisted of the Shammæans, and another part of the Hillelites. If so, then it should seem that these wise men are those Judges of whom we have spoken: unless you will assign a third part to the Sadducees, to whom you will hardly attribute the determination of the thing, and much less the Emphatical title of the wise men. But this we leave undecided.

III. Let us a little enquire out of the Sanhedrin, we shall find variety of Scribes and Doctors of the Law, according to the variety of the Law it self, and the variety of teaching it. Hence those various Treatises amongst the Rabbins. The Micra, Mishneh, Midras, Talmud, Agadah, &c.

1. מקרא Micra, is the Text of the Bible it self: its reading, and literal Explication.

2. משנה Mishneh, the doctrine of Traditions and their Explication.

3. מדרש Midrash, the mystick and allegorical doctrine and exposition of the Scriptures a. For Moses of old time hath in every city them that preach him, being read in the Synagogues every Sabbath-day. Now these were the ways and methods of preaching him.

a Act. XV. 21.

1. As to the written Law (for every one knows they had a twofold Law, written, and oral, as they call'd it.) As to the written Law therefore, they had a twofold way of declaring it, viz. explaining and applying it according to the literal sense of it, εἰς οἰκοδομὴν, παράκλησιν, καὶ παραμυθίαν, for edification, exhortation, and comfort, as the Apostle hath it b. Or else by drawing Allegories, mysteries, and far fetcht notions out of it. As to the former way, the rulers of the Synagogue seem to have respect to it in what they said to Paul and Barnabas. c Εἴ τις λόγος ἐν ὑμῖν παρακλήσεως πρὸς τὸν λαὸν, λέγετε. If ye have any word of exhortation for the people, say on. As to the latter, the instances are endless in the Jewish writings every where, so far that they have even melted down the whole volume of the Scriptures into tradition and allegory.

b 1 Cor. XIV. 3

c Act. XIII. 15.

It is not easily determin'd, whether these Preachers were so of a different order that the one should wholly addict himself to the plain and literal exposition, and application of the Scriptures, the other only to the mystical and more abstruse way of teaching; there is no question but both these did frequently meet both in one Preacher, and that in one and the same Sermon: and indeed I cannot tell but that the word אגרה Agadah, may sometimes denote both these ways of expounding and interpreting the Law d. When a certain person being interrogated about certain traditions, could give no answer, the standers

To which that alſo agrees well enough a, בעלי אגדה מתוך שהן דרשנין וגו the maſters of the Agadoth, or Expoſitions, becauſe they are Doreſhanim (or profound ſearchers of the Scriptures) are honour'd of all men, for they draw away the hearts of their auditors. Nor does that ſound very differently as to the thing it ſelf. b בשבת היו דורשין דרשה on the Sabbath-day they diſcuſs'd diſcuſſions [i.e. in the Scriptures. Ἐρευνῶντες τὰς Γραφὰς *, ſearching the Scriptures] to the maſters of families who had been employ'd in their occaſions all the week, and whiles they were expounding, they taught them the articles about things forbidden, and things permitted them, &c.

b Gloſſ. in Sanhed. fol. 115.

* Joh. 5. 39.

To theſe kind of myſtick and allegorical expoſitions of Scripture (if at leaſt it be proper to call them expoſitions) they were ſo ſtrangely bewitcht, that they valu'd nothing more than a skill in tickling or rubbing the itching ears of their auditors with ſuch trifles. Hence that paſſage, c R. Joſhua ſaid to R. Johanan ben Bruchah, and to R. Eliezar the blind: What new thing have you met with to day in Beth Midraſh? They anſwered and ſaid, we are all thy diſciples, and drink wholly at thy waters. To whom he, It is impoſſible but you ſhould meet with ſomething novel every day in Beth Midras.

c Hieroſol. Chagigah, fol. 75. 4.

II. As to the Oral Law, there was alſo a twofold way of explaining it, as they had for the written Law.

I. The former way we have intimated to us in theſe words, d The book of the Law when it grows old, they lay up with one of the diſciples of the wiſe men, ואפילו שונה הלכות even although he teach Δευτερώσεις the traditions. The paſſage ſeems very obſcure, but it is thus explain'd by the Gloſs: Albeit it doth not any way help the diſciples of the wiſe men בתלמוד ובגמרא in Talmud & Gemara, אלא במשניות ובברייתות but in Miſnaioth, & Baraithoth; that is, he that would only read the body of the Traditional Law, and render the literal ſenſe of it, and not he that would diſpute ſcholaſtically, and comment upon it. For, d Megillah, fol. 26. 2.

II. There were Doctors that would enquire more deeply into the Traditions, would give ſome accounts (ſuch as they were) of them, would diſcuſs difficulties, ſolve doubts, &c. a Specimen of which is the Talmudick Gemara throughout.

Laſtly, Amongſt the Learned, and Doctors of that Nation, there were the Agadici who would expound the written Law in a more profound way than ordinary, even to what was cabbaliſtical. Theſe were more rare, and (as it ſhould ſeem) not ſo acceptable amongſt the people. Whether theſe are concern'd in what follows let the Reader judg e. R. Joſhua ben Levi ſaith, יבא עלי ſo and ſo let it happen to me, if in all my life I ever ſaw ספרא דאגדתא the book Agada above once; and then I found an hundred ſeventy and five Sections of the Law, where it is written, The Lord hath ſaid, hath ſpoken, hath commanded. They are according to the number of the years of our father Abraham, as it is ſaid לקחת מתנות באדם to receive gifts for men, &c. An hundred forty and ſeven Pſalms, which are in the book of Pſalms [mark the number] they are according to the number of the years of our father Jacob. As it is written, thou art holy, and inhabiteſt the praiſes of Iſrael; an hundred twenty and three turns, wherein Iſrael anſwereth Hallelujah (to him that repeats the Hallel) are according to the number of the years of Aaron, &c. And as a Coronis let me add that paſſage in Sanhedr *. אם בעלי מקרא הן If they be maſters of the Textual reading, they ſhall be converſant in the Law, the Prophets, and the Hagiographa. אם בעלי משנה הן if they be maſters of the Miſhneh, they ſhall be converſant in Miſhneh Halacoth and Haggadoth: ואם בעלי תלמוד הן and if they be maſters of the Talmud, they ſhall be converſant in the Traditions of the Paſſover, in the Paſſover: in the traditions of Pentecoſt, in Pentecoſt: in the traditions of the feaſt of Tabernacles, in the feaſt of Tabernacles.

Theſe all whom we have mention'd were Scribes and Doctors, and expounders of the Law, but which of theſe may properly and peculiarly challenge to themſelves the title of Νομικοὶ, or Lawyers, whether all, or any particular claſſis of them? The latter is moſt probable: but then what claſſis will you chooſe? or will you diſtinguiſh betwixt the νομικὸς and νομοδιδάσκαλος, the Lawyer and the teacher of the Law? I had rather the Reader would frame his own judgment here. And yet that I might not diſmiſs this queſtion wholly untoucht, and at the ſame time not weary the Reader with too long a digreſſion, I have refer'd what is to be alledged in this matter, to my notes upon Chapt. XI. 45.

VERS. XXVI.

Πῶς ἀναγινώσκεις. How readeſt thou?

AN expreſſion very common in the Schools, מאו קראת what readeſt thou? when any perſon brought a Text of Scripture for the proof of any thing. f The Rabbins have a Tradition אסברה באה לעולם על המעשר that the diſeaſe of the Squinancy came into the

the world upon the account of tithes: (the Gloſs hath it, for eating of fruits that had not been tithed.) R Eliezar ben R. Joſe ſaith, it was for an evil tongue. Rabba ſaith, and it is the ſaying alſo of R. Joſhua ben Levi מאי קראת what readeſt thou? The King ſhall rejoyce in God, every one that ſweareth by himſelf ſhall glory: כי יסכר [thence comes אסכרא] for the mouth of them that ſpeak lies ſhall be ſtopped. b And a little after upon another ſubject: R. Simeon ben Gezirah ſaith מאי קראת what or how readeſt thou? If thou know not, O thou faireſt among Women, go thy way forth by the footſteps of the flock, Cant. I. 8.

b Pſal. LXIII. 11.

We will not be very curious in enquiring whether our Saviour uſed the very ſame form of ſpeech מאי קראת or כיצר קראת or איך קראת or any other. In this only he departs from their common uſe of ſpeech, in that he calls to another to alledge ſome Text of Scripture, whereas it was uſual in the Schools, that he that ſpoke that, would alledge ſome place himſelf.

VERS. XXVII.

Καὶ ἐξ ὅλης τ διανοίας σου. And with thy whole mind.

IN this anſwer of the man, there are theſe two things obſervable.

I. That our Saviour brings in this clauſe, which in ſo many terms is not in Moſes where the reſt are. c בכל לבבך ובכל נפשך ובכל מאדך where the Greek both of the Roman and Alexandrian Edition render בכל מאדך, ἐξ ὅλης τ δυνάμεως σου, which is the ſame with ἰσχύος, with all thy might; but where is διανοίας? I paſs by other copies, wherein though is ſome varying, yet there is not this which is now before us.

c Deut. VI. 5.

Our Saviour hath the ſame clauſe elſewhere d, but not in the ſame order, Καὶ ἐξ ὅλης τ διανοίας σου, καὶ ἐξ ὅλης τ ἰσχύος σου, with all thy mind and with all thy ſtrength: here it is, with all thy ſtrength, and with all thy mind. What ſhall we ſay therefore? Shall we ſuppoſe it writ to this ſenſe in the Hebrew, in their Phylacteries? this we can hardly think. Was it added by the Greek Interpreters, and ſo the Evangeliſts take it from thence? we ſee it is not ſo. What then, doth מאד ſignifie both ἰσχὺν and διάνοιαν? both ſtrength and mind? Here indeed the hinge of the queſtion turns. That it denotes ſtrength no one doubts, yea and the Rabbins ſuppoſe it denotes Mammon too, with whom the Syriack and Targumiſt agree, but ſtill where doth it ſignifie τὴν διάνοιαν the mind?

d Mark XII. 30.

1. Take ſuch a Gloſs as is frequently in uſe amongſt the allegorizing Doctors. e בכל מאדך מכל מדה ומדה שהוא מודד לן הוי מודה לו מאד מאד With what meaſure he ſhall meet to thee, do thou praiſe him exceedingly. Where we ſee they play with the ſound of words מאד and מדה and מודה which is a very common thing with them to do. Aben Ezra מאד is of the ſame ſenſe with מאד מאד exceedingly, exceedingly: and intends thus much; love him exceedingly, as much as ever thou art able, and let thy love be perfect in thine heart.

e Beracoth, fol. 54. 1.

2. To this we may add if we think fit, what they commonly require in all Religious ſervices, viz. כוונת לבו the preparation and the intention of the mind. From all which we may conceive that this was the common interpretation of that clauſe ובכל מאדך and that ἐξ ὅλης τ διανοίας, with thy whole mind, was not added without juſt cauſe, but upon ſome neceſſity, there being ſomething of obſcurity in the word מאדך and ſo we might be apt to apply it only to our bodily or outward ſtrength and might. Moſes his words therefore are rendred by the Evangeliſts not ſtrictly and according to the letter as they are in him or were in the Parchments in the Phylacteries, but both according to their full ſenſe and tenour, as alſo according to the common and received interpretation of that Nation.

f Hieroſ. Sotah. fol. 21. 2.

f R. Levi bar Chaiothah went to Cæſarea, and heard them אלוניסתין קריין שמע reciting their Shemaah (or their Phylacteries) Helleniſtically (i. e. in Greek) &c. Now whether the clauſe we are now handling was inſerted there, it would be in vain to enquire, becauſe not poſſible but to know. But if the Jews thought it included in the word מאדך which is not unlikely; then is it probable that the Helleniſts uſed it expreſsly in the Greek tongue.

I cannot but take notice of the words of the Jeruſalem Targumiſt juſt now alledged. שמע קלון קריין שמע: What ſhould that word קלון mean? Aruch quoting this paſſage hath it thus שמע לון הדהו קרו שמע ſo that קלון ſeems to be the ſame with לון and ק is redundant, which is not unuſual with the Babylonian Talmud, but with the Jeruſalem hardly ever, or very rarely.

The ſecond thing obſervable in this mans anſwer is, that he adds, And thy neighbour as thy ſelf: which indeed was not written in the Schedules of their Phylacteries: otherwiſe I ſhould have thought the man had underſtood thoſe words of our Saviour πῶς ἀναγινώσκεις how readeſt thou? as if he had ſaid, How doſt thou repeat the ſentences of the the Phylacteries; for he reciteth the ſentence as it was in their Phylacteries, only adds, and thy neighbour, &c. Now the uſual expreſſion for the recitation of their Phylacteries was קורין שמע which, word for word is, they read the Shemaa, which alſo is ſo rendred by ſome; when indeed they commonly repeat them without book. a הקורא מגילה על פה He that reads the Book (of Eſther) orally: i. e as the Gemara explains it, without book, or by heart. b It is quæried, Why they repeat thoſe two Sections every day? c R. Levi ſaith, becauſe the Ten Commandments (of the Decalogue) are comprehended therein. Shewing further, how they are comprehended, ſaving only (which is very obſervable) the Second Commandment. Afterward indeed they confeſs, it was very fitting they ſhould every day repeat the very Decalogue it ſelf, but they did not repeat it, leſt the Hereticks ſhould ſay, that only thoſe Commandments were given to Moſes on Mount Sinai. However, they did repeat thoſe paſſages wherein they ſuppoſed the Decalogue was ſummed up.

a Megill. fol. 17. 1.

c Deut. VI. 4, &c. & XI. 13, &c.

Whether therefore this Lawyer of ours underſtood the words of our Saviour, as having reſpect to that uſage of repeating their Phylacteries; or whether he of his own accord and according to his own opinion would be giving the whole ſumm of the Decalogue, he ſhews himſelf rather a textual than a traditional Doctor, although the word νομικὸς, Lawyer, ſeem to point out the latter rather.

VERS. XXIX.

Καὶ τίς μού ἐστι πλησίον; And who is my neighbour?

THIS doubt and form of queſtioning he had learnt out of the common School where it is taughtin Aruch in בן בריתא הוציא כל אומות באמרו רעהו He excepts all Gentiles, when he ſaith, thy neighbour.

d An Iſraelite killing גר תושב a ſtranger Inhabitant, he doth not dye for it by the Sanhedrin, becauſe it is ſaid כי איש על רעהו If any one liſt up himſelf againſt his neighbour. It is not neceſſary to ſay, he does not dye upon the account of a Gentile. For they are not eſteemed by them for their neighbour.

d Maimon. in רוצח cap. 2.

e The Gentiles amongſt whom and us there is no war, and ſo thoſe that are keepers of ſheep amongſt the Iſraelites, and the like; we are not to contrive their death: but if they be in any danger of death, we are not bound to deliver them. e. g. If any of them fall into the Sea, you ſhall not need to take him out: for it is ſaid thou ſhalt not riſe up againſt the blood of thy neighbour; but ſuch an one is not thy neighbour.

e Ibid. cap. 4.

VERS. XXX.

Ἄνθρωπός τις κατέβαινεν ἀπὸ Ἰερουσαλὴμ εἰς Ἰεριχώ. A certain man went down from Jeruſalem to Jerico.

THIS was the moſt beaten and frequented road in the whole land of Iſrael, and that not only as it led to Perea, but alſo upon the account of that great traffick that was between theſe two Cities, eſpecially becauſe of the Courſes that were as well in Jerico as Jeruſalem. Of which we have diſcourſed elſewhere f. To which I ſhall ſuperadd this paſſage out of Jeruſalem Taanith *. The former Prophets inſtituted four and twenty Courſes, and for every Courſe היה עמוד בירושלם a Stationary Claſſis of Prieſts, Levites, and Iſraelites in Jeruſalem. It is a tradition. Four and twenty thouſand, was the Stationary number out of Jeruſalem. וחצי עמוך מיריחו And half that Station out of Jericho. Jericho could indeed have produced an intire Station, but that it would give the preference to Jeruſalem, and therefore it produced but half.

f See Notes upon Chap. I. 5.

* Fol. 67. 4.

Here therefore you may ſee in this Hiſtorical Parable, why there is ſuch particular mention made of a Prieſt and Levite travelling that way, becauſe there was very frequent intercourſe of this ſort of men between tweſe Towns, and that upon the account of the Stations above-mentioned.

Λῃσταῖς περιέπεσεν· He fell among Thieves.

It is with great confidence, I find, but upon what foundation I cannot tell, that the Commentators generally make Adummim the ſcene of this robbery, above all other places. It is true the road betwixt Jeruſalem and Jericho was dangerous enough, and for that reaſon (as is commonly believed) there was placed a band of Souldiers g betwixt Ælia and Jericho, for the ſafeguard of paſſengers: but, whereas it is ſaid that the place is called Adummim, i. e. a place of redneſs, from the blood that was ſpilt by robbers there: this ſeems to have very little force in it: becauſe the place had that name of Adummim even in Joshua's days, when we can hardly suppose, the times to have been so pestered with b Josh. XV. 9. robberies, as they were when our Saviour uttered this parable. See the place b, where if we consider the situation of the going up to Adummim, it will appear, it was not very distant from Jericho.

Ἡμιθανῆ. Half dead.

The Rabbins term it נטוי למות next to death, beyond which condition, on this side death was only גוע one just expiring.

VERS. XXXI.

Ἰδὼν αὐτὸν ἀντιπαρῆλθεν. When he saw him, he passed by on the other side.

WHAT could be the reason this Priest and this Levite, should thus pass by a man in such a miserable condition? Was he not an Israelite? It is true they had learnt out of their own Schools, not to succour a Gentile, no nor a keeper of Sheep though he was an Israelite; now was this wounded man such an one? or did they think they should have contracted some pollution by touching one half head? The word Ἀντιπαρῆλθεν, passed by on the other side, seems to hint, as if they passed by him keeping their distance from him. Let them tell the reason themselves: For my part I would impute it wholly to the meer want of Charity.

VERS. XXXIII.

Σαμαρείτης δέ τις. But a certain Samaritan.

i Joh. IV. 9. i Οὐ συγχρῶνται Ἰουδαῖοι Σαμαρείταις· The Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans: That is, so as to be obliged by them for any courtsie done to them. But would this Jew half dead reject the kindness of the Samaritan at this time? This person being of a Nation (than which the Jews hated nothing more) is brought in shewing this kindness to the Jew, on purpose to give the plainer instance who is our neighbour. It might seem more proper to have said that the Samaritan acknowledged the wounded man for his neighbour, in being so kind to him: but our Saviour intimates that he was the wounded man's neighbour, thereby teaching us, that even a stranger, yea an enemy (against the Doctrine of their own Schools) is no other than our neighbour.

VERS. XXXIV.

Ἐπιχέων ἔλαιον καὶ οἶνον. Pouring in Oyl and Wine.

k Mitzvot Biracoth, fol. 3. 1. k IT is a Tradition. סכין אלונתית לחולה בשבת They spread a Plaister for the sick on the Sabbath day: That is, upon condition they had mingled it with Wine and Oyl on the Evening of the Sabbath. But if they have not mixed it on the Evening of the Sabbath, it is forbidden. A Tradition. R. Simeon ben Eleazar saith, That it is allowed by R. Meir, both to mingle the Oyl and the Wine, and also to anoint the sick on the Sabbath day.

VERS. XXXV.

Ἐκβαλὼν δύο δηνάρια. He took out two pence.

Ἔδωκε τῷ Πανδοχεῖ. And gave them to the Host.

The Rabbins retain this Greek word using פונדקי however the Author of Aruch, calls it Ismaelitick, or Arabick. חנות בלשון ישמעאל פונדק a Tavern or Inn, saith he, in the Ishmaelitish language is called Pandak. It is true indeed, the Arabick Version useth this word m Midras. Tillin. fol. 16. 3. in this place, but it is well known whence it takes its original. m Two men went into פונדק an Inn, one a just, the other a wicked man. They sate down apart. The wicked man saith לפונדקי to the host: Let me have פסיוני אחד one pheasant, and let me have קונדיטון Conditum or Hippocras. The just man said to the Host, let me have a piece of bread and

and a diſh of Lentiles. The wicked man laught the juſt man to ſcorn. See how this fool calls for Lentiles when he may have dainties: on the contrary the juſt man, ſee how this fool eateth when his teeth are to be immediately daſht out. The juſt man ſaith לפונדקי, τῷ πανδοχεῖ to the Hoſt, give me two cups of Wine that I may bleſs them: he gave them him, and he bleſſed them, and riſing up gave to the Hoſt a piece of Money for the portion that he had eaten, and departed in peace. But there was a falling out betwixt the wicked man and his Hoſt about the reckoning, and the Hoſt daſht out his teeth.

VERS. XXXVIII.

Μάρθα ὑπεδέξατο αὐτὸν, &c. Martha received him, &c.

OUR Saviour is now at the Feaſt of Tabernacles: and viſits Bethany where there had grown a friendſhip betwixt himſelf and Lazarus his Family, upon his having caſt out ſo many Devils out of Mary his Siſter. For it is no foreign thing to ſuppoſe ſhe was that Mary that was called Magdalene, becauſe Bethany it ſelf was called Magdala. CHAP. XI.

VERS. I.

Δίδαξον ἡμᾶς προσεύχεσθαι καθὼς καὶ Ἰωάννης. Teach us to pray as John alſo taught his Diſciples.

WHAT kind of requeſt is this, that this Diſciple, whoever he is, doth here make? was he ignorant of, or had he forgot that form of Prayer which the Lord had delivered to them in his Sermon upon the Mount? If he had not forgot it, why then doth he require any other? Doth de mean, Lord teach us to pray, for John hath taught his Diſciples? or thus, teach us a Form and rule of Prayer like that which John had taught his. This latter is the moſt probable, but then it is ſomething uncertain what kind of form that might be which the Diſciples of John were taught. As to this enquiry we may conſider theſe things:

I. It is ſaid of the Diſciples of John Νηστεύουσι πυκνὰ καὶ δεήσεις ποιοῦνται, They faſt often, and make Prayers. Where, upon many accounts I could perſwade my ſelf that δεήσεις ought to be taken here in its moſt proper ſenſe, for Supplications. To let other things paſs, let us weigh theſe two:

1. That the Jews daily and common prayers, ordinary and occaſional, conſiſted chiefly of Benedictions and Doxologies, which the title of that Talmudick Tract which treats of their prayers, ſufficiently teſtifies, being called ברכות Benediction, as alſo that תפילה Tephillah, the general Nomenclature for Prayer, ſignifies no other than שבח praiſing, i. e. Benediction, or Doxology. To illuſtrate this matter we have a paſſage or two not unworthy our tranſcribing.

a יבול ישאל אדם צרכיו ואחר יתפלל Perhaps a man begs for neceſſaries for himſelf, and afterward prayeth. This is that which is ſpoken by Solomon when he ſaith, b אל הרנה ואל התפילה To the prayer, and to the ſupplication. I omit the Verſions, becauſe the Gemariſts interpret it themſelves. רנה זו תפילה תפילה זו בקשה Rinna is Tephillah, and Tephillah is Bakkaſhah. Their meaning is this: the firſt word of Solomon's רנה Rinnah ſignifies Prayer (תפילה של שבח as the Gloſs hath it) i. e. Prayer with Praiſe, or Doxology. The latter word תפילה Tephillah, ſignifies Petition, or Supplication, [Gloſs, begging for things neceſſary.]

b 1 Kings VIII. 28.

It cannot be denyed but that they had their petitionary or ſupplicatory prayers, but then, the benedictory or doxological prayers were more in number, and more large and copious: eſpecially thoſe which were poured out occaſionally or upon preſent emergency. Read the laſt Chapter of the Treatiſe I newly quoted and judge as to this particular: Read the whole Treatiſe, and then judge of the whole matter.

2. It may be reaſonably ſuppoſed that the Baptiſt taught his Diſciples a Form of Prayer different from what the Jewiſh Forms were: It ſtands with reaſon that he that was to bring in a new Doctrine (I mean new, in reſpect to that of the Jewiſh) ſhould bring in a new way of Prayer too, that is a Form of Prayer that conſiſted more in Petition and Supplication, than the Jewiſh Forms had done; nay and another ſort of petitions than what thoſe Forms which were petitionary had hitherto contained. For the Diſciples of John had been inſtructed in the points of Regeneration, juſtifying Faith, particular Adoption, Sanctification by the Spirit, and other Doctrines of the Goſpel, which were altogether unknown in the Schools or Synagogues of the Jews. And who would imagine therefore that John Baptiſt ſhould not teach his Diſciples to pray for theſe things?

II. It is probable therefore that when this Diſciple requeſted our Saviour that he would teach his Diſciples καθὼς Ἰωάννης as John had done: he had reſpect to ſuch kind of Prayers as theſe, becauſe we find Chriſt ſo far condeſcending to him that he delivers him a Form of Prayer merely petitionary, as may appear both from the whole ſtructure of the Prayer, as alſo in that the laſt cloſe of all the Doxology, For thine is the Kingdom, &c. is here left wholly out; being asked for a Form that was δεητικὴ he took care to deliver one to them that was merely ſupplicatory. This is confirmed by what follows concerning the man requeſting ſome loaves of his neighbour, adding withal this exhortation, Ask and it ſhall be given you, ſeek and ye ſhall find. Which two things ſeem to anſwer thoſe two things by which Supplicatory Prayer is defined; theſe are שאלה Sheelah, asking: and בקשה Bakkaſhah, ſeeking: for if there may be any difference in the meaning of theſe two words, I would ſuppoſe it thus, Bakkaſhah, or ſeeking may reſpect the things of God: ſo ſeek ye firſt the Kingdom of God, &c. and Sheelah, or asking may reſpect thoſe things which are neceſſary for our ſelves: which texture we find very equally divided in this preſent Form of Prayer, where the three firſt petitions are in behalf of God's honour, and the three laſt in behalf of our own neceſſaries.

It was in uſe amongſt the Jews, when they faſted to uſe a peculiar ſort of Prayer, joyned with what were daily, terming it תפילת תעניות the Prayer of the faſt. This we have mentioned in Taanith c where it is diſputed whether מתענין לשעות thoſe that faſted for certain hours only, and not for the whole day, ought to repeat that Prayer of the Faſt: As alſo, in what order and place that Prayer is to be inſerted amongſt the daily ones. Now if it ſhould be granted that John had taught his Diſciples any ſuch form that might be particularly adapted to their faſtings, it is not very likely this Diſciple had any particular reference to that, becauſe the Diſciples of Chriſt did not Faſt, as the Diſciples of John did. It rather reſpected the whole frame of their Prayers which he had inſtructed them in, which conſiſted chiefly ἐκ δεήσεων of Petitions and Supplications.

c Fol. 11.

Object. But probably this Diſciple was not ignorant that Chriſt had already delivered to them a Petitionary Form in that Sermon of his upon the Mount, and therefore what need had he to deſire, and for what reaſon did he importune another?

Anſw. It is likely he did know it, and as likely he did not expect the repetition of the ſame again: but being very intent upon what John had done for his Diſciples, did hope for a Form more full and copious, that might more largely and particularly expreſs what they were to ask for, according to what he had obſerved probably in the Form that had been preſcribed by John, but the divine wiſdom of our Saviour knew however that all was ſufficiently comprehended in what he had given them. And as the Jews had their מעין ſhort ſummary of thoſe eighteen Prayers epitomized: ſo would he have this Form of his a ſhort ſummary of all that we ought to ask for.

VERS. IV.

Μὴ εἰσενέγκῃς ἡμᾶς εἰς πειρασμόν. And lead us not into temptation.

I Am much deceived if this petition is not, amongſt other things, and indeed principally and in the firſt place directed againſt the viſible apparitions of the Devil, τῷ πονηρῷ, The evil one: as alſo his actual obſeſſions: by which the phraſe of God's leading us into temptation is very much ſoftned.

The Doxology For thine is the Kingdom, &c. is left out, becauſe it was our Saviours intention in this place to deliver to them a Form of Prayer merely petitionary, for which very ſame reaſon alſo Amen is omitted too. d For ἐρεῖ Ἀμὴν ὅτι τῇ εὐχαριστίᾳ, He ſhall ſay Amen at thy giving of thanks. And indeed they commonly ended all their Prayers, even thoſe that conſiſted moſt of Petition, with Thankſgiving and Benediction; concluding in this manner, Bleſſed be thou O Lord who haſt thus done, or thus commanded, or the like, and then was it anſwered by all, Amen. This we may obſerve in thoſe Pſalms that conclude any portion of that Book, and end with Amen e, upon what ſubject ſoever the Pſalmiſt is ingaged, either throughout the whole Pſalm, or immediately before the bringing forth of Amen, ſtill he never doth mention Amen, without ſome foregoing going Doxology and Benediction, Bleſſed be the Lord God, &c. Amen and Amen. In St. Matthew therefore we find Amen, becauſe there is the Doxology: In St. Luke it is wanting becauſe the Doxology is ſo too. You may ſee more of this in Notes upon Matth. VI.

VERS. XV.

Ἐν Βεελζεβὰλ ἄρχοντι τῶν δαιμονίων. Through Beelzebub the chief of the Devils.

I. AS to this name of Beelzebub I have f elſewhere diſcourſed, and do ſtill aſſert the reading of it with the letter l in the end of it, viz. Beelzebul, againſt the Syriack, Perſian, Vulgar, and other Tranſlations which read it Beelzebub. The Italian cautiouſly indeed but not purely, Beelzebu, that he might not ſtrike upon either the one or the other reading; but in the mean time I will not anſwer for the faithfulneſs and candor of the Interpreter. f Matth. XII.

II. Amongſt the Jews we may obſerve three Devils called the chief, or Prince of the Devils: 1. The Angel of Death: who is called ראש כל הסטנים g Prince of all the Satans. 2. שידא אשמודון The Devil Aſhmodeus. Of him afterwards. 3. Beelzebul in this place. Now as to vindicating the writing of it by l in the end of the word, and not b. g Elleh Haddebarim rab. fol. 302. 2.

III. It is a queſtion whether there were ſuch a thing as Beelzebub in rerum naturâ. Why ſhould not the deity of the place take his farewel, when Ekron, the place of this Deity was wholly obliterated? When there was no more an Idol, nor Oracle at Ekron, did not the Demon ceaſe to be Beelzebub any longer, although it did not ceaſe to be a Demon? Wherever therefore Ekron was under the ſecond Temple, or the place where it had been under the firſt, you can hardly perſwade me there was any Idol or Oracle of Beelzebub, and ſo not Beelzebub himſelf. I will not here diſpute whether Achor the Cyrenians tutelar God againſt flyes h hath any relation or affinity with the name of Ekron. Let it be granted that Beelzebub might change his ſoil upon ſome occaſion, and remove from Ekron to Cyrene; but then how ſhould he come to be the Prince of the Devils, when all his buſineſs, and power was only among flies? h Plin. lib. 10. 28.

It may not be improbable perhaps, that he might be firſt or chief of thoſe Demons, or Baalim, that Ahab brought among the Iſraelites, and ſo Ahaziah his Son, in the midſt of his affliction and danger might fly to refuge to that Idol, as what had been the God of his Father: But what is it could move the Ages following at ſo long diſtance of time from this, that they ſhould eſteem this Demon, Beelzebub, the prince of the Devils? Here I confeſs my ſelf not well ſatisfied: But as to Beelzebul, ſomething may be ſaid.

IV. I have already ſhewn in notes upon Matth. XII. that the Jewiſh Doctors (and ſuch were theſe who contended with our Saviour) did give Idolatrous worſhip the denomination of זבול Zebul, or Dung, for the ignominy of the thing; and ſo was the Nation generally taught by theſe Rabbins. I gave ſome inſtances for the proof of it, which I ſhall not here repeat, but add one more. i It is ſaid of Joſeph (when his Miſtreſs would have tempted him to Adultery) that he came into the houſe to do his buſineſs. R. Judah ſaith יום ניבול ויבול הוה It was a day of fooling, and of dunging, it was a day of theatres. Where the Gloſs upon the word ויבול Zebul, ſtercoration, ſaith thus: It is a word of contempt, and ſo it is expounded by R. Solomon in the Treatiſe Avodah Zarah, and Toſaphoth, viz. That ויבול ſignifies to Sacrifice (that is, to Idols) and they prove it out of Jeruſalem Beracoth, where it is ſaid, he that ſeeth a place אשר מובלין שם לעז where they dung, (that is, offer ſacrifice to an Idol) let him ſay, whoſo offereth Sacrifice to ſtrange Gods, let him be accurſed. Which words we have alſo alledged out of the Jeruſalem Talmud. i Midraſ. Schir. fol. 2. 1.

V. Now therefore, when Idolatry was denominated Zebul amongſt the Jews, and indeed reckoned amongſt the grievouſeſt of ſins they could be guilty of, that Devil whom they ſuppoſed to preſide over this piece of wickedneſs, they named him Beelzebul and eſteemed him the prince of the Devils, or (if you will pardon the expreſſion) the moſt deviliz'd of all Devils.

VI. They give the like title to the Devil Aſmodeus. k אשמודאי מלכא רשידי Aſmodeus the King of the Devils. l שידא שריהון דרוחתא The Devil, the prince of the ſpirits. Which elſewhere is expounded, d שידא אשמודאי the Devil Aſhmodeus. For in both places we have this ridiculous tale: There was a certain Woman brought forth a ſon in the night time, and ſaid to her ſon, (a child newly born you muſt know) go and light me a Candle that I may cut thy Navel; As he was going, the Devil Aſmodeus meeting him, ſaid to him, go and tell thy Mother, that if the Cock had not crowed, I would have killed thee, &c. k Gittin, fol. 68. 1. l Vajicra rabb. fol. 70. 2. m Bereſh. rabb. fol. 39. 3.

The very name points at Apoſtacy, not ſo much that the Devil was an Apoſtate, as that this Devil provoked and entiſed people to apoſtatize: Beelzebul amongſt the Gentiles, and and Aſmodeus amongſt the Jews, the firſt Authors of their apoſtacy. Whether both the Name and Demon were not found out by the Jews to affright the Samaritans. See the place above quoted n. Whenas Noah went to plant a Vineyard אפגע כו שידא אשמורין The Demon Aſmodeus met him and ſaid, שותפי עמך Let me partake with thee, &c. So that it ſeems they ſuppoſe Aſmodeus had an hand in Noah's drunkenneſs. כיון שחטא טרדו אשמוראי when he (that is, Solomon) ſinned, Aſmodeus drove him to it. &c. They call the Angel of death by the name of Prince of all Satans; becauſe he deſtroys all mankind by death, none excepted.

VERS. XXXI.

Βασίλισσα Νότου, &c. The Queen of the South, &c.

I. I Cannot but wonder what ſhould be the meaning of that paſſage in o Bava bathra, כל אומר מלכת שבא אשה היתה אינו אלא טעה Whoever ſaith that the Queen of Sheba was a Woman, doth no other than miſtake. מאי מלכת שבא מלכותא רשבא What then is the Queen of Sheba? The Kingdom of Sheba. He would have the whole Kingdom of the Sabeans to have come to Solomon: perhaps what is ſaid, that מלכת שבא came בחיל כבד מאד with an exceeding great Army, (for ſo is that clauſe rendred by ſome) might ſeem to ſound ſomething of this nature in his ears. But, if there was any kind of ambiguity in the word מלכת as indeed there is none; or if Interpreters doubted at all about it, as indeed none had done, the great Oracle of truth hath here taught us that the Queen did come to Solomon: but why doth he term her the Queen of the South, and not the Queen of Sheba?

o Fol. 15. 2.

II. There are plauſible things upon this occaſion ſpoken concerning Sheba of the Aralians, which we have no leiſure to diſcuſs at preſent. I am apt rather to apprehend, that our Saviour may call her the Queen of the South in much a like ſenſe, as the King of Egypt is called in Daniel, the King of the South: the Countries in that quarter of the world were very well known amongſt the Jews by that title: but I queſtion whether the Arabian Saba were ſo or no. Grant that ſome of the Arabian Countries be in later ages called Aliemin, or Southern parts; yet I doubt whether ſo called by antiquity or in the days of our Saviour.

Whereas it is ſaid that the Queen of the South came to hear the wiſdom of Solomon, is it worth the patience of the Reader, to hear a little the folly of the Jews about this matter. Becauſe it is ſaid that ſhe came to make a proof of his wiſdom by dark ſayings and hard queſtions, theſe Doctors will be telling us what kind of riddles and hard queſtions ſhe put to him. p She ſaith unto him, if I ask thee any thing, wilt thou anſwer me? He ſaid, it is the Lord that giveth wiſdom. She ſaith, what is this then? ו' יצאין וט' נכנסין There are ſeven things go out and nine enter. שנים מוזגין וחד שותה Two mingle (or prepare) the cup, and one drinks of it. He ſaith, there are ſeven days for a Womans ſeparation, that go out, and nine months for her bringing forth, that come in. Two breaſts do mingle, or prepare the cup, and one ſucks it. Again ſaith ſhe, I will ask thee one thing more, what is this? A Woman ſaith unto her Son, thy Father was my Father; thy Grandfather was my Husband; thou art my Son and I am thy Siſter. To whom he anſwered ודאי בנותיו של לוט היו Surely they were Lot's Daughters. There is much more of this kind, but thus much may ſuffice for riddles.

VERS. XXXIII.

Οὐδεὶς δὲ λύχνον ἅψας, &c. No man when he hath lighted a Candle, &c.

THE coherence of this paſſage with what went before ſeems a little difficult; but the connexion probably is this. There were ſome that had reviled him, as if he had caſt out Devils by the Prince of the Devils; others that had required a ſign from Heaven, Verſ. 15,16. To the former of theſe he gives an anſwer, Verſ. 17, 18. and indeed to both of them Verſ. 19. and ſo on. This paſſage we are upon reſpects both, but the latter more principally. q. d. You require a ſign of me; would you have me light a Candle and put it under a buſhel? Would you have me work miracles, when I am aſſured beforehand, you will not believe theſe miracles? Which however of themſelves they may ſhine like a candle lighted up, yet in reſpect to you that believe them not, it is no other than a candle under a buſhel, or in a ſecret place.

VERS.

VERS. XXXVI.

Ἔσται φωτεινὸν ὅλον. The whole ſhall be full of light.

THIS clauſe ſeems ſo much the ſame with the former, as if there were ſomething of Tautology; εἰ οὖν τὸ σῶμά σου ὅλον φωτεινὸν, &c. If thy whole body therefore be full of light, &c. our Saviour ſpeaketh of the eye after the manner of the Schools, where the evil eye, or the eye not ſingle, ſignify'd the covetous, envious, and malicious mind. Do not bring ſuch a mind along with thee, but a candid, benign, gentle mind, then thou wilt be all bright and clear thy ſelf, and all things will be bright and clear to thee. If you had but ſuch a mind, O! ye carping, blaſphemous Jews, you would not frame ſo ſordid and infamous a judgment of my miracles, but you would have a clear and candid opinion concerning them.

VERS. XXXVIII.

Ὅτι οὐ πρῶτον ἐβαπτίσθη πρὸ τοῦ ἀρίστου. That he had not firſt waſhed before dinner.

HAD the Phariſee himſelf waſhed before dinner in that ſenſe wherein βαπτίζεσθαι ſignifies the waſhing of the whole body; it is hardly credible, when there was neither need, nor was it the cuſtom to waſh the whole body before meat, but the hands only. This we have ſpoken larglier upon elſwhere q; from whence it will be neceſſary for us to repeat theſe things; that there is נטילת ידים a waſhing of the hands, and there is טבילת ידים a dipping of the hands. This clauſe we are upon, refers to this latter. The Phariſee wonders that Chriſt had not waſht his hands, nay that he had not dipped them all over in the water when he was newly come, ἐξ ἀγορᾶς, that is, ἐκ τῶν ὄχλων ἐπαθροιζομένων, v. 29. from the people that were gather'd thick together.

q Vid. Notes upon Matt XV. & Mark VII.

Of how great eſteem this waſhing their hands before meat was amongſt them, beſides what I have alledg'd elſwhere, take this one inſtance more: r It is ſtory'd of R. Akibah, that he was bound in priſon, and R. Joſhua miniſtred unto him as his הגרסי or reader. He daily brought him water by meaſure; one day the keeper of the priſon met him, and ſaid unto him, thou haſt too much water to day.-----He pour'd out half and gave him half. When he came to R. Akibah, he told him the whole matter. R. Akibah ſaith unto him, give me ſome water to waſh my hands; the other ſaith unto him, there is not enough for thee to drink, and how then ſhouldſt thou have any to waſh thine hands? to whom he, What ſhall I do in a matter wherein there is the guilt of death? It is better I ſhould die (that is by thirſt) than that I ſhould tranſgreſs the mind of my colleagues: Who had thus preſcrib'd about waſhing of hands.

r Erubbin, fol. 21. 2.

And a little after, Samuel ſaith, בשעה שתקן שלמה עירובין ונטילת ידים At that time wherein Solomon inſtituted the Erubbin and waſhing of the hands, there came forth Bath-kol, and ſaid, my Son, if thy heart be wiſe, even mine ſhall rejoyce. Obſerve here (at leaſt if you will believe it) that Solomon was the firſt author of this waſhing of hands. s Whoſoever bleſſeth immediately after the waſhing of hands, אין השטן מקטגר באותה סעודה Satan doth not accuſe him for that time of his repaſt.

VERS. XXXIX.

Ὑμεῖς οἱ Φαρισαῖοι τὸ ἔξωθεν τοῦ ποτηρίου καὶ τοῦ πίνακος καθαρίζετε, &c. Now do ye Phariſees make clean the outſide of the cup and the platter, &c.

THIS our Saviour ſpeaks of the perſons and not of the veſſels, which is plain in that,

I. He ſaith τὸ δὲ ἔσωθεν ὑμῶν, your inward parts, &c. ſo that the ſenſe is to this purpoſe: you cleanſe your ſelves outwardly indeed by theſe kinds of waſhings, but that which is within you is full of rapine, &c.

II. Whereas he ſaith οὐχ ὁ ποιήσας τὸ ἔξωθεν, he that made that which is without, he doth not ſpeak it of the artificer that made the cup or the platter, but of God. Elſe what kind of argument is this? He that made the cups and the platters, made both the outſide and the inſide of them: What then? therefore do ye make your ſelves clean both outſide and inſide too. But if we refer it to God, then the argument holds forcibly enough. Did not God that made you without, make you within too? he expects therefore that you ſhould keep your ſelves clean, not only as to your outſide, but as to your inſide too.

III. It is hardly probable that the Phariſees ſhould waſh the outſide of the cup or platter, and not the inſide too; take but theſe two paſſages out of this kind of Authors themſelves: t Thoſe diſhes which any perſon eats out of over night, they waſh them that he may eat in them

them in the morning. In the morning: they wash them that he may eat in them at noon. At noon: that he may eat in them at the Mincha; after the Mincha he doth not wash them again, but the cups, and jugs, and bottles he doth wash, והולך לו כל היום כולו and so it goes throughout the whole day, &c. I will not give my self nor Reader the trouble to examine the meaning of the words, it suffices only that here is mention of washing, and that the whole vessel, not of this or that part only; and the washing of such vessels was שטיפה by dipping them in water. [u]

[u] Vid. Aruch in עשר.

[x] All vessels שיש להן אחוריים וחוץ that have an outside and an inside, if the inside be defil'd, the outside is also, but נטמא גבו לא נטמא תוכו if the outside be defil'd the inside is not defil'd; one would think this was to our purpose, and asserted the very literal sense of the words we have in hand, viz. that the cups and the platters, although they were unclean on the outside, yet in the inside they might be clean; and it was sufficient to the Pharisee if he cleans'd them on the outside only, but the vessels here mention'd (if the Glos may be our interpreter) are such בהן בתוכן שרואין לחשתמש ובאחוריהן which they might use both the outside and the inside indifferently: Some of them are recited by the Gemarists, viz. sacks, wallets, night-caps, pillowbears, &c.

[x] Pesach. fol. 17. 2.

Our Saviour therefore does not here speak according to the letter, neither here nor in Mat. XXIII. 25. when he saith, Ye make clean the outside of the cup and of the platter, but by way of parable and similitude. You, while you are so very nice and officious in your external washings, you do nothing more than if you only washt the outside of the cup or dish, while there was nothing but filth and nastiness within.

VERS. XL.

שוטים a word very common to the Nation: [y] Rabban Johanan ben Zacchai said to the Baithusians שוטים ye fools, how prove you this? [x] Esau said, שוטה היה קין Cain was a fool. Pharaoh said שוטה עשו Esau was a fool.-----Haman said שוטה היה פרעה Pharaoh was a fool.---- Gog and Magog will say שוטים חראשונים they were all fools that are gone before us. Hence that common phrase שוטה שב-עולם O thou most foolish thing in all the world.

VERS. XLI.

Πλὴν τὰ ἐνόντα δότε ἐλεημοσύνην. But rather give alms of such things as you have.

THIS seems Ironically spoken, and in derision to the opinion they had concerning alms.

I. As to the Version of the word τὰ ἐνόντα, may we not suppose it signifies not only quod supereſt, that which is over and above, as the vulgar, but also quod penes vos est, all that you have, as Beza. Or not only something that may have respect to the riches of this world, but something also that may have respect to the Doctrines and tenets of the Pharisees. As if the meaning was this, those things which are amongst you, i.e. which obtain commonly amongst you, are to this purpose, give but alms, and all things are clean unto you. When I observe amongst the Talmudists how the word איתא & איתי is used, when any thing is put or determin'd (especially when איתא חמי occurs, I question whether it be the same with תא חמי come, see; or it is so, see.) I cannot but perswade my self that the ἐνόντα in this place looks something that way: your inward part is full of ravening; but the positions and tenets that obtain amongst you are, give Alms, &c.

II. However, grant that τὰ ἐνόντα denotes that which is over and above, or that which you have; for I will not be very tenacious in this: yet is it hardly probable that our Saviour utters this as his own, but rather as the words and opinion of the Pharisees; nor do I think that he speaks these things directly, or by way of direction to them, but that he cites their tenets in meer scoff and displeasure. For indeed this principle was the spawn of their own Schools, that giving of alms had a value in it, that serv'd for attonement, justification, salvation, every thing. Hence that common term that reacht so comprehensively צדקה righteousness; and hence is it that in those numberless places in the Holy Scriptures where the praises of justice and righteousness are celebrated, and all the blessings of it pronounc'd, they apply it all to the giving of alms. Take one instance for all. a Rabh Asai saith שקולה הצדקה בנגד כל המצוות Alms is equivalent to all the other commandments. [b] R. Judah saith, Giving of Alms is a great thing, for it hastens our redemption. It is written צדקה תציל ממות righteousness (i.e. giving of Alms) delivers from death.-----Alms-giving delivereth from sudden death, and from the judgment of Hell. R. Meir saith, If any wicked man should make this objection, that if God love the poor, why doth he not feed them: do thou make this answer, It is that we by them might be deliver'd from the judgment of Hell.

[b] Ibid. fol. 10. 1.

I wish

I wiſh indeed that the Greek Interpreters have not a touch of this, when they ſo oftentimes render צדקה juſtice by ἐλεημοσύνην, or giving of Alms. So that the Reader may judg whether our Saviour either would teach that rapine, injuſtice and unrighteouſneſs might be cleans'd by giving of alms, or that he would give them any counſel of this nature, when he knew they were ſufficiently tinctur'd with this kind of Doctrine already.

VERS. XLV.

Ἀποκριθεὶς δὲ τὶς τῶν Νομικῶν. Then anſwer'd one of the Lawyers.

HERE ſeems a little difficulty, that whereas in the foregoing verſe it is ſaid, Wo unto you Scribes and Phariſees, it is not ſubjoyn'd Ἀποκριθεὶς δὲ τὶς τῶν Γραμματέων, then anſwered one of the Scribes, but τὶς τῶν νομικῶν, one of the Lawyers; which ſcruple perhaps the vulgar obſerving, made him leave Scribes and Phariſees wholly out. Our Savior inveighs more peculiarly, and by name againſt the Phariſees, ver. 37, 42, 43. and at length joyns the Scribes with them, v. 44. Hence that Lawyer cavils and complains, either that he had nam'd the Scribes in terms, or that he had accus'd the Phariſees of nothing, but what the Scribes might be equally accus'd of. As to this very Scribe, did not he waſh his hands before dinner as the Phariſees did? for it is ſaid of all the Jews, [c] ἐὰν μὴ πυγμῇ νίψωνται, except they waſh their hands oft, eat not. Did not the Scribe tythe mint and rue as well as the Phariſee? when we find that מעשר ירק מדבנין the tything of herbs was inſtituted by the Rabbins [d]. In a word, the Scribes and the Phariſees go hand in hand in that diſcourſe of our Saviours, Mat. XXIII. where he blameth both the one and the other for the ſame things. So that it is plain enough why this man complains, but it is not ſo plain why he ſhould be term'd one of the Lawyers, and not one of the Scribes.

I. It is not very eaſie diſtinguiſhing betwixt the Scribe and the Phariſee, ſaving that Phariſaiſm was a kind of tumour and excreſcence as to ſuperſtition and auſterities of Religion, beyond the common and ſtated practiſe of that Nation, even of the Scribes themſelves. Whether that diſtinction betwixt יחיד ſingular, and תלמיד, a diſciple, hints any difference as to the auſterity of Religion, I cannot affirm, only will lay a paſſage or two in the Reader's eye for him to conſider.

[e] The Rabbins have a tradition, Let no one ſay אני תלמיד I am a diſciple, אני ראוי להיות יחיד I am not fit to be made a ſingular. The Gloſs hath it, I am not fit to begin the faſts with the ſingulars. And the Gemara a little after, The Rabbins have a tradition, every one that would make himſelf a ſingular, let him not make himſelf ſo: but if any one would make himſelf a diſciple, let him. And at length אין תלמיד חכם רשאי לשב בתענית It is not lawful for a diſciple of the wiſe to continue in faſtings שממעט במלאכת שמים becauſe he diminiſheth from the work of God: that is, he ceaſeth from learning and teaching.

[e] Taanith, fol. 10. 2.

One would here think that it is plainly diſtinguiſht betwixt a Phariſee, and any other, and yet the Gemariſts in the very ſame place ſay thus, כל תלמידי חכמים יחידים all the diſciples of the wiſe are ſingulars. At length they query איזהו יחיד ואיזהו תלמיד who is a ſingular, and who is a diſciple? A ſingular is he that is worthy למנותו פרנס הציבור to be prefer'd to be a Paſtor of a Synagogue. A diſciple is he, who if they ask him any thing concerning a tradition in his doctrine, he hath wherewithal to anſwer. So that by a diſciple they mean not he that is now a learning, but he who hath already learnt, and now teacheth; but in other places they apply both theſe to the diſciple.

[f] R. Johanan ſaith, who is a diſciple of the wiſe? he whom they prefer to be Paſtor of a Synagogue: He whom if they ask about any tradition in any place, hath wherewithal to anſwer.

[f] Schab. fol. 104. 1.

The difference between theſe, however confounded in this place was this: that תלמיד the diſciple could anſwer doubts and queſtions, fetcht out of that place, or from that ſubject upon which he had taught or read; but יחיד the ſingular, could anſwer all doubts rais'd from any place בכל מקום אפילו במסבת כלה even out of the Treatiſe concerning marriages. That mention of the Paſtor and the Teacher, Eph. IV. 11. we ſeem to have ſome ſhadow of it here, תלמיד the diſciple is the teacher, and יחיד the ſingular, is the Paſtor of the Synagogue; and perhaps if theſe things were obſerv'd, it might give ſome light into that place of the Apoſtle.

II. As תלמיד the diſciple, and יחיד the ſingular, are ſometimes confounded, ſometimes diſtinguiſht, ſo alſo is the Scribe and the Phariſee. They are ſometimes confounded, for many of the Phariſees were Scribes, and they are ſometimes diſtinguiſhed, for many of them were of the common people, and not Scribes. Perhaps it may not be improperly ſaid, that there were Phariſees that were of the Clergy, and Phariſees that were of the laity. He whom we have now before us was a Scribe, but not a Phariſee: but it is not eaſie to give the reaſon why he is term'd a Lawyer, and not a Scribe. Here is ſome place for conjecture but not for demonſtration. As to conjecture therefore let us make a little aſſay in this matter.

I. I conceive that the Νομικὸς, and Νομοδιδάσκαλος, the Lawyer and Teacher of the Law, may be oppos'd to the Sadducees, to whom the Phariſee is diametrically oppoſite, for they were contrary to them in their practiſe of the Traditional rites, as much as they could; and theſe again contrary to them in Traditional doctrines abundantly. The Sadducees had indeed their Scribes or their teachers as well as any other party: there is frequent mention of סופרי צדוקין the Scribes of the Sadducees. And from this antitheſis probably is Rabban Gamaliel term'd Νομοδιδάσκαλος, a Doctor of Law. For there was then an aſſembly of the Sect of the Sadducees, ver. 17. Now when Gamaliel who was of the other Sect, made his ſpeech amongſt them, it is eaſie to conceive why he is there term'd Νομοδιδάσκαλος, a Doctor of Law. For the ſame reaſon we may ſuppoſe the perſon here before us, might be call'd νομικὸς, one of the Lawyers, and not a Scribe, becauſe there were Scribes even amongſt the Sadducees.

ℓ Act. v. 34.

II. I conceive therefore that the νομικοὶ and νομοδιδάσκαλοι were the Traditionary Doctors of the Law. As to Gamaliel a Doctor of the Law, the thing is without diſpute, and if there were any difference between the Lawyers and Doctors of the Law yet as to this matter I ſuppoſe there was none. Let us conſider this following paſſage: h It is a Tradition, R. Simeon ben Jochai ſaith, he that is converſant במקרא in the Textual expoſition of the Law, hath a meaſure which is not a meaſure. He that is converſant in Miſhneh, hath a meaſure from whence they receive a reward; but if he be converſant in the Talmud, there is not a greater meaſure than this. Always betake your ſelf to the Miſhneh, rather than the Talmud. But R. Joſe ben R. Bon ſaith, This which thou ſaiſt, obtain'd before the Rabbi had mixed with it manifold traditions, but from the time that he mixed with it manifold traditions, always have recourſe to the Talmud, rather than to the Miſhneh.

h Hieroſ. Schabb. fol. 15. 3.

Now I pray who is he that (according to this tradition) merits moſt the title of a Doctor of Law, νομικῶ or νομοδιδασκάλῳ; he that is converſant במקרא in the expoſition and interpretation of the written Law, and the context of it? Alas! he doth but little, and for all the oyl and labour he hath ſpent, hath only a meaſure which is not a meaſure. But he that is converſant in the Miſhneh and Talmud, in the Traditional doctrine or expoſition of the Traditional Law, he bears away the bell, he hath ſome reward for his pains, and is dignify'd with the title of Doctor.

III. If there were any diſtinction betwixt νομικὸν and νομοδιδάσκαλον (which I hardly believe) we may ſuppoſe it might be this, either that the Νομοδιδάσκαλος had his School and his diſciples, and the Νομικὸς had none: or that the Νομικὸς was converſant in the Miſhneh, or the plain and literal expoſition of Traditions, and the Νομοδιδάσκαλος in the Talmud, or a more profound and ſcholaſtick way of teaching.

However, be there this diſtinction betwixt them, or ſome other, or indeed none at all, yet I preſume they were both Doctors of Traditions, and expounders of that which they call'd the Oral Law, in oppoſition to the Scribes, whether amongſt the Jews or the Sadducees, who employ'd themſelves in the Textual expoſition of the Law.

VERS. XLVI.

Καὶ αὐτοὶ ἑνὶ τῶν δακτύλων ὑμῶν οὐ προσψαύετε. And ye your ſelves touch not (the burdens) with one of your fingers.

THAT the Νομικοὶ (as we have already ſaid) were the Doctors of Traditions, is a little confirm'd by this, that what our Saviour reproacheth them for, were meerly Traditionals: this particularly, that they laded men with ſuch yokes of Traditions, and yet they themſelves would not touch or move them with one of their fingers.

This expoſition indeed vulgarly obtains, you lay grievous burdens upon others, which in the mean time you indulg your ſelves in, and will not undergo them by any means. This interpretation I cannot but admit, but yet muſt inquire whether there be not ſomething more included in it. For whereas he that would preſcribe light things to himſelf, and burdenſome to others was commonly accounted and call'd רשע ערום a wicked cunning fellow i. And whereas there is frequent mention of this or that Rabbin המחמיר על עצמו who would lay this or that burden upon himſelf, which he would acquit others of; it may be a queſtion whether this expoſition ſo commonly receiv'd, doth indeed ſpeak out the whole ſenſe and meaning of theſe words.

i Sotah, cap 3. hal. 4.

I apprehend therefore our Saviour might not only rebuke the remiſneſs and indulgence they gave themſelves, but further their ſtrictneſs and tenaciouſneſs about their own decrees; they made light of the commandments of God at their own pleaſure, but would never diminiſh the leaſt tittle of their own. That they might remove or take away any part of the Divine Law they employ both hands, but as to their own Conſtitutions they will not move one finger.

VERS. XLIX.

Διὰ τοῦτο καὶ ἡ σοφία τοῦ Θεοῦ εἶπεν. Therefore alſo ſaid the wiſdom of God.

THIS form of ſpeaking agreeth well enough with that ſo much in uſe אמרה מדת הדין the rule of judgment ſaith; amongſt numberleſs inſtances take that of the Targumiſt k, Is it fitting that the daughters of Iſrael ſhould eat the fruit of their own womb? k Thren. 2. 2. ענת מידת דינא the rule of judgment (retributive juſtice) anſwer'd and ſaid אם חזי was it alſo fitting to kill a Prieſt and a Prophet in the Sanctuary of the Lord, as ye kill'd Zacharias, &c.

VERS. LI.

IF our Saviour had not in the Evangeliſt St. Matthew added, the Son of Barachias, no one could have doubted that it refer'd to any other than Zacharias the Son of Jehojudah, whoſe ſlaughter is recorded, II Chron. XXIV. It is certain, the Jews own no other Zacharias ſlain in the Temple but himſelf: and what they ſay of his ſlaughter I have already taken notice upon that place in St. Matthew out of both the Talmuds, we meet with the ſame things in Midras Echah l, and Midras Coheleth m; out of which laſt, give me leave briefly to tranſcribe theſe paſſages. l Fol. 79. 2, 3. m Fol. 93 1.

The blood of Zachary boil'd up CCLII years from the days of Joaſh to the days of Zedekiah. What did they do? they ſwept into it all the duſt (of the Court) and made an heap, yet it ceaſed not, but ſtill boil'd and bubled up. The Holy Bleſſed God ſaid to the blood הא ענתא דתיגבי דיותיקי דירד behold the time is come that thou exact thy דיז דיון, (that was, let the Lord behold and require it at your hands) when Nebuzaradan came and enquir'd what this matter was? they anſwer'd that it was the blood of heifers and rams, and lambs which they had ſacrific'd.----Afterward when he came to underſtand what the matter was, he ſlew eighty thouſand Prieſts, and yet the blood would not ſtanch, but broke out and flow'd as far as the Tomb of Zachary: he brought together therefore the Sanhedrin, both the great and leſs, and ſlew them over that blood, and yet it did not ceaſe, &c.

I hardly indeed think that thoſe that relate this matter did really believe it to have been actually ſo, but only would by ſuch flowers of Rhetorick and ſtrained Hyperboles paint out the horrible guilt of the murder of Zacharias, which by how much the more horrible it was, by ſo much the more did it agree with the guilt of the murder of our Bleſſed Lord.

And however a great part of it in theſe relations of theirs may be meer flouriſh, yet by the whole framing of the thing it muſt needs be obſerved that the ſlaughter of this Zacharias was ſo famous and rooted in the minds of that people generally, that when our Saviour ſpeaks of one Zacharias ſlain between the Temple and the Altar, it cannot be imagin'd that they could underſtand him pointing at any other than this very man. As for his father being here call'd Barachias, and not Jehojadah, we have ſpoken to that matter elſwhere n.

If any one heſitate about the changing of the name, let him ſay by what name he finds Jehojadah recited in that Catalogue of Prieſts ſet down in I Chron. VI. It muſt be either ſome other name, or elſe we muſt ſuppoſe him wholly left out of that number. If by another name, you will ſay (ſuppoſing he be alſo call'd Barachias) he was then a man of three names. This indeed is no unuſual thing with that Nation for ſome to have more names than one; nay, if you will believe the Jewiſh Doctors, even Moſes himſelf had no leſs than ten o. n Vid. Notes at Mat. XXIII. o Vajiera rabb. fol. 165. 3.

VERS. LII.

Ἤρατε τὴν κλεῖδα τῆς γνώσεως. Ye have taken away the key of knowledg.

SHould we render it, ye have taken the key of knowledg (that is, to your ſelves); or, ye have taken it away: there is not much difference. They took the key of knowledg to themſelves, when they arrogated to themſelves only all profoundneſs of wiſdom and learning, hereby indeed taking it away from the people, becauſe they taught them nothing but trifling and idle ſtuff.

The word for key being in their language מפתחא brings to mind the word פתח which was ſo very much in uſe amongſt them for one that was teaching. Inſtances of this were endleſs, there are enough of it in that long preface prefixt to that Midras Thren, that hath for its title פתיחתא דחכימי the openings of the wiſe; where (as indeed almoſt every where elſe) it is ſo frequently ſaid פתח ר' R. ſuch an one, open'd; for I cannot tell how better to render it. I know indeed that פתח oftentimes ſignifies, he began: to which is oppos'd חתם or סיים he ended. But here it is uſed when any Rabbin produceth any Text of Scripture, and either gloſſeth or diſcourſeth upon it by way of Expoſition, alluſion or allegory. While he open'd to us the Scriptures p. There is no one that obſerves the places, but will eaſily ſuppoſe there is more ſignified by the expreſſion than meer opening his mouth.

CHAP. XII.

VERS. I.

Ἐπισυναχθεισῶν τῶν μυριάδων. When there were gather'd together an innumerable multitude of people.

THERE is no one would underſtand this in the very letter of it, as if the number of the people here preſent were at leaſt twenty thouſand, but a very great number. So Act. XXI. 20. Πόσαι μυριάδες εἰσὶν Ἰουδαίων τῶν πεπιστευκότων, How many myriads of Jews which believe.

This probably denotes the mighty ſucceſs of the ſeventy diſciples preaching the Goſpel, who had ſo clearly and effectually taught concerning Chriſt, and told them of the places that he had determin'd to come to, that the people had flockt together in thoſe vaſt numbers, ready upon all occaſions to meet him when they heard the Meſſias was making his approaches to this or that Town.

VERS. III.

Ὃ πρὸς τὸ ὦς ἐλαλήσατε. That which ye have ſpoken in the ear.

a Notes upon Mat. X 27. b Fol. 14. 1. c Sanhedr. fol. 26. 2.

I Have elſewhere a ſpoken of a Doctor whiſpering in the ear אמוריה or מתרגומניה of his Interpreter; the reaſon of this uſage is given us b in Chagigah שהתורה ניתנה בלחש becauſe the Law is deliver'd ſilently: and the reaſon of this is ניתנה בלחש מפני השטן it is delivered ſilently becauſe of Satan c.

However theſe words are not to be underſtood of any ſuch kind of whiſpering into the ears of the Interpreter, but concerning any matter that may have been ſpoken in never ſo much ſecreſie and deſign not to have been known again. The Doctor whiſper'd into the ear of the Interpreter, to that end that his diſciples might publiſh what he had ſaid. But here is meant, whatever any had the greateſt purpoſe to conceal, yet God will reveal it; not much unlike that paſſage in Eccleſ. X. 20. Our Saviour intimates the folly as well as the wickedneſs of diſſimulation, becauſe in time the viſor ſhall be taken off, and the moſt diſſembled hypocriſie expos'd to naked view.

VERS. VI.

Οὐχὶ πέντε στρουθία πωλεῖται ἀσσαρίων δύο. Are not five ſparrows ſold for two farthings?

d Mat. X. 29.

TWO Sparrows were ſold for one farthing d, and five for two. We find that Doves were ſold in the Temple upon the account of women in child-bed, and their iſſues of blood, by whom a pair of Turtles and young pigeons were to be offer'd, if they had not wherewithal to preſent a more coſtly ſacrifice; ſo probably the Sparrows were likely to be ſold upon the account of lepers in the cleanſing of whom they were made uſe of e. I confeſs the Greek Verſion in this place hath not δύο στρουθία, two ſparrows, but δύο ὀρνίθια, two little birds. And yet if you will believe the far-fetcht reaſon that R. Solomon gives, you will eaſily imagine that they are ſparrows that are pointed at. The leproſie, ſaith he, came upon mankind for an evil tongue, שהוא מעשה פטפוטי דברים that is for too much garrulity of words, and therefore in the cleanſing of it they uſed צפרים ſparrows that are always chirping and chattering with their voice.

e Levit. XIV. 4.

Καὶ ἓν ἐξ αὐτῶν οὐκ ἔστιν ἐπιλελησμένον ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ. And not one of them is forgotten before God.

f R. Simeon ben Jachai ſtanding at the mouth of his Cave (wherein he lay hid for the ſpace of thirteen years) he ſaw a certain man catching of birds. And when he heard Bath Kol out of Heaven, ſaying, mercy, mercy, the birds eſcaped. But when he heard Bath Kol, ſaying, the pain of death, then was the bird taken. He ſaith therefore ציפר מכלערי שמיא לא מתצרא A bird is not taken without God, much leſs the life of a man. This paſſage is alſo recited in Midras Tillen g, but the circumſtances vary. f Bereſh. rabb. fol. 88. 4. g Fol. 15. 1.

VERS. IX.

Ὁ δὲ ἀρνησάμενός με, &c. But he that denyeth me, &c.

CONſider whether in theſe words and in the following Verſe our Bleſſed Saviour do not point at thoſe two unpardonable ſins, Apoſtacy or denying and renouncing of Chriſt, and Blaſphemy, or the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt. The firſt is called a ſin unto death h. And ſo in truth and in the event is the latter too. I find them indeed conſounded by ſome who diſcourſe upon the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, when yet this difference may be obſerved, viz. that Apoſtacy cannot properly be charged on any but who have already profeſt Chriſtianity: but Blaſphemy againſt the Holy Ghoſt was uttered by the Scribes and Phariſees at that time that they diſowned and rejected Chriſt. h 1 Joh. V. 16.

VERS. XIII.

Μερίσασθαι μετ' ἐμοῦ τὴν κληρονομίαν. That he divide the inheritance with me.

I. IN the titles of brethren this obtained amongſt them, that as the eldeſt was called בכור the firſt born; ſo the younger was called פשוט ſimple, becauſe without the title of firſt-born. It ſeems to be only two brethren here, betwixt whom the complaint is made, but which of them is the complainant, it is not ſo eaſie to determine. You will ſay, the younger moſt probably, becauſe it is more likely that the firſt-born ſhould wrong the younger, than the younger the firſt-born. And yet in that Court of Judicature which they called דינא דגור או אגור the Court of, thou draw and I'll draw; the younger might be troubleſome to the firſt-born, as well as the firſt-born to the younger. That matter was thus:

i When a Father had bequeathed to his firſt-born and younger Son a ſervant and an unclean beaſt, which could not be parted in two, then ſaith the one to the other, do thou draw or I'll draw; that is, do thou redeem thy ſhare or I will redeem mine. Now here the younger brother may be perverſe, and as well hinder the redemption, as the firſt-born. i Bava bathra, fol. 13. 1.

II. In the diviſion of inheritances how many vexations and quarrels may ariſe, both reaſon and common experience do abundantly teach us. The Rabbins are very large upon this head, and ſuppoſe that great controverſies may ariſe either from the Teſtament of the Father, or the nature of the inheritance, or the quality of the Sons; as if the younger Son be a Diſciple of the Wiſe-men, and the elder not: if the younger be made a Proſelyte, the elder a Gentile, &c. But in the inſtance now before us, the complaint or controverſie is not about dividing, but about not dividing, becauſe the firſt-born moſt probably would not gratifie the younger in that thing.

The Judges in that caſe was the Bench of the Triumviri, theſe were the διαιτηταὶ, Judges in the Controverſie, and decreed concerning the right or equity of dividing: And either ſome were appointed by them, or ſome choſen by thoſe between whom the cauſe depended, as arbiters in the caſe, and theſe were the μεσιταὶ Dividers, thoſe that took care as to the equality of the diviſion. Now we cannot eaſily ſuppoſe what ſhould move this man to appeal to our Saviour as judge in this matter, unleſs either himſelf, or Brother, or both were of the number of his Diſciples.

VERS. XIX.

Ψυχὴ ἀναπαύου, φάγε, πίε, &c. Soul, take thine eaſe, eat, drink, &c.

k When the Church is in diſtreſs, let not any man then ſay, I will go into mine houſe, and will eat and drink ושלום עליך נפשי and peace be to thee O my ſoul. For if any one ſhall ſo do, it is written of him, behold joy, and gladneſs, ſlaying Oxen, and killing Sheep, k Taanith, fol. 11. 1.

sheep, eating flesh, and drinking wine: Let us eat and drink for to morrow we shall dye. But what follows? It was revealed in mine ears by the Lord of Hosts, surely this iniquity shall not be purged away from you till you dye. And what if he should so say and do, when the Church is not in distress?

VERS. XX.

Ταύτῃ τῇ νυκτὶ τὴν ψυχήν σου ἀπαιτοῦσιν ἀπό σου. This night shall thy soul be required of thee.

l Elleh Haddebarim rabb. fol. 300. 1.

HOwever this following story hath something in it that may be laught at, yet hath it something in it that is serious enough. l The Rabbins say: It fell out in the days of R. Simeon ben Chalaphta: that he went to a certain Circumcision and there feasted. The Father of the infant gave them old wine, wine of seven years old, to drink, and said unto them, with this wine will I grow old in the joy of my Son. They feasted together till midnight. R. Simeon ben Chalaphta trusting to his own vertue, went out at midnight to go into the City: In the way he finds the Angel of death, and observes him very sad: Saith he to him, who art thou? He saith I am the messenger of the Lord: And why then (saith he) art thou so sad? He saith unto him משיחתן שלּ בריות I am sad for the speeches of those who say, I will do this or that e're long, though they know not how quickly they may be called away by death. That man with whom thou hast been feasting, and that boasted amongst you, with this wine I will grow old in the joy of my Son; behold the time draws nigh, that within thirty days he must be snatcht away. He saith unto him, do thou let me know my time: To whom he answered, over thee and such as thou art, we have no power: for God being delighted with good works prolongeth your lives.

VERS. XXIV.

Οὐ ταμεῖον οὐδὲ ἀποθήκη. Neither Store-house nor Barn.

I Am mistaken if the Jerusalem Writers would not render it לא מרתף ולא גורן for מרתף was the Store-house where they laid up their fruits, and גורן was the Barn where they laid up their grain. It is commonly rendred the floor, but there it is meant the Barn floor. Our Saviour takes an instance from God feeding the Ravens. m It is R. Solomon's remark: Our Rabbins observe that the Raven is cruel toward its young, but God pitieth them, and provides them flees that breed out of their own dung. Now the reason they give why the old ones are so unmerciful to their own young, is in Chetabboth n, where the Gloss thus explains the mind of the Gemarists speaking of the young ones וחיורי אוכמי both white and black: when they grow black, the old ones begin to love their young, but while they are all white they loath them.

m Vide Job XXXVIII 41. & Ps. CXLVII. 9.

n Fol. 49. 2.

In that very place there occurs this passage not unworthy our transcribing. There was a certain man brought before Rabh Judah, because he refused to provoide for his Children: saith he to those that brought him יאדוד ילך ואבני מתא שריא the Dragon brings forth, and lays her young in the Town to be nouriſht up. When he was brought to Rabh Chasda, he saith unto them, compel him to the door of the Synagogue, and there let him stand, and say עירבא בעי בניה the Raven seeks her young ones, but this Man doth not seek [or own] his Children: But doth the Raven seek her young ones? behold it is written, God feedeth the Ravens which cry unto him. לא קשיא This hath no difficulty in it. הא בחיורי הא באיכמי This is said of them while they are white, that God feeds them, but that is said of them when they are become black, that the Raven owneth her young. But the Gloss hath it thus: It seems as if he with his own voice should cry out against himself and say, the Raven owneth her young. But there are those that expound it, as if the minister of the Synagogue should sit him forth and proclaim upon him, the Raven acknowledgeth her young, but this man rejects his own Children. Tell it to the Church, Matth. XVIII. 17.

VERS. XXX.

Τὰ ἔθνη τοῦ κόσμου, &c. The nations of the world, &c.

אומות עולם Is a very common form of speech amongst the Jews by which they express the Gentiles, or all other nations beside themselves. Κόσμος and Αἰὼν have a peculiar propriety in Sacred Writ, which they have not in prophane Authors: so far that Αἰὼν hath relation only to the Jewish ages, and κόσμος to the nations that are not Jewish. Hence Συντέλεια τοῦ Αἰῶνος, Matth. XXIV. 3. is meant, the end of the Jewish age, or world. And πρὸ χρόνων αἰωνίων, Tit. I. 2. is before the Jewish world began; and hence it is that the world very often in the New Testament is to be understood only of the Gentile world.

Ἐν δευτέρᾳ φυλακῇ, καὶ ἐν τρίτῃ. In the ſecond watch, and in the third.

IN the very dead watches of all, at leaſt if there be not a ſoleciſm in ſpeech. At the firſt watch they went to bed, and the fourth watch, the time of getting up again came on: ſo that the ſecond and the third watch was the very dead time of ſleep.

VERS. XLVII.

Δαρήσεται πολλάς. Shall be beaten with many ſtripes.

THere was a ſtated number of ſtripes, and that was forty, beyond which no Malefactor Condemned by the Judges to that puniſhment, ought to receive. Whence that paſſage p ſeems a little ſtrange. He that kills an Heifer, and afterward two of that Heifers Calves טופח שמונים let him be beaten with fourſcore ſtripes. How ſo? fourſcorce when they ought not to exceed above forty? q They might not exceed that number for one ſingle crime: but if the crime was doubled, they might double the puniſhment. And it may be a queſtion whether they did not double their accuſations upon St. Paul, when they multiplied their ſtripes, he himſelf telling us that five times he had received forty ſtripes ſave one r. p Cholin. fol. 82. 1. q Dist. XXV. 3. r 2 Cor. XI. 24.

But did every one that was adjudged by the Court to ſtripes, did they always receive that number exactly of thirty nine? no doubt the number was more or leſs according to the nature of the crime. Which ſeems to be hinted in ſ Peſachin אבל פוטיתא לוקה ארבע he that eateth the Potitha (ſome creeping thing of the Sea) let him be beaten with four ſtripes. נמלדא לוקה חמש He that eateth a Piſmire, let him be beaten with five. צרעה לוקה שש He that eateth an Hornet, let him have ſix. If this be the ſenſe of the words, then here may ariſe a queſtion with what kind of ſcourge they were beaten? if with that ſcourge of three cords that was uſed when they gave nine and thirty ſtripes, repeating their ſtrokes by a ſcourge of three cords thirteen times, how then could they inflict four or five ſtripes with ſuch a ſcourge as that was? ſ Fol. 24. 2.

But as to the number of ſtripes which the maſter might inflict upon his ſlave, that was not ſtated, but left to the pleaſure of the maſter, according to the nature of the crime: which ſeems hinted at in theſe words of our Saviour, and in the following rule amongſt the Jews, ſome kind of meaſure ſtill being attended to.

t מותר לעבוד בעבד כנעני בפרך It is allowed to deal with a Cananite (that is, a Gentile) ſlave with ſeverity. But though this is de jure, yet there is a law of mercy, and rule of wiſdom, that a man ſhould be gentle, purſuing righteouſneſs, not making the yoke heavy upon his ſervant, leſt he afflict him. t Malmon. Avadim, cap. 9.

VERS. XLIX.

Καὶ τί θέλω εἰ ἤδη ἀνήφθη. And what will I, if it be already kindled?

TI θέλω What will I, ſeems to be uſed after the manner of the Schools, where מאי אני אומר What do I ſay? is the ſame with, I do ſay this. And ſo מאי אני מקיים What do I decree or approve? is the ſame with, this I do decree or approve. So מאי אני רוצה θέλω, What will I? is the ſame with, this I will. Thus in theſe words of our Saviour, What will I if it be already kindled? the meaning is, this I will, that it be already kindled. Now what kind of fire this was, which he would have already kindled, he himſelf explains Verſ. 51. and ſo on.

CHAP. XIII.

VERS. I.

Περὶ τῶν Γαλιλαίων. Of the Galileans.

IF this report concerning the Galileans was brought to our Saviour immediately after the deed was done, then was this Tragedy acted by Pilate, a little before the Feast of Dedication, for we find Christ going toward that Feast, Vers. 22. But the time of this slaughter is uncertain; for it is a question whether they that tell him this passage, relate it as news which he had not heard before, or only to draw from him his opinion concerning that affair, &c.

It is hotly disputed amongst some, as to the persons whom Pilate slew. And

I. Some would have them to have been of the Sect of Judas the Gaulonite, and that they were therefore slain because they denied to give tribute to Cæsar. He is called indeed Judas of Galilee a, and there is little doubt but that he might draw some Galileans into his opinion and practise. But I question then, whether Christ would have made any kind of defense for such, and have placed them in the same level with these upon whom the Tower of Siloam fell, when it so plainly appears that he taught directly contrary to that perverse Sect and Opinion. However, if these were of that Sect (for I will not contend it) then do these who tell this to our Saviour seem to lay a snare for him, not much unlike that question they put to him: Is it lawful to give tribute to Cæsar or no?

a Acts v. 37.

II. There is one that confounds this story with that of Josephus b which he relates from him thus abbreviated, In Galiæa autem, &c. In Galilee there were certain Samaritans, who being seduced by a notorious Impostor, moved Sedition at Mount Gerizzim (where this Cheat promised them to shew them the sacred Vessels, which he falsly told them had been hid by Moses in that place.) Pilate sending his forces upon them suppress them, the greater of them were taken and adjudged to death *. I admire how this learned man should deliver these things, with so much confidence as even to chastise Josephus himself for his mistake in his computation of the time for this story, concluding thus, cum revera tamen cædes, &c. When indeed this slaughter made upon the Samaritans by Pilate, seems to be that very slaughter of the Galileans, mentioned by St. Luke, Chap. XIII. 1.

b Antiqu. lib. 18. cap. 5.

* Ludov. Capel. Hist. Jud. Compend.

Whereas in truth Josephus mentions not one syllable either of Galilee or Sacrifice, or the Galileans, but Samaritans: and it is something a bold thing to substitute rebelling Samaritans in the place of sacrificing Galileans. Nor is it propable that those that tell this matter to our Saviour, would put this gloss and colour upon the thing while they related it.

III. The feud and enmity that was between Pilate and Herod c might be enough to incense Pilate to make this havock of the subjects of Herod.

c Luke XXIII. 12.

Ὧν τὸ αἷμα Πιλάτῳ ἔμιξε. Whose blood Pilate mingled.

d David swore to Abishai, As the Lord liveth, if thou touch the blood of this righteous man [Saul] אני מערב דמך בדמו I will mingle thy blood with his blood. So Pilate mingled the blood of these sacrificers, with the blood of those sacrifices they had slain. It is remarkable that in Siphra e the killing of the sacrifices may be well enough done, by strangers, by women, by servants, by the unclean, even those Sacrifices that are most holy, provided that the unclean touch not the flesh of them. And a little after, At the sprinkling of the blood the work of the Priest begins, and the slaying of them may be done by any hand whatever.

d Midras Tillin. fol. 7. 4.

e Fol. 4. 1. & Zevachim, fol. 31. 2.

Hence was it a very usual thing for those that brought the Sacrifice to kill it themselves: and so probably these miserable Galileans were slaughtered, while they themselves were slaying their own sacrifices. For it is more likely that they were slain in the Temple whiles they were offering their sacrifices, than in the way, whiles they were bringing them thither.

VERS. IV.

Ἐφ' οὓς ἔπεσεν ὁ πύργος ἐν τῷ Σιλωάμ. On whom the of Tower in Siloam fell.

THE pool of Bethesda was the pool of Siloam and from thence all that adjacent part of the City is denominated Siloam. And therefore it is left doubtful whether this Tower were built over the Pool, that is over the porches of the Pool, or stood something remote from it, in those parts that yet bore the name of Siloam. And if the article τῷ does not determine the matter, we must continue still in doubt. Will Grammar permit that that article should be prefixed to that part of the City? It is certain that the very Pool is called κολυμβήθρα τοῦ Σιλωάμ, f The Pool of Siloam. So that I conceive this Tower might be built over the Portico's of the Pool, and might overwhelm those eighteen men while they were busied about purifying themselves (and so this event falls in the more agreeably with that of the Galileans) or as they were expecting to be healed at the troubling of the waters; For it is very uncertain at what time this Tower fell.

VERS. VII.

Ἰδοὺ, τρία ἔτη ἔρχομαι, &c. Behold, these three years I come, &c.

THere was no Tree that was of a kind to bear fruit might lightly and upon every small occasion be cut down, that law providing against it in Deut. XX. 19, 20. where the Pesikta observes that there is both an affirmative, and also a negative command, by which it is the more forbidden that any Tree of that kind should be cut down unless upon a very indispensible occasion. g Rabb saith, cut not down the Palm that bears a cab of dates. They urge, and what of the Olive, that that should not be cut down? If it bear but the fourth part of a cab. R. Chaninah saith שבחרי ברי אלא דקץ תאינתא בלא ומנרי שביב לא My Son Shibchah had not died had he not cut down a Fig-tree before its time.

g Bava kama, fol. 91. 1.

VERS. VIII.

Σκάψω περὶ αὐτὴν καὶ βάλω κοπρίαν. I will dig about it and dung it.

THE Talmudists אני מעדר ומובל.
h מובלין ומעדרין וכו' They dung it and dig it, &c. The Gloss is, They lay dung in their Gardens to moisten the earth: they dig about the roots of their trees, they pluck up the suckers, they take off the leaves, they sprinkle ashes, and they smoke under the trees to kill worms.

h Sheviith, fol. 35. 1.

VERS. XI.

Πνεῦμα ἔχουσα ἀσθενείας. Having a spirit of infirmity.

I. THE Jews distinguish between Spirits, and Devils, and good Angels. i All things do subserve to the Glory of the King of Kings the Holy blessed one אפילו רוחות even Spirits אפילו שרים, also Devils אפילו מלאכי שרת also ministring Angels.

i B midb. rabb. fol. 157. 2. & Midras Schir. fol. 2. 3.

The difficulty is, in what sense they take spirits, as they are distinguisht from Angels and Devils, when it is probable they did not mean humane souls. But these things are not the business of this place.

II. Therefore as to this phrase in St. Luke πνεῦμα ἀσθενείας, a spirit of infirmity. Let us begin our enquiry from this passage: k It is written, if I put the plague of Leprosie in an house of the land of your inheritance. l R. Judah saith, this foretells such plagues to come upon them. R. Simeon saith, פרט לנגעי אותין He excepts those violent plagues that do not render a man unclean. Where the Gloss is, אם באו נגעים וכו If those plagues come by the insufflation of the Devil, which do not defile the man. And the Gemara a little after, Rabba saith, פרט לנגעי רוחות he excepts the plagues of spirits. Rabh Papa saith, he excepts the plagues of inchantments. Where the Gloss again hath it, Those plagues which are inflicted by the insufflation of the Devil, not by the hands of men.

k Horaioth, fol. 10. 1. l Levit. XIV. 34.

1. You see therefore first, that it was a most received opinion amongst the Jews that diseases or plagues might be inflicted by the Devil. Which is plain also from the Evangelists, because our Saviour in this very place tells us that the bowing together of this Woman, was inflicted upon her by Satan.

2. They conceived further that some diseases were inflicted that were unclean, and some that were not unclean. The unclean were the Leprosie, Issues, &c. Not unclean were such as this Woman's infirmity, &c.

III. They diſtinguiſh betwixt רוח רעה an evil ſpirit, and רוח טומאה an unclean ſpirit. Not but they accounted an unclean ſpirit ill enough, and an evil ſpirit to be unclean enough, but that they might diſtinguiſh the various operations of the Devil, as alſo concerning the various perſons poſſeſt and afflicted by him.

1. They acknowledged that evil Spirits might inflict diſeaſes. m Whomſoever either the Gentiles, or רוח רעה evil ſpirits drive [i. e. beyond the bounds of the Sabbath.] Where the Gloſs is, The evil ſpirit is the Devil that hath entred into him, diſturbs his intellectuals, ſo that he is carried beyond the bounds. But Rambam ſaith, They call all kind of melancholy an evil ſpirit. And elſewhere רוח רעה חולי an evil ſpirit, i. e. a diſeaſe.

m Erubbin, fol. 42. 2.

2. רוח טומאה The unclean ſpirit, amongſt them was chiefly and more peculiarly that Devil that haunted places of burial, and ſuch like, that were moſt unclean. n טומאה שך בית הקברות The unclean ſpirit, i. e. the devil that haunts burying places. Thither the Necromancer betook himſelf (as the Gemara hath it, which I have alſo quoted in another place) and when he had macerated himſelf with faſting, he lodgeth amongſt the Tombs, to the end that he might be the more inſpired by the unclean ſpirit. Nor is it much otherwiſe (as they themſelves relate it) with the בעל אוב the Python, or propheſying ſpirit. For the Rabbins deliver בעל אוב זה המדבר בין הפרקים the Python is he that ſpeaks between the parts. The Gloſs is, He that raiſeth a dead perſon, and ſits between the parts of the bones, &c.

n Gloſſ. in Sanhedr. fol. 65. 2.

Hence that reaſon of our conjecture, concerning that demoniack, Luke IV. 33. that he was either a Necromancer, or Pythoniſt, taken from that unuſual way expreſſing it which is there obſervable, not ἔχων πνεῦμα ἀκάθαρτον, having an unclean ſpirit, nor ἔχων δαιμόνιον ἀκάθαρτον, having an unclean devil; but ἔχων πνεῦμα δαιμονίου ἀκαθάρτου, having a ſpirit of an unclean devil.

There were therefore two ſorts of men, whom they accounted under the poſſeſſion of an unclean ſpirit, in their proper ſenſe ſo called. Thoſe eſpecially who ſought and were ambitious to be inſpired of the devil, amongſt tombs and unclean places: And thoſe alſo who being involuntarily poſſeſſed by the Devil, betook themſelves amongſt Tombs and ſuch places of uncleanneſs, And whether they upon whom the Devil inflicted unclean diſeaſes ſhould be ranked in the ſame degree, I do not determine. There were others who were not acted by ſuch diabolical furies, but afflicted with other kind of diſeaſes whom they accounted under the operation רוח רעה חולי of an evil ſpirit of diſeaſe or infirmity. Not ἀκαθαρσίας of uncleanneſs, but ἀσθενείας of infirmity. And perhaps the Evangeliſt ſpeaks according to this Antitheſis: that this Woman had neither a ſpirit of uncleanneſs, according to what they judged of a ſpirit of uncleanneſs, nor νόσον ἀκαθαρσίας a diſeaſe of uncleanneſs, but πνεῦμα ἀσθενείας a ſpirit of infirmity.

VERS. XV.

Ἕκαστος ὑμῶν τῷ σαββάτῳ οὐ λύει τὸν βοῦν αὐτοῦ; Doth not each one of you on the Sabbath day looſe his Ox?

THAT diſceptation in Schabb. o doth atteſt this, במה בהמה יוצאה how far a beaſt going forth. Where it is very much cautioned that the beaſt be not brought out on the Sabbath day carrying any thing upon him that might be a burden not permitted to be born on that day. They allow יוצא גמל באפסר that a Camel be led out with an Halter, סום בשיר an Horſe with a Collar, &c. that is, when they are led out either to paſture or watering. Nay the Gloſs upon the place adds, That they may lead out the Horſe to the water, that he may dip the Collar in the water if the Collar be unclean.

o Cap. 2. hal. 1.

To this may be referred that abſtruſe and obſcure rule p עושין פסין concerning the building of mounds about a ſpring that belongs to a private man with that art, that the beaſt being led thither to watering on the Sabbath day, ſhall not go out of the place that is of common right.

p Erubbin, fol. 17. 2.

q It is not only permitted to lead the beaſt out to watering on the Sabbath day, but they might draw water for him, and pour it into troughs, provided only that they do not carry the water and ſet it before the beaſt to drink, but the beaſt come and drink it of his own accord.

q Ibid. fol. 20. 2.

VERS. XXIII.

Εἰ ὀλίγοι οἱ σῳζόμενοι; Are there few that be ſaved?

THIS queſtion, Lord are there few that be ſaved? when it was a received opinion amongſt the Jews, that all Iſrael ſhould have their part in the world to come, makes it doubtful, whether it was propounded captiouſly, or meerly for ſatisfaction.

This

This very matter is disputed amongst the Doctors. r Therefore hell hath enlarged her self, and opened her mouth לבלי חוק beyond the statute. ſ Resh Lachish saith, this is for him who forsaketh one statute. (The Gloss is, He that leaves one statute unobserved, shall be condemned in hell.) But R. Johanan saith, Their Lord will not have it so as thou sayest concerning them. (The Gloss is, He will not have thee judge so concerning Israel.) For the sense is, Although a man have not learnt but one statute only, he shall escape Hell. It is said, t It shall come to pass that in all the land, saith the Lord, two parts of it shall be cut off, and dye, and the third part shall be left. Resh Lachish saith, The third part of Shem. R. Johanan saith unto him, Their Lord will not have it so as thou saist concerning them, for it is the third part of Noah. It is said, u I will take you, one of a City and two of a Tribe. Resh Lachish saith, These words are to be understood in the very letter. R. Johanan saith unto him, Their Lord will not have it so as thou sayest concerning them, but one of a City shall expiate for the whole City, and two of a family for the whole family. It is said, I will take them for my people, and it is said, I will bring you into the land. He compares their going out of the land of Egypt, with their coming in to their own land: Now how was their coming in into the land of Canaan? There were only two persons of threescore Myriads that entred in. Rabba saith, So also shall it be in the days of the Messiah. A man would hardly have expected such ingenuity from a Jew, as we here meet with in Resh Lachish and Rabba.

VERS. XXXII.

Εἰπατε τῇ ἀλώπεκι ταύτῃ. Tell that Fox.

I Conceive, our Saviour may allude here to the common Proverb: x The Brethren of Joseph fell down before his face and worshipped him, saith R. Benjamin bar Japheth. Saith R. Eliezer היינו דאמרי אנשי This is what is commonly said amongst men. שועלא בעידניה סגיד ליה Worship the Fox in his time. (The Gloss is, In the time of his prosperity.) But go you, and say to that Fox, however he may wallow in his present prosperity, that I will never flatter him, or for any fear of him desist from my work, but behold I cast out devils, &c.

x Megillah, fol. 16. 2.

VERS. XXXIII.

Οὐκ ἐνδέχεται Προφήτην ἀπολέσθαι, &c. It cannot be that a Prophet should perish, &c.

y A Tribe, nor false Prophet, (such an one they accounted the Holy Jesus) nor an High-Priest, can be judged, but by the bench of seventy one. Rambam upon the place as also the Gemara. We know that a false Prophet must be judged by the Sanhedrin, from the parity of the thing: for so is judged זקן ממרא a rebellious Judge.

y Sanhedr. fol. 2. 1.

Now as to the judgment it self these things are said: z They do not judge him to death, in the Court of Judicature that is in his own City, nor in that that is at Gabneh, but they bring him to the great consistory that is at Jerusalem, and reserve him to one of their Feasts, and at their Feast they execute him, as it is said: All Israel shall hear, and shall fear, and do no more so.

z Ibid. fol. 89. 1.

VERS. XXXV.

Ὅτι δὲ μὴ με ἴδητε ἕως ἂν ἥξῃ ὅτε εἴπητε εὐλογημένος, &c. Ye shall not see me until the time come when ye shall say, Blessed is he, &c.

THere was a time (I confess) when I apprehended no difficulty at all in these words, but now (which may seem a Paradox) my old eyes see better than my younger ones did, and by how much the more I look into this passage, by so much the more obscure it appears to me.

I. What sence must that be taken in, ye shall not see me? when as after he had said this, (at least as the words are placed in our Evangelist) they saw him conversant amongst them for the space of three months and more: particularly and in a singular manner, in that august triumph, when riding upon an Ass, he had the acclamations of the people in these very words, Blessed is he that cometh, &c. one might therefore think, that the words have some respect to this very time and action; but that in St. Matthew these words are repeated by our Saviour after this triumph was over. a a Matt. XXIII. 39.

Christ is now at Jerusalem at the feast of Dedication; at least that feast was not far off, for we find him going to it, ver. 22. so that this exposition of the words looks fair enough; ye see me now, but henceforward ye shall see me no more, until ye shall say,

Bleſſed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord: which very thing was ſaid in that triumph of his. But what ſhall we ſay then to that of St. Matthew, that theſe very words are recited ſometime after he had receiv'd theſe acclamations from the people? I would hardly believe with the Learned Heinſius, that the words in St. Matthew are not ſet in their proper place, but the ſeries of the Hiſtory is transpos'd: I would rather think our Saviour meant not an ocular ſeeing him, but ſpoke it in a ſpiritual and borrow'd ſenſe; viz. in that ſenſe wherein the Jews were wont to uſe the word ſeeing, when they ſpake of ſeeing the Meſſiah, the days of the Meſſiah, and the conſolation of Iſrael: that is, of partaking and enjoying the comforts and advantages of the Meſſiah, and of thoſe days of his. So that our Saviours meaning may ſeem to be this, Ye ſhall from hence forward enjoy no benefit from me the Meſſiah, till ye ſhall ſay, Bleſſed is he that cometh, &c. For it is worthy our enquiry whether Chriſt ever after theſe words of his did endeavour ſo to gather the children of Jeruſalem together, that the City might not be deſtroy'd, and the whole Nation caſt off. He did indeed endeavour to gather τὸ λεῖμμα κατ' ἐκλογὴν χάριτος, the remnant according to the election of grace, but did he ever after this, labour that the place and Nation might be preſerv'd? As to theſe it is argument enough that he had given them wholly over in his own mind, in that here, and in St. Matthew he did in ſuch preciſe terms denounce the ruin of Jeruſalem, immediately before he utter'd theſe words. I had rather therefore than admit any immethodicalneſs in St. Matthew, expound the paſſage to this ſenſe, From hence forward ye ſhall never ſee the conſolations of Meſſiah, nor have me any ways propitious amongſt you, endeavouring at all the preſervation of your City or Nation from ruin, till ye ſhall ſay, Bleſſed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.

II. But then here ariſeth as great a difficulty about the word ἕως till, that is, whether it concludes them, that in time they will ſay and acknowledg it, or whether it excludes and denies that they ever ſhall, for who knows not how different and even contrary a force there is in this word until? Occupy till I come b. Here it concludes that he will come again. This iniquity ſhall not be forgiven you till you die c. There their forgiveneſs is excluded for ever. And indeed the expreſſion in this place looks ſo perfectly two ways, that he that believes the converſion of the Jewiſh Nation as a thing that muſt come to paſs, may turn it to his ſide; he that believes the contrary, to his.

b Luk. XIX. 13.
c Iſa. XXII. 14.

Εὐλογημένος ὁ ἐρχόμενος ἐν ὀνόματι κυρίου. Bleſſed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.

ALthough a more intimate weighing of theſe words will not very much help in determining the force of this word until in this place: yet will it probably afford us ſome light into the whole clauſe.

The words are taken out of Pſal. CXVIII. 26. and were ſung in the great Hallel. So that I will beg the Readers leave to digreſs a little in ſearch of this uſage, eſpecially as to thoſe words that are now in hand.

I. The great Hallel was the recitation of Pſalms CXIII. CXIV. CXV. CXVI. CXVII. CXVIII. upon every feaſt, in every family or brotherhood. The Hymn that our Saviour with his Apoſtles ſung at the cloſe of the Paſſover d, was the latter part of this Hallel.

d Mat. XXVI.

II. Every one indeed was of right bound to repeat it intirely in his own perſon. But ſeeing it was not every one's lot to be ſo learned or expedite as that came to, there was one to recite it in the ſtead of all the reſt, and they after him made ſome reſponſals. This went for a maxim amongſt them השומע כעונה If he hear, 'tis as if he reſponded. אם שמע ולא ענה יצא If he hear, though he do not anſwer, he performs his duty; the meaning is, if any be ſo unskilful that he can neither recite himſelf, nor anſwer after another that doth recite, let him but hear attentively, and he doth as much as is required from him.

III. There was a twofold way of reſponding according to the difference of perſons reciting. If an elder, or maſter of a family, or one that could fitly repreſent the whole Congregation, ſhould recite or lead in ſinging; then the reſt repeat no other words after him except the firſt clauſe of every Pſalm; and as to all the remainder they anſwer'd verſe by by verſe Allelujah. For the action of him that repreſented them, and led up in ſinging, avail'd for thoſe that were repreſented, eſpecially they having teſtify'd their conſent by anſwering Allelujah. He was a dunce indeed that could not anſwer ſo far amongſt the reſt.
